OF THE

E N G L I S H L A N G U A G E.

Where this mark * follows the word, it signifies that such word is not to be found in the Dictionary of Dr. Johnson.

Where this mark † follows the word, it signifies that addition or alteration is made in respect either to the etymology, or definition, or example, of the word given by Dr. Johnson.

D.

D A B

D, Is a consonant nearly approaching in sound to T, but formed by a stronger appulse of the tongue to the upper part of the mouth. The sound of D in English is uniform, and it is never mute.

D.* A note or key in musick.

D.* In abbreviation is common for doctor; as, D.D. doctor of divinity; M.D. doctor of medicine.

D.* A numeral letter, signifying five hundred.

DA CAPO. [Ital.] A term in musick, which signifying from the head or the beginning, means that the first part of the tune should be repeated at the conclusion.

To DAB. v. a. [dauber, Fr.] To strike gently with something soft or moist.

A sore should never be wiped by drawing a piece of tow or rag over it, but only by dabbing it with fine lint. Sharp.

DAB.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A small lump of any thing.

2. A blow with something moist or soft. Hence a dab-wash, Mr. Malone observes; a term used by women, when a number of small articles are washed, without the intermixture of large linen.

3. Something moist or slimy thrown upon one.

4. A kind of small flat fish.

Of flat fish there are rays, flowks, dabs, plaice. Carew.

DAB.* n. s. [Dr. Johnson consigns this word to low language, without any etymology or example; and says that it is not used in writing. It is a corruption of adept, which, as I have shewn, is derived from adab. See ADEPT.] An artist; a man expert at something.

One writer excels at a plan, or the title-page; another works away at the body of the book; and the third is a dab at an index. Goldsmith, Essay.

DA'CHICK.† n. s. A small water-fowl; called likewise dobchick, and didapper, and dipchick. [from To DAP.] Colymbus. Ray.

She is a delicate dabchick; I must have her.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

A dab-chick waddles through the copse, On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops. Pope.

To DA'BBLE.† v. a. [dabbelen, Dutch, from the Goth. daupjan, to besprinkle.] To smear; to daub; to spatter; to besprinkle; to wet.

A shadow like an angel, with bright hair Dabbled in blood. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I scarified, and dabbled the wound with oil of turpentine.

Wicarius, Surgery.

Mean while the South, rising with dabbled wings, A sable cloud athwart the welkin flings. Swift.

To DA'BBLE. v. n.

1. To play in water; to move in water or mud. Neither will a spirit, that dwells with stars, dabble in this impurer mud. Glanville, Apology.

The little one complained of her legs, that she could neither swim nor dabble with them. L'Estrange

But when he found the boys at play,
And saw them dabbling in their clay,
He stood behind a stall to lurk,
And mark the progress of their work.

Swift.

2. To do any thing in a slight, superficial, or shallow manner; to tamper.

Shakespeare shall be put into your hands, as clear and as fair as it came out of them; though you, I think, have been dabbling here and there with the text, I have had more reverence for the writer, and the printer, and left every thing standing.

Atterbury to Pope.

DA'BBLER.† n. s. [from dabble.]

1. One that plays in water.

Good drinkers cannot drown:

We, puny dabblers, are as ill beset,

We, whose unliquor'd hides will turn no wet.

Cleaveland, Poems, &c. p. 17.

2. One that meddles without mastery; one that never goes to the bottom of an affair; a superficial meddler.

Every dabbler

In rhyme is thought the same.

B. Jonson, Masques.

He dares not complain of the tooth-ach, lest our dabblers in politicks should be ready to swear against him for disaffection.

Swift.

DACE. n. s. [of uncertain derivation: in most provinces called dare. Leuciscus.] A small river fish, resembling a roach, but less.

Let me live harmlessly, and near the brink
Of Trent or Avon have a dwelling place:

Where I may see my quill or cork down sink,

With eager bite of perch, or bleak, or dace.

Wallon.

DA'CTYLE.† n. s. [δάκτυλος, a finger.] A poetical foot consisting of one long syllable and two short, like the joints of a finger; as, cāndīdūs.

What shall I name those current travases,

That on a dactyle-foot do run.

Sir J. Davies, Orchestra, (1599,) st. 69.

The lingring spondees, labouring to delay

The breathless dactyls with a sudden stay. Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 6.

The heroic foot — includes the spondee, the dactyle, and the anapaest.

Harris, Phil. Inquiries.

DA'CTYLET.* n. s. Adopted by bishop Hall for dactyle, in a passage of admirable humour.

Whoever saw a colt, wanton and wild,

Yok'd with a slow-foot ox on fallow field,

Can right areed how handsomely befits

Dull spondee with the English dactylets!

If Jove speaks English in a thundering cloud,

Thick thwack, and ruff ruff, roars he out aloud!

Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 6.

DA'CTYLICK.* adj. [Fr. dactylique, from dactyle.] Relating to the dactyl.

This at least was the power of the spondaick and dactyllick harmony; but our language can reach no eminent diversities of sound.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 94.

DA'CTYLIST.* n. s. [from dactyle.] One who writes flowing verse.

Dr. Johnson prefers the Latin poetry of May and Cowley to that of Milton, and this as May to be the first of the three. May is certainly a sonorous dactylist.

Warton, Pref. to Milton's Sm. Poems.

DACTYLO'LOGY.* n. s. [Fr. dactylogie, Gr. δάκτυλος, the finger, and λόγος, to discourse.] The art of conversing by the hands.

Cheirology, or dactylogia, as the words import, is interpretation by the transient motions of the fingers; which, of all other ways of interpretation, comes nearest to that of the tongue. Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, (1680,) Introd.

DAD.† n. s. [The child's way of expressing father.

DA'DDY.† It is remarkable, that, in all parts of the world, the word for father, as first taught to children, is compounded of a and t, or the kindred letter d differently placed; as tad, Cimbr. Welsh, and Cornish; daid, Gael. tat, Armorick; atta, Greek; atta, Gothick; tata, Latin.] Father.

I was never so bethumt with words,

Since first I call'd my brother's father dad.

Shakespeare.

His loving mother left him to my care;

Fine child, as like his dad as he could stare!

Gay.

TO DA'DDIE.* v. n. To walk unsteadily like an old person or a child. It is yet used in the north of England; and seems allied to the Iceland. dudda, to be slow-footed. But see To WADDLE.

TO DADDE. v. a. To hold up by a leading string.

The little children when they learn to go,

By painful mothers daded to and fro.

Dryden.

DA'DO.* n. s. [Ital.] In architecture, the plain part between the base and cornice of a column; the dic.

Ash.

DÆDAL.* adj. [dædalus, Latin, from the Gr. δαίδαλεον, to form curiously or exquisitely, in allusion to Dædalus, the artist; whence we have the word dædalian, which see.]

1. Various; variegated.

Then doth the dædale earth throw forth to thee,

Out of her fruitful lap, abundant flowers.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. x. 44.

2. Skilful: this is not the true meaning, nor should be imitated, Dr. Johnson says, citing the solitary example of Philips. Yet it has not only as good authority as can be produced in our own language, but is supported also, in the same meaning, by Tasso, who has "man dedala," the dædal hand, Gier. Lib. xii. 94. T. Warton has also dared to adopt the word in this sense.

All were it Zæxis or Praxiteles,

His dædale hand would fail: and greatly faynt,

And her perfections with his error taynt.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 2.

Nor hath

The dædal hand of nature only pour'd

Her gifts of outward grace.

Philips

DÆDA'LIAN.* adj. [Fr. dédalé, from Dædalus, who made the labyrinth of Crete.] Maze-like; resembling a labyrinth.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

DAFF, or DAFTE.* n. s. [Icel. daufr; Su. Goth. doft, stupid. See To DAFF.] A fool. Cockeram defines this word, a coward. In the north of England, daff is yet the common adjective applied to a blockish or foolish fellow.

And when this jape's told another day,

I shal be halden a daffe or a cokenay.

Thou dotest, daffe, quoth she; dull are thy wittos.

Chaucer, Reve's Tale.

Vis. of P. Pl. fol. 6. b.

TO DAFF.* v. a. [Su. Goth. doftwa, to stupify.] To daunt. North of Eng.

Grose.

TO DAFF.* v. a. [perhaps from do and off; as doff, which see. Dr. Johnson has omitted this word, and given in its stead, To DAFT, which is, in fact, the preterite of this word; overlooking, as Mr. Malone and Mr. Mason have observed, the present tense; and so coining the verb daff: to which he assigns an etymology, in support of it, viz. do aft, that is, to throw back, to throw off. But daff is clearly from daff.] To toss aside; to put away with contempt; to throw away slightly; to put off. Not now in use.

The nimble-footed mail-cap Prince of Wales,

And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside,

And bid it pass.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

DAG

I would she had bestowed this dotage on me; I would have daff all other respects, and made her half myself.

Shakespeare, Much Ado, &c.

These my white stole of chastity I daff'd.

Shakespeare, Lover's Complaint.

DA'FFADIL.†

DA'FFADILLY.

DAFFADOWNDILLY.

DA'FFODIL.

DA'FFODILLY.

n. s. [Supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from asphodelus.]

This plant hath a lily-flower, consisting of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, and cut into six segments, which incircle its middle like a crown; but the enpipement, which commonly rises out of a membranous vagina, turns to an oblong or roundish fruit, which is triangular, and gaps in three parts; is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds.

Miller.

To strew me the ground with daffadillies,

And cowslips, and kingcups, and loved lilies. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Bid Amaranthus all his beauty shed,

And daffadillies fill their cups with tears,

To strew the laurel herse where Lycid lies. Milton, Lycidas.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead

For violets pale, and crop'd the poppy's head:

The short harricuss, and daffodil,

Pancies to please the sight, and cast a sweet to smell. Dryden

DAFF.† See To DARE.

DAG.† n. s. [dag, French; old Fr. dagge, a small gun. Kelham.]

1. A dagger.

2. A handgun; a pistol: so called from serving the purposes of a dagger, being carried secretly, and doing mischief suddenly. It is in neither sense now used.

To catch wild birds and beasts; encompassing
 The grove with dagges, and out of bushes firing.

Burton, Anat. of Mel p. 269.

D'ye call this gun a dag?

Beaumont and Fl. Murther Maud.

DAG.* n. s. [bag, Sax.] A slip, or shred; a latchet, cut of leather. Cockeram. Not now in use. But see To DAG.

Beggars with——high shewis knoppid with dagges.

Chaucer, Rom. of the R. 7212.

To DAG.† v. a. [from daggle.]

1. To daggle; to bemire; to let fall in the water: a low word. See DACTAILED. Dagged is still used, in the north of England, for dirtyed.

2. To cut into slips. See DAG. Obsolete.

If so be that they wolden yewe such swiche pounsoned and dagged clothing to the people. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

DAG.* n. s. [dag, Dan. dew; Jcel. dagg, a shower.
 See To DAGGLE.] Dew upon the grass; as, dag- locks, locks of wool spoiled by the dag or dew.

Ray, and Grose, South and E. C. Words.

DA'GGER.† n. s. [old Fr. daguer, and daguette,
i. e. daguer, a dagger; Ital. dagga; Germ. daggen; Welsh, dagr. Perhaps from the Heb. dakar, to stab, to thrust through. Lacombe says it is Celtick.]

1. A short sword; a poniard.

She ran to her son's dagger, and struck herself a mortal wound. Sidney.

This sword a dagger had his page,

That was but little for his age;

And therefore waited on him so,

As dwarfs upon knights errant do.

Hudibras.

He strikes himself with his dagger; but being interrupted by one of his friends, he stabs him, and breaks the dagger on one of his ribs. Addison.

DAI

2. [In fencing schools.] A blunt blade of iron with a basket hilt, used for defence.

3. [With printers.] The obelus: a mark of reference in form of a dagger; as [†].

DA'GGERDRAWING. n. s. [dagger and draw.] The act of drawing daggers; approach to open violence.

They always are at daggerdrawing,

And one another clapperclawing

I have heard of a quarrel in a tavern, where all were at daggerdrawing, till one desired to know the subject of the quarrel. Hudibras.

To DA'GGLE.† v. a. [from dag, dew; a word, according to Lye, derived from the Danish; according to Skinner, from dag, sprinkled, or beazan, to dip. They are probably all of the same root, Dr.
 Johnson says. See DAG, dew. Hence, Ray says,
 "daggle-tail is spoken of a woman that hath dabbled her coats with dew, wet, or dirt." Some may think the word daggle allied to dag, a shred.]
 To dip negligently in mire or water; to bemire;
 to besprinkle.

To shops in crowds the daggled females fly,

Pretend to cheapen goods, but nothing buy. Swift, City Shower.

A pettifogger is a kind of dirty daggled skirt or tail to the long robe. Butler's Rem. Characters.

To DA'GGLE. v. i. To be in the mire; to fall through wet or dirt.

Nor like a puppy, daggled through the town,

To fetch and carry sing song up and down.

Pope.

DA'GGLEDTAIL. adj. [daggle and tail.] Bemired; dipped in the water or mud; bespattered.

The gentlemen of wit and pleasure are apt to be choaked at the sight of so many daggledtail parsons that happen to fall in their way. Swift.

DA'GSWAIN.* n. s. [probably from dag, a shred.] A sort of carpet, which Iuloet, in his old dictionary, translates into the Latin gansape; which Latin word is rendered by Ainsworth, "a carpet to lay on a table, such as we call Turkey work; a dag- swain." Obsolete.

Our fathers, yea and we ourselves also, have lien full oft upon straw pallets, or rough mats, covered only with a sheet, under coverlets made of dagswains.

Harrison, Deacr. of Eng. pref. to Rushdell's Chron.

DA'GTAILED.* n. s. [from dag and tail.] Dirtyed.

Would it not vex thee, where thy sires did keep,

To see the dunged folds of dagtail'd sheep? Bp. Hall, Sat. v. 1.

DA'ILY. adj. [baglic, Sax.] Happening every day, or very frequently; done every day; quotidian.

Much are we bound to heaven

In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince.

Shakespeare.

Cease, man of woman born! to hope relief

From daily trouble, and continu'd grief.

Prior.

DAILY. adv. Every day; very often.

Let that man with bitter sense arise,

That of the world least part to us is read;

And daily how through hardy enterprize,

Many great regions are discovered.

Spenser, F. Q.

A man with whom I conversed almost daily, for years together. Druden.

DAINT.* adj. [This is our ancient word for dainty, which is adopted from the French word dain, as observed by Skinner in respect to dainty, though Dr. Johnson says he could not find dain in any dictionary. It is, however, in that of Cotgrave, with the definition of dainty, fine, curious, &c. and is there called an old word. It is probably allied to the Goth. dauhts, a feast. We have the substantive daint in this sense. It is remarkable that all our lexicographers have overlooked daint, whether as a substantive or adjective; and that some editors of Spenser have printed daintiest, where the true reading is daintest, [the superlative of daint, because they were ignorant of this our ancient adjective.] Delicate: elegant.

No poet's wit, that passeth painter farre
In picturing the parts of beauty daynt.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. Introd. st. 2.

In which whatever in this worldly state
Is sweete and pleasing unto living sense,
Or that may dayntest fantasy aggrate,
Was poured forth with plentiful dispence.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. l. 42.

DAINT.* n. s. [from the adjective.] Something of exquisite taste; a taint.

And you, fair troop, if Thirsil you disdain not,
Vouchsafe with me to take some short refection;
Excesse, or daint, my lowly roof maintain not.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. vii. 37.

DA'INTILY.* adv. [from dainty.]

1. Elegantly; delicately.

Truth is a naked and open day-light, that doth not shew the masks and mummeries, and triumphs of the world, half so stately and daintily as candle-light.

Bacon.

2. Deliciously; pleasantly.

There is no region on earth so daintily watered, with such great navigable rivers.

Hopewell, Voc. Forest.

Those young suitors had been accustomed to nothing but to sleep well and fare daintily.

Rroome, View of Epick Poems.

3. Nicely; ceremoniously; scrupulously.

How upright he sits at the table! how daintily he carves!

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

4. Squeamishly; fastidiously.

DA'INTINESS.* n. s. [from dainty.]

1. Delicacy; softness.

What should yet thy palate please?

Daintiness and softer ease,

Sleeked limbs, and finest blood?

B. Jonson.

2. Elegance; nicety.

The duke exceeded in the daintiness of his leg and foot, and the earl in the fine shape of his hands.

Wotton.

3. Delicacy; deliciousness.

It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision which he served up, than for the massiness of the dish.

Hakewill on Providence.

4. Squeamishness; fastidiousness.

Of sand, and flint, and clay, Vitruvius hath discoursed without any daintiness.

Wotton.

5. Ceremoniousness; scrupulosity.

DA'INTLY.* adv. [from daint.] Deliciously.

As on the which full daintly he would fare.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

DA'INTREL.* n. s. [from daint or dainty.] A delicacy. Not now in use.

Neither glut thyselfe with present delicacies, nor long after daintrelles hard to be come by.

Trinit. of Bullinger's Sermons, p. 249.

Well to fare with thy meat, if thou have any;

But by thy words, as I then smeled, thy daintrels be not many.

Origin of the Eng. Drama, p. 185.

DA'INTY.* adj. [derived by Skinner from dain, an old French word for delicate; which yet I cannot find in dictionaries, Dr. Johnson says; but see DAINT.]

1. Pleasing to the palate; of exquisite taste; delicious.

Higher concoction is required for sweetness or pleasure of taste, and therefore all your dainty plumbs are a little dry.

Bacon.

2. Delicate; of acute sensibility; nice; squeamish; soft; luxurious; tender.

This is the slowest, yet the daintiest sense;

For ev'n the ears of such as have no skill,

Perceive a discord, and conceive offence;

And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill.

Davies.

They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military.

Bacon.

3. Scrupulous; ceremonious.

Which of you all

Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,

I'll swear hath corns.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Therefore to horse;

And let us not be dainty of leave taking,

But shift away.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

4. Elegant; tenderly, languishingly, or effeminately beautiful.

Ne once adown would lay

Her dainty limbs in her sad dreriment.

Spenser, F. Q. i. xi. 32.

My house, within the city,

Is richly furnished with plate and gold,

Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands.

Shakspeare.

He was not of any delicate texture; his limbs were rather sturdy than dainty.

Wotton, Short Hist. of K. Will. I.

Why should ye be so cruel to yourself,

And to those dainty limbs, which nature lent

For gentle usage, and soft delicacy?

Milton, Comus.

5. Nice; affectedly fine: in contempt.

Your dainty speakers have the curse,

To plead bad causes down to worse.

Prior.

DA'INTY.* n. s.

1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; something of exquisite taste.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat.

Prov. xxiii. 3.

A worm breedeth in meal, of the shape of a large white maggot, which is given as a great dainty to nightingales.

Bacon.

She then produc'd her dairy store,

And unbought dainties of the poor.

Dryden.

The shepherd swains, with pure abundance blest,

On the fat flock, and rural dainties feast.

Pope.

2. A word of fondness formerly in use.

Why, that's my dainty; I shall miss thee:

But yet thou shalt have freedom.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

There is a fortune coming

Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,

And set thee aloft.

B. Jonson.

DA'IRY.* n. s. [from dai, an old word for milk, says Lye; who further traces it to the Iceland deggia, to give milk. The Swedish dia is to milk. Dai occurs in P. Plowman's Creed. A dai-house, in Gloucestershire, still signifies a dairy-house. Widegren gives the Swedish daija, a dairy-maid. Dayria is the barbarous Latin term for our dairy. V. Kennet's Gloss. Paroch. Antiq. See also DAY-WOMAN.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.

Grounds were turned much in England either to feeding or dairy; and this advanced the trade of English butter.

Temple.

2. The place where milk is manufactured.

You have no more worth

Than the coarse, and country fair,

That doth haunt the hearth of dairy.

B. Jonson.

What stores my dairies and my folds contain!

A thousand lambs that wander on the plain.

Dryden.

She in pen his flocks will fold,

And then produce her dairy store.

Dryden.

3. Pasturage; milk farm; ground where milch cattle are kept.

Dairies, being well housewived, are exceeding commodious.

Bacon.

Children in dairy countries do wax more tall than where they feed more upon bread and flesh.

Bacon.

DA'IRYMAID. n. s. [dairy and maid.] The woman servant whose business is to manage the milk.

The poorest of the sex have still an itch,
To know their fortunes equal to the rich:
The dairymaid enquires if she shall take
The trusty taylor, and the cook forsake.
Come up quickly, or we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of Sir Roger's dairymaids. Dryden, Addison.

DA'ISIED. † adj. [from daisy. "There has of late arisen a practice," says Dr. Johnson, in his Life of Gray, "of giving to adjectives derived from substantives the termination of participles; such as the cultured plain, the daisied bank." But he there forgot the ancient usage; and would probably have withheld his criticism, if he had recollected Shakspeare, or had turned to Shakspeare's contemporary, W. Browne. Dr. Johnson has indeed noticed, in his Dictionary, the passage in Shakspeare under DAZIED, which bears some resemblance to daisy; but he has admitted it with hesitation.] Full of daisies; besprinkled with daisies.

Let us
Find out the prettiest daisied plot we can,
And make him with our pikes and partisans
A grave. Shakspeare, Cymb.
I therefore went unto these homely towns,
Sweetly environ'd with the daisied downs.

Browne, Brit. Past. i. 4.

DA'ISY. n. s. [daegerge, day's eye, Chaucer.] A Spring-flower.

It hath a perennial root: the stalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is scaly and simple, divided into many segments to the foot-stalk. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, after the petals are fallen off, resemble obtuse cones.

Miller.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all silver-white,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows with delight. Shakspeare.
As he passed, the woods put forth their blossoms, the earth her primroses and day's eyes to behold him. Howell.

Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies spring;
Now leaves the trees, and flowers adorn the ground.
This will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Pope. Addison.

Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace;
The daisy, primrose, violet. Thomson.

DALE. † n. s. [dalei, Gothick; dal, Dutch and German. The Goth. dal is a cavern or deep place.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long tost with storms, and beat with bitter winds,
High over hills, and low adown the dale,
She wandred many a wood and measur'd many a vale.

Spenser, F. Q.

Before the downfall of the fairy state
This dale, a pleasing region, not unblest,
This dale possess'd they, and had still possess'd.
He steals along the lonely dale. Tickel. Thomson, Spring.

DA'LLIANCE. n. s. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of caresses; acts of fondness.

Look thou be true: do not give dalliance
Too much the rein: the strongest oaths are straw
To th' fire i'th' blood. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Nor gentle purpose nor endearing smiles
Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as becoms
Fair couple, link'd in happy nuptial league, Alone as they. Milton, P. L.

I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:
My warlike spirits work now another way,
And my soul's tun'd to trumpets. Dryden.

D A M

2. Conjugal conversation.

The giant, self-dismayed with the sound,
Where he with his Duesna dalliance found,
In haste came rushing forth from inner bower. Spenser, F. Q.
That power not mystick, where the sapient king
Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse. Milton, P. L.

Thou claim'st me for thy sire,
And my fair son here show'st me, the dear pledge
Of dalliance had with thee in heav'n. Milton, P. L.

3. Delay; procrastination.

Both wind and tide stay for this gentleman;
And I to blame, have held him here too long.—
— Good lord, you use this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise. Shakspeare.

DA'LLIER. † n. s. [from dally.] A trifler; a fondler.

The daily dalliers with such pleasant words, with such smiling and secret countenances, with such signs, tokens, wagers, purposed to be lost before they were purposed to be made.

He [Lord Burghley] was no dallier, no abuser; but ever real, and certain. Bacon, Notes on Ld. Burghley.
Censures — are appointed for the reformation of such dalliers and disposers with their own consciences and oaths.

Const. and Can. Ecc. 118.

DA'LLOP. n. s. [of unknown etymology.] A tuft, or clump: not in use.

Of barley the finest and greenest ye find,
Leave standing in dallops till time ye do bind. Tusser.

TO DA'LLY. † v. n. [dallen, Dutch, to trifle. Sernius refers it to the Iceland. dala, tedious trifling.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuse one's self with idle play; to lose time in trifles; to procrastinate idly.

Take up thy master:
If thou shouldst dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He left his cur, and laying hold
Upon his arms with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Tudibras.

We have trifled too long already: it is madness to dally any longer, when our souls are at stake. Calamy, Sermons.

One hundred thousand pounds must be raised: for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.

2. To exchange caresses; to play the wanton; to fondle.

He is not lolling on a low love bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of conceits,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shakspeare.

3. To sport; to play; to frolic.

She her airie buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorps the sun. Shakspeare.

4. To delay.

They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dallied with them, shall feel a judgement worthy of God.

Wisd. xii. 26.

TO DA'LLY. v. a. To put off; to delay; to amuse till a proper opportunity.

He set down to perform service; not by the hazard of one set battle, but by dallying off the time with often skirmishes.

Knolles, History.

DAM. n. s. [from dame, which formerly signified mother. "Had Nero never been an emperor, shulde never his dame have been slaine." Chaucer.]

1. The mother: used of beasts, or other animals not human.

The dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought, but wail her darling loss. Shakspeare.

Mother, says a sick kite, let me have your prayers. Alas, my child, says the dam, which of the gods shall I go to?

L'Ettrange.

D A M

Birds bring but one morsel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than seven or eight young in the nest together, which, at the return of their dams, do all at once, with equal greediness, hold up their heads and gape. Ray.

2. A human mother: in contempt or detestation.

This brat is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixena:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

DAM. n. s. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Those banks and dams, that like a screen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras.

Not with so here, page the foaming flood
Rears, when he finds his rapid course withstood;
Bears down the dams with unresisted way,
And sweeps the cattle and the coats away. Dryden.

Let loose the reins to all your wat'ry store,
Bear down the dams, and open every door. Dryden.

The inside of the dam must be very smooth and straight;
and if it is made very sloping on each side, it is the better.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

To DAM. v. a. [demman, posdemman, Sax. dammen, Dut.]

1. To confine, or shut up water by moles or dams.

Will have the current in this place damm'd up;
And hence the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Home I would go,
But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring. Otway.

Boggy lands are fed by springs, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread. Mortimer.

'Tis you must drive that trouble from your soul;
As streams, when damm'd, forget their ancient current,
And wond'ring at their banks in other channels flow. Smith.

2. It is used by Shakspeare of fire, and by Milton of light.

The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns. Shakspeare.

• Moon!—if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy low-levell'd rule of streaming light. Milton, Comus.

DAM'AGE. n. s. [domage, French, Dr. Johnson says; but it is from the old French dañage. V. Cotgrave, Lacombe, and Roquefort.]

1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.

Gross errors and absurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon.

Such as were sent from thence did commonly do more hurt and damage to the English subjects than to the Irish enemies, by their continual cess and extortion. Davies.

He repulsed the enemy very much to their damage. Clarendon.

2. Loss; mischief suffered.

Lest his heart exalt him in the harm
Already done, to have dispeopled heaven,
My damage fondly deem'd! Milton, B. L.

3. The value of mischief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they should be willing to sell all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been sustained by the war. Clarendon.

4. Reparation of damage; retribution.

The bishop demanded restitution of the spoils taken by the Scots, or damages for the same. Bacon.

Tell me whether, upon exhibiting the several particulars which I have related to you, I may not sue her for damages in a court of justice? Addison.

D A M

5. [In law.] Any hurt or hindrance that a man taketh in his estate. In the common law it particularly signifies a part of what the jurors be to inquire of; for, after verdict given of the principal cause, they are likewise asked their consciences touching costs, which are the charges of suit, and damages, which contain the hindrance which the plaintiff or demandant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Cowel.

When the judge had awarded due damages to a person, into whose field a neighbour's oxen had broke, it is reported that he reversed his own sentence, when he heard that the oxen, which had done this mischief, were his own. Watts.

To DA'MAGE. v. a. [old Fr. damager.] To mischief; to injure; to impair; to hurt; to harm.

I consider time as an immense ocean, into which many noble authors are entirely swallowed up, many very much shattered and damaged, some quite disjointed and broken into pieces. Addison.

To DA'MAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

DA'MAGEABLE. adj. [Fr. dommageable, Cotgrave.

We had formerly the adjective damageous, for this word, in the sense of mischievous; as in Huloet's old dictionary.]

1. Susceptible of hurt; as, damageable goods.

2. Mischievous; pernicious.
Oaths have been lawfully urged and exacted of men, touching matters damageable, criminal, and penal to themselves. Featley, Dipp. Dipt. (1645.) p. 173.

Obscene and immodest talk is offensive to the purity of God, damageable and infectious to the innocence of our neighbours, and most pernicious to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

DA'MAGE-FEASANT.  adj.* [from damage, and faisant, Fr. a law term.] Doing hurt or damage, as when a stranger's beasts are in another man's ground, without licence of the tenant of the ground, and there do feed, tread, and otherwise spoil the corn, grass, woods, and such like. Cowel.

If the stork be taken damagfeccant with the cranes, she is enwrapped in the same net, and cannot complain that she is surprised. Junius, Sin Stigmatized, (1639.) p. 806.

DA'MASCENE. n. s. [damascenus, from Damascus.] A small plum: a Damson, as it is now spoken.

In April follow the cherry tree in blossom, the damascene and plum trees in blossom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruits the white commonly is meaner, as in pear plums and damascenes; and the choicest plums are black. Bacon.

DAMASK. n. s. [damasquin, Fr. damaschino, Ital. from Damascus.]

1. Linen or silk woven in a manner invented at Damascus, by which part, by a various direction of the threads, exhibits flowers or other forms.

Not any weaver which his work doth boast
In diaper, damask, or in lync. Spenser.

Wipe your shoes, for want of a clout, with a damask-napkin. Swift, Rules to Servants.

2. It is used for red colour in Fairfax, from the damask rose.

And for some deale perplexed was her spirit;
Her damask late, now chaug'd to purest white. Fairfax.

To DA'MASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form flowers upon stuffs.

2. To variegate; to diversify.

They sat recline
On the soft downy bank, damask'd with flowers. Milton, P. L.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damasking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Fenton.

3. To adorn steel-work with figures; practised, I suppose, first at Damascus.

DAMASK-PLUM. See PLUM. •

DAMASK-ROSE. n. s. The rose of Damascus: a red rose. See ROSE.

Damask-roses have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are so common. Bacon.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud,
Nor broad carnations, nor gay spotted pinks,
Nor, shower'd from every bush, the damask-rose. Thomson.

DA'MASKENING. n. s. [from damasquiner, Fr.] The art or act of adorning iron of steel, by making incisions, and filling them up with gold or silver wire: used in enriching the blades of swords, and locks of pistols. Chambers.

DA'MASKIN. * n. s. [Fr. damasquine. See DAMASKENING.] A sabre; probably from being made at Damascus. •

No old Toledo blades, or damaskins;
No pistols, or some rare-spring carabines. Howell's Lett. Poem to K. Ch. I. 1641.

DAME. n. s. [dame, Fr. dama, Span.]

1. A lady; the old title of honour to women.

The word dame originally signified a mistress of a family, who was a lady; and it is used still in the English law to signify a lady: but in common use, now-a-days, it represents a farmer's wife, or a mistress of a family of the lower rank in the country. Watts, Logick.

Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect. Shakspeare.

Not all these lords do vex me half so much
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. Shakspeare.

Shut your mouth, dame. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. It is still used in poetry for women of rank.

His father Faunus: a Laurentian dame
His mother, fair Marica was her name. Dryden.

Who would not repeat that bliss,
And frequent sight of such a dame
Buy with the hazard of his fame? Waller.

3. Mistress of a low family.

They killed the poor cock; for, say they, if it were not for his waking our dame, she would not wake us. L'Estrange.

4. Woman in general.

We've willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many,
As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shakspeare.

DAMES-VIOLET. n. s. A plant, called also queen's gillyflower. Miller.

To DAMN. † v. a. [damno, Lat. old Fr. damner, to condemn.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future state.

It is most necessary, that the church, by doctrine and decree, do damn and send to hell for ever those facts and opinions. Bacon.

2. To procure or cause to be eternally condemned.

That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmost lying in his power, that he might not be ignorant of it, shall not damn him. South, Sermon.

3. To condemn.

The council of Basil damned the payment of annats. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 172.

He will not swear but will backbite and rail; he will not be drunk, but will damn a man for not being of his opinion. Glanville, Sermon. p. 47.

To damn one room, though of special use, for the benefit and beauty of all the rest: The Italians call it "una stanza dannata." Wolton, Elem. of Architecture.

His own impartial thought
Will damn, and conscience will record the fault. Dryden.

4. To hoot or hiss any publick performance; to explode.

They damn themselves, nor will my muse descend
To clap with such who fools and knaves commend. Dryden.

For the great dons of wit,
Phœbus gives them full privilege alone
To damn all others, and cry up their own.

You are so good a critick, that it is the greatest happiness of the modern poets that you do not hear their works; and next, that you are not so arrant a critick as to damn them, like the rest, without hearing. Pope.

DA'MNABLE. † adj. [old Fr. dampnable.]

1. Deserving damnation; justly doomed to never-ending punishment; censurable; condemnable.

It gives him occasion of labouring with greater earnestness elsewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the snares of his damnable opinion. Hooker.

He's a creature unprepared, unfit for death;
And, to transport him in the mind he is,
Were damnable. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

It is a damnable plausibility so to regard the vain approbation or censure of the beholders, as in the mean time to neglect the allowance or judgment of God. Bp. Hall, Contemplat. B. 4.

As he does not reckon every schism of a damnable nature, so he is far from closing with the new opinion of those who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is sometimes indecently used in a low and ludicrous sense; odious; pernicious.

Oh thou damnable fellow! did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches? Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

DA'MNABLENESS. * n. s. [from damnable.] That which deserves condemnation.

The question being of the damnableness of error. Chillingworth, Bet. of Prof.

When a man shall be perplexed with endless scruples, and fears, and doubts of the danger and damnableness of such things as are manifestly the violation of no law. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

DA'MNABLY. † adv. [from damnable.]

1. In such a manner as to incur eternal punishment; so as to be excluded from mercy; in such a manner as to deserve condemnation.

Many — shelter themselves in a willing jail, there living merrily upon their defrauded creditor, whom they might honestly satisfy by a well improved liberty. This case is damnably unjust. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

As for evil things or actions, if men find a time, yet sure God allows no season: those are always damnably unseasonable abuses of times, and of ourselves. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 105.

All of them [the heathen] damnably superstitious and idolatrous in their worship; damnably unclean in their lives. Hammond, Works, iv. 596.

We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those consequences that arise from them? South, Sermon.

2. It is indecently used in a ludicrous sense; odiously; hatefully.

The more sweets they bestowed upon them, the more damnably their consciences stunk. Dennis.

3. It is used, no less indecently, for excessively.

I find I am damnably in love. Congreve, Old Bachelor.

DAMNATION. † n. s. [old Fr. damnation.]

1. Exclusion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal punishment.

He that hath been affrighted with the fears of hell, or remembers how often he hath been spared from an horrible damnation, will not be ready to strangle his brother for a trifle. Bp. Taylor, Worshy Communicant.

Now since the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase:
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

2. Condemnation.

The word [expiation] which our translators render damnation, (1 Cor. xi. 19) does not here signify eternal condemnation, but a temporal judgment and chastisement in order to the prevention of eternal condemnation. Trotton, Persuasive to Frequent Communion.

DAMNATORY. † adj. [from damnatorius.] Containing a sentence of condemnation.

D A M

This damnatory decree of the most venerable congregation of cardinals, having taken the pains to fly over the Alps.

Manifestation of the Abp. of Spalato, 1616, L. i.

Mr. Chillingworth had for a while, 'tis owned, some scruples upon him about the fourth commandment as appertaining to Christians, and about the damnatory clauses in the Athanasian creed; and therefore refused to subscribe for a time. This was in the year 1635. But within three years after, upon more mature consideration, he happily got over his difficulties and subscribed.

Waterland, Hist. of the Athan. Creed.

DAMNED. part. adj. [from damis] IIateful; detestable; abhorred; abominable.

Not in the legions

Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd
In evils to top Macbeth. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damned incest. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

But, oh, what damned minutes tell he o'er,
Who doubts, yet doubts; suspects, yet strongly loves. Shakspeare.

Dare not

To brand the spotless virtue of my prince
With falsehoods of most base and damn'd contrivance. Rowe.

DAMNIFY. adj. [from damnify] Pfocturing loss; mischievous.

To DAMNIFY. v. a. [from damnifico, Latin, Dr. Johnson says. It is rather from the old Fr. dampnifier.] To endamage: to injure; to cause loss to any; to hurt; to impair.

When now he saw himself so freshly regr.,
As if late fight had nought him damnify'd,
He was dismay'd, and gan his fate to fear. Spenser, F. Q.

They more offend if too sparing diet, and are worse damnyfied than they that feed liberally.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 74.

That the commonw. alth. of learning be not damnyfied.

Milton, Arcopagitica.

He, who has suffered the damage, has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit, satisfaction: the damnyfied person has the power of appropriating the goods or service of the offender, by right of self-preservation. Locke.

DAMNINGNESS. n. s. [from damning.] Tendency to procure damnation.

He may vow never to return to those sins which he hath had such experience of, for the emptiness and damningness of them, and so think himself a complete penitent. Hammond.

DAMP. v. a. [Teut. Dan. and Dutch, damp, dampff, vapour. Serenius deduces it from the ancient Scyth. dau, to evaporate. Su. dufcen, evaporated.]

1. Moist; inclining to wet; not completely dry, foggy.

She said no more: the trembling Trojans hear,
O'er-press'd with a damp sweat and holy fear. Dryden.

2. Dejected; sunk; depressed.

And these and more came flocking, but with looks
Downcast and damp; yet such wherein appear'd

DAMP. n. s.

1. Fog; moist air; moisture.

Night; not now, as ere man fell,

Wholesome and cool, and mild; but with black air

A rift there was, which from the mountain's height

Convey'd a glimmering and malignant light,

A breathing place to draw the damps away,

A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden.

2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth.

The heat of the sun in the hotter seasons, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, excites those usual exhalations in subterraneous caverns, which are called damps: these seldom happen but in the summer-time, when the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Woodward.

3. Dejection; depression of spirit; cloud of the mind.

D A M.

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
Recover'd and his scatter'd spirits return'd,
To Michael thus his humble words address'd. Milton, P. L.

His name struck everywhere so great a damp,
As Archimedes through the Roman camp. Roscommon.

Even now, while thus I stand blest in thy presence,
A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts. Addison.

An eternal state, he knows and confesses that he has made no provision for, that he is undone for ever: a prospect enough to cast a damp over his sprightliest hours. Rogers.

This commendable resentment against me, strikes a damp upon that spirit in all ranks and corporations of men. Swift.

To DAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet; to moisten; to make humid.

2. To depress; to deject; to chill; to dull.

The very loss of one pleasure is enough to damp the relish of another. Estes.

Dread of death hangs over the mere natural man, and like the hand-writing on the wall, damps all his jollity. Alberbury.

It would be enough to damp their warmth in such pursuits, if they could once reflect, that in such course they will be sure to run upon the very rock they mean to avoid. Swift.

3. To weaken; to abate; to hebetate; to discourage.

A soft body dampeth the sound much more than a hard.

Bacon.

4. To hebetate; to abate motion; to discourage; to dull.

Ustury dulls and damps all industries, improvements, and new inventions, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this slug. Bacon.

Unless an age too late, or cold

Climate or years, damp my intended wing

DAMPISH.* adj. [from damp.] Moist; inclining to wet.

And as fierce fire, wrapt up in dampish cloud,
With violent force the sides thereof doth rend,
And with pale lightning thunder downie doth send.

Mir. for Mag. p. 826.

One mile in dampish shade. More, Song of the Soul, ii. 62.

DAMPISHNESS. n. s. [from damp.] Tendency to wetness; fogginess; moisture.

It hath been used by some with great success to make their walls thick; and to put a lay of chalk between the bricks, to take away all dampishness. Bacon.

DAMPNESS. n. s. [from damp.] Moisture; fogginess.

Nor need they fear the dampness of the sky
Should flag their wings, and hinder them to fly;

'Twas only water thrown on sails too dry. Dryden.

By stacks they often have very great loss, by the dampness of the ground, which rots and spoils it. Mortimer.

DAMPY. adj. [from damp.]

1. Moist; damp.

What is she but obscure? and her more dampy shade,
And covert, but a den for beasts of ravin made.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 7.

2. Dejected; gloomy; sorrowful.

The lords did dispel dampy thoughts, which the remembrance of his uncle might raise, by applying him with exercises and disports. Hayward.

DAMSEL. n. s. [formerly the name of young persons of distinction of both sexes. Fr. dameisel, damoiseau, damoiselle. It is by us now only applied to females. Bas Bret. damesel; low Lat. domicella, domella.]

1. A young gentlewoman; a young woman of distinction; now only used in verse.

Kneeling, I my servant's smiles implore,
And one mad damsel dares dispute my pow'r. Prior.

2. An attendant of the better rank.

With her train of damsels she was gone
In shady walks, the scorching heat to shun. Dryden.

3. A wench; a country lass.

The clowns are whoremasters, and the damsels with child.
Gay.

• DA'MSON. n. s. [corruptly from damscene.] A small black plum. See DAMASCENE.

• My wife desir'd some damsons,
And made me climb with danger of my life. Shakespeare.

DAN. n. s. [from dominus, as now don in Spanish, and donna, Italian, from domina.] The old term of honour for men; as we now say Master. I know not that it was ever used in prose, and imagine it to have been rather of ludicrous import.

Dan Chaucer, well of English undefiled. Spenser, F. Q.

This whimp'd, whining, purblind, wayward boy,

• This signor Junio's giant dwarf, dan Cupid. Shakespeare.

Dick, if this story pleaseth thee,

Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me. Prior, Alton.

To DANCE. v. n. [danſer, Fr. dançar, Span. as some think from tanza, Arabick, a dance; as Junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from δῶνσις.] To move in measure; to move with steps correspondent to the sound of instruments.

What say you to young Mr. Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses. Shakespeare.

To DANCE Attendance. v. n. To wait with suppleness and obsequiousness.

Men are sooner weary to dance attendance at the gates of foreign lords, than to tarry the good leisure of their own magistrates. Raleigh, Essays.

It upbraids you

To let your father's friend, for three long months,
Thus dance attendance for a word of audience. Dryden.

To DANCE. v. a. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.

Thy grandsire lov'd thee well;

Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee. Shakespeare.

That I see thee here,

Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,

Than when I first my wedded mistress saw

Bestride my threshold. Shakespeare, Coriol.

In pestilences the malignity of the infecting vapour danceth the principal spirits. Bacon.

DANCE. n. s. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by musick.

Our dance of custom, round about the oak

Of Herne the hunter. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

The honourablest part of talk is to give the occasion, and again to moderate and pass to somewhat else; for then a man leads the dance. Bacon.

But you perhaps expect a modish feast,

With am'rous songs and wanton dancer grac'd. Dryden.

DA'NCER. n. s. [from dance.] One that practises the art of dancing.

He at Philippi kept

His sword e'en like a dancer, while I strook

The lean and wrinkled Cassius. Shakespeare.

Musicians and dancers! take some truce

With these your pleasing labours; for great use

As much weariness as perfection brings. Donne.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

It is a usual practice for our funambulous, or dancers on the rope, to attempt somewhat like flying. Wilkins.

He, perfect dancer! climbs the rope,

And balances your fear and hope. Prior.

Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part,

Forming her movements to the rules of art:

And, vex'd, I found that the musician's hand

Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command. Prior.

DA'NCING. n. s. [from dance.] The act of moving with steps correspondent to musick.

VOL. II.

Elders the gates, youth did their songs forbear;
Gone was our joy; our dancings mournings were.

Donne, Poems, p. 365.

DA'NCINGMASTER. n. s. [dance and master.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their ape's tricks by a dancingmaster.

L'Estrange.

• The legs of a dancingmaster, and the fingers of a musician, fall, as it were, naturally, without thought or pains, into regular and admirable motions. Locke on Understanding.

DA'NCINGSCHOOL. n. s. [dancing and school.] The school where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the English dancing schools,

And teach lavoltas high, and swift courantos;

Saying our grace is only in our heels. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancingschool for the institution of apes of quality. L'Estrange.

DANDELION. n. s. [dent de lion, French.] The name of a plant.

It agrees in all respects with the hawkweed, but only in its having a single naked stalk, with one flower upon the top. Miller.

For cowslips sweet, let dandelions spread;

For Blouzelinda, blithsome maid, is dead! Gay's Pastorals.

DA'NDIPRAT. n. s. [dandin, French, Dr. Johnson says; which means a fool. But our expression seems to be borrowed from a small coin of Henry the seventh's time. "King Henry the seventh stamped a small coin, called dandyprats; and first,

as I read, coined shillings, whereas before it was a name of weight, rather than a coin." Camden on Money, in his Remains. Our old lexicography preserves this meaning: "Dandiprat, a small piece of money, long since out of use; also, a dwarf." Sherwood. And Barret has "a knave scarce worth a dandiprat."] A little fellow; an urchin: a word used sometimes in fondness, sometimes in contempt.

One of her chaplains, — a very dandiprat, and exceedingly deformed. World of Wonders, (1608,) p. 178.

To DA'NDLE. v. d. [dandelen, Dutch.]

1. To shake a child on the knee, or in the hands, to please and quiet him.

Then shall ye suck, and shall be born upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees. Isaiah.

Thy little brethren, which, like fairy sprites,

Of skip into our chamber those sweet nights,

And, kiss'd and dandl'd on thy father's knee,

Were brib'd next day to tell what they did see. Donne.

Courts are but superficial schools

To dandle fools. Bacon.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw

Motion occasions sleep, as we find by the common use of rocking forward children in cradles, or dandling them in their nurses arms. Temple.

2. To fondle; to treat like a child.

Their child shall be advanc'd,

And be received for the emperor's heir;

And let the emperor dandle him for his own. Shakespeare.

They have put me in a silk gown, and a gamely fool's cap;

I am ashamed to be dandled thus, and cannot look in the glass without blushing, to see myself turp'd into such a little pretty master. Addison, Guardian.

3. To delay; to procrastinate; to protract by trifles; not in use.

Captains do so dandle their doings, and dally in the service, as if they would not have the enemy subdued. Spenser.

DA'NDLER. n. s. [from dandle.] He that dandles or fondles children. Fr. mignardeur. Sherwood.

DA'NDRUFF. n. s. [often written dendruff, from tau, the itch, and spor, sordid, filthy.] Scabs in the head; scurf at the roots of the hair.

DANE.* n. s. [The Danes are said to have their name after Dan, their first king, of whom the country of Denmark, a very ancient kingdom, did also take appellation. Verstegan. Danay, Danes, Sax. Dæna la, the Jurisdiction of the Danes.] A native of Denmark.

Upon the death of Hardi-Canutus, the last of their three kings, it was agreed upon and decreed by the chief lords and nobles of the realm [of England], that no Dane from thenceforth should any more reign over them.

Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 6.

If the Saxons came, most of them, from Jutland and Anglen, a part of Denmark, as Danish writers affirm, and that Danes and Norinans are the same; then, in this invasion, Danes drove out Danes, their own posterity.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 5.

DA'NEGELD.* n. s. [from Dane, and Sax. geit, a debt. Hence perhaps the terms Danish and Danist for usury and an usurer, not disused in the seventeenth century. See Cockeram's Dictionary.] The tribute laid upon our ancestors, the Saxons, of twelve pence upon every hide of land through the realm by the Danes.

Cowell.

He [Edward the Confessor] remitted the heavy imposition called Danegeld, amounting to 40,000 a year, which had been constantly collected after the occasion ceased.

Barke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. v. 5.

DA'NISH.* adj. [from Dane, Sax. Denisc.] Relating to the Danes.

Hardened thus dead, the English, rejoicing at this unexpected ridance from the Danish yoke, sent over to Ethel-

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 6.

DANISM and DANIST.* See DANEGELD.

DA'NEWORT. n. s. A species of elder: called also dwarf-elder, or wallwort.

DA'NGER. n. s. [danger, Fr. of uncertain derivation. Skinner derives it from dammum, Menage from angaria, Minshew from dan, death, to which Junius seems inclined. So far Dr. Johnson: who omits a derivation from dammum gerere, which is very probable, in the abbreviation of those words, and by the sense which they bear.]

c. Risque; hazard: peril.

They that sail on the sea, tell of the danger. Eccles. xliii. 24.

Our craft is in danger to be set at naught. Acts. x. 27.

He hath writ this to feed my affection, your honour, and to no other pretence of danger. Shakspeare.

More danger now from gain alone we find,

Than from the rocks, the billows, and the wind. Waller.

b. Cosody. [old Fr. daugier; low Lat. dangerium.] Cosoiete.

Narcissus was a bachilere,

That love had caught in his daungere. Chaucer, Rom. R. 1470.

Through the blindness of princes, the Romish clergy have them fast yoked, and in their danger.

Up. Jewell, Apol. Ch. Eng. P. 6. ch. 15.

You stand within his danger, do you not?

Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

b. DA'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in hazard; to endanger.

Pompey's son stands up

For the main soldier; whose quality going on,

The sides of the world may danger. Shakspeare.

DA'NGERLESS. adj. [from danger.] Without hazard; without risque; exempt from danger.

He shewed no less magnanimity in dangerless despising, than others in dangerous affecting the multiplying of kingdoms.

Sidney.

DA'NGEROUS.* adj. [old Fr. dangerous.] Hazardous; perilous; full of danger.

A man of an ill tongue is dangerous in his city. Eccles. ix.

All men counsel me to take away thy life, likely to bring forth nothing but dangerous and wicked effects. Sidney.

Already we have conquer'd half the war,

DA'NGEROUSLY. adv. [from dangerous.] Hazardously; perilously; with danger.

But for your son, believe it, oh, believe it,

Most dang'rously you have with him prevail'd,

If not most mortal to him. Shakspeare, Coriol.

A sort of naughty persons

Have practis'd dangerously against your state,

Dealing with witches and with conjurers. Shakspeare.

It is just with God to permit those, which think they stand so surely, to fall most dangerously. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Plutarch says, Telesilla, a noble lady, being dangerously sick, was advised to apply her mind to poetry. Peacham.

If it were so; which but to think were pride;

My constant love would dangerously be tried. Dryden.

DA'NGEROUSNESS. n. s. [from dangerous.] Danger; hazard; peril.

I shall not need to mind you of judging of the dangerousness of diseases, by the nobleness of the part affected. Boyle.

To DA'NGLE.* v. n. [from hang, according to Skinner; as, hang, hangle, dangle, Dr. Johnson says. But Skinner's exact etymology is dan or dune, Sax. down, and hangan; yet our word must be referred to the Swedish dangla or dingla, to dangle. V. Widegren.] To hang loose and quivering.

Go, bind thou up yond dangling apriocks. Shakspeare.

He'd rather on a gibbet dangle,

Than miss his dear delight to wrangle. Hudibras.

Codrus had but one bed; so short to boot,

That his short wife's short legs hung dangling out. Dryden.

With dangling hands he strokes the imperial robe,

And with a cuckold's air commands the globe. Smol.

But have you not with thought beheld

The sword hung dangling o'er the shield. Prior.

2. To hang upon any one; to be an humble, useless, harmless follower.

The presbyterians, and other fanaticks that dangle after them, are well inclined to pull down the present establishment.

Swift.

DA'NGLER. n. s. [from dangle.] A man that hangs about women only to waste time.

A dangler is of neither sex. Ralph.

DANK. adj. [from tancken, Gerin. Skinner.] Damp; humid; moist; wet.

He ber the maiden sleeping found,

On the dank and dirty ground. Shakspeare.

Yet off they flit

The dank, and, rising on stiff pinions, tour

The mid aerial sky. Milton, P. L.

Through each thicket, dank or dry

Like a black mist, low creeping, he held on

Now that the fields are dank, and ways are mire,

Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire

Help waste aullen day. Milton, Sonnet.

By the rush-fringed bank,

Where grows the willow and the osier dank,

My sliding chariot stays. Milton, Comus.

Me, in my vow'd

Picture, the sacred wall declares t' have hung

My dank and dropping weeds

To the stern god of sea. Milton, Comus.

To wash the skins of beasts and fowls herewith, would keep them from growing dank in moist weather. Grew.

DANK.* n. s. Damp.

The rawish dank of clumsy winter ramps
The fluent summer's vein; and drizzling sleet
Chilleth the wan bleak cheek of the numm'd earth.
Marston, Ant. and Mell. P. ii. Prol.

DA'NKISH. † adj. Somewhat dank.
They bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dark and dankish vault at home,
There left me. Shakspeare.

She shew'd me all the dongeon where I sate,
The dankish walle, the darkes, and bade me smell,
And bide the savour if I lik'd it well. Mir. for Mag. p. 67.
The former gunpowder, so as aforesaid bestowed and placed there, was become dankish. Proceek against Garnet, sign. C.

DA'NKISHNESS. * n. s. [from dankish.] Moisture;
dampness. Sherrwood.

To Dap or Dape. † v. n. [corrupted from dip.
Dr. Johnson says. It is also sometimes called dib, or dab; and signifies the playing of the fly, whether natural or artificial, on the surface of the water, by raising or sinking it. See To DIBBLE.] To let fall gently into the water: a word, I believe, only used by anglers.

I have taught him how to catch a chub, by dapping with a grasshopper. Walton.
The stone-fly we dape or dibble with, as with the drake.
Cotton's Angler.

DAPA'TICAL. † adj. [from dapaticus, Latin.] Sumptuous in cheer. Dr. Johnson cites Bailey as his authority for this word; but it existed in our lexicography more than a century before Bailey's time.

Dapatical meats [are] dainty meats. Cockeram.

DAPIFER. * n. s. [Lat. and found in the old French also. Literally, a dish-carrier.] One who brings meat to the table; a sewer.

Thou art all for inlandish meat, and outlandish sawces; thou art the dapifer to thy palate, or the cup-bearer to thy appetite.
Reeve, God's Plea for Nineveh, 1657.

DA'PPER. † adj. [dapper, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says; which is valiant, strenuous. The Swedish tapper is the same. Our word is, therefore, an ironical derivation where it is used in contempt. But dapper has another meaning, unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.]

1. Little and active; lively without bulk. It is usually spoken in contempt.

And on the tawny sands and shelves,
Trip the pert fairies and the dapper elves. Milton, Comus.
A pert dapper spark of a naggie, fancied the birds would never be governed till himself should sit at the helm.
L'Estrange.

2. Pretty; neat.
The dapper ditties, that I wont devise,
To feed youth's fancy. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Oct.
Tune thy feed to dapper virelays. Drayton, Shep. Garl. p. 13.

DA'WERLING. n. s. [from dapper.] A dwarf; a dandiprau. Ainsworth.

DA'PPLE. adj. [from apple; as pommelée.] Marked with various colours; variegated; streaked; imbricated:
it is used chiefly of animals.
My country neighbours do not find it impossible to think of a lame horse, till they have run over all beings that are, and then pitch on dapple. Locke.

To DA'PPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To streak;
to vary; to diversify with colours.
But under him a grey steed did he wield,
Whose sides with dappled circles were endight. Spenser.
The gentle day
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey. Shakspeare.

Horses that are dappled, turn white; and old squirrels turn grilly. Bacon.

The lark begins his flight,
From his watch-tower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise. Milton, L'All.
The dappl'd pink, and blushing rose,
Deck my charming Cloe's hair. Prior
The gods, to curse Pamela with her pray'rs, Gave the gilt coach and dappled Flanders mares. Pope.

DAR. } n. s. A fish found in the Severn. Bailey.

DART. } Dart is the same with Dace.

To DARE. † v. n. pret. I durst; the preterite I dared belongs to the active dare, part. I have dared.
[deapran, Saxon; derren, Dutch; from the Goth.
daurstan.] To have courage for any purpose; not to be afraid; to adventure; to be adventurous.

Dar'st thou be as good as thy word now? — Why, Hal, thou know'st, as thou art but a man, I dare; but as thou art a prince, I fear thee. Shakspeare.

I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more, is none. Shakspeare.

They are both haunted; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing advent'rously. Shakspeare.

Neither of them was of that temper as to dare any dangerous fact. Haywood.

The father bore it with undaunted soul.
Like one who durst his destiny control. Dryden.

Deliberate and well-weighed courage knows both to be cautious and to dare; as occasion offers. Dryden.

We dare not build much upon such a notion or doctrine, till it be very fully examined. Watts.

To DARE. † v. a. pret. I dared, not I durst.

1. To challenge; to defy.

I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly.
Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gently exercise and proof of arms. Shakspeare.

Here she stands:
Take but possession of her with a touch;
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love. Shakspeare.

He had many days come half seas over; and sometimes passing further, came and lay at the mouth of the harbour, daring them to fight. Kneller.

Masters of the arts of policy thought that they might even defy and dare Providence to the face. South.

All cold, but in her breast, I will despise;
And dare all heat but that in Celia's eyes. Roxcommon.

Time! I dare thee to discover
Such a youth, and such a lover. Dryden.

Presumptuous wretch! with mortal art to dare
Immortal power, and brave the thunderer. Grinville.

2. To frighten.

Those mad mischiefs
Would dare a woman. Beaumont and Fl. Maud's Tragedy

To DARE Larks. To catch them by means of a looking-glass, or by keeping a bird of prey hovering aloft, which keeps them in amaze till caught; to amaze.

Shrimps are dipped up in shallow water with little round nets, not much unlike that which is used for daring larks. Carew.

As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight Dryden

DARE. n. s. [from the verb.] Defiance; challenge.

Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Caesar, and commands
The empire of the sea. Shakspeare.

DARE. n. s. A small fish, the same with dace. Ianciscus.

DA'RER. * n. s. [from dare.] One who dares or defies.

Don Michael, Legn; another darer come. Beaumont and Fl. Rule a Wife.

DA'REFUL. adj. [dare and full.] Full of defiance; not in use.

We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home. Shakespeare.

DA'RING. adj. [from dare.] Bold; adventurous;
fearless; courageous; intrepid; brave; stout.

The last Georgick has many metaphors, but not so daring as this; for human passions may be more naturally ascribed to a bee than to an inanimate plant. Addison.

The song too daring, and the theme too great. Prior.
Grieve not, O daring prince! that noble heart. Pope.

DA'RINGLY. adv. [from daring.] Boldly; courageously; fearlessly; impudently; outrageously.

Some of the great principles of religion are every day openly and daringly attacked from the press. Atterbury.

Your brother, fir'd with his success,
Too daringly upon the foe did press. Halifax.

DA'RINGNESS. n. s. [from daring.] Boldness.
That our hope be but commensurate to our sincerity; our daringness to our duty. Hammond's Works, iv. 54.

DARK. adj. [Sax. deopce; Iceland. dorkur; black.]
Not light; wanting light.

Fleance, his son, who keeps him company,
Must embrace the fate of that dark hour. Shakespeare.

While we converse with her, we mark
No want of day, nor think it dark. Walton.

2. Not of a showy or vivid colour.
If the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean. Leviticus.

In Muscovy the generality of the people are more inclined to have dark coloured hair than flaxen. Boyle.

3. Blind; without the enjoyment of light.
Thou wretched daughter of a dark old man,
Conduct my weary steps. Dryden and Lee, Oedipus.

4. Opaque; not transparent: as, lead is a dark body.

5. Obscure; not perspicuous.

What may seem dark at the first, will afterwards be found more plain. Hooker.

Mean time we shall express our darker purpose
Shakespeare.

6. Not enlightened by knowledge; ignorant.
The age wherein he liv'd, was dark; but he Could not want sight, who taught the world to see. Dehane.

7. Gloomy; not cheerful.

All men of dark tempers, according to their degree of melancholy or enthusiasm, may find conceits fitted to their humours. Addison on Italy.

8. Secret.

Now, if you could wear a mind!
Dark as your fortune is. Shakespeare, Othello.

9. Unclear; foul.

His eye survey'd the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Milton, P. L. i. 456.

1. Darkness; obscurity; want of light.

Come, thick night,
And pin thee in the dunest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold, hold! Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Cloud and ever-during dark
Surrounds me! from the cheerful ways of men Cut off. Milton.

Whereas seeing requires light, and a free medium, and a right line to the objects, we can hear in the dark measured, and by curve lines. Holder.

2. Obscurity; condition of one unknown.

All he says of himself is, that he is an obscure person; one,
I suppose he means, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

3. Want of knowledge.

Till we ourselves perceive by our own understandings, we are as much in the dark, and as void of knowledge, as before. Locke.

4. A dark place; a prison.

She shew'd me all the dungeon where I sat,
The darkest walled, the darkest, and bad me smell,
And taste the savour if I lik'd it well. Mir. for Mag. p. 67.

5. A blot; a stain.

And had the poet not been brib'd to a modest
Expression of your antick gambols in it,
Some dark had been discover'd. Shirley, Com. L. of Pleasure

DARK-HOUSE. n. s. Our old word for a mudhouse.

Love is a madness, and deserves as well a dark-house, with a whip, as madmen do. Shakespeare, As you like it

Why have you suffered me to be imprisoned, kept in a dark- house? Shakespeare, Twelfth Night

DARK-WORKING. adj. Working in a dark or foul manner.

Dark-working sorcerers, that change the mind.
Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

Foul ministers, dark-working by the force
Of secret-sapping gold. Thomson, Liberty, P. iv.

To DARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To darken; to obscure: obsolete, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Spenser. It is one of our oldest verbs; for Wicliffe and Chaucer use it. Nor was it obsolete in Milton's time.

Fair when that cloud of pride, which erst doth dark
Her goodly light, with smiles she drives away. Spenser.

The earth cumber'd, and the wing'd air dark'd with plumes.
Milton, Comus.

To DA'RKEN. v. a. [Sax. adeopcean, to darken.]

1. To make dark; to deprive of light.

I will darken the earth in the clear day. Amos, viii. 9.
Black with surrounding forests when it stood,
That hung above, and darken'd all the flood. Addison.

Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write. Pope.

2. To cloud; to perplex.

Such was his wisdom, that his confidence did seldom darken his foresight, especially in things near hand. Bacon.

3. To foul; to sully.

The lusts and passions of men do sully and darken their minds, even by a natural influence. Tillotson.

To DA'RKEN. v. n. To grow dark.

DARKENER. n. s. [from darken.] That which darkens and confounds.

I know no disease of the soul but ignorance; not of the arts and sciences, but of itself: yet relating to those it is a pernicious evil, the darkener of man's life, the disturber of his reason and common confounder of truth. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Thus much for the first great darkener of men's minds, sensuality; and that, in both the branches of it; lust and intemperance. South, Sermon, iii. 76.

DARKISH. adj. [from dark.] Dusky; approaching to dark; not of a vivid colour.

Then the priest shall look; and behold, if the bright spots in the skin of their flesh be darkish white. Levit. xiii. 39.

The days more darkish are,
More short, cold, moist. Induct. Mir. for Mag.

Ha! I should know their shapes
Though it be darkish. Beaumont and Fl. The Captain.

The leaf was darkish, and had prickles on it. Milton, Comus.

DA'RKING. [a participle, as it seems, from darken, which yet I have never found; or perhaps a kind of diminutive from dark, as young, youngling.] Being in the dark; being without light: a word merely poetical.

O, wilt thou darking leave me? do not so. Shakespeare.

The varying darking stands
The wakeful bird. Shakespeare.

Sings darkling, and, in shadiest covert hid,
Tunes her nocturnal note. Milton, P. L.

Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's pow'r,
With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd, and in brutish shapes confin'd. Dryden.

DA'RKLY. adv. [from dark.] In a situation void of light; obscurely; blindly; gloomily; uncertainly; secretly.

D A R

For now we see through a glass darkly. 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

2d Lord. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.

1st Lord. When you have spoken it, 'tis dead; and I am the grave of it. Shakespeare, All's Well.

For well you know, and can record alone,
What fame to future times conveys but darkly down. Dryden.

DARKNESS. † n. s. [from dark.]

1. Absence of light.

Darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis.
I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death. Job.

2. Opakeness; want of transparency.

3. Obscurity; want of perspicuity, difficultness to the understanding.

4. Infernal bloom; wickedness.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequence. Shakespeare.

5. State of being intellectually clouded; ignorance; uncertainty.

All the light truth has, or can have is from the clearness, and validity of those proofs upon which it is received; to talk of any other light in the understanding, is to put ourselves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkness. Locke.

6. Secrecy. See the 8th sense of DARK.

Darkness, applied to the mind, is secrecy; applied to the fortune, is obscurity. Johnson, Notes on Shakespeare.

7. The empire of Satan, or the devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear son. Colossians.

DARKSOME. adj. [from dark.] Gloomy; obscure;
not well enlightened; not luminous.

He brought him through a darksome narrow pass,
To a broad gate. Spenser.

And her fair eyes, like stars that dimmed were
With darksome cloud, now shew their goodly beams. Spenser.
You must not look to have an image in any thing lightsome;
for even a face in iron, rel-ho, will not be seen, the light confounding the small differences of lightsome and darksome which shew the figure. Bacon.

A darksome cloud of locusts, swarming down,
Must eat, and on the ground leave nothing green. Milton, P. L.

He here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay. Milton, P. L.

Mistaken blessing, which old age they call,
'Tis a long, nasty, darksome hospital. Dryden.
The darksome pines that o'er you rocks reclin'd,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind. Pope.

DARLING. adj. [beopling, Sax. diminutive of dear.]
Favourite; dear; beloved; regarded with great kindness and tenderness.

'Tis not for a generous prince to countenance oppression and injustice, even in his most darling favourites. L'Estrange.
Have a care lest some beloved notion or some darling science, too far prevail over your mind. Watt.

DARLING. n. s. A favourite; one much beloved.

Young Ferdinand they suppose is drown'd,
And his and my lov'd darling. Shakespeare.
In Thames, the ocean's darling, England's pride,
The pleasing emblem of his reign does glide. Hatfield.
She became the darling of the princess. Addison.

TO DARN. † v. a. [of uncertain original, Dr. Johnson says. It seems to be the same as dearn, which is the Sax. dearnan or dýnnan, to hide or conceal.
Sherwood, in his old dictionary, has "to dearn up a rent." See TO DEARN.] To mend holes by imitating the texture of the stuff.

To darn up the rents of schism by calling a council.
Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. B. I.

D A S

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn? • Gay.

He spent every day ten hours in his closet, in darning his stockings, which he performed to admiration. Swift.

DARNEL. n. s. [Lolium.] A weed growing in the fields.

He was met ev'n now
Crow'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare.

Want ye corn for bread?
'Twas full of darnel; do you like the taste? Shakespeare.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But oats and darnel choak the rising corn. Dryden.

DARNICK.* See DORNIC.

DARNING.* n. s. [from darn.] The act of mending holes in apparel.

Now supposing those stockings of Sir John's endued with some degree of consciousness at every particular darning, they would have been sensible, that they were the same individual pair of stockings, both before and after the darning; and this sensation would have continued in them through all the succession of darnings! Arbuthnot and Pope, Disc. Scch.

TO DARRAIN. † v. a. [This word is by Junius referred to dare; it seems to me more probably deducible from arranger la bataille, Dr. Johnson says. Spenser often combines battle with arrange; and darrain, in the Minour for Magistrates, is written in a manner, which may seem to countenance Dr. Johnson's etymology: "We — should d'araine battell," edit. 1610. p. 599. But the word may be from the old French descenir. See TO DRAIGN.]

1. To prepare for battle; to range troops for battle.

The town-boys parted in twain, the one side calling themselves Pompeians, the other Cæsarians; and then darraining a kind of battle, but without arms, the Cæsarians got the over-hand. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York:
Darrain your battle; for they are at hand. Shakespeare.

2. To apply to the fight, of single combatants.

Therewith they gan to hurlen greedily.
Redoubted battle ready to darraine. Spenser.

DART. † n. s. [dard, French.]

1. A missile weapon thrown by the hand; a small lance.

Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a rock or flint;
there another with a dart, arrow, or lance. Peacham.
Overwhelm'd with darts, which from afar they fling,
The weapons round his hollow temples ring. Dryden.

2. [In poetry.] Any missile weapon.

And from about her shot darts of desire
Into all eyes, to wish her still in sight. Milton, P. L.

TO DART. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To throw offensively.

He whets his tusks, and turns, and darts the war;
Th' invaders dart their jav'lins from afar. Dryden.

2. To throw; to emit; as the sun darts his beams on the earth.

Pan came, and ask'd what magic caus'd my smart;
Or what ill eyes malignant glances dart. Pope.

TO DART. v. n.

1. To fly as a dart.

2. To let fly with hostile intention.
Now, darting Parthia, art thou strick. Shakespeare.

DARTER.* n. s. [from dart.] One who throws a dart. Sherwood.

TO DASH. † v. a. [The etymology of this word, in any of its senses, is very doubtful. Dr. Johnson says. The Iceland. and Swedish daska, to which Serenius refers, is to inflict blows, to drub. In the sense of confound, or to make ashamed suddenly, it seems probable, that to daze or dase for so it was anciently written) is the parent of it. See To DAZE. In other senses, the Gr. δαζωμι, to scatter, to divide, has been offered.

1. To throw or strike any thing suddenly against something.

If you dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, it maketh a sound. Bacon.

A man that cuts himself, and tears his own flesh, and dashes his head against the stones, does not act so unreasonably as the wicked man. Tillotson.

2. To break by collision.

They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them; and, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakespeare.

David's throne shall then be like a tree, Spreading and overshadowing all the earth; Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash All monarchies besides throughout the world. Milton, P. L.

3. To throw water in flashes.

Dashing water on them may prove the best remedy. Mortimer.

Middling his head, and prone to earth his view, With ears and chest that dash the morning dew. Tickel.

4. To bespatter; to besprinkle.

This tempest, Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded The sudden breach on't. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

5. To agitate any liquid, so as to make the surface fly off.

At once the brushing oars and brazen prow Dash up the sandy waves, and ope the depths below. Dryden.

6. To mingle; to adulterate; to change by some worse admixture.

Your sermons dashed full of sorrowful teares and depe sighings, to allure the people to the Romish way.

Confid. of N. Shanton, (1546.) sign. A. iii.

I must have liquor Fit for the Miraydons; no dashing now, child. Brown, and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

Whacum, bred to dash and draw, Not wine, but more unwholesome law. Hudibras.

I take care to dash the character with such particular circumstances as may prevent ill-natured applications. Addison.

Several revealed truths are dashed and adulterated with a mixture of fables and human inventions. Spectator, No. 580.

7. To form or sketch in haste, carelessly.

Never was dash'd out, at one lucky hit, A fool so just a copy of a wit. Pope.

8. To obliterate; to blot; to cross out.

To dash over this with a line, will deface the whole copy extremely, and to a degree that, I fear, may displease you. Pope.

9. To confound; to make ashamed suddenly; to surprise with shame or fear; to depress; to suppress.

His tongue Dropp'd manna, and could make the worse appear The better reason, to perplex and dash Maturest counsels. Milton, P. L.

Yearly enjoin'd, some say, to undergo This annual, humbling certain number'd days To dash their pride and joy for man seduc'd. Milton, P. L.

An unknown hand still check'd my forward joy, Dash'd me with blushes. Dryden and Lee, Oedipus.

To dash this cavil, read but the practice of Christian emperors. South.

After they had sufficiently blasted him in his personal capacity, they found it an easy work to dash and overthrow him in his political. South.

Nothing dashed the confidence of the mule like the braying of the ass, while he was dilating upon his genealogy. L. Estrange.

The nymph, when nothing could Narcissus move, Still dash'd with blushes for her slighted love. Addison.

Some stronger pow'r eludes our sickly will; Dashes our rising hope with certain ill. Prior.

Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car; Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star. Pope.

To DASH.† v. n.

1. To fly off the surface, by a violent motion.

If the vessel be suddenly stopt in its motion, the liquor continues its motion, and dashes over the sides of the vessel. Cheyne.

2. To fly in flashes with a loud noise.

On each hand the gushing waters play, And down the rough cascade, all dashing, fall. Thomson.

3. To rush through water so as to make it fly.

Doeg, though without knowing how or why, Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin. Through sense and nonsense, never out or in. Dryden.

4. To strike, as a ship upon a rock.

If a woman once dash upon this rock of reproach, she hardly ever recruits her credit. Bp. Taylor, Artific. Hands. p. 151.

DASH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Collision.

By the touch ethereal rous'd, The dash of clouds, or irritating war, Of fighting winds, while all is calm below They furious spring. Thomson.

2. Infusion; something worse mingled in a small proportion.

The noise may seem to pretend to a dash and sprinkling of art. Gregory's Posthuma, (1650.) p. 48.

There is nothing which one regards so much, with an eye of mirth and pity, as innocence, when it has in it a dash of folly. Addison.

3. A mark in writing; a line ———, to note a pause, or omission.

He is afraid of letters and characters, of notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing. Brown, Vulg. Err.

In modern wit all printed trash is Set off with numerous breaks and dashes. Swift.

4. Sudden stroke; blow; act; ludicrous, Dr. Johnson says; but certainly not always so, in this sense.

Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile. — She takes upon her leavely at first dash. Shakespeare.

As to that dash your law gives to this quickening of complexion, as if it were an infallible token of a vain mind. Bp. Taylor, Artific. Hands. p. 84.

5. To cut a DASH. In modern colloquial speech, to make a great shew; to cut a figure, as it is sometimes called. The Scots have a similar expression, "to cast a dash."

DASH. adv. An expression of the sound of water dashed.

Hark, hark, the waters fall; And, with a murmuring sound, Dash, dash, upon the ground, To gentle slumbers call. Dryden.

DASHING. adj.* [from dash. See the third sense of To DASH, v. n.] Precipitate; rushing carelessly onward, in any respect. Of modern application.

Dashing Machiavelian politicians. Burke, on the Fr. Revol.

DA'STARD. n. s. [from dastrigan, to terrify, Sax.]

A coward; a pottron; a man infamous for fear.

The cruelty and envy of the people, Permitted by our dastard nobles, And suffer'd me by th' voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out of Rome. Shakespeare.

Who now my matchless valour dare oppose? How long will Dares wait his dastard foes? Dryden.

Dastard and drunkard, mean and insolent; Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might, In threats the foremost, but the last in fight. Dryden.

Bug-bear thoughts in the minds of children, make them dastards, and afraid of the shadow of darkness ever after. Locke.

Curse on their dastard souls, they stand astonish'd. Addison.

To DASTARD. v. s. To terrify; to intimidate; to doast with cowardice; to dispirit.

I'm weary of this flesh which holds us here, And dastards manly souls with hope and fear. Dryden.

To DA'STARDISE.† v. a. [from dastard.] To intimidate; to deject with cowardice; to dispirit; to depress; to terrify; to make an habitual coward. This their pusillanimity and courage, as well as their cunning and craft, may be imputed to their various thralldoms; which hath so cowed and dastardized their courage.

Howell, Lett. i. vi. 14.

He had such things to urge against our marriage, As, now declar'd, would blunt my sword in battle, And dastardize my courage. Dryden.

How must it needs dastardize a soldier, if, when he is going into the battle, the near approach of danger should awaken such thoughts as these in his mind!

Scott, Serm. before the Artill. Comp. 1680.

DA'STARDLINESS.* n. s. [from dastardly.] Cowardliness. Barret.

DA'STARDLY.† adj. [from dastard.] Cowardly; mean; timorous.

In peace the common people seem dastardly, but in war are found spirited. Sir T. Herbert, Trac. p. 337.

DA'STARDNESS.* n. s. [from dastard.] Timorousness; cowardliness. Hulcot.

DA'STARDY.† n. s. [from dastard.] Cowardliness; timorousness.

Dastardy, and stupidity in a good cause, — is the extremity of all baseness. Archdeacon Arnun's Tablet, (1661,) p. 8.

DATA.* n. s. pl. [Lat.] Truths admitted. See also DATUM.

This then may, I think, be numbered among what the mathematicians called data; that is, confessed and granted truths. Delany, Life of David, (1740,) i. 81.

DATARY.† n. s. [Datarius, Lat. from datum; Fr. dataire.]

1. An officer of the Chancery of Rome, through whose hands benefices pass; and who affixes to the papal bulls Datum Romæ.

Neither the popes themselves, nor those of the court, the secretaries and dataries, which pen their bulls and breves, have any use or exercise in Holy Scripture. Bp. Bedell, Letters, p. 356.

2. The employment or office of a datary.

Besides the temporal dominions, he [the pope] hath, in all the countries before-named, the datary or dispatching of bulls. Howell, Lett. i. i. 38.

DATE.† n. s. [datte, Fr. from datum, Latin.]

1. The time at which a letter is written, marked at the end or the beginning; or at which a legal instrument is signed.

Take the bonds along with you, And have the dates in Compt. Shakspeare, Tim. of Athens.

The conclusion — mentions the execution or date of the deed, or the time of its being given or executed. Blackstone.

2. The time at which any event happened; the age of a thing.

The best rules for distinguishing the date of manuscripts are to be had in father Mabillon's learned treatise "de Re Diplomatica." Bp. Nicholson to Ralph Thoresby, 1699.

Chronology fixes the dates and facts. Lord Chesterfield.

3. The time stipulated when any thing shall be done.

His days and times are past, And my reliance on his fracted dates Has smit my credit. Shakspeare, Timon.

My father's promise ties me not to time; And bonds, without a date, they say are void. Dryden.

4. End; conclusion.

What time would spare, from steel receives its date; And monuments, like men, submit to fate. P. ye.

5. Duration; continuance.

Could the declining of this date, O friend, Our date to immortality extend?

Then raise, From the conflagrant mass, purg'd, and refin'd, New heav'ns, new earth, ages of endless date, Founded in righteousness. Milton, P. L.

DATE. n. s. [from dactylus.] The fruit of the date-tree.

Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.

— They call for dates and quinces in the pastry. Shakspeare.

Blackstone.

To DAUB. v. a. [dabben, Dutch; dauber, French.]

1. To smear with something adhesive.

She took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch. Exodus.

2. To paint coarsely.

Hasty daubing will but spoil the picture, and make it so unnatural as must want false light to set it off. Otway.

They snatched out of his hands a lame imperfect piece, rudely daubed over with too little reflection. Dryden.

If a picture is daubed with many bright and glaring colours, the vulgar admire it as an excellent piece. Watts.

3. To cover with something specious or gross, something that disguises what it lies upon.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,

He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shakspeare.

4. To lay on any thing gaudily or ostentatiously.

Since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegance than daubed with cost. Bacon.

Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and whore;

Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

5. To flatter grossly.

Let every one, therefore, attend the sentence of his conscience; for, he may be sure, it will not daub nor flatter.

South.

To DAUB. v. n. To play the hypocrite: this sense is not in use.

I cannot daub it further;

DA'UBER.† n. s. [from daub.]

1. One that daubs.

Yet this dauber would daub still with his untempered mortar. Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

2. A coarse low painter.

What they call'd his picture, had been drawn at length by the daubers of almost all nations, and still unlike him. Dryden.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dauber, to cause laughter. Dryden.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint

The one-ey'd hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The treacherous tapster, Thomas,

Hung a new angel two doors from us,

As fine as daubers hands can make it. Swift.

3. A low flatterer.

DA'UBERY. n. s. [from daub.] An old word for any thing artful.

She works by charms, by spells, and such daubery as this is beyond our element. Shakspeare.

DA'UBING.* n. s. [from daub.]

Or scar-cloth masts with strong tarpawling coats. Dryden.

DAUGHTER.† n. s. [dahtar, Gothick; dohtep, Sax. dotter, Runick; dohter, German; dochter, Dutch; and also dochter, or daughter, Persian. V. Serenius, and Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 316. Gr. θυγάτηρ.]

1. The female offspring of a man or woman.

Your wives, your daughters,

Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up

The cistern of my lust. Shakspeare.

Now Aurora, daughter of the dawn,

With rosy lustre purpled o'er the lawn. Pope.

2. A daughter in law, or son's wife.

3. A woman.

Jacob went out to see the daughters of the land. Genesis.

4. [In poetry.] Any descendant.

Adam, the goodliest man of men since born

His sons, the fairest of her daughters Eve. Milton, P. L.

5. The female penitent of a confessor.

Are you at leisure, holy father, now;

Or shall I come to you at evening mass?

— My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now. Shakspeare.

DAUGHTERLINESS.* n. s. [from daughterly.] The state of a daughter.

This must assuredly be a considerable accession to the womanishness or daughterliness, if I may so speak, of the church of Rome. Morr, on the Seven Churches, Pref.

DAUGHTERLY.* adj. [from daughter.] Like a daughter; dutiful.

Sir Thomas — liked her naturall and deare daughterly affection towards him. Cavendish's Life of Sir T. More.

DAVIDISTS, or DAVID-GEORGIANS.* n. s. A sect so called by us from David George, a native of Delft, who, early in the sixteenth century, blasphemously gave out that he was the Messiah, rejected marriage, and denied the resurrection. See Pagitt's Here-siography, p. 29.

DA'VIT.* n. s. [a sea-term. Fr. davié.] A short piece of timber used in managing the anchor.

To DAUNT. v. a. [domter, French; domicare, Lat.]

To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Fairfax, whose name in arms through Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with shivy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud, which daunt remotest kings.

Milton, Sonnet.

Where the rude ax, with heaved stroke,

Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,

Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt. Milton, Il Pens.

Some pretences daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glanville.

DA'UNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not dejected; not discouraged.

Grew great by your example, and put on

The dauntless spirit of resolution. Shakspeare.

Dauntless he rose, and to the fight return'd;

With shame his glowing cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd. Dryden, Virgil.

He, not by wants or woes oppress,

Stems the bold torrent with a dauntless breast. Dryden.

The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost worth bearing, for the glory of such a dauntless conduct as he has shewn under it. Pope.

DA'UNTLESSNESS. n. s. [from dauntless.] Fearlessness.

DA'URHIN.* n. s. [Fr. daulphin, or dauphin, Co-grave; from Dauphiny.] The heir apparent to the crown of France.

Look upon the years

Of Lewis the dauphin, and that lovely maid.

Shakspeare, K. John.

The dauphin prince Henry, who delighted in hunting, was fond of "Ainsi qu' on oit le cerf bruire," or "Like as the hart desireth the water-brooks;" which he constantly sung in going out to the chase. Warton, Hist. of Eng. P. iii. 163.

DA'UPHINESS.* n. s. The wife or widow of the dauphin of France.

It is now sixteen or seventeen years since I saw the queen of France, then the dauphiness, at Versailles; and surely never lighted on this orb, which she hardly seemed to touch, a more delightful vision. Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

DAW. n. s. [menedula, Lat. It is supposed by Skinner to be so named from its note; by Junius to be corrupted from dawl; the German tul, and dol, in the Bavarian dialect, having the same signification.] A bird.

I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,

For daws to peck it. Shakspeare, Othello.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrong,

That daws, and trees, and rocks should last so long,

When we must in an instant pass to nought. Devies.

The loud daw, his throat displaying, draws

The whole assembly off his fellow daws. Waller.

To DAW.* v. n. [Sax. dagian, from dæg, day.] To advance towards day; to dawn. In the north of England daw is still used actively in the sense of awaken. See To DAWN.

Till the day dawed these damosels daunced.

Viz. of P. Plowman, fol. 103. b.

The other side, from whence the morning daws.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 10.

To DA'WDLE.* v. n. [a word of recent introduction into our language, and apparently allied to daddle. See To DADDLE.] To waste time; to trifle.

Come, some evening, and dawdle over a dish of tea with me.

Johnson, Letters.

DA'WDLE, or DA'WDLER.* n. s. A trifter; a dallier; one who proceeds slowly or unskillfully in any business. A low word.

DA'WISH.* adj. [from daw.] Like a daw.

Such dauidic dodypols were the parents of him, that was borne blinde, which would not confesse Christ to have healed their son, for fear of displeasing the priests.

Bale, Yeda Course, &c. (1543) fol. 59.

DAWK, n. s. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow, rupture, or incision, in their stuff.

Observe if any hollow or dawks be in the length. Maron.

To DAWK, v. a. To mark with an incision.

Should they apply that side of the tool the edge lies on, the swift coming about of the work would, where a small irregularity of the stuff should happen, jobb the edge into the stuff, and so dawk it. Maron.

To DAWN, † v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dayen, or advance towards day, Dr. Johnson says. Mr. Horne Tooke has observed, that it is the past participle of the Sax. dagian, to grow light, Div. of Purley, ii. 75. where he introduces the examples also which I have given to daw. See To DAW.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But downing day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shakspeare.

As it began to dawn, towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre. St. Matthew.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd, and Phoebus shin'd in vain. Pope.

2. To glimmer obscurely.

A Romanist, from the very first dawning of any notions in his understanding, bath this principle constantly inculcated, that he must believe as the church. Locke.

3. To begin, yet faintly; to give some promises of lustre or eminence.

While we behold such dauntless worth appear
In dawning youth, and souls so void of fear. Dryden.

Thy hand strikes out some free design,
When life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DAWN, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The time between the first appearance of light and the sun's rise, reckoned from the time that the sun comes within eighteen degrees of the horizon.

Then on to-morrow's dawn your care employ,
To search the land, but give this day to joy. Dryden.

2. Beginning; first rise.

These tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul. Pope.

Such their guiltless passion was,
As if the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissembling truth. Thomson.

DA'WNING,  n. s.* [Sax. dagung.] Break of day; morning. Diluculum.

And so befell, that in a dawning,
As chaunteclere among his wives all Sate on his perch. Chaucer, N. Pr. Tale.

Good dawning to thee, friend; art thou of the house?
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

That dawning
May bave the raven's eye. Shakspeare, Cymb.

DAY, † n. s. [Sax. deæg, or dag; Goth. days; Icel. dagur, a day.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun; called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle. St. Matthew, xx. 6.

Of night impatient, we demand the day;
The day arrives, then for the night we pray:
The night and day successive come and go,
Our lasting pains no interruption know. Blackmore.

Or object new
Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our day's work. Milton, P. L.

2. The time from noon to noon, or from midnight to midnight called the natural day.

How many hours bring about the day?
How many days will finish up the year? Shakspeare.

3. Light; sunshine.

Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness. Romans, xiii. 13.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day:

Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Around the fields did nimble lightning play,
Which offer'd us by fits, and snatch'd the day:

'Midst this was heard the shrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly. Dryden.

Yet are we able only to survey
Dawnings of beams, and promises of day. Prior.

4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age; the time. In this sense it is generally plural.

After him reigned Gutheline his heir,
The justest man, and truest, in his days. Spenser, F. Q.

I think, in these days, one honest man is oblig'd to acquaint another who are his friends. Pope.

We have, at this time of day, better and more certain means of information than they had. Woodward.

5. Time or season in general.

The day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redemption is come. Isaiah, lxiii. 4.

6. Life: in this sense it is commonly plural. He never in his days broke his word; that is, in his whole life.

He was never at a loss in his days for a frequent answer.
Carte, Life of Ormonde.

7. The day of contest; the contest; the battle.

His name struck fear, his conduct won the day;
He came, he saw, he seiz'd the struggling prey. Roscommon.

The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Would you th' advantage of the fight delay,
If, striking first, you were to win the day. Dryden.

8. An appointed or fixed time.

Or if my debtors dē not keep their day,
Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I must with patience all the terms attend. Dryden.

He was so rough as to tell me, that a well-bred man would as soon call upon a lady who keeps a day, at midnight, as on any day but that on which she professes being at home. Tatler, No. 166.

9. A day appointed for some commemoration.

The field of Agincourt, Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus. Shakspeare.

As men for daybreak watch the eastern skies. Dryden.

DA'YDREAM.* n. s. [day and dream.] A vision or phantasm to the waking senses.

And when awake, thy soul but nods at best,
Daydreams and sickly thoughts revolving in thy breast.

Dryden, Lucret.

The poet's daydream.

Mason, Eng. Garden.

DA'YLABOUR, n. s. [day and labour.] Labour by the day; labour divided into daily tasks.

Doth God exact daylabour, light deny'd,
I fondly ask?

Milton, P. L.

Daylabour was but an hard and a dry kind of livelihood to a man, that could get an estate with two or three strokes of his pen. South.

DAYLABOURER. n. s. [from daylabour.] One that works by the day.

In one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy sail had thresh'd the corn.
That ten daylabourers could not end.

Milton, II Pens.

The daylabourer, in a country village, has commonly but a small pittance of courage. Locke.

DA'YLIGHT. n. s. [day and light.] The light of the day, as opposed to that of the moon, or a taper.

By this the drooping daylight 'gan to fade,
And yield his room to succeeding night.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thou shalt buy this dear,

If ever I thy face by daylight see,

Now go thy way.

Shakespeare.

They, by daylight passing through the Turks fleet, recovered the haven, to the joy of the besieged Christians.

Knolles.

He stands in daylight, and disdains to hide

An act, to which by honour he is tied.

Dryden.

Will you murder a man in plain daylight?

Dryden.

Though rough bears in covert seek defence,

White foxes stay, with seeming innocence;

That crafty kind with daylight can dispense.

Dryden.

If bodies be illuminated by the ordinary prismatic colours, they will appear neither of their own daylight colours, nor of the colour of the light cast on them, but of some middle colour between both. Newton, Opticks.

DA'Y-LILY. n. s. The same with AsPHODEL, which see.

DA'YSMAN.† n. s. [day and man. See the 10th sense of DAY. "Manny's dai," is Wicliffe's version of what is now "man's judgement," 1 Cor. iv. 3. where day is yet retained in the margin.] An old word for umpire, as Dr. Ainsworth observes; which Dr. Johnson, however, has questioned, and given surety in its stead, citing only the example of Spenser, where it is an arbitrator or judge; as it is elsewhere.

For what art thou,

That mak'st thyself his daysman, to profane

The vengeance prest?

Spenser, F. Q.

He is not a man, as I am, that I should answer him, and we should come together in judgement. Neither is there any daysman betwixt us, [in the margin, umpire.] that might lay his hands upon us both. Job, ix. 32. 33.

DA'YSPRING.† n. s. [day and spring.] The rise of the day; the dawn; the first appearance of light.

Hast thou command'd the morning since thy days? and caused the dayspring to know his place.

Job, xxviii. 12.

So all ere dayspring, under conscious night,

Secret they snail, and in order set.

Milton, P. L.

The breath of heav'n, fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,

With dayspring born, here leave me to respire.

Milton, S. A.

DA'YTAR.† n. s. [Sax. dægtarna.] The morning star.

DAZ

Until the day dawn, and the daystar arise in your hearts.

2 Pet. i. 19.

I meant to make her fair, and free, and wise,
Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great;

I meant the daystar should not brighter rise,

Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat.

B. Jonson.

Sunk though he be beneath the watry floor;

So sinks the daystar in the ocean bed,

And yet anon repairs his drooping head.

Milton, Lycidas.

DA'YTIME.† n. s. [Sax. dægtinn.] The time in which there is light, opposed to night.

In the daytime Fame sitteth in a watch-tower, and flieth most by night; she mangleth things done with things not done, and is a terror to great cities.

Bacon.

My ants never brought out their corn but in the night when the moon did shine, and kept it under ground in the daytime.

Addison.

DAYWE'ARIED.* adj. [day and weary.] Weary with the work of a day.

The old, feeble, and day-wearied sun. Shakespeare, K. John.

DA'YWOMAN.* n. s. [dey or day; a name by which a dairymaid has been called in our old statutes, and by the Scotch. The Swedish deja is the same. See DAIRY.] A dairymaid.

For this damsel I must keep her at the park; she is allowed for the day-woman.

Shakespeare, L. Lab. Lost.

DA'YWORK. n. s. [day and work.] Work imposed by the day; day labour.

True labour in the vineyard of thy lord,

Ere prime thou hast th' imposed daywork done.

Fairfax.

To DAZE.† v. a. [Dr. Johnson gives the Sax. dæp; foolish, stupid, as the etymology. The Teut. dwaes and daes is also foolish, dotting, insane; and the verb is dacsen, to be mad, to be troubled with phantasms. V. Kilian. Perhaps from this verb our word is borrowed. In the north of England "a dazed look is such as persons have when frightened." Ray, N. C. Words.] To overpower with light; to strike with too strong lustre; to hinder the act of seeing by too much light suddenly introduced.

They smote the glistering armies as they stand,

With quiv'ring beams, which daz'd the wond'ring eye.

Fairfax.

Poor human kind, all daz'd in open day,

Err after bliss, and blindly miss their way.

Dryden.

DA'ZIED.† adj. Rather dasied. See DAISY, Dr. Johnson says; but see rather DAISLED.

To DA'ZZLE. v. a. [See To DAZE.]

1. To overpower with light; to hinder the action of the sight by sudden lustre.

Fears used to be represented in such an imaginary fashion, as they rather dazzle men's eyes than open them.

Bacon.

How is it that some wits are interrupted;

That now they daziled are, now clearly see?

Davies.

2. To strike or surprise with splendour.

Those heavenly shapes

Will dazzle now this earthy, with their blaze

Insufferably bright.

Milton, P. L.

The places that have either shining sentiments or manners; have no occasion for them: a dazzling expression rather damages them, and serves only to eclipse their beauty.

Pope.

Ah, friend! to dazzle let the vain design;

To raise the thought, or touch the heart, be thine.

Pope.

To DA'ZZLE. v. n. To be overpowered with light; to lose the power of sight.

Dazle mine eyes? or do I see three suns?

Shakespeare.

Come, boy, and go with me; thy sight is young,

And you shall read, when mine begins to dazzle.

Shakespeare.

An oversight maketh the eyes dazzle, inasmuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness.

Bacon.

 3. Without life; inanimate.
All, all but truth, drops dead-born from the press,
Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.
 4. Inanimate by nature.
Fayre sir, sayd he, if in that picture dead
Such life ye read, and vertue in vain shew;
What mote ye weene, if the true lively-head
Of that most glorious visage ye did view!
Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 3.
 5. Imitating death; senseless; motionless.
At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse are cast into a dead sleep.
Anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and backbone, we know is used for procuring dead sleeps. Bacon.
 6. Unactive; motionless.
The tin sold sometimes higher, and sometimes lower, according to the quick vent and abundance, or the dead sale and scarcity. Carew.

Seems to stand still: dead calms are in the ocean,
When not a breath disturbs the drowsy main. Lee.
They cannot bear the dead weight of unemployed time
Lying upon their hands, nor the uneasiness it is to do nothing at all. Locke.
 7. Empty; vacant.
This colour often carries the mind away; yea, it deceiveth the sense, and it seemeth to the eye a shorter distance of way, if it be all dead and continued, than if it hath trees or buildings, or any other marks whereby the eye may divide it. Bacon.

- Nought but a blank remains, a dead void space,
A step of life, that promis'd such a race. Dryden.
8. Useless; unprofitable.
The commodities of the kingdom they took, though they lay dead upon their hands for want of vent. Bacon.
Persuade a prince that he is irresistible, and he will take care not to let so glorious an attribute lie dead and useless by him. Addison.
 9. Dull; gloomy; unemployed.
Travelling over Ananias, then covered with deep snow, they came in the dead winter to Aleppo. Knollys.
There is something unspeakably cheerful in a spot of ground which is covered with trees, that smiles amidst all the rigours of winter, and gives us a view of the most gay season in the midst of that which is the most dead and melancholy. Addison.
 10. Still; obscure.
Their flight was only deferred until they might cover their disorders by the dead darkness of the night. Hayward.
 11. Having no resemblance of life.
At a second sitting, though I alter not the draught, I must touch the same features over again, and change the dead colouring of the whole. Dryden.
 12. Obtuse; dull; not sprightly. Used of sounds.
We took a bell of about two inches in diameter at the bottom, which was supported, in the midst of the cavity of the receiver, by a bent stick, in which, when it was closed up, the bell seemed to sound more dead than it did when just before it sounded in the open air. Boyle.
 13. Dull; frigid; not animated; not affecting.

DEAF.† adj. [Sax. deap, Teut. doof. Our old lexicography has defined our word "Deaf, or doted; that which has no savour," Huloet. The Icel. daufr is both deaf and insipid. In the north of England deaf is still used for barren or blasted. Thus the Saxon expression, deap copu, sterile corn.]

1. Wanting the sense of hearing.

Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf. Shakspeare.
Infected minds

To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakspeare.
The chief design here intended is to instruct such as are deaf and dumb, and dumb only by consequence of their want of hearing. Holder.

If any sins afflict our life
With that prime ill, a talking wife,
Till death shall bring the kind relief,
We must be patient, or be deaf. Prior.

Thus you may still be young to me,
While I can better hear than see:
Oh ne'er may fortune shew her spite,
To make me deaf, and mend my sight. Swift.

2. It has to before the thing that ought to be heard.

I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;
Nor tears, nor prayers shall purchase out abuses. Shakspeare.

Whilst virtue courts them: but, alas, in vain:
Fly from her kind embracing arms,
Deaf to her fondest call, blind to her greatest charms. Roscommon.

Not so, for once indulg'd, they sweep the main;
Deaf to the call, or, hearing, hear in vain. Dryden.

Hope, too long with vain delusion fed,
Deaf to the rumour of fallacious fame,
Gives to the roll of death his glorious name. Pope.

3. Deprived of the power of hearing.

Deaf with the noise, I took my hasty flight:
No mortal courage can support the fright. Dryden.

4. Obscurely heard.

Thou notest the darkness of this night, the strange silence, the deaf and confused trembling of these trees.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quir. iii. 6.

Not silence is within, nor voice express,
But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;
Confus'd and chiding like the hollow roar
Of tides, receding from th' insulted shore. Dryden.

The rest were seiz'd with sullen discontent,
And a deaf murmur through the squadrons went. Dryden.

5. Unprofitable. [See the etymology.] A deaf hut is a hut, of which the kernel is decayed. North of DE'AFELY. adj. Lonely; solitary; far from neighbours. Ray, North-Country Words. Cotgrave writes this old English word deafely in his translation of the French adjective DESOLE.

DE'AFNESS. n. s. [from deaf.]

1. Want of the power of hearing; want of sense of sounds.

Those who are deaf and dumb, are dumb by consequence from their deafness. Holder.

The Dunciad had never been writ, but at his request, and for his deafness; for had he been able to converse with me, do you think I had amused my time so ill? Pope.

2. Unwillingness to hear.

I found such a deafness, that no declaration from the bishops could take place. King Charles.

DEAL.† n. s. [Goth. dails, a part or portion; Sax. dæl; Teut. deel; Ir. dail.]

1. Part.

And with the one lamb a tenth deal of flour mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil. Exod. xxix. 40.

A great deal of that which had been, was now to be removed out of the church. Hooker.

2. Quantity; degree of more or less. It was formerly joined with different words, to limit its meaning; as, some deal, in some degree, to some amount: we now either say, a great deal, or a deal, without an adjective; but this is commonly, if not always, ludicrous, or contemptuous.

When men's affections do frame their opinions, they are in defence of error more earnest a great deal, than, for the most part, sound believers in the maintenance of truth, apprehending according to the nature of that evidence which scripture yieldeth. Hooker.

There is, indeed, store of matters, fitter and better a great deal for teachers to spend time and labour in.

To weep with them that weep, doth ease some deal; But sorrow, flouted at, is double death. Shakspeare.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in! In scattering compliments, and tendering visits. B. Jonson.

The charge, some deal the haply honour may,
That noble Dudone had while here he liv'd. Fairfax.

Possibly some never so much as doubted of the safety of their spiritual estate; and, if so, they have so much the more reason a great deal to doubt of it. South.

The author, who knew that such a design as this could not be carried on without a great deal of artifice and sophistry, has puzzled and perplexed his cause. Addison.

3. [From the verb to deal.] The art or practice of dealing cards.

How can she misse her aid support,
Unskill'd in all the terms of art!
Or in harmonious numbers put
The deal, the shuffle, and the cut. Swift.

4. [deyl, Dutch.] Firwood; or the wood of pines.

I have also found, that a piece of deal, far thicker than one would easily imagine, being purposely interposed betwixt my eye, placed in a room; and the clearer daylight was not only somewhat transparent, but appeared quite through a lively red. Boyle on Colours.

To DEAL.† v. a. [M. Goth. daifjan; Icel. and old Goth. dela; Sax. dælan.]

1. To distribute; to dispose to different persons.

Deal thy bread to the hungry, and bring the poor that are cast out to thy house. Isa. lviii. 7.

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows.

His lifted arms around his head he throws,

And deals, in whistling air, his empty blows.

The business of mankind in this life, being rather to act than to know, their portion of knowledge is dealt them accordingly.

How Spain prepares her banners to unfold,

And Rome deals out her blessings and her gold.

Had the great men of antiquity been possessed of the art of printing, they would have made an advantage of it, in dealing out their lectures to the publick.

If you deal out great quantities of strong liquor to the mob, there will be many drunk.

2. To scatter; to throw about.

Keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,

Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,

When hissing through the skies, the Father'd deaths were dealt.

3. To give gradually, or one after another.

The nightly mallet deals resounding blows.

4. To distribute the cards.

To DEAL. v. n.

1. To traffick; to transact business; to trade.

It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter; and by a man himself, than by the mediation of a third.

This is to drive a wholesale trade, when all other petty merchants deal but for parcels.

They buy and sell, they deal and traffick.

With the fond maids in palmistry he deals,

They tell the secret which he first reveals.

2. To act between two persons; to intervene.

Sometimes he that deals between man and man, raiseth his own credit with both, by pretending greater interest than he hath in either.

3. To behave well or ill in any transaction.

I doubt not, if he will deal clearly and impartially, but that he will acknowledge all this to be true.

4. To act in any manner.

Two deep enemies,

Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,

Are they that I would have thee deal upon.

5. To DEAL by. To treat well or ill. This seems a vicious use.

Such an one deals not fairly by his own mind, nor conducts his own understanding aright.

6. To DEAL in. To have to do with; to be engaged in; to practise.

Suitors are so disasted with delays and abuses, that plain-dealing, in denying to deal in suits at first, is grown not only honourable but also gracious.

The Scripture forbids even the countenancing a poor man in his cause; which is a popular way of preventing justice, that some men have dealt in, though without that success which they proposed to themselves.

Among authors, none draw upon themselves more displeasure than those who deal in political matters.

True logick is not that noisy thing that deals all in dispute, to which the former ages had debased it.

To DEAL with. To treat in any manner; to use well or ill.

Neither can the Irish, nor yet the English lords, think themselves wronged, or hardly dealt with, to have that which is none of their own given to them.

Who then shall guide

His people? Who defend? Will they not deal

Worse with his followers, than with him they deal?

If a man would have his conscience deal clearly with him, he must deal severely with that.

God did not only exercise his providence towards his own people, but he dealt thus also with other nations.

But I will deal the more civilly with his two poems, because nothing ill is to be spoken of the dead.

You wrote to me with the freedom of a friend, dealing plainly with me in the matter of my own trifles.

Reflect on the merits of the cause, as well as of the men, who have been thus dealt with by their country.

8. To DEAL with. To contend with.

If she hated me, I should know what passion to deal with.

Gentlemen were commanded to remain in the country, to govern the people, easy to be dealt with whilst they stand in fear.

Then you upbraid me; I am pleas'd to see

You're not so perfect, but can fail like me:

I have no God to deal with.

To DEALBATE.† v. a. [dealbo, I. a.] To whiten; to bleach.

DEALBATION.† n. s. [dealbatio, Latin.] The act of bleaching or whitening, rendering things white which were not so before: a word in little use.

All seed is white in viviparous animals, and such as have preparing vessels, wherein it receives a manifold dealbation.

I have been here time enough in conscience to pass all the degrees and effects of fire, as distillation, — dealbation, sublimation, &c.

DEALER.† n. s. [Sax. dælepe.]

1. One that has to do with any thing.

I find it common with these small dealers in wit and learning, to give themselves a title from their first adventure.

2. A trader or trafficker.

The treacherous dealer dealeth treacherously.

Where fraud is permitted and conniv'd at, the honest dealer is always undone, and the knave gets the advantage.

3. A person who deals the cards.

DEALING.† n. s. [Sax. dælinge.]

1. Practice; action.

Concerning the dealings of men, who administer government, and unto whom the execution of that law belongeth, they have their judge, who sitteth in heaven.

Whose own hard dealings teach them to suspect

The thoughts of others.

But this was neither one pope's fault, nor one prince's destiny: he must write a story of the empire, that means to tell of all their dealings in this kind.

2. Intercourse.

It were to be wished, that men would promote the happiness of one another, in all their private dealings, among those who lie within their influence.

3. Measure of treatment; mode in which one treats another.

God's gracious dealings with men, are the aids and auxiliaries necessary to us in the pursuit of piety.

4. Traffick; business.

The doctor must needs die rich; he had great dealings in his way for many years.

To DEAMBULATE.* v. n. [Lat. dæambulo.] To walk abroad.

DEAMBULATION.† n. s. [Fr. dæambulation, promenade. Lacombe assigns the date of 1550 to the usage of this word, which is after the time that our own word had been introduced. Lat. dæambulatio. Of our word Dr. Johnson has given neither example nor authority; and it may therefore seem as if he had introduced the expression into our language. But it is in the old vocabulary of Cockeram, and had been long before employed by Sir Thomas Elyot.] The act of walking abroad.

Such exercises as may be used within the house, or in the shadow, (as is the old manner of speaking,) as dæambulations, or moderate walkings.

DEAMBULATORY. † adj. [Fr. deambuloire. Cotgrave. The same remark applies to this old word, as to deambulation, with this addition, that Dr. Johnson has not completely defined the word.] Relating to the practice of walking abroad; removing from place to place. Bullockar.

The deambulatory actors use to have their quietus est, and to forego their employments for want of contiguance more or less.

Bp. Merton, Episcop. Asserted, p. 142.

DEAMBULATORY. * n. s. [from the adjective. • See also AMBLATORY.] A place to walk in.

Cloisters, crowned with rich and lofty pinnacles, and fronted with tabernacular or open work, vaulted like the dormitory of a monastery, and called deambulatories, for the accommodation of the citizens in all weathers. Warton, Hist. of Eng. P. ii. 93.

DEAN. † n. s. [old Fr. déan, déen, déin, pour doyen. Laconibe. Lat. decanus. From the Greek word δέκα; in English, ten; because he was anciently set over ten canons or prebendaries, at least in some cathedral church. Ayliffe's Parergon.]

1. The second dignitary of a diocese.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new, (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbeys, transformed from abbot or prior, and convent to dean and chapter,) so there are two means of creating these deans; for those of the old foundation are brought to their dignity much like bishops, the king first sending out his Congé d'élire to the chapter, the chapter then choosing and the bishop confirming them, and giving his mandate to instal them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters patents, without either election or confirmation.

This word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Bocking in Essex. Cowel.

The dean and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, were of great use in the church; they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for government in causes ecclesiastical. Use your best means to prefer such to those places who are fit for that purpose. Bacon.

2. The name of an officer in each college, usually one of the fellows, both in Oxford and Cambridge.

Would some snag henceforth fall,
Ye feasts, ye dinners, farewell all!
To offices I'd bid adieu
Of dean, vice-præa. of butler too.

T. Warton, Progress of Discontent.

DEAN. * A corrupt way of writing and pronouncing what means a valley, DEAN.

DEANERY. † n. s. [old Fr. deanry, "chapitre, doyenné, 990." Lacombe.]

1. The office of a dean.

He could no longer keep the deanery of the chapel-royal.

Clarendon.

2. The revenue of a dean.

Put both deans in one; or, if that's too much trouble,
Instead of the deans make the deanery double.

Swift.

3. The house of a dean.

Take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly.

Shakespeare.

DEANSY. † n. s. [from dean.] The office and rank of a dean.

It was usual to write the chapter-acts in Latin; and a certain terseness and elegance of style, eminently distinguish those that were made during his [Dr. Bathurst's] deanship, from any memorials that have been inserted before or since in the register of that cathedral. [Wells.]

Warton, Life of Bathurst, p. 214.

DEAR. † adj. [Sax. deon; Alem. diar, dear, beloved; Swedish, där, expensive, much valued; Icel. dar, highly grateful.]

1. Beloved; favourite; darling.

Your brother Gloucester hates you.
— Oh, no, he loves me, and he holds me dear. Shakespeare.
The dear, dear name she bathes in flowing tears,
Hangs o'er the tomb. Addison, Ovid.
And the last joy was dearer than the rest. Pope.

2. Valuable; of a high price; costly.

What made directors cheat the South sea year?

To feed on ven'son when it sold so dear.

Pope.

3. Scarce; not plentiful; as, a dear year.

4. It seems to be sometimes used in Shakespeare for sad; hateful; grievous. [Sax. depe, hurt, from deþian, to hurt; Teut. deeren. In the West of England deared is used for, hurried or frightened. Exm. Dial. And in Lancashire, to dear or dore is to hurt.]

What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies,

Whom thou in terms so bloody, and so dear,

Hast made thine enemies? Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Let us return,

And strain what other means is left unto us

In our dear peril. Shakespeare, Timon.

Some dear cause

Will in concealment wrap me up a while:

When I am known aright, you shall not grieve

Lending me this acquaintance. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Would I had met my dearer foe in heav'n,

Or ever I had seen that day. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Thy other banish'd son, with his dear sight

Struck pale and bloodless. Titus Andronicus.

DEAR. † n. s. A word of endearment; darling.

That kiss

I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip

Hath virgin'd it e'er since.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Go, dear; each minute does new danger bring.

Dryden.

See, my dear,

How lavish nature has adorn'd the year.

Dryden.

DEARBUGHT. adj. [dear and bought.] Purchased at an high price.

O fleeting joys

Of Paradise, dearbought with lasting woe.

Milton, P. L.

Such dearbought blessings happen ev'ry day,

Because we know not for what things to pray.

Dryden.

Forget not what my ransom cost,

Nor let my dearbought soul be lost.

Ruscommon.

DEARLING. n. s. [now written darling.] Favourite.

They do feed on nectar, heavenly wise,

With Hercules and Hebe, and the rest

Of Venus' darlings, through her bounty blest.

Spenser.

DEARLOVED. * adj. [dear and loved.] Much loved.

My dearlov'd cousin, and my dearer lord.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

To lament the dearloved memory and calamitous loss of his capon and white broth.

Milton, Anthadv. Rem. Defence.

DEARLY. adv. [from dear.]

1. With great fondness.

For the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he loved her dearly.

Walton.

2. At an high price.

It is rarely bought, and then also bought dearly enough with such a fine.

Bacon.

Turnus shall dearly pay for faith sworn;

And corps, and swords, and shields, on Tyber born.

Dryden.

My father dotes, and let him still dote on;

He buys his mistress dearly with his throne.

Dryden.

To DEARN. † v. a. [by nyman, Sax. to hide.] To mend clothes. See DARN.

Sherwood.

DEARN. * adj. [Sax. deorn.] Lonely; melancholy; solitary; secret. It is yet used in the north of England.

By many a dearth and painful perch,

Of Pericles the careful search —

Is made.

Shakespeare, Pericles.

Of all thy joys the dearne and dismal end.

The Pilgrim's Progress.

DEARNES. † n. s. [from dear.]

1. Fondness; kindness; love.

My brother holds you well, and in dearth of heart hath help to effect your enazing marriage. Shakespeare.

The whole senate dedicated an altar to Friendship, as to a goddess, in respect of the great dearth of friendship between them two. Bacon.

He who hates his neighbour mortally, and wisely too, must profess all the dearth and friendship, with readiness to serve him. Soult.

2. Scarcity; high price.

Landlords prohibit tenants from plowing, which is seen in the dearth of corn. Swift.

DE'ARNLY. † adv. [bearn, Sax.] Secretly; privately; unseen, Dr. Johnson says; but it is rather, mournfully, in the example. Obsolete.

At last, as chanc'd them by a forest side
To pass, for succour from the scorching ray,
They heard a wailful voice, that dearly cry'd
With piercing shrieks. Spenser, Fr. Q.

DEARTH. † n. s. [from dear, Dr. Johnson says; that is, dear in the sense of cost or hurt; dearth being the third person, as Mr. H. Tooke has observed, of the Sax. bearn, to injure.]

1. Scarcity which makes food dear.

In times of dearth it drained much coin out of the kingdom, to furnish us with corn from foreign parts. Bacon.

There have been terrible years dearth in corn, and every place is strewn with beggars; but dearth is common in better climates, and our evils here lie much deeper. Swift.

2. Want; need; famine.

Pity the dearth that I have pined in,
By longing for that food so long a time. Shakespeare.
Of every tree that in the garden grows,
Eat freely with glad heart; fear here no dearth. Milton, P. L.

3. Barrenness; sterility.

The French have brought on themselves that dearth of plot, and narrowness of imagination, which may be observed in all their plays. Dryden.

TO DEARTICULATE. v. n. [de and articulus, Latin.]

To disjoint; to dismember. Dict.

DE'ARY. * n. s. [from dear.] A phrase of connubial life, usually treated in writing with jocularity. In the north of England, it is applied to a child.

• A hunting husband hallooos — and you hear him —
A drunken deary staggers — and you steer him. A. Hill.

But to return to my deary. The evenings are the only time, when it is fine weather, that I am left to myself; for then she generally takes the milk out to give it milk in the park. Johnson, Rambler, No. 15.

DEATH. † n. s. [Sax. deað; M. Goth. dauþs; Su. Goth. doed; Icel. dauð; Teut. dood. See

DEAD. The root is pronounced by Serenius to be the Scyth. daa, to be dissolved. The old Goth. da is defect, fainting; and the Icel. daa, the same.]

1. The extinction of life; the departure of the soul from the body.

He is the mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. Heb. ix. 15.

They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity or death. Shakespeare.

Death, a necessary end,
Will come, when it will come. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.

2. Mortality; destruction.

To trade and traffick with Macheth,
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare.

3. The state of the dead.

In swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death, Shakespeare.

4. The manner of dying.

Thou shalt die the death of them that are slain in the midst of the seas. Exek. xxxvii. 8.

5. The image of mortality represented by a skeleton.

I had rather he married to a death's head, with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. Shakespeare.

• If I gaze now, 'tis but to see
What manner of death's head 'twill be,
When it is free

From that fresh upper skin;
The gaffer's joy, and sin. Suckling.

6. Murder; the act of destroying life unlawfully.

As in manifesting the sweet influence of his mercy, on the severe stroke of his justice; so in this, not to suffer a man of death to live. Bacon.

7. Cause of death.

They cried out, and said, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot. 2 Kings, iv. 40.

He caught his death the last county-sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow woman. Addison.

8. Destroyer.

All the endeavouring Achilles used to meet with Hector, and be the death of him, is the intrigue which comprehends the battle of the last day. Broomie, View of Epick Poetry.

9. [In poetry.] The instrument of death.

Deaths invisible come wing'd with fire;
They hear a dreadful noise, and straight expire. Dryden.

Souled at once the bow; and swiftly flies
The feather'd death, and hisses through the skies. Dryden.

Of, as in airy rings they skim the heath,
The clam'rous lapwings feel the leaden death. Pope.

10. [In theology.] Damnation; eternal torments.

We pray that God will keep us from all sin and wickedness, from our ghostly enemy, and from everlasting death. Church Catechism.

DEATH-BED. n. s. [death and bed.] The bed to which a man is confined by mortal sickness.

Sweet soul, take heed, take heed of perjury;
Thou art on thy death-bed. Shakespeare, Othello.

Thy death-bed is no less than the land,
Wherein thou liest in reputation sick. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

These are such things as a man shall remember with joy upon his death-bed; such as shall cheer and warm his heart, even in that last and bitter agony. South, Sermon.

Thou round our death-bed every friend should run,
And joy us of our conquest early won. Dryden, Fables.

A death-bed figure is certainly the most humbling sight in the world. Collier on the Value of Life.

A death-bed repentance ought not indeed to be neglected, because it is the last thing that we can do. Asterbury.

Fame can never make as lie down contentedly on a death-bed. Pope.

DEATH-BODING. * part. adj. [death and bode.] Portending death.

No noise but owls' and wolves' death-boding cries. Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

Or Cheshire should prefer her sad death-boding lake. Drayton, Polyolb. 9. 3.

Not a death-boding schrich-owl, but an harmless dove. Sp. Hall, Beauty and Unity of the Church.

DEATH-DARTING. * part. adj. [death and dart.] Inflicting death, as it were, with a dart.

The death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Downe from their cloudie brows in threatening pride,
Death-darting Pestilence did seeme to slide. Mir. for Mag. p. 777.

DE'ATHFUL. adj. [death and full.] Full of slaughter; destructive; murderous.

Your cruelty was such, as you would spare his life for many deathful torments. Sidney.

Time itself, under the deathful shade of whose wings all things wither, hath wasted that lively virtue of nature in man and beasts, and plants. Raleigh.

Blood, death, and deathful deeds are in that noise,

These eyes behold
The deathful scene; princes on princes roll'd.
DEATHFULNESS. * n. s. [from deathful.] Appearance of death.

What leaders, while we are living and among the living, but that we may study to adorn our looks, so as may be most remote from a deathfulness, and most agreeable by their liveliness to those with whom we live?

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hand. p. 70.

DEATHLESS. adj. [from death.] Immortal; never-dying; everlasting.

God hath only immortality, though angels and human souls be deathless.

Their temples wreath'd with leaves, that still renew;
For deathless laurel is the victor's due.

Faith and hope themselves shall die,
While deathless charity remains.

DEATHLIKE. † adj. [Sax. beaðlic. Dr. Johnson has unguardedly admitted into his dictionary a sublime passage in Milton, in order to illustrate the use of this adjective; where, in reality, there is no adjective. The words are these:

A death, like sleep,
A gentle wafting to immortal life. Par. Lost. xii. 434.
The poet here intends death as a reference to temporal death, which he had just before mentioned, and calls it a death, like sleep, in allusion to 1 Cor. xv. 51. Fenton first converted the separate words into the mistaken adjective, and misled Dr. Johnson.] Resembling death; still; gloomy; motionless; placid; calm; peaceful; undisturbed; resembling either the horrors or the quietness of death.

Why dost thou let thy brave soul lie supprest
In deathlike slumbers, while thy dangers crave
A waking eye and hand?

On seas, on earth, and all that in them dwell,
A deathlike quiet and deep silence fall.

Black melancholy sits, and round her throws
A deathlike slumber, and a dread repose.

DEATH'S-DOOR. [death and door.] A near approach to death; the gates of death, πύλαι θανάτου. It is now a low phrase.

I myself knew a person of great sanctity, who was afflicted to death's-door with a vomiting.

Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

There was a poor young woman that had brought herself even to death's-door with grief for her sick husband.

L' Estrange.

DEATHSMAN. n. s. [death and man.] Executioner; hangman; headsman; he that executes the sentence of death.

He's dead; I'm only sorry
He had no other deathsmen,

As deathsmen you have rid this sweet young prince.

Shakespeare.

DEATH-SHADOWED. * adj. [death and shadow. A fine compound, in a fine passage, alluding to the "valley of the shadow of death."] Encompassed by the shades of death.

And ever and anon a doleful knill
Comes from the fatal owl; that in sad mood
With dreary sound doth pierce through the death-shadowed wood.

Mare, Song of the Soul, l. iii. 21.

DEATH-TOKEN. * n. s. That which signifies approaching death.

He is so plaguy proud, that the death-tokens of it Cry, No recovery.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

DEATHWARD. * adv. Toward death.

Alas, the sting of conscience
To death-ward for our faults.

Keats, and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

D E B

DEATHWATCH. n. s. [death and watch.] An insect that makes a tinkling noise like that of a watch, and is superstitiously imagined to prognosticate death.

The solemn deathwatch click'd the hour she dy'd.

Gay.

We learn to presage approaching death in a family by ravens and little worms, which we therefore call a deathwatch.

Misers are muckworms, silkworms beaus,
And deathwatches physicians.

Pope.

To DEA'URATE. v. a. [deaurare, Lat.] To gild, or cover with gold.

DEA'URATE. * adj. Gilded.

Bullockar.

DEAURA'TION. n. s. [from deaurate.] The act of gilding.

Cockeram.

DEBACCHA'TION. n. s. [debacchatio, Lat.] A raging; a madness.

Dict.

To DEBA'R. v. a. [from bar.] To exclude; to preclude; to shut out from any thing; to hinder.

The same boats and the same buildings are found in countries debarred from all commerce by impassable mountains, lakes and deserts.

Raleigh, Essays.

Not so strictly hath our Lord impos'd
Labour, as to debar us when we need

Refreshment, whether food, or talk between,
Food of the mind.

Milton, P. L.

Civility, intended to make us easy, is employed in laying chains and fetters upon us, in debarring us of our wishes; and in crossing our most reasonable desires.

Swift.

To DEBA'RB. v. a. [from de and barba, Lat.] To deprive of his beard.

Dict.

To DEBA'RK. v. a. [debarquer, Fr.] To disembark.

Dict.

DEBARCA'TION. * n. s. [from debark.] The act of disembarking.

To DEBA'SE. † v. a. [old Fr. debas or debase, under, below; as, "debase leur estate," beneath their estate. Kelham.]

1. To reduce from a higher to a lower state.

Homer intended to teach, that pleasure and mensuality debase men into beasts.

Broomer on the Odyssey.

As much as you raise silver, you debase gold; for they are in the condition of two things, put in opposite scales; as much as the one rises, the other falls.

Locke.

2. To make mean; to sink into meanness; to make despicable; to degrade.

It is a kind of taking God's name in vain, to debase religion with such frivolous disputes.

Hooker.

A man of large possessions has not leisure to consider of every slight expence, and will not debase himself to the management of every trifle.

Dayden.

Restraining others, yet himself not free;
Made impotent by pow'r, debas'd by dignity.

Dryden.

3. To sink; to vitiate with meanness.

He ought to be careful of not letting his subject debase his style, and betray him into a meanness of expression.

Addison.

Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to refuse those which favour the other, is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debases it.

Locke.

4. To adulterate; to lessen in value by base admixtures.

He reformed the coin, which was much adulterated and debased in the times and troubles of king Stephen.

Hale.

Words so debas'd and hard, no stone
Was hard enough to touch them on.

Hall.

DEBASEMENT. n. s. [from debase.] The act of debasement or degrading; degradation.

DEB

It is a wretched debasement of that sprightly faculty, the tongue, thus to be made the interpreter to a goat or boar.

Government of the Tongue.

DEBASER. † n. s. [from debase.] He that debases; he that adulterates; he that degrades another; he that sinks the value of things, or destroys the dignity of persons. Sherwood.

DEBATABLE. † adj. [debatable, Fr. Cotgrave.] Disputable; subject to controversy.

The commissioners for the debatable of the Scotch side did deny to meet, except a certain castle or pile might be first raised.

K. Edw. VI's Journal, Burnet's Hist. Ref. ii. App. p. 49.

The French requested, that the debatable ground, and the Scottish hostages, might be restored to the Scots. Hayward.

DEBATE. n. s. [debat, Fr.]

1. A personal dispute; a controversy.

A way that men ordinarily use, to force others to submit to their judgements, and receive their opinion in debate, is to require the adversary to admit what they allege as a proof, or to assign a better. Locke.

It is to diffuse a light over the understanding, in our enquiries after truth, and not to furnish the tongue with debate and controversy. Watts, Logick.

2. A quarrel; a contest: it is not now used of hostile contest.

Now, lords, if heav'n doth give successful end
To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
And draw no swords but what are sanctified. Shakespeare.
'Tis thine to ruin realms, o'erturn a state;
Betwixt the dearest friends to raise debate. Dryden.

TO DEBATE. † v. a. [debatre, Fr.]

1. To controvert; to dispute; to contest.

2. Battle; combat.

He with Pyrochles sharpe debatement made. Spenser, F. Q. ii. vi. 39.

DEB

DEBATER. † n. s. [Fr. debateur.] A disputant a controvertist; an arguer.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

It is only knowledge and experience that can make a debater. Lord Chesterfield.

TO DEBAUCH. † v. a. [desbaucher, Fr. debauchari, Lat. The history of this word is curious; though Dr. Johnson takes no notice of its changes. Cotgrave renders the French word by deboish, which was a common way of writing this word. Debaush is Florio's word. It was also written debaish, and deboise; which see.]

1. To corrupt; to vitiate.

Young men, such as I imagine to be least debaushed and corrupted by ill examples.

Florio's Transl. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 536.

In their whole fashion and gesture bewraying such lightness, as might be able to debauch a whole assembly.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 247.

A man must have got his conscience thoroughly debaushed and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin.

South.

This it is to counsel things that are unjust; first, to debauch a king to break his laws, and then to seek protection.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. To corrupt with lewdness.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. To corrupt by intemperance.

No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is reasonable for him to debauch himself by intemperance and brutish sensuality. Tillotson.

DEBAUCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A fit of intemperance.

He will for some time contain himself within the bounds of sobriety; till within a little while he recovers his former debauch, and is well again, and then his appetite returns.

Calamy.

2. Luxury; excess; lewdness.

The first physicians by debauch were made; Excess began, and sloth sustains the trade. Dryden.

DEBAUCHEDLY. † adv. [from the participle debauched.]

In a profligate and licentious manner.
To live desperately with the bold, and debauchedly with the luxurious. Cowley.

DEBAUCHEDNESS. † n. s. [from the participle debauched.] Intemperance; lewdness.

A strange kind of loose debauchedness hath possessed too many of the young gallants of our time.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 45.

Why such debauchedness of life, which when it hath unsouled the man, buries the beast in excess and riot?

Hayys, Serm. p. 206.

DEBAUCHE. † n. s. [from desbauché, Fr.] A lecher; a drunkard; a man given to intemperance.

Could we but prevail with the greatest debauchees amongst us to change their lives, we should find it no very hard matter to change their judgements.

South.

To the amazement of all that knew them, [they] turned open debauchees.

Fell, Life of Hammond, § 2.

Such indeed was the case, while the rich alone could afford to be debauched; but when even beggars became debauchees the case was altered.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 106.

A glutton, a drunkard, a debauchee, a sluggard, are monsters in the Gospel system.

Bp. Horne, Occas. Serm. p. 96.

DEBAUCHER. † n. s. [from debauch.] One who seduces others to intemperance or lewdness; a corrupter.

Insidious underminers of chastity, and debauchers of sound principles. Blackwall's Sacred Class. i. 399.

DEBAUCHERY. n. s. [from debauch.] The practice of excess; intemperance; lewdness.

Opposes vices by their contrary virtues, hypocrisy by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance.

These magistrates, instead of lessening enormities, occasion just twice as much debauchery as there would be without them.

DEBAUCHMENT. † n. s. [from debauch.] The act of debauching or vitiating; corruption.

They told them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens, or the debauchment of nations, or the extreme poverty of learned persons.

Gymnias guessed it to be the Flamma, with which indeed it can compare in obscenity and debauchment.

Gregory's Works, p. 106.

DEBAUCHNESS, or DEBAUCHTNESS.  n. s.* [from debauch.] Excess; debauchedness.

Their throats to drunkenness, gluttony, and debauchness; and their hearts and heads to plotting mischief.

Archdeacon Arnaut's Alarm, p. 115.

What hope can the city have of those youth, the debauchness of whose lives hath not been prevented by good education.

Scott's Essay on Drapery, p. 157.

To DEBEL. † v. a. [old Fr. debeller; Lat.

To DEBELLATE. } debello.] To conquer; to overcome in war: not now in use.

It doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debelling of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawful, but as meritorious even of divine honour.

Bacon, Holy War.

Him long of old

Thou didst debel, and down from heaven cast
With all his army.

Milton, P. R. iv. 605.

DEBELLATION. n. s. [from debello, Lat.] The act of conquering in war.

DEBENTURE. † n. s. [debentur, Lat. from debeo. Our word at first had the Latin form of debentur, and retained it some time.]

1. A writ or note, by which a debt is claimed.

Once when the debentur is made; and again the second time, when the money is paid.

Bacon, Speech to K. James, (old edit.)

Pilferings, hedge-robberies, debentures at inns, and farriers' scores, for drenches for themselves and horses.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. iii. 5.

You modern wits, should each man bring his claim,

Have desperate debentures on your fame;

And little would be left you, I'm afraid,

If all your debts to Greece and Rome were paid.

Swift.

2. In commerce, allowance of custom to a merchant on the exportation of goods, which had before paid a duty.

DEBENTURED Goods.  Such goods as are entitled to a debenture.*

DEBILE. † adj. [old Fr. debile; Lat. debilis.] Weak; feeble; languid; faint; without strength; imbecile; impotent.

I have not wash'd my nose that bleed,

Or foil'd some debile wretch, which without note

There's many else have done.

Shakespeare.

To DEBILITATE. v. a. [debilito, Latin.] To weaken; to make faint; to enfeeble; to emascu- late.

In the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life, they seemed as weakly to fail as their debilitated posterity ever after.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The spirits being rendered languid, are incapable of purifying the blood, and debilitated in attracting nutriment.

Harvey on Consumptions.

DEBILITATION. † n. s. [debilitation, Fr. debilitatio, Lat.] The act of weakening.

The weakness cannot return any thing of strength, honour, or safety to the head, but a debilitation and ruin.

K. Charles.

How often doth sickness prevent the debilitations of age, pulling the strongest man upon his knees!

Bp. Hall, of Contentation, § 5.

DEBILITY. † n. s. [debilitas, Fr. debilitas, Latin.] Weakness; feebleness; languor; faintness; imbecility.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,

And in thy caso do glays mine own debility.

Sidney.

Aliment too vaporous or perspirable will subject it to the inconveniencies of too strong a perspiration, which are debility, faintness, and sometimes sudden death.

Arbutnot.

DEBIT.  n. s.* [Fr. debit, or debite, trust. Cotgrave. "Debite, dette, 1029." Lacombe.] Money due for goods sold on credit.

DEBITOR.  n. s.* [Lat. debitor.] Debtor.

You have no true debitor and creditor but it.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

There stands the constable; there stands the whore;—
There by the serjeant stands the debitor.

Sir J. Davies, Epigrams, 1598

To DEBOISE.  v. a.* [These, though not at all no-

To DEBOISH. } ticed by Dr. Johnson, are either

To DEBOIST. } old ways of writing the word de-

To DEBO'SH. } bauch, or are synonymous expres- sions for it; the second and fourth of which, Sherwood translates into the French desbaucher. Yet the author of Sin Stigmatized, in 1639, seems to distinguish debauched and deboysed. Some may perhaps think them allied to the Fr. boisson, drink, from boire.]

1. To disgrace or corrupt by intemperance.

The master-workmen and goldsmiths he held so close to their business, that he would not give them any leisure to deboist themselves.

Donne, Hist. of the Seventeenth, p. 44.

Wicked wretch as I am, to be at such a late hour deboiring myself, when now at this sad time of night is my poor wife making puddings and candles.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. ii. 1.

Our debauched drunkards, and deboysed wearers.

Junius, Sin Stigmatized, p. 359.

He's quoted for a most perfidious slave,

With all the spots o' the world tax'd and deboish'd.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

I dare not Believe him such a base, deboish'd companion.

Beaumont and Fl. Tamer tamed.

Repentance alone—will make a deboish'd fellow religious.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 709.

2. To corrupt; to seduce.

Excusing themselves by letters unto the Prince of Orange, that Count Egmont would be deboish'd from them by the Spanish instruments.

DEBOISE.  n. s.* [from the verb.] A profligate person; one given to intemperance.

All the worst names that are given to men are borrowed from him, [a clown,] as villain, deboysed, peasant, &c.

Butler's Hen. Character of a Clown.

DEBONAIRE. † adj. [Fr. debonnaire.] We had also bonair once in use for this word. See BONAIRE. The etymon indeed is the Fr. bon, or the Lat. bonus, good.]. Elegant; civil; well-bred; gentle; complaisant.

Crying, let be that lady debonair,

Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare

To battle; if thou mean her love to gain.

Shakespeare, R. Q.

DEB

Zephyr met her once a-maying,
Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonair.

Milton, L'Al.

The nature of the one is debonair and accostable; of the other, retired and supercilious; the one quick and sprightly, the other slow and saturnine.

Howell, Yoc. For.

And she that was not only passing fair,
But was withal discreet and debonair,
Resolv'd the passive doctrine to fulfil.

Dryden.

DEBONAIRITY. * n. s. [Fr. debonnaireté.] Graciousness; gentleness; elegance of manners.

By which you may understand the greatness of the affair, and the debonairity and facility of the king.

Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, (1633,) p. 24.

There is not the least of the divine favour, which if we consider the condescensive tenderness, the clear intimation, the unreserved frankness, the cheerful debonairity expressed therein, has not dimensions larger than our comprehension, colours too fair, lineaments too comely for our weak sight thoroughly to discern, requiring therefore our highest and our utmost thoughts.

Barrow, Serm. i. s. 8.

DEBONAIRLY. † adv. [from debonair.] Elegantly; with a genteel air.

Hulst.

DEBONAIRNESS. * n. s. [from debonair.] An old substantive revived by Sterne.] Civility; complaisance.

DEBT. n. s. [debitum, Lat. dette, Fr.]

1. That which one man owes to another.

There was one that died greatly in debt: Well, says one, if he be gone, then he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine with him into the other world.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

The debt of ten thousand talents which the servant owed the king, was no slight ordinary sum.

Duppa, Devotions.

To this great loss a sea of tears is due;

But the whole debt not to be paid by you.

Waller.

Swift a thousand pounds in debt,

Takes horse, and in a mighty fret

Rides day and night.

Swift.

2. That which any one is obliged to do or suffer.

Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt;

He only liv'd but till he was a man,

But like a man he died.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

DEBTLESS. * adj. [debt and less.] Without debt; free from debt. An old, forgotten, but very useful word.

Worthy to be stewards of rent and lond,

Of any lord that is in England,

To maken him live by his propre good,

In honour detteless.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 584.

DEBTED. part. [from debt.] TO DEBT is not found.] Indebted; obliged to.

Which do amount to thres odd ducats more

Than I stand debted to this gentleman.

Shakespeare.

DEBTOR. † n. s. [debteur, Fr. Cotgrave; debitor, Lat.]

1. He that owes something to another.

I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians, both to the wise and to the unwise.

Rom. i. 14.

2. One that owes money.

I'll bring your latter hazard back again,

And thankfully rest debtor for the first.

Shakespeare.

If he his ample palm

Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay

Of debtor, strait his body, to the touch

Obscure, as whitish knights were wont,

To some enchanted circle is convey'd.

Philips.

There dy'd my father, no man's debtor;

And there I'll die, no worse nor better.

Pope.

The case of debtors in Rome, for the four first centuries, was, after the set time for payment, no choice but either to pay, or be the creditor's slave.

Swift.

DEC

3. One side of an account book.

When I look upon the debtor side, I find such innumerable articles, that I want arithmetic to cast them up; but when I look upon the creditor side, I find little more than blank paper.

Addison.

So dies her love, and so my hopes decay.

Pope.

To DECA'Y. v. a. To impair; to bring to decay.

Infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make better the fool.

Shakespeare.

Cut off a stock of a tree, and lay that which you cut off to putrefy, to see whether it will decay the rest of the stock.

Bacon.

He was of a very small and decayed fortune, and of no good education.

Clarendon.

Decay'd by time and wars, they only prove
Their former beauty by your former love.

Dryden.

In Spain, our springs like old men's children, be

Dryden.

Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy.

Addison.

It is so ordered, that almost every thing which corrupts the soul decays the body.

DECA'Y. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Decline from the state of perfection; state of depravation or diminution.

What comfort to this great decay may come,
Shall be applied.

Shakespeare.

She has been a fine lady, and paints and hides
Her decays very well.

B. Jonson.

And those decays, to speak the naked truth,

Through the defects of age, were crimes of youth.

Denham.

By reason of the tenacity of fluids, and attrition of their parts, and the weakness of elasticity in solids, motion is much more apt to be lost than got, and is always upon the decay.

Newton.

Each may feel encreases and decays,
And see now clearer and now darker days.
Taught half by reason, half by mere decay,
To welcome death, and calmly pass away.

Pope.

Pope.

2. The effects of diminution; the marks of decay.

They think that whatever is called old must have the decay of time upon it, and truth too were liable to mould and rottenness.

Locke.

3. Declension from prosperity.

And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee, then thou shalt relieve him.

Levit. xxv. 35.

I am the very man,

That, from your first of difference and decay

Have follow'd your sad steps.

Shakespeare, K. L.

4. The cause of decline.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the public: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age.

Bacon.

DECA'YEDNESS.* n. s. [from the part. decayed.] Diminution or depravation.

A fourth duty to the parent is to assist and minister to them in all their wants, of what kind soever, whether weakness and sickness of body, decayedness of understanding, or poverty and lowness in estate.

Hogker.

To DECE'ASE. v. n. [decedo, Latin.] To die; to depart from life.

He tells us Arthur is deceas'd to-night.

Shakespeare.

You shall die

Twice now, where others, that mortality

In her fair arms holds, shall but once decease.

Chapman.

His latest victories still thickest came,

As, near the centre, motion doth increase:

Till he press'd down by his own weighty name,

Did, like the vestal, under spoils decease.

Dryden.

They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes, But the weak voice deceiv'd their gasping throats.

Dryden.

5. To deprive by fraud or stealth.

Wine is to be forborne in consumptions, for that the spirits of the wine prey on the viscid juice of the body, intercommon with the veins of the body, and so deceive and rob them of their nourishment.

Bacon.

Plant fruit trees in large borders, and set therein fine flowers, but thin and sparingly, lest they deceive the trees.

Bacon.

DECEIVER. n. s. [from deceive.] One that leads another into error; a cheat.

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more; Men were deceivers ever:

One foot in sea, and one on shore; To one thing constant never.

Shakespeare.

As for Perkin's dissimulation out of France, they interpreted it not as if he were detected for a counterfeit deceiver.

Bacon.

Those voices, actions or gestures, which men have not by any compact agreed to make the instruments of conveying their thoughts one to another, are not the proper instruments of deceiving, so as to denominate the person using them a liar or deceiver.

South.

It is to be admired how any deceiver can be so weak to foretell things near at hand, when a very few months must of necessity discover the imposture.

Swift.

Adieu the heart-expanding bowl, And fill the kind deceivers of the soul.

Pope.

DECEIVING. † n. s. [from deceive.] The act of cheating, of carrying on imposture.

Men are April when they woo, and December when they wed.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

What should we speak of,

When we are old as you? When we shall hear The rain and wind beat dark December.

Shakespeare.

DECEMPEDAL. † adj. [from decempeda, Latin.] Ten feet in length.

Dict.

DECEMVIRAL. † adj. [decemviralis, Lat.] Belonging to a decemvirate or office of ten governours.

Nicholo and Girolamo Foscarini make haste to present a petition, in all opinion most equitable, to the decemviraltribunal.

— The council of ten upon this petition did assemble early in the morning.

Wotton, Rem, p. 309.

DECEMVIRATE. † n. s. [decemviratus, Latin.] The dignity and office of the ten governours of Rome, who were appointed to rule the commonwealth instead of consuls. Their authority subsisted only two years. Any body of ten men.

The first beast is the Roman empire. — This beast is described, in the form of his body, to be like a leopard, for his various government, by kings, consuls, decemvirates, dictators, &c.

Shelford's Learned Discourses, p. 275.

DECEMVIRI. † n. s. [Lat.] The ten governours of Rome.

It was agreed, that ten men out of the chief senators should be elected; that their power should be equal to that of the kings, or consuls, for a whole year; and that in the mean time all other offices should cease. The decemviri, having now taken the government upon them, agreed, &c.

Kennet, Rom. Antiq., ii. 11.

DECENCE. † n. s. [decence, French; decet, Latin.]

1. Propriety of form; proper formality; becoming ceremony; decence is seldom used.

Those thousand decencies, that daily flow From all her words and actions.

Milton, P. L.

In good works there may be goodness in the general; but decence and gracefulness can be only in the particulars in doing the good.

Sprat.

Were the offices of religion stript of all the external decencies of worship, they would not make a due impression on the minds of those who assist at them.

Atterbury.

She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought; But never, never reach'd one generous thought:

Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour.

Content to dwell in decencies for ever.

Pope.

2. Suitableness to character; propriety.

And must I own, she said, my secret smart?

What with more decence were in silence kept.

Dryden.

The consideration immediately subsequent to the being of a thing, is what agrees or disagrees with that thing; what is suitable or unsuitable to it; and from this springs the notion of deceit or indecent, that which becomes or misbecomes.

Sediments which raise laughter, can very seldom be admitted with any deceit into an heroic poem. South.

Modesty, not ribaldry; not obscenity, Immodest words admit of no defence; Addison.

For want of deceit is want of sense. Roscommon.

DECENNIAL.† adj. [from decennium, Latin.] What continues for the space of ten years. Bullocker.

Seven months are retrenched in this whole decennovary progress of the epochs, to reduce the accounts of her motion and place to those of the sun. Holder.

DECENT.† adj. [decent, old Fr. deceus, Latin.]

1. Becoming; fit; suitable.

Since there must be ornaments both in painting and poetry, if they are not necessary, they must at least be decent; that is, in their due place, and but moderately used. Dryden.

2. Grave; not gaudy; not ostentatious.

Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,
Sober, steadfast, and demure,
All in a robe of darkest grain
Flowing with majestic train,
And sable stole of Cyprus lawn
Over thy decent shoulders drawn.

Milton, Il. Pens.

3. Not wanton; not immodest.

DECENTLY.† adv. [from decent.]

1. In a proper manner; with suitable behaviour; without meanness or ostentation.

Let all things be done decently and in order. 1 Cor. xiv. 40.

They could not decently refuse assistance to a person, who had punished those who had insulted their relation. Broom.

Perform'd what friendship, justice, truth require;
What could be more, but decently retire? Swift.

2. Without immodesty.

Let us walk honestly [in the margin, decently] as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness. Rom. xiii. 13.

Past hope of safety, 'twas his latest care,
Like falling Caesar, decently to die. Dryden.

DECENTNESS.* n. s. [from decent.] Becoming ceremony; due formality.

Shall they be carried forth without any decentness, as we be wont to carry forth dead horses or dead swine?

Hunting of Purgatory, (1561), fol. 37.

DECEPTIBILITY. n. s. [from deceit.] Liableness to be deceived.

Some errors are so fleshed in us, that they maintain their interest upon the deceptibility of our decayed natures. Glanville.

DECEPTIBLE. adj. [from deceit.] Liable to be deceived; open to imposture; subject to fraud.

The first and father cause of common error, is the common infirmity of human nature; of whose deceptible condition, perhaps, there should not need any other evicition than the frequent errors we shall ourselves commit. Brown.

DECEPTION.† n. s. [deception, old Fr. deceptio, Lat.]

1. The act or means of deceiving; cheat; fraud; fallacy.

Being thus divided from truth in themselves, they are yet farther removed by adventitious deception. Brown.

All deception is a misapplying of those signs, which, by compact or institution, were made the means of men's signifying or conveying their thoughts. South.

2. The state of being deceived.

Reason, not impossibly, may meet
Some specious object by the foe suborn'd,
And fall into deception unaware. Milton.

DECEPTIOUS. adj. [from decept.] Deceitful; apt to deceive.

Yet there is a credence in my heart,
That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears;
As if those organs had deceptions functions,
Created only to calumniate. Shakespeare.

DECEPTIVE.† adj. [old Fr. deceptif.] Having the power of deceiving. Colgrave and Sherwood.

To DECE'RN.* v. a. [old Fr. decerner, Lat. decerno.]

To judge; to estimate; to discern.

Hulst, Barrett, and Sherwood.

They can see nothing, nor decerne what maketh for them, nor what against them. Abp. Cronian on the Sacrament, fol. 83.

To DECHA'RM. v. a. [decharmer, French.] To counteract a charm: to disenchant.

Notwithstanding the help of physick, he was suddenly cured by decharming the witchcraft. Harvey.

DECID'ABLE.* adj. [from decide.] Capable of being determined.

The principles of Protestants prove the uniform loyalty of the heart to Christ, as the right sovereign. — The British church knows the Scriptures to be God's Word. — Our controversies about things indifferent are decidable by those principles. Jones, Rome No Mother Church, (1678), § 1.

To DECID'E. v. a. [decide, Latin.] To fix the event of; to determine.

The day approach'd when fortune should decide
The important enterprize, and give the bride. Dryden.

To DECID'E.† v. n. To determine.

In council oft, and oft in battle tried,
Betwixt thy master and the world decide.
Who shall decide, when doctors disagree,
And soundest ensuists doubt? Pope.

DECID'EDLY.* adv. [from the part. decided.] In a determined manner.

Among those, who are denominated Christians, some most decidedly believe what others as strenuously deny.

Burgess on Christ's Div. p. 5.

DECIDENCE. n. s. [decidentia, Latin.]

1. The quality of being shed, or of falling off.

2. The act of falling away.

Men observing the decidence of their horns, lay all upon the conceit that it annually rotteth away, and successively reneweth again. Brown Vulg. Err.

DECID'ER.† n. s. [from decide.]

1. One who determines causes.

I cannot think that a jester or a monkey, a droll or a puppet, can be proper judges or deciders of controversy. Scott.
The man is no ill decider in common cases of property, where party is out of the question. Swift.

2. One who determines quarrels.

If thou be'st,
As thou art spoken, great and virtuous,
The true decider of all injuries,
Say, fight again. Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

DECIDUOUS. adj. [deciduous, Latin.] Falling;
not perennial; not lasting through the year.

In botany the perianthium, or calyx, is deciduous with the flower. Quincy.

DECIDUOUSNESS. n. s. [from deciduous.] Aptness to fall; quality of fading once a year. Dict.

DECIMAL. † adj. [decimal, old Fr. decimus, Latin.] Numbered by tens; multiplied by ten.

In the way we take now to name numbers by millions of millions of millions, it is hard to go beyond eighteen, or, at most, four and twenty decimal progressions, without confusion. Locke.

To DECIMATE. † v. a. [decimus, Latin.]

1. To tithe; to take the tenth.

2. To select by lot every tenth soldier, in a general mutiny, for punishment.

He decimated certain troops that ran away, renewing a piece of the Roman discipline. Wotton, Parall. D. of Buck. and E. of Essex.

DECIMATION. † n. s. [from decimate.]

1. A tithing; a selection of every tenth by lot or otherwise.

The instating the tithes upon them, was demonstratively as large a revenue to them, as, supposing an equal division, the remainder could be to any other tribe; yea, and larger too; as much as the twelve tenth parts which they received exceeded the nine that remained to each tribe after the decimation. Hammond's Works, iv. 545.

2. A selection by lot of every tenth soldier, in a general mutiny, for punishment.

By decimation and a tithe'd death,
Take, thou the destin'd tenth. Shakespeare.

A decimation I will strictly make
Of all who my Charinus did forsake;
And of each legion each centurion shall die. Dryden.

DECIMATOR.  n. s.* [from decimate.] One who selects every tenth person for punishment.

We have complained of armies, committees, sequestrators, triers, and decimators. South, Sermon, Jan. 30.

DECIMO-SEXTO.  n. s.* [Lat.] A book is said to be in decimo-sexto, when a sheet is folded into sixteen leaves. This diminutive size gave rise to a contemptuous term.

Inventions which seek to give an advantage of procerity and comeliness to our stature, which, if sunk to a dwarfishness and epitomized to a decimo-sexto, make the persons of men and women to be as little in the eyes and esteem of others, as they are in their own inches or size. Bp. Taylor, Artific. Handsom, p. 75.

Proceed, my little wit. Massinger, Unnat. Combat.

In decimo-sexto. Here is one. Massinger, Maid of Honour.

To DECIPHER. v. a. [dechifferer, French.]

1. To explain that which is written in ciphers: this is the common use.

Zelmene, that had the same character in her heart, could easily decipher it. Sidney.

Assurance is writ in a private character, not to be read, nor understood, but by the conscience, to which the spirit of God has vouchsafed to decipher it. South.

2. To write out; to mark down in characters.

Could I give you a lively representation of guilt and horror on this hand, and paint out eternal wrath, and decipher eternal vengeance on the other, then might I shew you the condition of a sinner hearing himself denied by Christ. South.

Then were laws of necessity invented, that so every particular subject might find his principal pleasure deciphered unto him, in the tables of his laws. Locke.

3. To stamp; to characterise; to mark.

You are both decipher'd
For villains mark'd with rape. Shakespeare.

4. To unfold; to unravel; to explain; as, to decipher an ambiguous speech.

DECIPHERER. † n. s. [from decipher.] One who explains writings in cipher.

There are a sort of these narrow-eyed decipherers, I confess, that will extort strange and abstruse meanings out of any subject, by it never so conspicuous and innocently delivered.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

DECISION. † n. s. [old Fr. decision.]

1. Determination of a difference, or of a doubt.

The time approaches,
That will with due decision make us know
What we shall say we have, and what we owe. Shakespeare.

Pleasure and revenge
Have ears more deaf than adders, to the voice
Of any true decision. Shakespeare.

The number of the undertakers, the worth of some of them, and their zeal to bring the matter to a decision, are sure arguments of the dignity and importance of it. Woodward.

War is a direct appeal to God for the decision of the dispute, which can by no other means be determined. Atterbury.

2. Determination of an event.

Their arms are to the last decision bent,
And fortune labours with the vast event. Dryden.

3. It is used in Scotland for narrative, or reports of the proceedings of the court of session there.

DECISION.  n. s.* [Lat. decisio, a cutting off.] The act of separation; division.

The essence of God is incorporeal, spiritual, and indivisible; and therefore his nature is really communicated, not by derivation, or decision, but by a total and plenary communication. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

DECISIVE. † adj. [old Fr. decisif.]

1. Having the power of determining any difference; conclusive.

Such a reflection, though it carries nothing perfectly decisive in it, yet creates a mighty confidence in his breast, and strengthens him much in his opinion. Atterbury.

This they are ready to look upon as a determination on their side, and decisive of the controversy between vice and virtue. Rogers.

2. Having the power of settling any event.

For on th' event,
Decisive of this bloody day, depends
The fate of kingdoms. Philips.

DECISIVELY. † adv. [from decisive.] In a conclusive manner.

You will have full two years good, but no more, to form your character in the world decisively. Lord Chesterfield.

DECISIVENESS. n. s. [from decisive.] The power of argument or evidence to terminate any difference, or settle an event.

DECISORY. † adj. [old Fr. decisoire.] Able to determine or decide. Sherwood.

To DECK. † v. a. [Sax. decan, or decan, to cover; Dutch, decken; Alem. thecan; Lat. tego.]

1. To cover; to overpread.

He has brave utensils,
Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Ye mists and exhalations, that now rise
From hill or steeping lake, dusky or grey,
In honour to the world's great Author, rise!
Whether to deck with clouds the uncoloured sky,
Or wet the thirsty earth with falling showers,
Rising or falling, still advance his praise. Milton, P. L.

2. To dress; to array.

She decked herself with her ear-rings and her jewels. Hosea, ii. 13.

Sweet ornament! that *deck*s a thing divine. Shakespeare.
 Long may'st thou live to wait thy children's loss,
 And see another, as I see thee now,
Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine. Shakespeare.
 She sets to work millions of spinning worms,
 That in their green shops weave the smooth-hair'd silk,
 To deck her sons. Milton, Comus.

3. To adorn; to embellish.

But direful, deadly black, both leaf and bloom,
 Fit to adorn the dead, and deck the dreary tomb. Spenser.
 I have decked my bed with coverings of tapestry, with carved work, with fine linen of Egypt. Prov. vii. 16.
 The dew with spangles deck'd the ground,
 A sweeter spot of earth was never found. Dryden.
 The god shall to his votaries tell
 Each conscious tear, each blushing grace,
 That deck'd dear Eloisa's face. Prior.

DECK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The floor of a ship.

Her keel plows hell,
 And deck knobs heaven. B. Jonson.
 We have also raised our second decks, and given more vent thereby to our ordinance, trying on our nether overloop. Raleigh.

Many, born and bred under deck, had no other information but what sense affords, he would be of opinion that the ship was as stable as a house. Glanville.

On high rais'd decks the haughty Belgians ride,
 Beneath whose shade our humble frigates go.
 At sun-set to their ship they make return,
 And snore secure on decks till rosy morn. Dryden, Iliad.

2. Pack of cards piled regularly on each other.

Besides gems, many other sorts of stones are regularly figured: the Amianthus, of parallel threads, as in the pile of velvet: and the Selenites, of parallel plates, as in a deck of cards. Grete.

DECKER.† n. s. [from deck.]

1. A dresser; one that apparels or adorns; a coverer;
 as a table-decker; "a woman decker of brides." Sherwood.

2. Spoken of a ship; as, a two-decker; that is, having two decks.

DECKING.* n. s. [from deck.] Ornament.*

Such glorious deckings of the temple.
Homilies, B. ii. Against Idolatry.
 What would she do then
 In woman's helps, in ornaments apt for her,
 And deckings to her delicacy? Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

To DECLAIM.† v. n. [declamo, Lat. declamer, Fr.
 Formerly written declame, and peculiarly applied to the eloquence of the bar: "To declame, to mōt; s' exerceiter à plaidier causes." See the old dictionaries of Huet and Barret. See also the active sense of declaim, which escaped Dr. Johnson's notice.] To harangue; to speak to the passions; to rhetoricate; to speak set orations.

What are his mischiefs, consul? You declaim Against his manners, and corrupt your own. B. Jonson.
 'Tis usual for masters to make their boys declaim on both sides of an argument. Swift.

Dress up all the virtues in the beauties of oratory, and de- claim aloud on the praise of goodness. Watts.

To DECLAIM.* v. a. To advocate; to speak in favour of.

Whosoever strives to beget, or foment in his heart, such [malignant] persuasions concerning God, makes himself the de-vil's orator, and declaims his cause. South, Sermon viii. 82.

DECLAIMER.† n. s. [from declaim.] One who makes speeches with intent to move the passions.

Tully [was] a good orator, yet no good poet; Sallust, a good historiographer, but no good declaimer. Fatherby, Athos, p. 192.

He must have civil prudence and eloquence, and that whole, not taken up by snatches, or pieces, in sentences, or remnants when he will handle business or carry counsels, as if he came then out of the declaimer's gallery. B. Jonson, Discoveries.
 Your Salamander is a perpetual declaimer against jealousy. Addison.

DECLAIMING.* n. s. [from declaim.] An harangue;

• an appeal to the passions.

Using not the sharp two-edged word of God's Word, but the blunt foils of human fallacies and declaimings. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 95.

• The splendid declaimings of novices and men of heat. South.

DECLAMATION.* n. s. [declamatio, Lat.] A discourse addressed to the passions; an harangue; a set speech; a piece of rhetoric.

The cause why declamations prevail so greatly, is, for that men suffer themselves to be deluded. Hooker.

Thou mayst forgive his anger, while thou makest use of the plainness of his declamation. Bp. Taylor.

DECLAMATOR.† n. s. [Latin.] A declaimer; an orator; a rhetorician: seldom used, Dr. Johnson says, citing the solitary instance in the Tatler.

They which onely teach rhetoric — ought to be named rhetoricians, declamators, artificial speakers. Sir T. Flynt, Gov. fol. 41. b.

Who could, I say, hear this generous declamator, without being fired at his noble zeal? Tatler, No. 35.

Was ever any declamator's case so extravagantly put?
Bentley on Phalaris, introd.

DECLAMATORY. adj. [declamatorius, Lat.]

1. Relating to the practice of declaiming; pertaining to declamation; treated in the manner of a rhetorician.

This a while suspended his interment, and became a decla- matory theme amongst the religious men of that age. Wotton.

2. Appealing to the passions.

He has run himself into his own declamatory way, and almost forgotten that he was now setting up for a moral poet. Dryden.

DECLARABLE. adj. [from declare.] Capable of proof.

This is declarable from the best writers. Brown.

DECLARATION. n. s. [from declare.]

1. A proclamation or affirmation; open expression; publication.

His promises are nothing else but declarations, what God will do for the good of men. Hooker.

Though wit and learning are certain and habitual perfec-tions of the mind, yet the declaration of them, which alone brings the repute, is subject to a thousand hazards. South.

There are no where so plain and full declarations of mercy and love to the sons of men, as are made in the gospel. Tillotson.

2. An explanation of something doubtful. Obsolete.

3. [In law.] Declaration (declaratio) is properly the shewing forth, or laying out, of an action personal in any suit, though it is used sometimes for both personal and real actions. Cowel.

DECLARATIVE. adj. [from declare.]

1. Making declaration; explanatory.

The names of things should be always taken from something observably declarative of their form or nature. Grete.

2. Making proclamation.

To this we may add the vox populi, so declarative on the same side. Swift.

DECLARATORILY.† adv. [from declaratory.] In the form of a declaration; not in a decretory form.

Andreas Alciatus the civilian, and Franciscus de Cordus, have both declaratorily confirmed the same. Brown, Vulg. Err.

In my judgement, this is the doctrine of the church of England; not delivered according unto private opinion in ordinary tracts and lectures, but delivered publicly, positively, and declaratorily in authentical records.

Mountagu, App. to Cas. p. 36.
This pretended power of the people must, as all others, either be directly, or else declaratorily by approbation, given by God.
K. Charles to A. Henderson, p. 38.

DECLARATORY. † adj. [from declare.] Affirmative; expressive; not decretory; not promissory, but expressing something before promised or decreed. Thus, a declaratory law, is a new act confirming a former law.

These blessings are not only declaratory of the good pleasure and intention of God towards them, but likewise of the natural tendency of the thing. Willoton.

All human laws, properly speaking, are only declaratory; they may alter the mode and application, but have no power over the substance of original justice.

Burke on the Popery Laws.

TO DECLARE. v. a. [declaro, Lat.].

1. To clear; to free from obscurity: not in use.

To declare this a little, we must assume that the surfaces of such bodies are exactly smooth. Boyle.

2. To make known; to tell evidently and openly.

It hath been declared unto me of you, that there are contentions among you. 1 Cor. i. 11.

The sun by certain signs declares,
Both when the South projects a stormy day,
And when the clearing North will puff the clouds away. Dryden, Virg.

3. To publish; to proclaim.

Declare his glory among the heathen. 1 Chron. xvi. 24.

4. To shew in open view; to shew an opinion in plain terms.

In Caesar's army somewhat the soldiers would have had, yet they would not declare themselves in it, but only demanded a discharge. Bacon.

We are a considerable body, who, upon a proper occasion, would not fail to declare ourselves. Addison.

TO DECLARE. v. n. To make a declaration: to proclaim some resolution or opinion; or favour or opposition: with for or against.

The internal faculties of will and understanding, decreeing and declaring against them. Bp. Taylor.

God is said not to have left himself without witness in the world, there being something fixed in the nature of men that will be sure to testify and declare for him. South, Serm.

Like fawning courtiers, for success they wait;
And then come smiling, and declare for fate. Dryden.

DECLAREDLY. * adv. [from the participle declared.] Avowedly; without disguise.

Those, who have yet either undiscernibly as one, or suspectedly as others, or declaredly as many, according to the general custom of countries, used such additaments to their faces, as they thought most advanced the beauty or comeliness of their looks. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 93.

DECLARANT. n. s. [from declare.] Discovery; declaration; testimony.

Crystal will easily into electricity; that is, into a power to attract straws, or light bodies, and convert the needle freely placed, which is a declaration of very different parts. Brown.

DECLARE. † v. s. [from declare.] A proclaimer; one that makes any thing known.

The true dispensers [of the gospel] are appointed to be true and faithful declares. Fulke against Aker, (1586.) p. 112.

The one must be helped by an infallible commentary, and the other supplied by an authentical declarer of tradition.

Burnet on the Articles, Art. 20.

DECLARING. * n. s. [from declare.] Publication; declaration; exposition.

Now will we come to the declaring of the matter in few words. 2 Macc. vi. 17.

DECLENSION. n. s. [declinatio, Lat.]

1. Tendency from a greater to a less degree of excellence.

A beauty-wining and distressed widow,
Ev'n in the afternoon of her best days,
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Take the picture of a man in the greenness and vivacity of his youth, and in the latter date and declensions of his drooping years, and you will scarce know it to belong to the same person. South, Serm.

2. Declination; descent.

We may reasonably allow as much for the declension of the land from that place to the sea, as for the immediate height of the mountain. Burnet, Theory.

3. Inflection; manner of changing nouns.

Declension is only the variation or change of the termination of a noun, whilst it continues to signify the same thing. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

DECLINABLE. † adj. [from decline.] Having variety of terminations; as, a declinable noun.

Howe the other declinable partes form their plurall numbers out of their singulars. Palgrave, Fr. Gram. 1530. B. 3.

The numbers, cases, modes, times, and other inflections of the declinable parts of speech are also marked.

Tyrwhitt on Chaucer.

DECLINATION. † n. s. [declinatio, Lat.]

1. Descent; change from a better to a worse state; diminution of vigour; decay.

The queen, hearing of the declination of the monarchy, took it so ill, as she would never after hear of his suit. Bacon.

Two general motions all animations have, that is, their beginning and encrease; and two more, that is, their state and declination. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Hope waits upon the flow'ry prime;

And summer, though it be less gay,

Yet is not look'd on as a time

Of declination or decay.

Waller.

2. The act of bending down; as, a declination of the head.

3. Variation from rectitude; oblique motion; obliquity.

Supposing there were a declination of atoms, yet will it not effect what they intend; for then they do all decline, and so there will be no more concurrence than if they did perpendicularly descend. Ray.

This declination of atoms in their descent, was itself either necessary or voluntary. Bentley.

4. Deviation from moral rectitude.

That a peccant creature should disapprove and repent of every declination and violation of the rules of just and honest, this right reason discoursing upon the stock of its own principles could not but infer. South, Serm.

5. Variation from a fixed point.

There is no declination of latitude, nor variation of the elevation of the pole, notwithstanding what some have asserted. Woodward.

6. The act of shunning.

They must be separated from us, we must be separated from them; they from us, by just censures; or, if that be neglected, we from them by a voluntary declination of their familiar conversation. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

7. [In navigation.] The variation of the needle from the direction to North and South.

8. [In astronomy.] The declination of a star we call its shortest distance from the equator. Brown.

Ptolemy thought the sun's greatest declination immutable.

Dr. Bainbridge, in Hakewell's Apology, p. 101.

9. [In grammar.] The declension or inflection of a noun through its various terminations.

10. DECLINATION of a Plane [in dialing], is an arch of the horizon, comprehended either between the plane and the prime vertical circle, if accounted from the East or West; or else between the meridian and the plane, if accounted from the North or South.

DECLINATOR. n. s. [from decline.] An instrument in dialing, by which the declination, reclination, and inclination of planes are determined.

There are several ways to know the several planes; but the readiest is by an instrument called a declinator, fitted to the variation of your place.

To DECLINE. v. n. [decliner, old Fr. declino, Lat.]

1. To lean downward.
And then with kind embracements, tempting kisses,
And with declining head into his bosom,
Bid him shed tears, as being overjoy'd.

2. To deviate; to run into obliquities.
Neither shalt thou speak in a cause to decline after many, to wrest judgement.

3. To shun: to avoid to do any thing.

4. To sink; to be impaired; to decay. Opposed to improvement or exaltation.

Sons at perfect age, and fathers declining, the father should be as a ward to the son.

They'll be by th' fire, and presume to know
What's done i' th' capitol; who's like to rise,
Who thrives, and who declines.

Sometimes nations will decline so low
From virtue, which is reason, that no wrong
But justice, and some fatal curse annex'd,
Deprives them of their outward liberty.

That empire must decline,
Whose chief support and sinews are of coin.
And nature, which all acts of life designs,
Not like ill poets, in the last declines.

Thus then my lov'd Euryalus appears;
He looks the prop of my declining years.

Autumnal warmth declines;
E'er heat is quite decay'd, or cold begun.
God, in his wisdom, hath been pleas'd to load our declining years with many sufferings, with diseases, and decays of nature.

To DECLINE. v. a.

1. To bend downward; to bring down.
And now fair Phœbus 'gan decline in haste,
His weary waggon to the western vale.

He is such a volunteer sinner, that he hath neither the wit nor the excuse of declining his conscience in complement to his senses.

And leaves the semblance of a lover, fixt
In melancholy deep, with head declin'd,
And love-dejected eyes.

2. To shun; to avoid; to refuse; to be cautious of.
He had wisely declined that argument, though in their common sermons they gave it.

Since the muses do invoke my power,
I shall no more decline that sacred bower,
Where Gloriana, their great mistress, lies.

Though I the business did declare,
Yet I contriv'd the whole design,
And sent them their petition.

If it should be said that minute bodies are indissoluble, because it is their nature to be so, that would not be to render a reason of the thing proposed, but, in effect, to decline rendering any.

Could Caroline have been captivated with the glories of this world, she had them all laid before her; but she generously declined them, because she saw the acceptance of them was inconsistent with religion.

Whatever they judg'd to be most agreeable or disagreeable, they would pursue or decline.

3. To decay; to sink.

I declare him therefore
To lay his gay caparisons apart,
And answer me declin'd.

4. To turn off from any course or direction; to divert.
Not now in use.

You decline your life
Far from the maze of custom, error, strife.

5. To modify a word by various terminations; to inflect.

You decline ma-a, and construe Latin, by the help of a tutor, or with some English translation.

DECLINE. n. s. [from the verb.] The state of tendency to the less or the worse; diminution:
decay. Contrary to increase, improvement, or elevation.

Thy rise of fortune did I only wed;
From its decline, determin'd to recede,
Those fathers lived in the decline of literature.

DECLIVITY. n. s. [old Fr. declivité, from the Lat. declivus.] Inclination or obliquity reckoned downwards; gradual descent; not precipitous or perpendicular: the contrary to acclivity.

Rivers will not flow unless upon declivity, and their sources be rais'd above the earth's ordinary surface, so that they may run upon a descent.

I found myself within my depth; and the declivity was so small, that I walked near a mile before I got to the shore.

DECLIVOUS. adj. [declivus, Lat.] Gradually descending; not precipitous: not perpendicularly sinking: the contrary to acclivous; moderately steep.

To DECOCT. v. a. [decoquo, decoctum, Lat.]

1. To prepare by boiling for any use; to digest in hot water.

Seneca loseth its windiness by decocting, and subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation.

2. To digest by the heat of the stomach.

There she decocts, and doth the food prepare;
There she distributes it to ev'ry vein,
There she expels what she may fitly spare.

3. To boil in water, so as to draw the strength or virtue of any thing.

The longer malt or herbs are decocted in liquor, the clearer it is.

4. To boil up to a consistence; to strengthen or invigorate by boiling: this is no proper use.

Can sodden water, their barley-broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?

DECOCTIBLE. adj. [from decoct.] That which may be boiled, or prepared by boiling.

DECOCTION. n. s. [decoctum, Lat.]

1. The act of boiling any thing, to extract its virtues.

In infusion the longer it is, the greater is the part of the gross body that goeth into the liquor; but in decoction, through more goeth forth, yet it either purgeth at the top, or setteth at the bottom.

The lineaments of a white lily will remain after the strongest decoction.

2. A preparation made by boiling water.

They distil their husbands' land
In decoctions; and are mann'd
With ten empirics, in their chamber
Lying for the spirit of amber.

If the plant be boiled in water, the strained liquor is called the decoction of the plant.

DECOCTURE. n. s. [from decoct.] A substance drawn by decoction.

To DECOLLATE.* v. a. [decollo, Lat. decoller, Fr.] To behead. Cockeram.

A fine piece of a decollated head of St. John the Baptist was shewn to a Turkish emperor: he praised many things, but he observed one defect; he observed that the skin did not shrink from the wounded part of the neck.

Burke on the Sublime and Beautiful, Intro.

DECOLLATION.† n. s. [old Fr. decollation; Lat. decollatio.] The word is also old in our language. Skelton mentions "sanct John's decollation," Poems, p. 113.] The act of beheading.

He, by a decollation of all hope, annihilated his mercy; this, by an immoderancy thereof, destroyed his justice. Brown.

DECOLORATION.* n. s. [Lat. decoloratio.] Absence of colour.

Paleness—is the proper colour and badge of love: but by the way it is to be noted, that we must not understand by this word pale a simple decoloration, or whiteness of the skin.

Ferrand, Love Melancholy, (1640) p. 121.

To DECOMPOSE.* v. a. [Fr. decomposer.]

To decompose; to compound a second time.

The analytical legislators, and constitution-venders, are quite as busy in their trade of decomposing organization, in forming his grace's vassals into primary assemblies, national guards, &c.

Burke, Lett. to a Noble Lord.

To dissolve. A chymical expression, adapted from the French.

That portion of this earth, which is by water introduced into the plant, is decomposed, and its air set loose by the vegetable acids of the plant. Kirwan on Manures, p. 49.

DECOMPOSITE. adj. [decompositus, Lat.] Compounded a second time; compounded with things already composite.

Decomposites of three metals; or more, are too long to inquire of, except there be some compositions of them already observed. Baron.

DECOMPOSITION.† n. s. [decompositus, Lat.]

1. The act of compounding things already compounded.

The English, as Sir P. Sidney observeth, hath an elegant way of expressing them, [epithets] much beyond the Latin, in a dextrous decomposition of two or three words together; as, taste-pleasing fruits, high-erected thoughts.

Instruct. for Oratory, (Ox. 1682.) p. 52.

2. Resolution or separation of parts.

The chief use of tartar vitriolate seems to be, that it promotes the decomposition, as Mr. Sennebler has observed.

Kirwan on Manures, p. 53.

We consider what happens in the compositions and decompositions of saline particles. Boyle.

To DECOMPOUND. v. a. [decompono, Lat.]

1. To compose of things already compounded; to compound a second time; to form by a second composition.

Nature herself doth in the bowels of the earth make compounded bodies, as we see in vitriol, cinnabar, and even in sulphur itself. Boyle.

When a word stands for a very complex idea, that is compounded and decomposed, it is not easy for men to form and retain that idea exactly. Locke.

If the violet, blue, and green be intercepted, the remaining yellow, orange, and red, will compound upon the paper an orange; and then, if the intercepted colours be let pass, they will fall upon this compounded orange, and, together with it, decompose a white. Newton.

2. To resolve a compound into simple parts. This is a sense that has of late crept irregularly into chymical books.

DECOMPOUND. adj. [from the verb.] Composed of things or words already compounded; compounded a second time.

The pretended salts and sulphur are so far from being elementary parts extracted out of the body of mercury, that they are rather, to borrow a term of the grammarians, decompound bodies, made up of the whole metal and the menstruum, or other additaments employed to disguise it. Boyle.

No body should use any compound or decompound of the substantial verbs. Arbutnot and Pope.

DECOMPOUNDABLE.* adj. [from To decompound.] Liable to be dissolved.

It is impossible but speculative and devout minds, who are acquainted with the efficiency ascribed to the fluids of water, air, fire, and living spirits, in the sacred Scriptures and other writings of antiquity, must be struck with the modern and recent discoveries of chemistry, which shew the universal dominion of air of different kinds, and that all nature seems to be decomposable into fluidity. Brit. Crit. ix. 58.

DECORAMENT. n. s. [from decorare.] Ornament; embellishment. Dict.

To DECORATE.† v. a. [decoro, Lat. decorer, Fr.] This word is mentioned by Cotgrave in his translation of decorer, and is given in Sherwood's old English and French Dictionary, though, in that of Dr. Johnson, it is without authority, and without example.] To adorn; to embellish; to beautify.

This essay is not decorated with many comparisons.

Dr. Warton on Pope.

DECORATION.† n. s. [old Fr. decoration.] Ornament; embellishment; added beauty.

The ensigns of virtues contribute to the ornament of figures; such as the decorations belonging to the liberal arts, and to war. Dryden.

This helm and heavy buckler I can spare,

As only decorations of the war:

So Mars is arm'd for glory, not for need. Dryden.

DECORATOR. n. s. [from decorare.] An adorning; an embellisher. Dict.

DECOROUS. adj. [decorus, Lat.] Decent; suitable to a character; becoming; proper; befitting; seemly.

It is not so decorous, in respect of God, that he should immediately do all the meanest and triflingest things, himself, without any inferior or subordinate minister. Ray.

DECOROUSLY.* adv. [from decorous.] In a becoming or proper manner.

To DECORTICATE. v. a. [decortico, Lat.] To divest of the bark or husk; to husk; to peel; to strip.

Take great barley, dried and decorticated, after it is well washed, and boil it in water. Arbutnot on Coins.

DECORTICATION.† n. s. [from decorticate.] The act of stripping the bark or husk. Cockeram.

DECORUM. n. s. [Latin.] Decency; behaviour contrary to licentiousness, contrary to levity; seemliness.

If your master

Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell him,

That majesty, to keep decorum, must

No less beg than a kingdom. Shakespeare.

I am far from suspecting simplicity, which is bold to trespass in points of decorum. Wotton.

Beyond the fix'd and settled rules

Of vice and virtue in the schools,

The better sort shall set before 'em

A grace, a manner, a decorum. Prior.

Gentlemen of the army should be, at least, obliged to external decorum: a profligate life and character should not be a means of advancement. Swift.

He kept with princes due decorum;

Yet never stood in awe before 'em. Swift.

To DECOY. v. a. [from koey, Dutch, a cage.] To lure into a cage; to intrap; to draw into a snare.

A fowler had taken a partridge, who offered to decoy her companions into the snare. L'Estrange.

Decay'd by the fantastick blaze,

Now lost, and now renew'd, he sinks absorpt,
Rider and horse.

Thompson.

DECOY. n. s. [from the verb.] • Allurement to mischiefs; temptation.

The devil could never have had such numbers, had he not used some as decoys to ensnare others. Gov. of the Tongue.

These exuberant productions of the earth became a continual decoy and snare: they only excited and fomented lusts.

Woodward.

An old dramdrinker is the devil's decoy.

Berkley.

DECOYDUCK. n. s. A duck that lures others.

There is a sort of ducks, called decoyducks, that will bring whole flights of fowl to their retirements, where are conveniences made for catching them.

Mortimer.

To DECREASE. v. n. [decreasco, Lat.] To grow less; to be diminished.

From the moon is the sign of feasts, a light that decreaseth in her perfection.

Eccles. xliii. 7.

Unto fifty years, as they said, the heart annually increaseth the weight of one drachm; after which, in the same proportion, it decreaseth.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

When the sun comes to his tropicks, days increase and decrease but a very little for a great while together.

Newton.

To DECREASE. v. a. To make less; to diminish.

He did dishonourable find

Those articles, which did our state decrease.

Daniel.

Nor cherish they relations poor,

That might decrease their present store,

Prior.

Heat increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids, as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance.

Newton.

DECREASE. n. s. [from the verb.] •

1. The state of growing less; decay.

By weak'ning toil, and hoary age o'ercome,
See thy decrease, and hasten to thy tomb.

Prior.

2. The wain; the time when the visible face of the moon grows less.

See in what time the seeds set in the increase of the moon, come to a certain height, and how they differ from those that are set in the decrease of the moon.

Bacon.

To DECRETE. v. n. [old Fr. decrez, decreis, decret, and decreter; Lat. decerno, decretum.] Our own word at first was decrete: "Through their decretes and judgements," Chaucer, Boeth. i. pros. 4.] To make an edict; to appoint by edict; to establish by law; to determine; to resolve.

They shall see the end of the wise, and shall not understand what God in his counsel hath decreed of him.

Wisd. iv.

Father eternal! Thine it to decree;

Mine, both in heav'n and earth, to do thy will.

Milton, P. L.

If heav'n had decreed that I should life enjoy,
Heav'n had decreed to save unhappy Troy.

Dryden.

To DECREE. v. a. To doom or assign by a decree.

Thou shalt also decree a thing and it shall be established.

Job.

The king their father,

On just and weighty reasons, has decreed

His sceptre to the younger.

Rousse.

DECREE. n. s. [decretum, Lat.] •

1. An edict; a law.

If you deny me this upon your law!

There is no force in the decrees of Venice.

Shakespeare.

There went a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed.

Luke, ii. 1.

Are we condemn'd by fate's unjust decree,

No more our houses and our homes to see?

Dryden.

The Supreme Being is sovereignly good; he rewards the just, and punishes the unjust; and the folly of man, and not the decree of Heaven, is the cause of human calamity.

Broom.

2. An established rule.

When he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder.

Job, xxviii. 26.

3. A determination of a suit, or litigated cause.

4. [In canon law.] An ordinance, which is enacted by the pope himself, by and with the advice of his cardinals in council assembled, without being consulted by any one thereon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DECREMENT. n. s. [decrementum, Latin.] Decrease; the state of growing less; the quantity lost by decreasing.

Upon the tropick, and first descension from our solstice, we are scarce sensible of declination; but declining further, our decrement accelerates: we set up, and in our last days precipitate into our graves.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Rocks, mountains, and the other elevations of the earth, suffer continual decrement, and grow lower and lower.

Woodward.

DECREPIT. adj. [Fr. decrepité, Lat. decrepitus.]

This word is often written, inaccurately, decrepid; as by Dryden, in one of his Letters, "How can you be so good to an old decrepid man?" Malone's Life of Dryden, vol. i. P. iii. p. 66. This should not be imitated.] Wasted and worn out with age; in the last stage of decay.

Decrepit miser! base, ignoble wretch!

Shakespeare.

Of men's lives in this decrepit age of the world, many exceed fourscore, and some an hundred years.

Raleigh.

This pope is decrepit, and the bell goeth for him: take order that there be chosen a pope of fresh years.

Bacon.

Decrepit superstition, and such as had their nativity in times beyond all history, are fresh in the observation of many heads.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

And from the North to call

Decrepit Winter.

Milton, P. L.

Who this observes, may in his body find

Decrepit age, but never in his mind.

Denham.

Propp'd on his staff, and stooping as he goes,

A painted mitre shades his furrow'd brows;

The god, in the decrepit form array'd,

The gardens enter'd, and the fruits survey'd.

Pope.

The charge of witchcraft inspires people with a malevolence toward those poor decrepit parts of our species, in whom human nature is debased by infirmity and decay.

Addison.

To DECREPITATE. v. a. [decrepo, Latin.] To calcine salt till it has ceased to crackle in the fire.

So will it come to pass in a pot of salt, although decrepitated.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

DECREPITATION. n. s. [from decrepitare.] The crackling noise which salt makes, when put over the fire in a crucible.

Quincy.

DECREPITNESS. n. s. [from decrepit.] French also,

DECREPITUDE. n. s. [decrepitude.] The last stage of decay; the last effects of old age.

Mother earth, in this her barrenness and decrepitness of age, can procure such swarms of various engines.

Bentley, Serm. iv.

Many seem to pass from youth to decrepitude without any reflection on the end of life.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 78.

DECRESCENT. adj. [from decrescens, Latin.] Growing less; being in a state of decrease.

DECRETAL. adj. [decretum, Latin.] Appertaining to a decree; containing a decree.

A decretal epistle is that which the pope decrees either by himself, or else by the advice of his cardinals; and this must be up his being consulted by some particular person or persons thereon.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

Rather before a decretal epistle of pope Innocent the third.

Milton, Means to remove Heresies out of the Church.

DECRETAL. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A book of decrees or edicts; a body of laws.

The second room, whose walls

Were painted fair with memorable gests,

Of magistrates, of courts, of tribunals,

Of laws, of judgements, and of decretals.

Spenser.

2. The collection of the pope's decrees.

Traditions and decretals were made of equal force, and as authentic as the sacred charter itself. Howel, Voc. Forest.

DECRE'TION.* n. s. [from the Lat. decreasco.] The state of growing less.

Nor can we now perceive that the world becomes more or less than it was, by which decretion we might guess at a former increase, and from a tendency to conception collect its original generation. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

DE'CRETIST. n. s. [from decreo.] One that studies or professes the knowledge of the decretal.

The decretists had their rise and beginning under the reign of the emperor Frederik Barbarossa. Ayliffe, Peregion.

DE'CRETORILY.* adv. [from decretory.] In a definitive manner.

Deal concisely and decretorily, that I may be brought as compendiously as may be to the point you drive at. Goodman, Wint. Er. Conf. P. iii.

DE'CRETORY.† adj. [from decreo.]

1. Judicial; definitive.

The Son of Man is thus constantly represented as making the great decretory separation, and the last judicatory distinction between man and man: as an husbandman separating the wheat, sometime from the chaff, sometime from the tares. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 7.

There are other lenitives that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigours of a condemning sentence. South, Sermon. ii. 58.

2. Critical; in which there is some definitive event.

The motions of the moon, supposed to be measured by sevens, and the critical or decretory days, depend on that number. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The day of judgement is truly and most literally the critical, the decretory day. Douglas, Devot. p. 339.

TO DECRE'EV.* v. n. [Fr. decrin, from decroitre.]

Lat: decreasco. To decrease. Not now in use.

His strength still more, but she still more decrev'd.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vi. 18.

DECR'IAL.† n. s. [from decry.] Clamorous censure; hasty or noisy condemnation; concurrence in censuring any thing.

Who would exempt themselves from criticism, and save their ill-acquired reputation, by the decral of an art, on which the cause and interest of wit and letters absolutely depend. Shaftesbury, Miscell. V. ch. 1.

DECR'ER.* n. s. [from decry.] One who censures hastily, or clamorously.

I cannot but reflect upon the brutish folly, and absurd impudence, of the late fanatic decriers of the necessity of human learning. South, Sermon. vii. 37.

DECR'OWNING.* n. s. [de, Lat. from, and coron.] The act of depriving of a crown.

He holds it no more sin the decrowning of kings, than our puritans do the suppression of bishops. Oceburg's Characters.

DECR'USTATION.* n. s. [Fr. decrustation.] An uncrusting; a paring away of the uppermost part or outmost rind. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

TO DECRY.† v. a. [decrier, French.] Neither our own nor the French word can boast any great antiquity. Mr. Maloué observes, that Cowley, and Sir W. Waller, the parliamentary general, are the earliest users of it which he has observed. The French, I believe, was introduced, in the sense of blame, by the Sieur d'Ablancourt.] To censure; to blame clamorously; to clamour against.

Malice in critics reigns so high,

That for small errors they whole plays decry. Dryden.

Those measures which are extolled by one half of the kingdom, are naturally decry'd by the other. Addison.

They applied themselves to lessen their authority, decry'd them as hard and unnecessary restraints. Rogers.

Quacks and impostors are still cautioning us to beware of counterfeits, and decry others cheats only to make more way for their own. Swift.

DECUBA'TION.* n. s. [from decubo, low Lat.] The act of lying down.

At this decubation upon boughs the satirist seems to hint.

Evelyn, iv. § 7

DECU'MBENCE. } n. s. [decumbo, Latin.] The act DECU'MBENCY. } of lying down; the posture of lying down.

This must come to pass, if we hold opinion they lie not down, and enjoy no decumbence at all; for station is properly no rest, but one kind of motion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Not considering the ancient manner of decumbency, he imputed this gesture of the beloved disciple into rusticity, or an act of incivility. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DECU'MBENT.* adj. [Lat. decumbens.]

1. Lying, or leaning; recumbent.

Underneath is the decumbent portrait of a woman, resting on a death's head. Ashmole's Herk. i. p. 2.

2. Lying in the bed of sickness. See DECU'MBITURE.

To know how to deal aright with the consciences of decumbent dying sinners, is a task that cannot be advantageously performed but by a man blessed with a serious and pious frame of spirit. Atterbury.

DECU'MBITURE.† n. s. [from decumbo, Latin.]

1. The time at which a man takes to his bed in a disease.

During his decumbiture, he was visited by his most dear friend, the bishop of Gloucester.

Life of Firmin, (1698,) p. 82.

2. [In astrology.] A scheme of the heavens erected for that time, by which the prognosticks of recovery or death are discovered.

If but a mile she travel out of town,
The planetary hour must first be known.
And lucky moment: if her eye but akes,
Or itelfes, its decumbiture she takes.

Dryden, Juv. vi.

DE'CU'PLE. adj. [decuplus, Latin.] Tenfold; the same number ten times repeated.

Man's length, that is, a perpendicular from the vertex unto the sole of the foot, is decuple unto his profundity; that is, a direct line between the breast and the spine.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Supposing there be a thousand sorts of insects in this island, if the same proportion holds between the insects of England and of the world, as between plants domestick and exotick, that is, near a decuple, the species of insects will amount to ten thousand. Ray.

DECU'RION. n. s. [decurio, Latin.] A commander over ten; an officer subordinate to the centurion.

He instituted decurions through both these colonies, that is, one over every ten families. Temple.

DECU'RSION.† n. s. [decursus, Latin.] The act of running down.

What is decayed by that decursion of waters, is supplied by the terrene fœces which water brings. Hall.

The decursions of our corruption and mortality—tend to the grave, as the rivers into the sea.

Heuyt, Sermon. (1658,) p. 226.

TO DECU'RT.* v. a. [Lat. decurto.] To abridge; to shorten.

When thou see'st

The candid stole thrown o'er the pious priest,
With reverend curtsies come, and to him bring
Thy free, and not decurted, offering.

Henrick, Hesperides, p. 339.

DECU'RTA'TION. n. s. [decurtatio, Latin.] The act of cutting short, or shortening.

TO DECU'SSATE. v. a. [decusso, Latin.] To intersect at acute angles.

This it performs by the action of a notable muscle on each side, having the form of the letter K, made up of many fibres, Ray, decurating one another longways.

DECUSSATION. n. s. [from decurssate.] The act of crossing; state of being crossed at unequal angles.

Though there be decurssation of the rays in the pupil of the eye, and so the image of the object in the retina, or bottom of the eye, be inverted; yet doth not the object appear inverted, but in its right or natural posture. Ray.

TO DEDECORATE. v. a. [dedecoro, Latin.] To disgrace; to bring a reproach upon. Dict.

DEDECORATION. n. s. [from dedecorate.] The act of disgracing; disgrace. Dict.

DEDECOROUS. adj. [dedecus, Latin.] Disgraceful; reproachful; shameful. Dict.

DEDENTITION. n. s. [de and dentitio, Lat.] Loss or shedding of the teeth.

Solon divided life into ten septenaries, because in every one thereof a man received some sensible mutation: in the first is dedentition, or falling of teeth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO DEDICATE. v. a. [dedico, Lat.].

1. To devote to some divine power; to consecrate and set apart to sacred uses.

A pleasant grove
Was shot up high, full of the stately tree
That dedicated is to Olympick Jove,

And to his son Alcides. Spenser.

The princes offered for dedicating the altar, in the day that it was anointed. Num. vii. 10.

Warn'd by the steer, to her offended name
We rais'd, and dedicate this wondrous frame. Dryden.

2. To appropriate solemnly to any person or purpose.

There cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many,
As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shakespeare.

Ladies, a gen'ral welcome from his grace
Salutes you all: this night he dedicates

To fair content and you. Shakespeare.

He went to learn the profession of a soldier, to which he had dedicated himself. Clarendon.

Bid her instant wed,
And quiet dedicate her remnant life
To the just duties of an humble wife. Prior.

3. To inscribe to a patron.

He compiled ten elegant books, and dedicated them to the lord Burghley. Peacham.

DEDICATE. adj. [from the verb.] Consecrate; devote; dedicated; appropriate.

Prayers from preserved souls,
From fasting maids, whose names are dedicate
To nothing temporal. Shakespeare.

This tenth part, or tithe, being thus assigned unto him, leaveth now to be of the nature of the other nine parts, which are given us for our worldly necessities, and becometh as a thing dedicate and appropriate unto God. Spelman.

DEDICATION. n. s. [dedicatio, Lat.]

1. The act of dedicating to any being or purpose; consecration; solemn appropriation.

It cannot be laid to many men's charge, that they have been so curious as to trouble bishops with placing the first stone in the churches; or so scrupulous as, after the erection of them, to make any great ado for their dedication. Hooker.

Among publick solemnities there is none so glorious as that under the reign of king Solomon, at the dedication of the temple. Addison.

2. An address to a patron.

Proud as Apollo on his forked hill,
Sat full-blown Bubo, puff'd by ev'ry quill;
Fed by soft dedications all day long,
Horace and he went hand in hand in song. Pope.

DEDICATOR. n. s. [from dedicate.] One who inscribes his work to a patron with compliment and servility.

An ill-timed or extravagant commendation would not pass upon you; but you would keep off such a dedicator at arms' end, and send him back with his encomiums to this lord, or that lady, who stood in need of such trifling merchandise.

Dryden, Dedie. of Tr. and Cross. to Ld. Sunderland.

Leave dangerous truths to unsuccessful satyrs,
And flattery to fulsome dedicators. Pope.

Certain impostors had mixed themselves amongst the learned. These were a kind of parasites, who, like their ancestor in Terence, were for leaning upon their profession; and, from nature's designation of simple buffoons, had improved themselves into dedicators. Yet this coalition was not thought altogether monstrous; the parasite having as noble an original, and suffering as base a degeneracy, as the dedicator. For the parasite, as the dedicator, was, at first, a name of honour. Warburton, on Prodiges, Dedie. to Sir R. Sutton.

DEDICATORY. adj. [Fr. dedicatoire.] Composing a dedication; complimentary; adulatory.

Thus I should begin my epistle, if it were a dedicatory one; but it is a friendly letter. Pope.

DEDITION. n. s. [deditio, Lat.] The act of yielding up any thing; surrendry.

It was not a complete conquest, but rather a dedition upon terms and capitulations agreed between the conqueror and the conquered. Hale.

DEDOLENT. adj. [from the Lat. dedolens, in the sense of "To grieve no more, to give over grieving."] Feeling no sorrow or compunction. A very expressive word, in a very fine and forcible remark.

When once the dedolent, or perceptive faculty, has lost its tenderness and sensibility, and the mind becomes reprobate, then darkness and light, good and evil, bitter and sweet, are all one. Then — men are dedolent and fast feeling; and, having no other law but that of the corporeal life, become insatiable in impiety, and work wickedness with greediness. Hallywell, Saving of Souls, (1677.) p. 114.

TO DEDUCE. v. a. [deduco, Latin.]

1. To draw in a regular connected series, from one time or one event to another.

I will deduce him from his cradle, through the deep and labrick waves of state and court, till he was swallowed in the gulph of fatality. Wotton, Life of D. of Buck.

O goddess, say, shall I deduce my rhimes
From the dire nation in its early times? Pope.

2. To form a regular chain of consequential propositions.

Reason is nothing but the faculty of deducing unknown truths from principles already known. Locke.

3. To lay down in regular order, so as that the following shall naturally rise from the foregoing.

Lead me your song, ye nightingales! Oh pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse! while I deduce
From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
The symphony of Spring. Thomson.

4. To subtract; to deduct.

A matter of four hundred
To be deduc'd upon the payment. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

5. To transplant; to lead forth. A Latinism.

Advising him he should hither deduce a colony. Selden on Lord Byron's Polynth. 8. 17.

DEDUCEMENT. n. s. [from deduce.] The thing deduced; the collection of reason; consequential proposition.

Other deducements or analogies are cited out of St. Paul. Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. B. i.

Praise and prayer are his due worship, and the rest of those deducements, which I am confident are the remote effects of revelation. Dryden.

DEDUCIBLE. adj. [from deduce.] Collectible by reason; consequential; discoverable from principles laid down.

The condition, although deducible from many grounds, yet shall we evidence it but from few. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The general character of the new earth is paradisaical, and the particular character that it hath no sea; and both are apparently deducible from its formation. Burnet.

So far, therefore, as conscience reports any thing agreeable to, or deducible from these, it is to be hearkened to. South.

All properties of a triangle depend on, and are deducible from, the complex idea of three lines, including a space. Locke.

DEDUCTIVE. adj. [from deduco.] Performing the act of deduction. Dict.

To DEDUCT. v. a. [deduco, Lat.]

1. To subtract; to take away; to cut off; to defalcate.

We deduct, from the computation of our years, that part of our time which is spent in incogitancy of infancy. Norris.

2. To separate; to dispart; to divide. Now not in use.

Having yet, in his deducted spright,
Some sparks remaining of that heavenly fire. Spenser.

3. To reduce; to bring down.

Do not deduct it to days; 'twill be the more tedious; and to measure it by hourglasses were intolerable. Mussenger, Old Law.

DEDUCTION. n. s. [deductio, Lat.]

1. Consequential collection; consequence; proposition drawn from principles premised.

Out of scripture such duties may be deduced, by some kind of consequence, as by long circuit of deduction it may be that even all truth, out of any truth, may be concluded. Hooker.

Set before you the moral law of God, with such deductions from it as our Saviour hath drawn, or our own reason, well informed, can make. Duppa.

That by diversity of motions we should spell out things not resembled by them, we must attribute to some secret deduction; but what this deduction should be, or by what mediums this knowledge is advanced, is as dark as ignorance. Glanville.

You have laid the experiments together in such a way, and made such deductions from them, as I have not hitherto met with. Boyle.

All cross and distasteful humours are either expressly, or by clear consequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Testament. Tillotson.

A reflection so obvious, that natural instinct seems to have suggested it even to those who never much attended to deductions of reason. Rogers.

2. That which is deducted; defalcation.

Bring then these blessings to a strict account;
Make fair deductions, see to what they mount. Pope.

DEDUCTIVE. adj. [from deduct.] Deducible; that which is or may be deduced from a position premised.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects. Glanville.

DEDUCTIVELY. adv. [from deductive.] Consequentially; by regular deduction; by a regular train of ratiocination.

There is scarce a popular error passant in our days, which is not either directly expressed, or deductively contained in this work. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DEED. n. s. [bad, Saxon; daed, Dutch; dedins, Goth. See To Do.]

1. Action, whether good or bad; thing done.

From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,
The place is dignified by the doer's deed. Shakespeare.

The monster nought reply'd; for words were vain,
And deeds could only deeds unjust maintain. Dryden.

The same had not consented to the counsel and deed. Luke.
We are not secluded from the expectation of reward for our charitable deeds. Smalridge's Sermons.

2. Exploit; performance.

On the other side,
Us'd no ambition to commend my deeds;
The deeds themselves, though mute, spoke loud the doer. Milton, S. A.

Thousands were there in darkness, fine that dwelt,
Whose deeds some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryden.

3. Power of action; agency.

Nor knew I not
To be with will and deed created free. Milton, P. L.

4. Act declaratory of an opinion.

They desire, with strange absurdity, that to the same senate it should belong to give full judgment in matter of excommunication, and to absolve whom it pleased them, clean contrary to their own former deeds and oaths. Hooker.

5. Written evidence of any legal act.

The solicitor gave an evidence for a deed, which was impeached to be fraudulent. Bacon.

He builds his house upon the sand, and writes the deeds, by which he holds his estate, upon the face of a river. South.

6. Fact; reality; the contrary to fiction: whence the word indeed.

And in very deed for this cause have I raised thee up, for to shew in thee my power. Exodus, ix. 16.

O that, as oft I have at Athens seen
The stage arise, and the big clouds descend;
So now in very deed I might behold
The proud rous earth, and all yon marble roof,
Meet like the hands of Jove. Lee's Oedipus.

DEEDLESS. adj. [from deed.] Unactive; without action; without exploits.

Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue. Shakespeare.

Instant, he cry'd, your female discord end,
Ye deedless boasters! and the song attend. Pope.

DEEDY. adj. [from deed.] Active; industrious.

A word yet in use in Berkshire; and is not improper, as an opposite to DEEDLESS.

To DEEM. v. n. part. deem't, or deem'd. [deaman, Sax. doemen, Teut. domjan, M. Goth. doma, Su. Goth. Dr. Johnson has intermixed the verb active with the neuter, and taken no notice of the former.]

1. To judge; to conclude upon consideration; to think; to opine; to determine.

The shipmen deem'd that they drew near to some country. Acts, xxvii. 27.

So natural is the union of religion with justice, that we may boldly deem there is neither, where both are not. Hooker.

2. To estimate; to make estimate of: this sense is now disused.

But they that skill not of so heavenly matter,
All that they know not, envy or admire,
Rather than envy, let them wonder at her,
But not to deem of her desert aspire. Spenser.

To DEEM. v. a.

1. To judge; to determine.

Here eke that famous apple grew,—
For which th' Idean ladies disagreed,
Till partial Paris deem'd it Venus' due. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To imagine; to suppose.

Neither by considering the works did they acknowledge the work-master; but deem'd either fire, or wind, or the swift air, or the circle of the stars, or the violent water, or the lights of heaven, to be the gods which govern the world. Wisdom, xiii. 2.

He who, to be deem'd
A god, leap'd fondly into Aëtha's flames. Milton, P. L.

These blessings, friend, a deity bestow'd;
For never can I deem him less than god. Dryden.

Is deem'd vindictive to have chang'd her course. Thomson.

DEEM. n. s. [from the verb.] Judgement; surmise; opinion. Not now in use.

Hear me, my love, be thou but true of heart.
— I true! how now? what wicked deem is this? Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

DEEMSTER. n. s. [Sax. deama, a judge; and also, demepes. The word is pronounced, and sometimes written, deppster.] A judge: a word yet in use in Jersey and the Isle of Man.

DEEP. adj. [Sax. deop, which, Mr. Horne Tooke says, "is merely the past participle of bippan, to dip, to dive;" as if, in his estimation, no such words had before existed as the Goth. and Su. dýp, and the Icel. dýp, all signifying deep or profound. Serenius traces the expression to the old Goth. dy, deep, gully.]

1. Having length downwards; descending far; profound: opposed to shallow.

All trees in high and sandy grounds are to be set deep, and in watery grounds more shallow. Bacon.

The gaping gulph low to the centre lies,
And twice as deep as earth is distant from the skies. Dryden.

2. Low in situation; not high.

3. Measured from the surface downward.

Mr. Halley, in diving deep into the sea in a diving vessel, found, in a clear sun-shine day, that when he was sunk many fathoms deep into the water, the upper part of his hand, on which the sun shone directly, appeared of a red colour. Newton.

4. Entering far; piercing a great way.

This avoice
Strikes deeper; grows with more pernicious root. Shakespeare.
For, even in that season of the year, the ways in that vale were very deep. Clarendon.

Thou hast not strength such labours to sustain:
Drink hellebore, my boy! drink deep, and scour thy brain. Dryden.

5. Far from the outer part.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie. Dryden.

6. Not superficial; not obvious.

If the matter be knotty, and the sense lies deep, the mind must stop and buckle to it, and stick upon it with labour and thought, and close contemplation. Locke.

7. Sagacious; penetrating; having the power to enter far into a subject.

Who hath not heard it spoken,
How deep you were within the books of heav'n! Shakespeare.
The spirit of deep prophecy she hath. Shakespeare.
He's meditating with two deep divines. Shakespeare.
He in my ear

Ventled much policy and projects deep
Of enemies, of aids, battles and leagues,
Plausible to the world, to me worth nought. Milton, P. R.
I do not discover the helps which this great man of deep thought mentions. Locke.

8. Full of contrivance; politick; insidious.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

9. Grave; solemn.

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Nor awful Phœbus was on Pindus heard
With deeper silence, or with more regard. Dryden.

10. Dark coloured.

With deeper brown the grove was overspread. Dryden.

11. Having a great degree of stilness, or gloom, or sadness.

The stoic's image in this piece. Prior.

DEFA'CEMENT.† n. s. [from deface.] Violation; injury; rasure; abolition; destruction.

But what is this image, and how is it defaced? The poor men of Lyons will tell you, that the image of God is purity; and the defacement sin. Bacon.

DEFA'CEMENT.† n. s. [from deface.] Destroyer; abolisher; violator.

That foul defacer of God's handywork,

Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves. Shakespeare.

Now on these Romans,

Doisers of thy power, of us defacers,

Revenge thyself. Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

DEFA'ILANCE.† n. s. [Fr. defaillance; French.] Failure; miscarriage: a word not in use, Dr. Johnson says. Yet it is authorised by one of the finest writers of our country.

When great prelates are living, their authority is depressed by their personal defaillances, and the contrary interests of their contemporaries; which disband, when they are dead, and leave their credit entire upon the reputation of those excellent books and monuments of learning and piety, which are left behind them. Bp. Taylor, Liberty of Prophesying.

The affections were the authors of that unhappy defaillance.

Glanville.

To DEFA'LCATE.† v. a. [Fr. defalquer, Fr. defalco, Lat. from falx, falcts, a sickle.] To cut off; to lop; to take away part of a pension or salary. It is generally used of money, Dr. Johnson says.

Our old lexicography introduces the word only in the common acceptance of "to diminish, take away, or cut off." Bullokar, and Cockeram. See To DEFA'LC.

DEFA'LCATION.† n. s. [from defalcate.] Diminution; abatement; excision of any part of a customary allowance.

To defray this charge of wars, as also of all other publick defalcations, expenses, fees, pensions, &c.

Burton, Anal. of M&C. To the Reader.

If we be still our old selves, no changelings at all, the same men that we came into the world, without defalcation of our corruptions, without addition of grace and sanctification, surely we must seek us another Father; we are not yet the sons of God. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 145.

The tea table is set forth with its customary bill of fare, and without any defalcation. Addison.

To DEFA'LC.† v. a. [Fr. defalquer. See To DEFA'LCATE.] To cut off; to lop away.

We are sure to receive rewards for what we have given, and vengeance for what we have defalced.

Bp. Hall, Contempt. b. 4.

You are content with the ten thousand pound,

Defalcing the four hundred garnish-money? B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

What he defalcs from some insipid sin, is but to make some other more gustful. Decay of Piety.

DEFA'LIATION. n. s. [from defame.] The act of defaming or bringing infamy upon another; calumny; reproach; censure; detraction.

Defamation is the uttering of contumelious language of any one, with an intent of raising an ill fame of the party, and this extends to writing, as by defamatory libels; and to deeds, as reproachful postures, signs, and gestures. Ayliffe.

Be silent, and beware, if such you see;

'Tis defamation but to say, that's he. Dryden.

Many dark and intricate motives there are to detraction and defamation, and many malicious spies are searching into the actions of a great man. Addison.

DEFA'MATORY.† adj. [Fr. defamatoire.] Calumnious; tending to defame; unjustly censorious; libellous; falsely satirical.

I have seen many defamatory and libellous things of this nature. Wotton, Letters, Rem. p. 549.

The most eminent sin is the spreading of defamatory reports. Government of the Tongue.

Augustus, conscious to himself of many crimes, made an exact against lampoons and satires, and defamatory writings. Dryden.

To DEFA'ME.† v. a. [old Fr. defamer; from de and fama, Lat. This is one of our oldest words. Chaucer uses it in the sense of "to make infamous." To make infamous; to censure falsely in publick; to deprive of honour; to dishonour by reports; to libel; to calumniate; to destroy reputation by either acts or words.

It is a sinne, and eke a great folie
To appeire any man, or him defame.

They live as if they professed Christianity merely in spite,
to defame it. Chaucer, Miller's Prologue.
Decay of Piety.

My guilt thy growing virtues did defame;
My blackness blotted thy noblemish'd name. Dryden.

DEFA'ME.† n. s. [from the verb.] Disgrace; dishonour: not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Spenser.

Many doughty knights he in his day
Had done to death,
And hung their conquer'd arms for more defame
On gallowtrees. Spenser.

Those pious tears,
Thou daily shower'st upon my father's monument,
(When in the Persian expedition
He fell unfortunately by a stroke of thunder.)
Made thy defame and sins. Bacon, and Fl. The Prophetess.
Thy chastity and virtue hath infus'd
Another soul in me, red with defame,
For in my blushing cheeks is seen my shame.

For this with them my father was de-roy'd,
And buried in the dunghill of defame. London Prodigal, v. i.
Mar. for Mag. p. 310.

DEFA'MER. n. s. [from defume.] One that injures the reputation of another; a detractor; a calumniator.

It may be a useful trial of the patience of the defamed, yet the defamer has not the less crime. Government of the Tongue.

DEFA'MING.* n. s. [from defume.] Defamation; the act of reproaching others.

I heard the defaming of many. Jer. xx. 10.

They draw a nourishment
Out of defamings, grow upon disgraces,
And when they see a virtue flourish
Strongly above the battery of their tongues;
Oh, how they cast to sink it. Bacon, and Fl. Philaster.

DEFA'TIGABLE.* adj. [Lat. defatigo.] Liable to be weary, or to be tired.

We were made on set purpose defatigable, that so all degrees of life might have their exercise.

Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 116.

To DEFA'TIGATE.† v. a. [defatigo, Lat.] To weary; to tire. Hudoc.

Up which defatigating hill nevertheless we crumbled, but with difficulty. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 200.

The power of these men's industries, never defatigated, hath been great. Dr. Maine.

DEFATIGA'TION.† n. s. [defatigatio, Lat.] Weariness; fatigue.

I soon find an unavoidable defatigation in all things. Bp. Hall, Soliloq. 80.

DEFA'ULT.† n. s. [old Fr. defaultte, from the old verb deffailir, deffauldroit, whence default, defaultte, default.] V. Cotgrave and Roquefort.]

1. Omission of that which we ought to do; neglect.

2. Crime; failure; fault.

Sedition tumbled into England afore by the default of governors than the people. Haywood.

We that know what 'tis to fast and pray,
Are penitent for your default to-day. Shakspeare.

Let me not rashly call in doubt
Divine prediction: what if all foretold
Had been fulfill'd but through mine own default, Whom have I to complain of, but myself? Milton, S. A.

Partial judges we are of our own excellencies, and other men's defaults. Swift.

3. Defect; want.

In default of the king's pay, the forces were laid upon the subject. Damer.

Cooks could make artificial birds and fishes, in default of the real ones. Arbutnot on Coins.

4. [In law.] Non-appearance in court at a day assigned. Cowel.

To DEFA'ULT.† v. a. [from the noun.] To fail in performing any contract or stipulation; to forfeit by breaking a contract.

We shall not need dispute, whether they have deposed him, or what they have defaulted towards him.

Milton, Ten. of Kings and Magistrates.

To DEFA'ULT. v. n. To offend.

And pardon crav'd --

That he 'gainst courtessie so foully did default. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 21.

DEFA'ULTED.* adj. [from default.] Having defect.

The old defaulted building being rid out of the way.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580,) fol. 63.

DEFA'ULTER.† n. s. [from the verb.] One that makes default.

That very law annulled the defaulter's right of inheritance, as a condign punishment for a recrecancy so shameful.

Hist. of Duelling, Intro.

DEFEASANCE.† n. s. [defaisance, French, from defaire, to make void.]

1. The act of annulling or abrogating any contract or stipulation.

The true ground and principle, upon which the Revolution proceeded, was entirely a new case in politics, which had never before happened in our history; the abdication of the reigning monarch, and the vacancy of the throne thereupon. It was not a defeasance of the right of succession, and a new limitation of the crown. Guthrie, England.

2. Defeasance is a condition annexed to an act; as to an obligation, a recognizance, or statute, which performed by the obligee, or the cognizee, the act is disabled and made void, as if it had never been done. Cowel.

3. The writing in which a defeasance is contained.

A defeasance is a collateral deed, made at the same time with a feoffment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which it may be defeated, or totally undone. Blackstone.

4. A defeat; conquest; the act of conquering; the state of being conquered. Obsolete.

That horry king, with all his train,
Being arrived, where that champion stout,
After his foe's defeasance, did remain,
Him goodly greets, and fair does entertain. Spenser, F. Q.

DEFEASIBLE.† adj. [old Fr. defeasible, "qui peut être anéanti. 980." Lacombe.] That which may be annulled or abrogated.

He came to the crown by a defeasible title, so was never well settled. Davies.

DEFEAT.† n. s. [old Fr. defeat, "dechu, anéanti. 950." Lacombe; from defaire.]

1. The overthrow of an army.

End Maslibrough's work, and finish the defeat. Addison.

2. Act of destruction; deprivation.

A king, upon whose life
A damn'd defeat was made. Shakspeare.

To DEFEAT.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To overthrow; to undo.

Ye gods, ye make the weak most strong;
Therein, ye gods, ye tyrants do defeat. Shakspeare.

They invaded Ireland, and were defeated by the lord Mountjoy. Macdon.

2. To frustrate.

DEF

To his accusations
He pleaded still not guilty, and alleg'd
Many sharp reasons to defeat the law.

Shakspeare.

Death,
Then due by sentence when thou did'st transgress,
Defeated of his seizure, many days,
Giv'n thee of grace.

Milton, P. L.

Discover'd and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd.

Dryden.

He finds himself naturally to dread a superior Being, that can defeat all his designs, and disappoint all his hopes.

Tillotson.

3. To abolish; to undo; to change; to alter. See the first sense of DEFEAT. I have brought the following example from the first definition, where it was placed by Dr. Johnson; because "defeat thy favour" or countenance, which is the meaning of the passage, can be explained only by alter or disguise. See also Minshew in DEFEAT.

Put money in thy purse; follow these wars; defeat thy favour with an usurped beard.

Shakspeare, Othello.

DEFE'ATURE.† n. s. [from de and feature.]

1. Change of feature; alteration of countenance: not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the first example from Shakspeare, and giving only the first definition.

Grief hath chang'd me,
And careful hours, with time's deformed hand,
Hath written strange defeatures in my face.
To cross the curious workmanship of nature,
To mingle beauty with infirmities,
And pure perfection with impure defeature.

Shakspeare.

Shakspeare, Ven. and Adon.

2. Overthrow; defeat.

The king of Parthia,
(Famous in his defeature of the Crassii)
Offer'd him his protection.
Have you acquainted her with the defeature
Of the Carthaginians?
We are miserable both in successful issues, and in defeatures.

Beaum. and Fl. False One.

Massinger, Bondman.

Glanville, Sermt. p. 272.

To DEFE'ATE.† v. a. [defecer, Fr. Cotgrave; defeco, Lat.]

1. To purge liquors from lees or foulness; to purify; to cleanse.

To defeate impure blood with the infusion of senna.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 12.

I practised a way to defeate the dark and muddy oil of amber.

Boyle.

The blood is not sufficiently defeated or clarified, but remains muddy.

Harvey.

Provide a brazen tube

Inflex: self-taught and voluntary flies
The defeated liquor, through the vent
Ascending, then, by downward tract convey'd,
Spouts into subject vessels lovely clear.

Philips.

2. To purify from any extraneous or noxious mixture; to clear; to brighten.

The soul hath a freer and more defeated operation.

Wotton, Survey of Education.

We defeate the notion from materiality, and abstract quantity, place, and all kind of corporeity from it.

Glanville.

DEFE'ATE. adj. [from the verb.] Purged from lees or foulness.

We are puzzled with contradictions, which are no absurdities to defeate faculties.

Glanville.

This liquor was very defeate, and of a pleasing golden colour.

Boyle.

DEFECA'TION.† n. s. [defecatio, Lat.] Purification;
the act of clearing or purifying.

The greatest depuration and defecation; and consequently the highest exaltation of the blood and vital spirits is performed suprem.

Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 218.

DEF

The spleen and liver are obstructed in their offices of defecation, whence vicious and dreggish blood.

Harvey.

DEFECT. n. s. [defectus, Lat.]

1. Want; absence of something necessary; insufficiency; the fault opposed to superfluity.

Errours have been corrected, and defects supplied. Davies.
Had this strange energy been less,

Defect had been as fatal as excess.

Blackmore.

2. Failing imperfection.

Of 'tis seen

Our mean secures us, and our mere defects

Prove our commodities,

Shakspeare.

3. A fault; mistake; error.

We had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love.

Hooker.

You praise yourself,

By laying defects of judgement to me.

Shakspeare.

Trust not yourself; but your defects to know,

Make use of ev'ry friend—and ev'ry foe.

Pope.

4. Any natural imperfection; a blemish; a failure; without direct implication of any thing too little.

Men, through some defect in the organs, want words, yet fail not to express their universal ideas by signs.

Locke.

To DEFECT. v. n. [from the noun.] To be deficient;
to fall short of; to fail. Obsolete.

Some lost themselves in attempts above humanity, yet the enquiries of most defected by the way, and tired within the sober circumference of knowledge.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

DEFECTIBILITY. n. s. [from defectible.] The state of failing; deficiency; imperfection.

The perfection and sufficiency of Scripture has been shewn, as also the defectibility of that particular tradition.

Lord Digby to Sir Ken. Digby.

The corruption of things corruptible depends upon the intrinsical defectibility of the connection or union of the parts of things corporeal.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

DEFECTIBLE.† adj. [from defect.]

1. Imperfect; deficient; wanting.

The extraordinary persons, thus highly favoured, were for a great part of their lives in a defectible condition.

Hale.

2. Liable to defect.

Though other spirits, which were created, be either actually now unholy, or of defectible sanctity at the first.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 8.

DEFECTON. n. s. [defectio, Lat.]

1. Want; failure.

2. A falling away; apostacy.

This defection and falling away from God was first found in angels, and afterwards in men.

Raleigh.

If we fall away after tasting of the good word of God, how criminal must such a defection be?

Atterbury.

There is more evil owing to our original defection from God, and the foolish and evil dispositions that are found in fallen man.

Watts.

3. An abandoning of a king, or state; revolt.

He was diverted and drawn from hence by the general defection of the whole realm.

Davies.

Neither can this be meant of evil governours or tyrants, but of some perverseness and defection in the very nation itself.

Bacon.

DEFECTIVE.† adj. [old Fr. defectif; from defectivus, Lat.]

1. Wanting the just quantity.

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross and corporeal exhalament, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Full of defects; imperfect; not sufficient; not adequate to the purpose.

It subjects them to all the diseases depending upon a defective projectile motion of the blood.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

It will very little help to cure my ignorance, that this is the best of four or five hypotheses proposed, which are all defective.

Locke.

If it renders us perfect in one accomplishment, it generally leaves us defective in another. Addison.

3. Faulty; vicious; blamable.

All, except David, and Ezekias, and Josias, were defective; for they forsook the law of the Most High. Eccles. xlix. 5.

Our tragedy writers have been notoriously defective in giving proper sentiments to the persons they introduce. Addison.

DEFECTIVE or deficient Nouns [in grammar.] Indclinable nouns, or such as want a number, or some particular case.

DEFECTIVE Verb [in grammar.] A verb which wants some of its tenses.

DEFECTIVELY.* adv. [from defective.] In a manner wanting the just quantity.

The poets use to express it sometimes defectively, and sometimes more fully.

Abp. Usher, Answer to the Jesuit Malone, p. 299.

DEFECTIVENESS.† n. s. [from defective.] Want; the state of being imperfect; faultiness.

The defectiveness of the said survey does most plainly appear, by the instance of the short return there as to the diocese of London. Bp. Barlow, Rign. p. 322.

This defectiveness of giving testimony of ancient times, by these nations, will further appear. Stillington, Orig. Sac.

The lowness often opens the building in breadth, or the defectiveness of some other particular, makes any single part appear in perfection. Addison.

DEFECTUOUS.* adj. [Fr. defectueux, Cotgrave.] Full of defects; not sufficient.

Sometimes there are many useful things buried in the unpublished manuscripts of worthy men, which are represented as imperfect and defectuous by those that would hereby excuse themselves from that labour and pains, which the works of their deceased friends might justly challenge. Worthington to Hartlib, Ep. 14.

Nothing in nature or in providence, that is scant or defectuous, can be stable or lasting. Barrow, Sermon. ii. 15.

DEFECTUOSITY.* n. s. [Fr. defectuosité, Cotgrave.] Imperfection; faultiness.

Those acts, wherein man conceives some perfection, are in the sight of God defectivities.

H. Montagu, Dev. Ess. ii. 135.

DEFEDATION.* See DEFOEDATION.

DEFENCE.† n. s. [old Fr. defens, citadelle, place forte. V. Roq. Lat. defensio.]

1. Guard; protection; security.

The Lord is your protection and strong stay, a defence from heat, and a cover from the sun. Eccles. xxxiv. 16.

Be thou my strong rock, for an house of defence to save me. Psal. xxxi. 2.

Against all this there seems to be no defence, but that of supporting one established form of doctrine and discipline. Swift.

2. Vindication; justification; apology.

Alexander beckoned with his hand, and would have made his defence unto the people. Acts. xix. 33.

The youthful prince

With scorn replied, and made this bold defence. Dryden.

3. Prohibition: this is a sense merely French.

Severe defences may be made against wearing any linen under a certain breadth. Temple.

4. Resistance.

Nor tempt the danger of my true defence.

Shakespeare, K. John.

5. [In law.] The defendant's reply after declaration produced.

Defence, in its true legal sense, signifies merely an opposing or denial (from the French verb defendre) of the truth or validity of the complaint. Blackstone.

6. [In fortification.] The part that flanks another work.

7. The science of defence; military skill; thus, a fencing-master, or a prize-fighter, was formerly called "a master of defence."

He is, said he, a man of great defence,

Expert in batels, and in decies of arms. Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 5.

He made confession of you,

And gave you such a masterly report,

For art and exercise in your defence,

And for your rapier most especial. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

To DEFENCE.† v. a. [defensus, Lat.] To defend by fortification: not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Fairfax. Yet it often occurs in our present version of the Bible; and is found elsewhere.

The city itself he strongly fortifies

Three sides by six it well defended has. Fairfax.

Sennacherib, king of Assyria, came up against all the defended cities of Judah, and took them. Isaiah, xxxvi. 1.

Let us go into the defended cities. Jerem. iv. 5.

There shall be nothing to make up a kingdom

Mighty, and flourishing, defended, and fear'd,

Equal to be commanded, and obey'd,

But through the travels of my life, I'll find it,

And tie it to this country. Beaumont and Fl. Philaster.

DEFENCELESS. adj. [from defence.]

1. Naked; unarmed; unguarded; not provided with defences; unprepared.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms,

Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,—

Guard them, and him within protect from harms. Milton, Sonnet.

My sister is not so defenceless left

As you imagine; she has a hidden strength

Which you remember not. Milton, Comus.

Ah me! that fear

Comes thund'ring back with dreadful revolution

On my defenceless head. Milton, P. L.

On a slave disarm'd,

Defenceless and submitted to my rage,

A base revenge is vengeance on myself. Dryden.

2. Impotent; unable to make resistance.

Will such a multitude of men employ

Their strength against a weak defenceless boy? Addison.

DEFENCELESSLY.* adv. [from defenceless.] In an unprotected manner.

DEFENCELESSNESS.* n. s. [from defenceless.] An unprotected state. Bishop Fleetwood has used this word.

To DEFEND.† v. a. [defendo, Latin; defendre, French.]

Heav'n defend your souls, that you think

I will your serious and great business scant. Shakespeare.

2. To vindicate; to uphold; to assert; to maintain.

The queen on the throne, by God's assistance, is able to defend herself against all her majesty's enemies and allies put together. Swift.

3. To fortify; to secure.

And here th' access a gloomy grove defends,

And here th' unmarigable lake extends.

A village near it was defended by the river. Dryden.

4. To prohibit; to forbid. [defendre, Fr.]

Where can you say, in any manner, age,

That ever God defended marriage? Chaucer.

O sons! like one of us man is become.

To know both good and evil, since his taste

Of that defended fruit. Milton, P. L.

The use of wine is little practised, and in some places defended by customs or laws. Temple.

5. To maintain a place or cause against those that attack it.

Let me be foremost to defend the throne,
And guard my father's glories and my own.
No have I seen two rival wits contend,
One briskly charge, one gravely wise defend.

Pope.

6. To repel; to keep off. A Latinism.

And all the margent round about was sett
With shady laufel trees, thence to defend
The sunny beams which on the billow's bett.

Smith.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 63.

So th' one with fire and weapons did contend
To cut the ships from turning home againe
To Argos; th' other strove for to defend
The force of Vulcaue with his might and maine.

Spenser, Virgil's Gnat, ver. 523.

All night he well pursue; but his approach
Darkness defends between till morning watch.

Milton, P. L. xii. 207.

DEFENDABLE. † adj. [from defend.] Defensible; that may be defended. It should be, properly, defendible. Sherwood.

DEFENDANT. † adj. [defendant, Fr.] Defensive; fit for defence.

Line and pew repair our tow'ns of war
With men of courage, and with means defendant. Shakespeare.

DEFENDANT. n. s. [from the adjective.]

These high towers, out of which the Romans might more conveniently fight with the defendants on the wall, those also were broken by Archimedes' engines. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

2. [In law.] The person accused or sued.

This is the day appointed for the combat,
And ready are th' appellant and defendant.
Plaintiff dog, and bear defendant.

Shakespeare.

Hudibras.

DEFENDER. † n. s. [old French deffender, defender, defendor.]

1. One that defends; a champion.

Banish your defenders, till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows.

Shakespeare.

Dost thou not mourn our pow'r employ'd in vain,
And the defenders of our city slain?

Dryden.

2. An asserter; a vindicator.

Undoubtedly there is no way so effectual to betray the truth, as to procure it a weak defender.

South.

3. [In law.] An advocate; one that defends another in a court of justice.

DEFENSATIVE. n. s. [from defence.]

1. Guard; defence.

A very unsafe defensive it is against the fury of the lion, and surely no better than virginity, or blood royal, which Pliny doth place in cock-broth.

Brown, Fulg. Err.

If the bishop has no other defensatives but excommunication, no other power but that of the keys, he may surrender up his pastoral staff.

South.

2. [In surgery.] A bandage, plaster, or the like, used to secure a wound from outward violence.

DEFENSIBLE. † adj. [old Fr. defensible.]

1. That may be defended.

A field,

Which nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name,
Did seem to make defensible.

Shakespeare.

They must make themselves defensible, both against the natives and against strangers.

Bacon.

defensible cities in the world, I informed myself in what its strength consists.

Addison.

2. Justifiable; right; capable of vindication.

Donceive it very defensible to disarm an adversary, and disable him from doing mischief.

Cotter.

DEFENSIVE. adj. [defensif, Fr. from defendens, Lat.]

1. That serves to defend; proper for defence; not offensive.

He would not be persuaded by danger to offer any offence, but only to stand upon the best defensive guard he could.

Sidney.

My unpreparedness for war, testifies for me, that I am set on the defensive part.

King Charles.

Defensive arms lay by, as useless here.

Where massy balls the neighbouring rocks do tear.

Waller.

2. In a state or posture of defence.

What stood, recoil'd,

Defensive scarce, or, with pale fear surpriz'd,
Fled ignominious.

Milton, P. L.

DEFENSIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Safeguard.

Wars preventive upon just fears, are true defensives, as well as on actual invasions.

Bacon.

2. State of defence.

His majesty, not at all dismayed, resolved to stand upon the defensive only.

Clarendon.

DEFENSIVELY. † adv. [from defensive.] In a defensive manner.

dwell pleasantly rather than defensively, was not fortified.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

DEFENST. part. pass. [from defence.] Defended.

Stout men of arms, and with their guide of power,

Like Troy's old town, defenst with Ilion's tower.

Fairfax.

To DEFER. † v. n.

1. To put off; to delay to act. [from differe, Lat.]

God — will not long defer,

To vindicate the glory of his Name

Against all competition, nor will long

Endure it, doubtful whether God be Lord.

Milton, S. A.

Inure thyself by times to the love and practice of good deeds; for the longer thou deferrest to be acquainted with them, the less every day thou wilt find thyself disposed to them.

Atterbury.

2. To pay deference or regard to another's opinion.

[Fr. déferer, accorder.]

Herodotus — who is as fabulous as Homer when he defers to the common reports of countries.

Pope, Ess. on Homer.

To DEFER. † v. a.

1. To withhold; to delay.

When Felix heard these things, having a more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them.

Acts, xxiv. 22.

Defer the promis'd boon, the goddess cries.

Pope.

Neither is this a matter to be deferred till a more convenient time of peace and leisure.

Swift.

2. To refer to; to leave to another's judgement and determination.

The commissioners deferred the matter unto the earl of Northumberland, who was the principal man of authority in those parts.

Bacon.

3. To offer; to give. [Lat. defero.]

Of the worship deferred to the Virgin; and all the blessings expected from this worship.

Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, (1674,) p. 99.

DEFERENCE. n. s. [deference, Fr.]

1. Regard; respect.

Virgil could have excelled Varius in tragedy, and Horace in lyrick poetry, but out of deference to his friends he attempted neither.

Dryden.

He may be convinced that he is in an error, by observing those persons, for whose wisdom and goodness he has the greatest deference, to be of a contrary sentiment.

Swift.

2. Complaisance; condescension.

A natural roughness makes a man uncomplaisant to others;
so that he has no deference for their inclinations, tempers, or conditions.

Locke.

3. Submission.

Most of our fellow-subjects are guided either by the prejudice of education, or by a deference to the judgement of those who, perhaps, in their own hearts, disapprove the opinions which they industriously spread among the multitude.

Addison.

DE'FERENT. adj. [from deferens, of deferre, Lat.] That carries up, and down.

The figures of pipes or concaves, through which sounds pass, or of other bodies deferent, conduce to the variety and alteration of the sound.

Bacon.

DE'FERENT. n. s. [from the adjective.] That which carries; that which conveys.

It is certain, however, it crosses the received opinion, that sounds may be created without air, though air be the most favourable deferent of sounds.

Bacon.

DE'FERENTS. [In surgery.] Certain vessels in the human body, appointed for the conveyance of humours from one place to another.

Chambers.

DEFE'RMEN'T.* n. s. [from defer.] Delay.

But, sir, my grief, join'd with the instant business,
Begg a deferment.

Sir J. Suckling.

DEFE'RRER.* n. s. [from defer.] A delayer; a putter off.

Hulot.

A great deferer, long in hope, grown numb
With sloth, yet greedy still of what's to come.

B. Jonson, Hor. Art of Poetry.

DE'FLY.* adv. See DEFLY. Finely; nimbly.

E. K. on Spenser's Shepherds' Calendar. Spenser writes it defly.

DEFI'ANCE.* n. s. [old Fr. deffiance, defiance. See TO DEFY.]

1. A challenge; an invitation to fight.

The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepar'd,
Which, as he breath'd defiance to my ears,
He swung about his head.

Shakespeare.

Nor is it just to bring

A war, without a just defiance made.

Dryden.

2. A challenge to make any impeachment good.

3. Expression of abhorrence or contempt.

The Novatian heresy was very apt to attract well-meaning souls, who, seeing it had such express defiance to apostacy, could not suspect that it was itself any defection from the faith.

Decay of Piety.

No body will so openly bid defiance to common sense, as to affirm visible and direct contradictions.

Locke.

DEFI'ATORY.* adj. [from defy.] Bearing defiance, or a challenge.

The first, of speaking great things and blasphemies, is verified in the letters defiatory of Achmet to Sigismund the Third.

Shelford's Learned Discourses, p. 276.

DEFI'CIENCE.} n. s. [from deficio, Lat.]

DEFI'CIENCY.} n. s. [from deficio, Lat.]

1. Want; something less than is necessary.

What is to be considered in this case, is chiefly, if there be a sufficient fulness or deficiency of blood, for different methods are to be taken.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

There is no burden laid upon our posterity, nor any deficiency to be hereafter made up by ourselves, which has been our case in so many other subsidies.

Addison.

2. Defect; failing; imperfection.

Scaliger, finding a defect in the reason of Aristotle, introduceth one of no less deficiency himself.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Thou in thyself art perfect, and in thee

Is no deficiency found.

Milton, P. L.

We find, in our own natures, too great evidence of intellectual deficiency, and deplorable confessions of human ignorance.

Glansville.

What great deficiency is it, if we come short of others?

Sprat.

The characters of comedy and tragedy are never to be made perfect, but always to be drawn with some specks of frailty and deficiency, such as they have been described to us in history.

Dryden.

DEFI'CIENT. adj. [deficiens, from deficio, Lat.] Failing; wanting; defective; imperfect.

Figures are either simple or mixed: the simple be either circular or angular; and of circular, either complete, as circles, or deficient, as ovals.

Wotton on Architecture.

O woman! best of all things as the will
Of God ordain'd them: his creating hand
Nothing imperfect or deficient left.

Milton, P. L.

Neither Virgil nor Homer were deficient in any of the former beauties.

Dryden.

Several thoughts of the mind, for which we have other names, or very deficient names, are diligently to be studied.

Locke.

DEFI'CIENT Numbers [in arithmetick] are those numbers whose parts, added together, make less than the integer, whose parts they are.

Chambers.

DEFI'CIENTLY.* adv. [from deficient.] In a defective manner.

DEFI'CT.* n. s. [Lat. deficio, deficit.] Want; deficiency. A word of very modern introduction.

The corn he has imported, betrays his deficit in grains.

Ld. Auckland, Consid. P. i. p. 42.

DEFI'ER.* n. s. [old Fr. deffieur.] A challenger: a contemner; one that dares and defies.

He was ever

A loose and strong defier of all order.

Beaumont and Fl. Wild-goose-chase.

Is it not then high time that the laws should provide, by the most prudent and effectual means, to curb those bold and insolent defiers of Heaven?

Tillotson.

DEFI'GURATION.* n. s. [de, Lat. and figuration.] A change of a better form to a worse.

These traditions are defigurations and deformations of Christ exhibited.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 30.

TO DEFI'GURE.* v. a. [from de, Lat. and figure.] To delineate.

On the pavement of the said chappel be these two stones as they are here defigured.

Weever, Funer. Mon. p. 844.

TO DEFI'LE.* v. a. [Sax. apylan, gepylan, to pollute; Teut. ruylen; Goth. fuls, nasty or foul.

Spenser repeatedly writes this word defoul. Wicliffe had long before authorised him.]

1. To make foul or impure; to make nasty or filthy; to dirty.

There is a thing, Harry, known to many in our land by the name of pitch; this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile.

Shakespeare.

He is justly reckoned among the greatest prelates of this age, however his character may be defiled by mean and dirty hands.

Swift.

2. To pollute; to make legally or ritually impure.

That which dieth of itself, he shall not eat, to defile himself therewith.

Lev. xxv. 8.

Neither shall he defile himself for his father.

Lev. xxi. 11.

3. To corrupt chastity: to violate.

Ev'ry object his offence revild.

The husband murder'd and the wife defild.

Prior

4. To taint; to corrupt; to vitiate; to make guilty. Forgetfulness of good turns, defiling of souls, adultery and shameless uncleanness.

Wisd. xiv. 26.

God requires rather that we should die than defile ourselves with impieties.

Stillingsfleet.

Let not any instances of sin defile your requests.

Wake.

TO DEFI'LE. v. n. [defiler, Fr.] To march; to go off file by file.

DEFI'LE. n. s. [defile, Fr. from file, a line of soldiers, which is derived from filum, a thread.] A narrow passage; a long narrow pass; a lane.

There is in Oxford a narrow defile, to use the military term, where the partisans used to encounter.

Addison.

DEF

DEFILEMENT. n. s. [from defile.] The state of being defiled; the act of defiling; nastiness; pollution; corruption; defecation.

Lust,

By unchaste looks, loose gestures, and foul talk,
Lest in defilement to the inward parts. Milton, Comus.
The unchaste are provoked to see their vice exposed, and the chaste cannot take into such filth without danger of defilement. Spectator.

DEFILER. n. s. [from defile.] One that defiles; a corrupter; a violator.

At the last tremendous day, I shall hold forth in my arms my much wronged child, and call aloud for vengeance on her defiler. Addison.

DEFINABLE. adj. [from define.]

1. That which may be defined; capable of definition.

• The Supreme Nature we cannot otherwise define, than by saying it is infinite, as if infinite were definable, or infinity a subject for our narrow understanding. Dryden.

2. That which may be ascertained.

Concerning the time of the end of the world, the question is, whether that time be definable or no. Burnet, Theory.

TO DEFINE. v. a. [definio, Lat. definir, Fr.]

1. To give the definition; to explain a thing by its qualities and circumstances.

Whose loss can'st thou mean
That do'st so well their miseries define? Sidney.

Though defining he thought the proper way to make known the proper signification, yet there are some words that will not be defined. Locke.

2. To circumscribe; to mark the limit; to bound.

When the rings appeared only black and white, they were very distinct and well defined, and the blackness seemed as intense as that of the central spot. Newton.

3. To decide; to determine.

These warlike champions, all in armour shine,
Assembled were in field the challenge to define. Cotgrave.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. iii. 3.

TO DEFINE. v. n. To determine; to decide; to decree.

The unjust judge is the capital remover of landmarks, when he defineth amiss of lands and properties. Bacon.

DEFINER. n. s. [from define.] One that explains;
one that describes a thing by its qualities.

Your God, forsooth, is found
Incomprehensible and infinite;
But is he therefore found? Vain searcher! no:
Let your imperfect definition show,
That nothing you, the weak definer, know. Prior.

DEFINITE. adj. [from definitus, Lat.]

1. Certain; limited; bounded.

Whether to your arbitrariness he repaired, and here, by your means, had the sight of the goddess, who in a definite compass can set forth infinite beauty. Sidney.

2. Exact; precise.

Ideots, in this case of favour, would Be wisely definite. Shakspeare.
In a charge of adultery, the accuser ought to set forth, in the accusatory libel or inquisition, which succeeds in the place of accusation, some certain and definite time. Ayliffe, Parergon.

DEFINITE. n. s. [from the adjective.] Thing explained or defined.

Special bastardy is nothing else but the definition of the general; and the general, again, is nothing else but a definite of the special. Ayliffe.

DEFINITENESS. n. s. [from definite.] Certainty; li-mitedness. Dict.

DEFINITION. n. s. [definitio, Lat. definition, Fr.]

DEF

1. A short description of a thing by its properties.

I drew my definition of poetical wit from my particular consideration of him; for propriety of thoughts and words are only to be found in him. Dryden.

2. Decision; determination.

3. [In logic.] The explication of the essence of a thing by its kind and difference.

What is man? Not a reasonable animal merely; for that is not an adequate and distinguishing definition. Bentley.

DEFINITIVE. † adj. [definitif, Fr. definitivus, Lat.]

Determinate; positive; express.

Other authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict and definitive truth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

I make haste to the casting and comparing of the whole work, it being indeed the very definitive sum of this art, to distribute usefully and gracefully a well chosen plot. Wotton.

DEFINITIVE.  n. s.* [from the adjective.] That which ascertains or defines.

As to words, which are only significant as accessories, they acquire a signification either from being associated to one word, or else to many. If to one word alone, then, as they can do no more than in some manner define or determine, they may justly for that reason be called definitives. Harris, Hermes, i. 3.

If any of these names seem new and unusual, we may introduce others more usual, by calling the substantives, nouns; the attributives, verbs; the definitives, articles; and the connectives, conjunctions. Ibid.

DEFINITIVELY. adv. [from definitive.] Positively; decisively; expressly.

Definitively thus I answer you:
Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert,
Unmeritable, shuns your high request. Shakspeare.

Bellarmino saith, because we think that the body of Christ may be in many places at once, locally and visibly; therefore we say and hold, that the same body may be circumscriptively and definitively in more places at once. Bp. Hall.

That Methuselah was the longest lived, of all the children of Adam, we need not grant; nor is it definitively set down by Moses. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DEFINITIVENESS. n. s. [from definitive.] Decisiveness.
Dict.

TO DEFIN.  v. a.* [Lat. defigo, deficium.] To fasten with nails; figuratively, to fix earnestly.

The country parson is generally sad, because he knows nothing but the cross of Christ, his mind being defined on, and with those nails wherewith his Master was.

Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 27.

DEFLAGRABILITY. n. s. [from deflagro, Lat.] Combustibility; the quality of taking fire, and burning totally away.

We have spent more time than the opinion of the ready deflagrability, if I may so speak, of salt-petre did permit us to imagine. Boyle.

DEFLAGRABLE. adj. [from deflagro, Lat.] Having the quality of wasting away wholly in fire, without any remains.

Our chymical oils, supposing that they were exactly pure, yet they would be, as the best spirit of wine is, but the more inflammable and deflagrable. Boyle.

TO DEFLAGRATE.  v. a.* [deflagro, Lat.] To set fire to. A term of modern chymistry.

DEFLAGRATION. † n. s. [deflagratio, Lat.]

1. A term frequently made use of in chymistry, for setting fire to several things in their preparation;
as in making Ethiops with fire, with sal prunella, and many others. Quincy.

The true reason why paper is not burned by the flame that plays about it, seems to be, that the aqueous part of the spirit of wine, being imbibed by the paper, keeps it so moist, that the flame of the sulphureous parts of the same spirit cannot fasten on it; and therefore, when the deflagration is over, you shall always find the paper moist. Boyle.

2. Destruction by fire without remains. Not peculiar to chymistry, as Dr. Johnson has considered the word.

Because it was evident to them that there was no way to solve the eternity or antiquity of the world, than by supposing innumerable deluges and deffagations.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

TO DEFLECT. † v. n. [deflecto, Lat.] To turn aside; to deviate from a true course, or right line.

At some parts of the Azores the needle deflecteth not, but heth in the true meridian: on the other side of the Azores, and this side of the Equator, the North point of the needle wheel^{eth} to the West. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Those actions which deflect and err from the order of this end, are unnatural and inordinate.

Bp. Taylor's Life of Christ, Pref. § 8.

For did not some from a strait course deflect,
They could not meet, they could no world erect. Blackmore.

DEFLECTION. † n. s. [from deflecto, Lat.]

1. Deviation; the act of turning aside.

Needles incline to the South on the other side of the Equator; and, at the very line or middle circle, stand without deflection. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The censure of Catullus, with a little deflection, might very fitly be applied unto him. Fotherby, Athcom. p. 191.

2. A turning aside, or out of the way.

King David found this deflection and indirectness in our minds. W. Montagu, Dev. Ess. P. i. p. 112.

3. [In navigation.] The departure of a ship from its true course.

DEFLEXURE. n. s. [from deflecto, Lat.] A bending down; a turning aside, or out of the way. Diet.

DEFLORATION. † n. s. [defloratio, Fr. from defloratus, Lat.]

1. The act of deflouring; the taking away of a woman's virginity.

By this law also that kind of whoredom is prohibited, which consisteth in the defloration of virgins.

Transl. of Bullinger's Sermons, p. 235.

2. A selection of that which is most valuable.

The laws of Normandy are, in a great measure, the defloration of the English laws, and a transcript of them. Hale.

The common printed chronicle — is indeed but an epitome or defloration made by Robert of Lorraine.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolbion, To the Reader.

TO DEFLOUR. † v. a. [deflorer, Fr. Spenser has once exactly followed the French original in writing the word deflore for stain or sully; but evidently for the sake of the rhyme. Hymn in Hon. of Beauty, ver. 39.]

1. To ravish; to take away a woman's virginity.

As is the lust of an enuch to deflor a virgin, so is he that executeth judgement with violence. Eccles. xx. 4.

Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor,
And let my spleenful son; this trull deflower. Shakespeare.

2. To take away the beauty and grace of any thing.

How on a sudden lost,

Defac'd, deflower'd, and now to death devote! Milton, P. L.
If he died young, he died innocent, and before the sweetness of his soul was deflower'd and ravished from him, by the flames and follies of a forward age. Bp. Taylor.

Grief cloudeth the countenance, deflowereth the beauty.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 12.

3. Literally, to deprive of flowers; a sense hitherto unnoticed, but the primary sense of the word.

An earthquake rending the cedars, deflowering the gardens. W. Montagu, Dev. Ess. P. i. p. 361.

DEFLOURER. † n. s. [from deflower.] A ravisher; one that takes away virginity.

The second daughter to drunkenness is whoring; the deflower of many a virgin, and deflor of many a wife.

Stafford's Niobe, (1661,) p. 38.

I have often wondered, that those deflowers of innocence, though dead to all the sentiments of virtue and honour, are not restrained by humanity.

Addison.

TO DEFLOW. * v. n. [old Fr. defluer, Lat. defluo.]

To flow, or run, as water.

Superfluous matter deflows from the body unto their proper excretories. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DEFLOUS. adj. [defluus, Lat.]

1. That flows down.

2. That falls off.

DEFLOUS. n. s. [defluxus, Lat.] Downward flow.

Both bodies are clammy, and bristle the deflux of humours without perishing them in too much. Bacon.

DEFLOUSION. n. s. [defluxio, Lat.] The flow of humours downward.

We see that taking cold moveth looseness, by contraction of the skin and outward parts; and so doth cold likewise cause rheums and defluxions from the head. Bacon.

DEFLY. adv. [from defl.] Dexterously; skillfully. Obsölete. Properly defily.

Lo, how finely the graces can it foot

To the instrument;

They dauncen defily, [defily,] and singen soote.

In their merriment.

Spenser.

DEFECATION. † n. s. [French, defecation, a soiling,

Cotgrave; from defecus, Lat.] The act of making filthy; pollution. This is no English word; at least, to make it English, it should be written defecation. This would correspond with the French word, which is older than our own; of which, however, Dr. Johnson had overlooked the existence. He himself uses defecation in his explanation of defilement.

What native, unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and instilled through the whole, which the defecation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth!

Bentley.

TO DEFORCE. * v. a. [old Fr. deforcere.] To keep out of the possession of land by forcement.

Forcement may be grounded on the disability of the party deforc'd. Blackstone.

DEFORCEMENT. † n. s. [from force.] A with-holding of lands and tenements by force from the right owner. See an example of the word in DEFORCE.

TO DEFORM. † v. a. [deformer, Fr. deformo, Lat.]

1. To disfigure; to make ugly; to spoil the form of any thing.

I that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time,
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up.

Shakespeare.

Zopyrus and Pisistratus wounded, mangled, deformed themselves, that they might thereby insinuate and gain their ends.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 17.

Wintry blasts

Deform the year delightful.

Thomson.

2. To dishonour; to make ungraceful.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair.

Dryden.

DEFORM. † adj. [deformis, Lat.] Ugly; disfigured; of an irregular form.

I did proclaim

That whose kill'd that monster most deform,

Should have mine only daughter to his dame.

Spenser, F. Q.

Men, whose lives and doings were more deformed than the foul de-form body of Theristes.

Stapleton, Fortr. of Faith, (1565,) fol. 83.

So spake the griesly terror; and in shape,

So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold

More dreadful and deform.

Milton, H. L.

Sight so deform, what heart of rock could long

Dry-ey'd behold?

Milton, P. L.

DEFORMATION. † n. s. [deformatio, Fr. Cotgrave; deformatio, Lat.] A defacing; a disfiguring.

DEF

The visitation tended not to any reformation so much as to the deformation of the universal order.

Bright, Abridg. of Foxe's Acts, (1589,) p. 209.

They continue in the woful deformation of their bestial corruptions.

Bp. Hall, Sermon. St. Paul's Combat.

DEFORMED. † participial adj.

1. Ugly; wanting natural beauty.

A deformed or ill-favoured woman.

Hudoc.

When deformed persons appear together, it doubles the ridicule, because of the similitude; as it does, when they are seen with very large persons, because of the contrast. Let them therefore call Minerva to their aid in both cases.

Hay, Essay on Deformity.

2. Base; disgraceful.

From the rod or ferule I would have them free, as from the menace of them, for it is both deformed and vile.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

DEFORMEDLY. adv. [from deform.] In an ugly manner.

DEFORMEDNESS. n. s. [from deformed.] Ugliness; a disagreeable form.

DEFORMER. * n. s. [from deform.] One who defaces or deforms.

They are now to be removed, because they have been the most certain deformers and ruiners of the church.

Milton, Animado. Rem. Defence.

DEFORMITY. n. s. [deformitas, Lat.]

1. Ugliness; ill-favouredness.

I, in this weak piping time of peace,

Have no delight to pass away the time,

Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,

And descent on mine own deformity.

Shakespeare.

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend

So horrid as in woman.

Shakespeare.

Where sits deformity to mock my body,

To shape my legs of an unequal size;

To disproportion me in every part.

Shakespeare.

Why should not man,

Retaining still divine similitude

In part, from such deformities be free, . . .

And for his maker's image sake, exempt?

Milton, P. L.

2. Ridiculousness; the quality of something worthy to be laughed at, or censured.

In comedy there is somewhat more of the worse likeness to be taken, because it is often to produce laughter, which is occasioned by the sight of some deformity.

Dryden.

3. Irregularity; inordinateness.

No glory is more to be envied than that of due reforming either church or state, when deformities are such, that the perturbation and novelty are not like to exceed the benefit of reforming.

King Charles.

DEFORMOR. n. s. [from forceur, Fr.] One that overcomes and casteth out by force. A law term.

Blount.

To DEFILE. * To defile. Obsolete. See To DEFILE.

To DEFRAUD. v. a. [defraudo, Lat.] To rob or deprive by a wile or trick; to cheat; to cozen; to deceive; to beguile. With of before the thing taken by fraud.

That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified.

Thes. iv. 6.

My son, defraud not the poor of his living; and make not the needy eyes to wait long.

Eccles. iv. 1.

Churches seem injured and defrauded of their right, when places, not sanctified as they are, prevent them unnecessarily in that pre-eminence and honour.

Hooker.

There they, who brothers utter claim disown,

Expel their parents, and usurp the throne;

Defraud their clients, and to lucre sold,

Sit brooding on unprofitable gold.

Dryden.

But now he seiz'd a British heav'nly charms,

And of my valour's prize defrauds my arms.

Pope.

DEA

There is a portion of our lives which every wise man may justly reserve for his own particular use, without defrauding his native country.

Dryden.

DEFRAUDATION. n. s. [defraudo, Lat.] Privation by fraud.

Their impostures are worse than any other, deluding not only into pecuniary defraudations, but the irreparable deceit of death.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

DEFRAUDER. n. s. [from defraud.] A deceiver; one that cheats.

The profligate in morals grow severe,

Defrauders just, and sycophants sincere.

Blackmore.

DEFRAUDMENT. * n. s. [Fr. defraudement, Cotgrave.] Privation by deceit or fraud.

I grant infirmities, but not outrages, not perpetual defraudments of truest conjugal society.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

To DEFRAUD. † v. a. [defrauer, Fr.]

1. To bear the charges of; to discharge expenses.

He would, out of his own revenue, defray the charges belonging to the sacrifice.

2 Mac. ix. 16.

It is easy to lay a charge upon any town; but to foresee how the same may be answered and defrayed, is the chief part of good advisement.

Spenser, State of Ireland.

It is long since any stranger arrived in this part, and therefore take ye no care; the state will defray you all the time you stay; neither shall you stay one day the less for that.

Bacon.

2. To satisfy.

For, aye the more that he the same reherst,

The more it gauld and griev'd him night and day,

That nought but dire revenge his anger might defray.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. v. 31.

DEFRAUDER. † n. s. [defrayeur, old Fr.] One that discharges expenses.

DEFRAUMENT. † n. s. [from defray.] The payment of expenses; compensation; satisfaction.

Let the traitor pay, with his life's defraument, that which he attempted with so lascivious desire.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quic. iv. 7.

DEFT. † adj. [baefr, Sax.] Obsolete.

1. Neat; handsome; spruce.

Cockeram.

Deft mistress, whiter than the chiese new prest, Smoother than cream, and softer than the curds!

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

He said, I were a deft lass.

Broome, Northern Lass.

2. Proper; fitting. [This is the Saxon meaning.]

You go not the way to examine: you must call the watch that are their accusers.

— Yea, marry, that's the deftest way.

Shakespeare.

3. Ready; dexterous.

Loud fits of laughter seiz'd the guests, to see

The limping god so deft at his new ministry.

Dryden.

The wanton calf may skip with many a bound,

And my cur, Tray, play deftest feats around.

Gay.

DEFTLY. adv. [from deft.] Obsolete.

1. Neatly; dexterously.

Come, high or low,

Thyself and office deftly show.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Will well could dance, and deftly tune the reed.

Gay.

DEFINNESS. * n. s. [from deft.] Neatness; beauty.

Two little Isles, her handmaids; which compar'd

With those within the Poole, for deftness not outdar'd.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 2.

DEFUNCT. † adj. [old Fr. defunct; "un defunct, a deceased or dead person." Cotgrave. From the Lat. defunctus; "that hath gone through with a business." See the substantive.] Dead; deceased.

I therefore beg it not,
To please the palate of my appetite;

Nor to comply with heat, the young affects,
In the defunct, and proper satisfaction.
Here entity and quiddity,
The souls of defunct bodies fly.

Shakespeare.

Hudibras.

DEFUNCT. n. s. [from the adjective.] One that is deceased; a dead man, or woman.

Nature doth abhor to make his couch
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead.

Shakespeare.

Recommending the defunct, that is, him who hath performed all the duties of life, as one that shall enjoy the everlasting conversation of pious souls.

Translation of Plato's Apology of Socrates, &c. (1675.) p. 295.

In many cases, the searchers are able to report the opinion of the physician who was with the patient, as they receive the same from the friends of the defunct.

Graunt.

DEFUNCTIO. n. s. [from defunct.] Death.

Nor did the French possess the Salique land.

Until four hundred one and twenty years

After defunctio of king Pharamond.

Shakespeare.

TO DEFFY. v. a. [deffier, Fr. from de fide decedere, or some like phrase, to fall from allegiance to rebellion, contempt, or insult. So far Dr. Johnson.

The like phrase, which he suspects, is the low Lat. diffutare. The first and feudal sense of the word is, not merely to fall from allegiance to rebellion, but in general to declare, on either part, the dissolution of the faith reciprocally pledged between the lord and vassal. See Lord Lyttelton's Hist. of Hen. II.

Dr. Johnson has also omitted a very expressive usage of this word.]
To call to combat; to challenge.

I once again,

Defy thee to the trial of mortal fight.

Milton, S. A.

Whoso seek retreat, now innocence is fled!

Safe in that guard, I durst even hell defy;

Without it, tremble now, when heaven is nigh.

Dryden.

Agas, the Lycian, stepping forth with pride,

To single fight the boldest foe defy.

Dryden.

To treat with contempt; to slight.

As many fools that stand in better place,

Garnish'd like him, that for a tricky word

Defy the matter.

Shakespeare.

To disdain; to deny; to renounce.

Fool, said the Pagan, I thy god defy.

Spenser, F. Q.

All studies here I solemnly defy,

Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

Neither can it be otherwise, while we are ready to impute to the contrary-minded not only those things which they profess to hold, but those which we conceive to be consequent to their opinions, how vehemently soever disclaimed or defy'd by the authors.

Bp. Hall, The Peacemaker.

DEFY. n. s. [from the verb.] A challenge; an invitation to fight; this is now hardly used.

At this the challenger, with fierce defy,

His trumpet sounds; the challeng'd makes reply:

With clangour rings the field, resounds the vaulted sky.

Dryden.

DEFYER. n. s. [from defy.] A challenger; one that invites to fight: more properly defier.

God may revenge the affronts put upon them by such impudent defyers of both, as neither believe a God, nor ought to be believed by man.

South.

DEGENER. v. n. [Lat. degenero.] To degenerate; which see. Obsolete.

So that next offspring of the Maker's love,

Next to Himself in glorious degree,

Degenerating to hate, fell from above

Through pride.

Spenser, Hymn of Heav. Love.

DEGENERED. adj. [This is the true word of Spenser, which in some editions is printed degenerated, and which Mr. Mason has adopted in his Supplement to Dr. Johnson's Dictionary. But de- generated, in reality, exists not in Spenser. Even, in his State of Ireland, where the printed copies read degenerated, the best manuscripts read degenerated.]

And if than those may any worse be read,
They into that ere long will be degenerated.

Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. Introd.

DEGENERACY. n. s. [from degeneratio, Lat.]

1. A departure from the virtue of our ancestors.

Describing no fewer, after the grandfather, than three successions of degeneracy.

Harris, Philog. Inquiries.

2. A desertion of that which is good.

'Tis true, we have contracted a great deal of weakness and impotency by our wilful degeneracy from goodness; but that grace, which the gospel offers to us for our assistance, is sufficient for us.

Tillotson.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners, and contempt of religion, which is entirely our case at present.

Swift.

3. Meanness.

There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery.

Addison.

TO DEGENERATE. v. n. [degenerare, Lat. degenerer, Fr. degenerer, Spanish.]

1. To fall from the virtue of ancestors.

What would the Romans have been, had they degenerated in this proportion for five or six generations more.

Harris, Phil. Inquiries.

2. To fall from a more noble to a base state.

When wit transgresseth decency, it degenerates into insolence and impiety.

Tillotson.

3. To fall from its kind; to grow wild or base.

After such whipping, they have been forced to make deep incisions, which, degenerating into ulcers, render these unhappy wretches incapable of working for a long time.

H. Wharton, Inquis. of Gos. ch. 35.

DEGENERATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Unlike his ancestors; fallen from the virtue and merit of his ancestors.

Thou art like enough

To fight against me under Piercy's pay;

To dog his heels, and curtsy at his frowns,

To show how much thou art degenerate.

Shakespeare.

Yet thou hast greater cause to be

Asham'd of them, than they of thee;

Degenerate from their ancient brood,

Since first the court allow'd them food.

Swift.

2. Unworthy; base; departing from its kind or nature.

So all shall turn degenerate, all deprav'd;

Justice and temperance, truth, and faith forgot!

One man except.

Milton, P. L.

When a man so far becomes degenerate as to quit the principles of human nature, and to be a noxious creature, there is commonly an injury done some person or other.

Locke.

DEGENERATELY. adv. [from degenerate.] In an unworthy or base manner.

Leaving the Mahometans, let us take a short view of Rome Christian, though apostatized and degenerately Christian.

Warthington, Miscell. p. 29.

That blindness worse than this,

That saw not how degenerately I serv'd.

Milton, S. A.

DEGENERATENESS. n. s. [from degenerate.] Degeneracy; a being grown wild, or out of kind.

DEGENERATION. n. s. [Fr. degeneration, Cotgrave.]

Let us hate and banish this common degeneration of Christians.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 134.

3. The thing changed from its primitive state.

In plants, these transplantations are obvious; as that of barley into oats, of wheat into darnell; and those grains which generally arise among corn, as cockle, aricus, ægilops, and other degenerations. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DEGENEROUS. † adj. [from degener, Lat.]

1. Degenerated; fallen from the virtue and merit of ancestors.

[Thou] dar'st that ill,
Which never yet degenerous bastard did
Upon his parent.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

2. Vile; base; infamous; unworthy.

Let not the tumultuary violence of some men's immoderate demands ever betray me to that degenerous and unmanly slavery, which should make me strengthen them by my consent.

King Charles.

Shame, instead of piety, restrains them from many base and degenerous practices.

South.

Degenerous passion, and for man too base,

• It seats its empire in the female race;

Thore rages, and, to make his blow secure,

Puts flattery on, until the aim be sure.

Dryden.

DEGENEROUSLY. adv. [from degenerous.] In a degenerate manner; basely; meanly.

How wounding a spectacle is it to see heroes, like Hercules at the distaff, thus degenerously employed?

Decay of Piety.

DEGLUTITION. n. s. [deglutition, Fr. from deglutio, Lat.] The act or power of swallowing.

When the deglutition is totally abolished, the patient may be nourished by clysters.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

DEGRADATION. n. s. [degradation, Fr.]

1. A deprivation of dignity; dismissal from office.

The word degradation is commonly used to denote a deprivation and removing of a man from his degree.

Ayliffe.

Explaining how Perfection suffer'd pain,
Almighty languish'd and Eternal dy'd;

How by her patient victor Death was slain,
And Earth profan'd, yet bless'd with deicide!

Prior.

TO DEJECT. v. a. [old Fr. dejecter, from the Lat. dejectio, dejectum.]

1. To cast down; to afflict; to grieve; to depress; to sink; to discourage; to crush.

Well, I am your theme; you have the start of me; I am dejected; ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me; use me as you will. Shakespeare.

The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance; lives not in fear!

Shakespeare.

Nor think to die, dejects my lofty mind;

All that I dread is leaving you behind!

Pope.

2. To throw down; to debase. This sense is not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

With pride, and for humane respect,

The Austrian colours he doth here deject

With too much scorn.

R. Jonson, Masques.

Many things about a house [are] proper to be looked at by them, [wives,] which a man of an excellent spirit will hardly deject his thoughts to think of.

H. Percy's (9th E. of Northumb.) Instrum. 1609-10.

3. To change the form with grief; to make to look sad.

Eneas here beheld, of form divine,
A godlike youth in glitt'ring armour shine;

With great Marcellus keeping equal pace;

But gloomy were his eyes, dejected was his face.

Dryden.

Here is a perfect scene of pious gestures; knees bowed, hands erected, turned up eyes, the breast beaten, the head shaken, the countenance dejected, sighs ascending, tears dropping, the Bible hugged and kissed, the ear nailed to the pulpit! What formality of devout godliness is here enacted? If the man were within as he is without, there were no saint but he!

Bp. Hall, Sermon. The Hypocrite.

4. Simply, to cast down; without making to look sad. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

One, having climb'd some roof, the concourse to descry,

From thence upon the earth dejects his humble eye.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 12.

Sometimes she dejects her eyes in a seeming civility; and many mistake in her a cunning for a modest look.

Fuller, Prog. State, ch. 1.

DEJECT. adj. [deject, thrown down, Norm. French; dejectus, Lat.] Cast down; afflicted; low-spirited; debased.

I am of ladies most deject and wretched,

That suck'd the honey of his music vows.

Shakespeare.

What can be a more deject spirit in man, than to lay his hands under every one's horses feet, to do him service, as thou dost?

Beaumont and Fl. Marjial Maid.

DEJECTEDLY. adv. [from deject.] In a dejected manner; sadly; heavily.

No man in that passion doth look strongly, but dejectedly; and that repulsion from the eyes, diverteth the spirits, and gives heat more to the ears, and the parts by them. Bacon.

DEJECTEDNESS. n. s. [from dejected.] The state of being cast down; a lowness of spirits. Dict.

Pet. Are you a gentleman?

Mont. Not here; for I am all dejectedness,

Captive to fortune, and a slave to want.

Heywood, Challenge for Beauty.

To turn the causes of joy into sorrow, argues extreme dejectedness, and a distemper of judgement no less than desperate.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 1.

The text gives it to the Publican's dejectedness, rather than to the Pharisee's boasting.

Feltham, Res. ii. 2.

DEJECTER.* n. s. [Lat. dejector.] One who dejects, debases, or casts down. Cotgrave in V. Abbaissieur.

DEJECTION.† n. s. [dejection, Fr. from dejectio, Lat.]

1. Lowness of spirits; melancholy; depression of mind.

What besides

Of sorrow, and dejection, and despair,

Our frailty can sustain, thy tidings bring.

Milton, P. L.

Deserted and astonished, he sinks into utter dejection; and even hope itself is swallowed up in despair.

Rogers.

2. Weakness; inability.

The effects of an alkaliescent state, in any great degree, are thirst and a dejection of appetite, which putrid things occasion more than any other.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. [In medicine.] Going to stool.

The liver should continually separate the choler from the blood, and empty it into the intestines, where there is good use for it, not only to provoke dejection, but also to attenuate the chyle.

Ray on the Creation.

4. The act of throwing down. Neither this nor the following sense is noticed by Dr. Johnson.

Upon this foul revolt and apostasy of theirs [the angels] from their primeval glory, followed their punishment; which was their dejection and detrusion into the caliginous regions of the air.

Hallywell, Melampyr. (1681.) p. 13.

5. A casting down, in sign of reverence.

Adoration implies submission and dejection; so that while we worship, we cast down ourselves.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

DEJECTLY.* adv. [from deject.] In a downcast, pensive manner.

Sherwood.

DEJECTORY.* adj. [from deject.] Having the power to promote evacuation by stool.

It [melancholy] may be the more easily wrought upon and evacuated by the dejectory medicines.

Ferrand on Love Melancholy, (1640.) p. 346.

DEJECTURE. n. s. [from deject.] The excrement.

A disease opposite to spissitude is too great fluidity, the symptoms of which are excess of animal secretions; as of perspiration, sweat, urine, liquid dejectures, leanness, weakness, and thirst.

Take a dejeune of muskadel and eggs. B. Jonson, New Inn.

DEIFICAL.* adj. [old Fr. deific, from the Lat. Deus.] Making divine.

The ancient catholic fathers—were not afraid to call this Supper, some of them, the salue of immortality, and sovereign preservative against death; other, a deifical communion.

Homilies, Sermon i. on the Sacrament.

DEIFICATION.† n. s. [deification, Fr.] The act of deifying, or making a god.

There is a little mollification used to reduce the forenamed apotheosis and deification within the compass of this sense.

Poethby, Allagm. (1622.) p. 290.

[He] ran into deifications of my person, paramours, constant love, eternal raptures, and a thousand other phrases drawn from the images we have of heaven, which all men use for the service of hell, when run over with uncommon vehemence.

Taylor, No. 33.

His [Cicero's] mighty genius could add nothing to what even Pagan knew, talks of the deification of Romulus, the eternity of the soul, from the old but false argument of its being the principle of motion and a self-mover.

Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 33.

DEIFIER.* n. s. [from To deify.] One who makes a man a god; an idolater.

One would have hoped, that the memory of so signal an interposition of Heaven [the Flood] against the first deifiers of men, should have given an effectual check to the practice for some considerable time in the succeeding world.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.

DEIFORM.† adj. [from deus and forma, Lat.] Of a godlike form.

But if the final consummation

Of all things make the creature deiform,

As Plato's school doth phrase it; there is none,

That thence need fear to come to any harm.

More, Song of the Soul, P. iv. st. 25.

He [Whichcot] studied to raise those who conversed with him to a nobler set of thoughts, and to consider religion as a seed of a deiform nature; to use one of his own phrases.

Burke, Hist. of his Own Times.

When our minds shall perceive what a pure imitation of God its life is, and how exactly deiform all its motions and actions are, with what ravishing pleasure will they even review their own motions, which being immediately copied from the nature of God, will be such as its severest reason will be always forced to commend.

Scott, Christ. Life, i. ch. 3.

DEIFORMITY.* n. s. [from deiform.] Resemblance of deity.

Thus the soul's numerous plurality
I've prov'd, and shew'd she is not very God;

But yet a decent deiformity

Have given her.

More, Song of the Soul, P. iv. st. 27.

The short and secure way to divine union and deiformity being faithfully performed, discreetly practised, and carefully accompanied with profound humility.

Spiritual Conquest, (1651.) P. iv. p. 36.

To DEIFY.* v. a. [deificr, French; of deus and fio, Lat.]

1. To make a god of; to adore as god; to transfer into the number of the divinities.

Daphnis, the fields' delight, the shepherds' love,

Renown'd on earth, and deify'd above.

Dryden.

The seals of Julius Caesar, which we know to be antique, have the star of Venus over them, though they were all graven after his death, as a note that he was deified.

Dryden.

Persuade the covetous man not to deify his money; and the proud man not to adore himself.

South.

Half of thee

Is deify'd before thy death.

Prior.

2. To praise excessively; to extol one as if he were a god.

He did again so extol and deify the pope, as made all that he had said in praise of his master and mistress seem temperate and passable.

Bacon.

To DEIGN. v. n. [from daigner, Fr. of dignor, Lat.]

To vouchsafe; to think worthy.

Deign to descend not lower, and relate

What may no less perhaps avail us known.

Milton, P. L.

Oh deign to visit our forsaken seats,

The mossy fountains, and the green retreats.

Pope.

To DEIGN.† v. a.

1. To grant; to permit; to allow.

Now Sweno, Norway's king, craves composition;

Nor would we deign him burial of his men,

Till he disburs'd ten thousand dollars.

Shakspeare.

2. To consider worth notice; in opposition to the verb disdain.

Thou hast outrang'd thyself, and deignest not our land.

Bryskett, Mourn. Muse of Thestylis.

The palate then did deign
The roughest berry on the rudest hedge.
Shakespeare, Ant. and Cloop.

DEIGNING. n. s. [from deign.] A vouchsafing; a thinking worthy.

To DEINTEGRATE. v. a. [from de and integrus, Lat.] To take from the whole; to spoil; to diminish.

DEIPAROUS. adj. [deiparis, Latin.] That brings forth a God; the epithet applied to the blessed Virgin.

DEISM. n. s. [deisme, French.] The opinion of those that only acknowledge one God, without the reception of any revealed religion. See DEIST.

Deism, or the principles of natural worship, are only the faint remnants or dying flames of revealed religion in the posterity of Noah.

Deism seems to have sprung up abroad about the middle of the sixteenth century.

Waterland, Christ. vind. against Infidelity, p. 4.

DEIST. n. s. [deiste, French.] A man who follows no particular religion, but only acknowledges the existence of God, without any other article of faith.

In the second epistle of St. Peter, certain deists, as they seem to have been, laughed at the prophecy of the day of judgement.

Burnet.

The word deist, or theist, in its original signification, implies merely the belief of a God, being opposed to atheist; and so there may be deists of various kinds, according to their respective religions which they receive, over and above that prime article. There may be Pagan deists, and Jewish deists, and Mahometan deists, and Christian deists; meaning such persons as respectively embrace those several religions, above the belief of a God. But those that reject all traditional religions, and yet profess to believe in God, are merely deists, or emphatically such, without any additional epithet to distinguish them: or, if an epithet must be added, they should be styled Epicurean deists, or Infidel deists, or something of like kind. To call them Christian deists is a great abuse of language; unless Christians were to be distributed into two sorts, Christians and No-Christians, or Christians and Anti-Christians.

Waterland, Christ. vind. against Inf. p. 62.

DEISTICAL. adj. [from deist.] Belonging to the heresy of the deists.

Weakness does not fall only to the share of Christian writers, but to some who have taken the pen in hand to support the deistical or antichristian scheme of our days.

Watts.

DE'ITATE.* adj. [from deity.] Made God. Adopted by Archbishop Crammer to express the Godhead of Christ; in contradistinction to incarnate.

One person and one Christ, who is God incarnate, and man deitate, as Gregory Nazianzen saith, without mutation.

Abp. Crammer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 350.

DEITY. n. s. [deité, French, from deitas, Latin.]

1. Divinity; the nature and essence of God.

Some things he doth as God, because his deity alone is the spring from which they flow; some things as man, because they issue from his mere human nature; some things jointly as both God and man, because both natures concur as principles thereunto.

Hooker.

With what arms
We mean to hold, what anciently we claim
Of deity, or empire.

Milton, P. L.

2. A fabulous god; a term applied to the heathen gods and goddesses.

Will you suffer a temple, how poorly built soever, but yet a temple of your deity, to be raised?

Sidney.

Give the gods a thankful sacrifice when it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him.

Shakespeare.

3. The supposed divinity of a heathen god; divine qualities.

They on their former journey forward pass,
With pains far passing that long wandering Greek,
That for his love refused deity.

Spenser, F.

Heard you not what an humble suppliant
Lord Hastings was to her for his delivery?

—Who humbly complaining to her deity,
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty.

Shakespeare.

By what reason could the same deity be denied unto Laurell and Flora, which was given to Venus.

Ralegh.

The golde, and made his payement;
Thereof was no delaiement.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

DE'LEBLE. adj. [Lat. delebilis.] Capable of being effaced.

If any make it a light matter, that God himself, or the Word himself, is not hurt, let him consider, that he that can find of his heart to destroy the deleble image of God, would, if it lay in his power, destroy God himself.

Morr, Notes upon Psychos. p. 368.

DELECTABLE. adj. [delectable, old Fr. delectabilis, Lat.] Pleasing; delightful.

In Chaucer I am sped,

His tales I have red;

His matter is delectable,

Solacious and commendable.

Skelton, Poems, p. 237.

Their delectable things shall not profit.

Isaiah, xlv. 9.

Evening now approach;

For we have also our evening, and our morn;

We ours for change delectable, not need. Milton, P. I.

He brought thee into this delicious grove,

This garden; planted with the trees of God;

Delectable, hush to behold and taste! Milton, P. I.

Some of his attributes, and the manifestations thereof, are not only highly delectable to the intellective faculty, but are suitably and easily conceivable by us, because apparent in his works; as his goodness, beneficence, wisdom, and power. Hale.

The apple's outward form,

Delectable, the witless swain beguiles;

Till that with writhen mouth, and spattering noise,

He tastes the bitter morsel. Philips.

With abstinence all delicates he sees,
And can regale himself with toast and cheese. King's Cookery.

DELICIES.* n. s. pl. [deliciae, Latin.] Pleasures.

This word is merely French, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the first example from Spenser. Our old poet Gower uses the word for delicates or dainties, in which sense also Cotgrave renders the French word delices. Our word, in modern time, has been adopted in Spenser's general sense of pleasures.

Delices

For all the meats, and all the delices. Gower, Conf. Am. B.

And now he has pour'd out his idle mind
In dainty delices and lavish joys,
Having his warlike weapons cast behind,
And flowers in pleasure vain and pleasing toy. Spenser, F. Q.

And it was seated in an island strong,
Abounding all with delices most rare. Spenser, F. Q.

Zahra, with all its delices, is crased from the face of the earth. Samuelson, Trav. through Spain, L. 14.

Men began to adorn themselves sumptuously to shew their pride, — and fared deliciously to surfeiting and drunkenness. Hammond's Works, i. 654.

DELICIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from delicious.] Delight; pleasure; joy.

The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in its own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite. Shakespeare.

Let no man judge of himself, or of the blessings and efficacy of the sacrament itself, by any sensible relish, by the gust and deliciousness, which he sometimes perceives, and other times does not perceive. Bp. Taylor.

DELIGATION n. s. [deligatio, Latin.] A binding up in chirurgery.

The third intention is deligation, or retaining the parts so joined together. Wiseman, Surg.

DELIGHT † n. s. [old French, delit; from delector, Lat. Our own word was formerly written delite.]

1. Joy; content; satisfaction.

Saul commanded his servants, saying, commune with David secretly, and say, behold the king hath delight in thee, and all his servants love thee. 1 Sam. xxi. 22.

2. That which gives delight.

Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprights,

And shew the best of our delights:

We'll charm the air to give a sound,

While you perform your antick round.

Shakespeare.

Titus Vespasian was not more the delight of human kind: the universal empire made him only more known, and more powerful, but could not make him more beloved. Dryden.

She was his care, his hope, and his delight;

Most in his thoughts and ever in his sight. Dryden.

TO DELIGHT † v. a. [here again, the hitherto disregarded old French offers itself; deliter, “se plaire, delectari.” Lacombé. See DELIGHT.] To please; to content; to satisfy; to afford pleasure.

The princes delighting their conceits with confirming their knowledge, seeing wherein the sea-discipline differed from the land-service, had pleasing entertainment. Sidney.

Delight thyself also in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart. Psaln xxxvii. 4.

Poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers, and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other kinds of viands. Locke.

He heard, he took, and pouring down his throat, Delighted, swill'd the large luxurious draught. Pope.

TO DELIGHT v. n. To have delight or pleasure in. It is followed by in.

Doth my lord, the king, delight in this thing. 2 Sam. xxiv.

Blessed is the man that feareth the lord, that delighteth greatly in his commandments. Psaln cxiii. 1.

DELIGHTER  n. s.* [from delight.] One who has delight or pleasure in a thing.

We should, concerning the author of the report, consider, whether he be not ill humoured, or a delighter in telling bad stories. Barrow, Sermon i. 25c.

DELIGHTFUL adj. [from delight and full.] Pleasant; charming; full of delight.

He was given to sparing in so immeasurable sort, that he did not only bar himself from the delightful, but almost from the necessary use thereof. Sidney.

No Spring nor Summer on the mountain seen, Smiles with gay fruits, or with delightful green. Addison.

DELIGHTFULLY adv. Pleasantly; charmingly; with delight.

O voice! once heard

Delightfully, Increase and multiply;

Now death to hear.

Milton, P. L.

DELIGHTFULNESS n. s. [from delight.] Pleasure; comfort; satisfaction.

But our desires' tyrannical extortion

Doth force us there to set our chief delightfulness,

Where but a baiting-place is all our portion. Sidney.

This indeed shews the excellency of the object, but doth not altogether take away the delightfulness of the knowledge. Tillotson.

DELIGHTLESS  adj.* [from delight.] Wanting delight; being without any thing to cheer the mind.

Winter oft at eve resumes the breeze,
Chills the pale morn, and bids his driving sheets
Deform the day delightless. Thomson, Spring.

DELIGHTSOME adj. [from delight.] Pleasant; delightful.

The words themselves being so ancient, the knitting of them so short and intricate, and the whole periods and compass of his speech so delightsome for the roundness, and so grave for the strangeness. Spenser, on Ireland.

God has furnished every one with the same means of exchanging hunger and thirst for delightsome vigour. Grew.

DELIGHTSOMELY † adv. [from delightsome.] Pleasantly; in a delightful manner. Sherwood.

DELIGHTSOMENESS n. s. [from delightsome.] Pleasantness; delightfulness.

DELINEAMENT  n. s.* [from the Lat. delinco.] Painting; representation by delineation.

Princes, being supreme judges of honour and nobility, may arbitrarily change their arms in name and nature:— and it seems, it hath been taken indifferently, whether you call them the one or other, both for similitude of delineaments and composure. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. II.

The sun's a type of that eternal light

Which we call God, a fair delineament

Of that which Good in Plato's school is high.

More, Song of the Soul, iii. 11.

TO DELINEATE v. a. [delinco, Lat.]

1. To make the first draught of a thing; to design; to sketch.

2. To paint; to represent a true likeness in a picture.

The licentia pictoria is very large: with the same reason they may delineate old Nestor like Adonis, Hecuba with Helen's face, and Time with Absalom's head. Brown.

3. To describe; to set forth in a lively manner:

It followeth to delineate the region, in which God first planted his delightful garden. Raleigh.

I have not here time to delineate to you the glories of God's heavenly kingdom; nor, indeed, could I tell you, if I had, what the happiness of that place and portion is. Wake.

DELINEATION n. s. [delineatio, Latin.] The first draught of a thing.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, and the just dimensions. Mortimer.

DELINEATURE  n. s.* [Fr. delineature.] Delineation. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

DELINIMENT n. s. [delinimentum, Lat.] A mitigating, or assuaging. Diet.

DELINQUENCY n. s. [delinquentia, Lat.] A fault; a failure in duty; a misdeed.

They never punish the greatest and most intolerable delinquency of the tumults, and their exultations. King Charles.

Can

Thy years determine like the age of man,

That thou should'st my delinquencies exquire,

And with variety of tortures tire? Sandys, Paraphr. of Job.

A delinquent ought to be cited in the place or jurisdiction where the delinquency was committed by him. Ayliffe.

DELINQUENT n. s. [from delinquens, Latin.] An offender; one that has committed a crime or fault.

Such an envious state,

That sooner will accuse the magistrate

Than the delinquent; and will rather grieve

The treason is not acted, than believe. B. Jonson.

All ruined, not by war, or any other disaster, but by justice and sentence, as delinquents and criminals. Baron.

He had, upon frivolous surmises, been sent for as a delinquent, and been brought upon his knees. Dryden.

TO DELIQUATE v. n. [deliquo, Lat.] To melt; to be dissolved.

It will be resolved into a liquor very analogous to that which the chymists make of salt of tartar, left in moist cellars to deliquate. Boyle.

To DE'LIQUATE.* v. a. To dissolve.

Such an ebullition as we see made by the mixture of some chymical liquors; as oil of vitriol, and deliquated salt of tartar. Cudworth.

Not because urine discharges and abrades colours, as the lixivium of tartar, or the deliquated salts of tartar.

Sir W. Petty, in Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 292.

DELIQUA'TION. n. s. [deliquatio, Lat.] A melting; a dissolving.

DELIQUIUM.† v. s. [Latin.]

1. A chymical term. A distillation by dissolving any calcined matter, by hanging it up in moist cellars, into a lixivious humour. Dict.

When salt of tartar flows per deliquium, it is visible that the particles of water floating in the air are moved towards the particles of salt, and joined with them.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 235.

2. A fainting, or swooning. This common acceptance of the word in our language, from the Latin, wholly unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.

If he be locked in a close room, he is afraid of being stifled for want of air; and still carries biscuit, aquavitar, or some strong waters about him, for fear of deliquiums, or being sick.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 181.

Their conscience was not stark dead; but under a kind of spiritual apoplexy, or deliquium. South, Sermon ii. 454.

3. Defect; loss. This meaning also has escaped Dr. Johnson's observation.

All-idolizing worms, that thus could crowd

And urge their sun into thy cloud;

Forcing his sometimes eclips'd face to be

A long deliquium to the light of thee.

Crashaw, Poems, p. 156.

With these must be reckoned some sudden intermissions of the light of the sun, occasioned not by the veil of an eclipse cast before it, but some unaccountable passion of the luminous body itself. Such a deliquium we read of immediately subsequent to the death of Cæsar. Spencer on Prodiges, p. 234.

DELI'RAMENT. n. s. [deliramentum, Lat.] A doting or foolish fancy. Dict.

To DELI'RATE. v. n. [deliro, Lat.] To dote; to rave; to talk or act idly. Dict.

DELIRA'TION. n. s. [deliratio, Lat.] Dotage; folly; madness. Dict.

DELI'RIOUS. a. [delirius, Latin.] Light-headed; raving; doting.

The people about him said he had been some hours delirious; but when I saw him he had his understanding as well as ever I knew.

On bed

Delirious flung, sleep from his pillow flies.

Thomson.

DELI'RIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from delirious.] The state of one raving, or light-headed.

Bolingbroke sometimes wept over him in this state of helpless decay; and being told by Spence, that Pope, at the intermission of his deliriousness, was always saying something kind either of his present or absent friends, and that his humanity seemed to have survived his understanding, answered, "It has so."

Johnson, Life of Pope.

DELIRIUM. n. s. [Latin.] Alienation of mind; dotage.

Too great alacrity and promptness in answering, especially in persons naturally of another temper, is the sign of an approaching delirium; and in a feverish delirium there is a small inflammation of the brain.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

DELITESCENCE.* n. s. [old French delitescence, which Lacombe defines "une retraite, solitude;"] and which Cotgrave renders, "a lurking or lying hidden." Lat. delitescencia. Delitescence has found no place in our vocabularies, but, it has been observed to me, has been adopted by our great lexicographer himself.] Retirement; obscurity.

Every man has those about him, who wish to sooth him into inactivity and delitescence. Johnson.

To DELI'TIGATE.* v. a. [Lat. delitigo.] To scold; to chide vehemently. Cockeram.

DELITIGA'TION.† n. s. [from To delitigate.] A striving; a chiding; a contending. Dict.

To DELI'VER. v. a. [deliverer, Fr.]

1. To set free; to release.

Thus she the captive did deliver;

The captive thus gave up his quiver.

Prior.

2. To save; to rescue.

Deliver me, O my God, out of the hand of the wicked, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man.

Psalms lxxi. 4.

I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me.

Shakspeare.

3. To surrender; to put into one's hands; to resign; to give up; to yield.

In any case thou shalt deliver him the pledge again when the sun goeth down.

Deut. xxiv. 12.

And David said to him, canst thou bring me down to this company? And he said, swear unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, nor deliver me into the hands of my master, and I will bring thee down to this company.

1 Sam.

They obeyed not thy commandments, wherefore thou hast delivered us for a spoil, and unto captivity.

Tob. iii. 4.

4. To give; to offer; to present.

Now therefore receive no more money of your acquaintance, but deliver it for the breaches of the house.

2 Kings.

Thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner, when thou wast his butler.

Gen. xl. 13.

It was no wonder that they, who at such a time could be corrupted to frame and deliver such a petition, would not be reformed by such an answer.

Dryden.

5. To cast away; to throw off.

Charm'd with that virtuous draught, th' exalted mind

All sense of woe delivers to the wind.

Pope.

6. To disburden a woman of a child.

On her fright and fears,

She is something before her time deliver'd.

Shakspeare.

Tully was long ere he could be delivered of a few verses, and those poor ones too.

Peacham.

7. To speak; to tell; to relate; to utter; to pronounce.

A mirth-moving jest,

Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,

Delivers in such apt and gracious words,

That aged ears play truant at his tales.

Shakspeare.

Tell me your highness' pleasure;

What from your grace I shall deliver to him.

Shakspeare.

I knew a clergyman who appeared to deliver his sermon without looking into his notes.

Swift.

8. To exert in motion. Not in use.

Procles seemed so to overrun his age in strength, that Musidorus could not perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly.

Sidney.

To DELI'VER over. v. a.

1. To put into another's hands; to leave to the discretion of another.

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies; for false witnesses are risen up against me, and such as breathe out cruelty.

Ps. xxvii. 12.

The constables have delivered her over to me, and she shall have whipping enough, I warrant her.

Shakspeare.

2. To give from hand to hand: to transmit.

DEL

If a true account may be expected buy future ages from the present, your lordship will be delivered over to posterity in a fairer character than I have given. Dryden.

To DELIVER up. v. a. To surrender; to give up.

He that spared not his own son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not, with him also, freely give us all things? Rom. viii. 32.

Are the cities that I got with wounds,
Deliver'd up again with peaceful words? Shakespeare.

Happy having such a son,
That would deliver up his greatness so
Into the hand of justice. Shakespeare.

DELIVER. * adj. [old French, delivre, from the Lat. liber.] Nimble; free; active. Perhaps the parent of our word clever. See CLEVER. This word, with the adverb deliverly and the substantive deliverness formed from it, and found in our old poetry, has ceased to be in use since the time of Spenser.

Of his stature he was of even length,
And wonderly deliver, and grete of strength. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

"He was so wimble and wight,
"From bough to bough he lepped light:"—
Wimble and wight, quicke and deliver.

E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal. March.

DELIVERLY. * adv. Nimbly. See DELIVER.

DELIVERNESS. * n. s. Agility. See DELIVER.
What we now term delivery. See the 5th sense of DELIVERY.

DELIVERANCE. n. s. [delivrance, Fr.]

1. The act of freeing from captivity, slavery, or any oppression; rescue.

He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty those that are bound. Luke, iv. 18.

O God, command deliverances for Jacob. Ps. xlv. 4.

What'er befalls, your life shall be my care;
One death or one deliv'rance we will share. Dryden.

2. The act of delivering a thing to another: now commonly called delivery.

3. The act of bringing children.
Ne'er mother
Rejoic'd deliverance more. Shakespeare.

People have a superstitious belief, that in the labour of women it helpeth to the easy deliverance. Bacon.

4. The act of speaking; utterance; pronunciation: now commonly delivery.

If seriously I may convey my thoughts
In this my light deliverance, I have spoke
With one, that in her sex, her years profession,
Wisdom and constancy, hath amaz'd me more
Than I dare blame my weakness. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.

DELIVERER. † n. s. [Fr. delivreur.]

1. A saviour; a rescuer; a preserver; a releaser.

It doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating of giants, monsters and foreign tyrants, not only as lawful, but as meritorious even of divine honour; and this, although the deliverer came from the one end of the world unto the other. Bacon.

By that seed
Is meant thy great Deliverer, who shall bruise
The serpent's head. Milton, P. L.

Andrew Doria has a statue erected to him at the entrance of the doge's palace, with the glorious title of deliverer of the commonwealth. Addison.

Him their deliverer Europe does confess,
All tongues extol him, all religions bless. Halifax.

2. A relater; one that communicates something by speech or writing.

Divers chymical experiments, delivered by sober authors, have been believed false, only because the monstrum were not as highly rectified, or exquisitely depurated, as those that were used by the deliverers of those experiments. Boyle.

What we call the Irish brogue, is no sooner discovered, than it makes the deliverer, in the last degree, ridiculous and despised; and from such a mouth an Englishman expects nothing but bulls, blunders, and follies.

Swift on Barb. Denom. in Ireland.

DELIVERY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of delivering.

2. Release; rescue; saving.

He swore, with sobs,
That he would labour my delivery. Shakespeare.

3. A surrender; act of giving up.

After the delivery of your royal father's person into the hands of the army, I undertaking to the queen mother, that I would find some means to get access to him, she was pleased to send me. Denham.

Nor did he in any degree contribute to the delivery of his house, which was at first imagined, because it was so ill, or not at all defended. Clarendon.

4. Utterance; pronunciation; speech.

We allege what the scriptures themselves do usually speak, for the saving force of the word of God, not with restraint to any certain kind of delivery, but howsoever the same shall chance to be made known. Hooker.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison.

5. Use of the limbs; activity.

Musidorus could not perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuously. Sidney.

The earl was a pretty deal the taller, and much the stronger;—but the Duke had the neater limbs, and freer delivery. Wolton, of the E. of Essex.

6. Childbirth.

Like as a woman with child, that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain and crieth out. Isa. xxvi. 7.

DELL. † n. s. [from dal, Dutch. See DALE.] A pit; a hole in the ground; any cavity in the earth, wider than a ditch and narrower than a valley. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says. But this is not the case, for dell is yet used in the north of England for a little dale.

The while, the same unhappy ewe,
Whose clouted leg her hurt doth shew,
Fell headlong into a dell. Spenser.

No more the company of fresh fair maids
And wanton shepherds be to me delightful,
Nor the shrill pleasing sound of merry pipes
Under some shady dell, when the cool wind Plays on the leaves. Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle, or bushy dell of this wild wood. Milton, Comus.

But foes to sun-shine, most they took delight
In dells and dales, conceal'd from human sight. Tickel.

DELPH. n. s. [from Delft, the name of the capital of Delfland.] A fine sort of earthen ware. See DELFT.

A supper worthy of herself;
Five nothings in five plates of delph. Swift.

DELTOIDE. * adj. [from delta, the fourth letter of the Greek alphabet; so called by reason of its resembling this letter.] An epithet applied to a triangular muscle arising from the clavicle, and from the process of the same, whose action is to raise the arm upward.

Cut still more of the deltoid muscle, and carry the arm backward. Sharp's Surgery.

DELUDABLE. adj. [from delude.] Liable to be deceived; that is easily imposed on: rather deludible

DEL

Not well understanding omniscience, he is not so ready to deceive himself as to falsify unto him whose cogitation is no ways deludable. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO DELUDE.† v. a. [deludo, Lat.]

1. To beguile; to cheat; to deceive; to impose on.

O, give me leave, I have deluded you;
'Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince.

Dryden.

2. To disappoint; to frustrate.

Many and sundry waies I have sought,
To have the Word of God deluded utterly;
Oh, for sorrow! yet it will not be.

Old Morality of Lusty Juventus.

DELUDER. n. s. [from delude.] A beguiler; a deceiver; an impostor; a cheat; a false pretender.

Say, flatterer, say, all fair deluders speak;

Answer me this, ere yet my heart does break.

Granville.

And thus the sweet deluders tune their song.

Pope.

DELUDING.† n. s. [from delude.] Collusion; falsehood.

Annanias and Sapphira's dainty deludings with a smooth lie.
Bp. Pridcaue, Euch. p. 228.

TO DELVE.† v. a. [belpan, Sax. delven, Dut. perhaps from delφαξ, a dog. Junius. So far Dr. Johnson. The Sax. belpan is to bury; and therefore Screnius's references to the Goth. dalp, a subterranean place, is preferable.]

1. To dig; to open the ground with a spade.

It shall go hard

But I will delve one yard below the mine,

And blow them at the moon.

Shakspeare.

I may, if digging and delving after it, mix earth, and dirt, and rubbish, with silver and gold, and precious stones.

Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 250.

Delve of convenient depth your threshing floor;

With temper'd clay, then fill and face it o'er.

Dryden.

The filthy swine, with delving snout

The rooted forest undermine.

Phillips.

2. To lathom; to sift; to sound one's opinion. Figuratively.

What's his name and birth?

—I cannot delve him to the root: his father

Was call'd St. illius.

Shakspeare.

DELVE. n. s. [from the verb.] A ditch; a pit; a pitful; a den; a cave.

He by and by

His feeble feet directed to the cry;

Which to that shady delve him brought at last,

Where Marston erst did sun his treasury.

Spenser, P. Q.

Such a light and metall'd dance

Saw you never yet in France;

And be madmen, for the nonce,

That run round like grindie-stones,

Which they dig out fro' the delves,

For their bairns bread, wives and selves.

B. Jonson.

DELVE of Coals. A certain quantity of coals dug in the mine or pit.

Dict.

DE'LVER.† n. s. [Sax. delpepe.] A digger; one that opens the ground with a spade.

Delvers and ditchers

Vis. of P. Plowmen.

The delver, bound and clogg'd in crouched buskin, sings;

By untaught tunes his heavier task to easier pass he brings.

Fotherby, Altheam, p. 334.

DELUGE. n. s. [deluge, Fr. from diluvium, Lat.]

1. A general inundation; laying entirely under water.

The apostle doth plainly intimate, that the old world was subject to perish by a deluge, as this is subject to perish by conflagration.

Burnet, Theology.

2. An overflowing of the natural bounds of a river.

But if with bays and dams they strive to force
His channel to a new or narrow course,

DEM

No longer then within his banks he dwells,
First to a torrent, then a deluge swells.

Denham.

3. Any sudden and resistless calamity.

TO DE'LUGE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drown; to lay totally under water.

The restless flood the land would overflow,

By which the delug'd earth would useless grow.

Blackmore.

Still the battering waves rush in Implacable, till delug'd by the foam

The ship sinks, found'ring in the vast abyss.

Phillips.

2. To overwhelm; to cause to sink under the weight of any calamity.

At length corruption, like a general flood,

Shall deluge all.

Pope.

DELUSION.† n. s. [delusio, Lat.]

1. The act of deluding; a cheat; guile; deceit; treachery; fraud; collusion; falsehood.

And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie.

2 Thess. ii. 11.

Give thy fond arts, and thy delusions o'er.

Rowe, Jane Shore.

2. The state of one deluded.

3. A false representation; illusion; error; a chimerical thought.

Who therefore seeks in these

True wisdom, finds her pot, or by delusion,

Far worse, her false resemblance only meets.

Milton, P. R.

I waking, view'd with grief the rising sun,

And fondly mourn'd the dear delusion gone.

Prior.

DELUSIVE.† adj. [from delusus, Lat.] Apt to deceive; beguiling; imposing on.

When, fir'd with passion, we attack the fair,

Delusive sighs and brittle vows we bear.

Prior

The happy whimsey you pursue,

Till you at length believe it true;

Caught by your own delusive art,

You fancy first, and then assert.

Prior.

While the base and groveling multitude were listening to the delusive deities, those of a more erect aspect and exalted spirit separated themselves from the rest.

Tatler, No. 81.

Phænomena so delusive, that it is very hard to escape imposition and mistake.

Woodward.

DELUSORY.† adj. [from delusus, Lat.] Apt to deceive.

Such intercession is delusory and hypocritical.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 187.

This confidence is founded on no better foundation than a delusory prejudice.

Glanville.

He thinks all the world besides are cheated with other delusory ideas.

Baxter, Eng. into the Nat. of the Soul, ii. 271.

DEMAGOGUE.† n. s. [Gr. δημαγωγός, from δῆμος, the people, and ἀγωγός, a leader; Fr. demagogue.

But neither our own nor the French word can be said to be of any great age. Demagogue is not in the edition of Cotgrave in 1632.

Milton, in his Eiconoclastes, as Mr. Malone observes with me, speaks of our word as being first introduced in the Eicon Basiliké; and suspects from its introduction,

I know not why, that the work was not written by K. Charles.] A ringleader of the rabble; a popular and factious orator.

Who were the chief demagogues and patrons of tumults, to send for them, to flatter and embolden them.

King Charles.

A plausible, insignificant word, in the mouth of an expert demagogue, is a dangerous and dreadful weapon.

South, Sermon ii. 333.

Demosthenes and Cicero, though each of them a leader, or, as the Greeks called it, a demagogue, in a popular state, yet seem to differ in their practice.

Swift.

DEMA'IN.† n. s. [domaine, French, Dr. Johnson

DEMA'IN.† says. Our own word, I may add, is DEME'SNE.† properly, perhaps, domain. The other methods of spelling may have been adopted from the old Fr. demesne, demaigne, and demaïne. Perhaps the third meaning should be always written demesne, from mesnie, old Fr. derived from the Lat. mansio.]

1. That land which a man holds originally of himself, called dominium by the civilians, and opposed to feodum, or fee, which signifies those that are held of a superior lord. It is sometimes used also for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor has in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee, demised or let upon a rent for a term of years or life, and such other lands appertaining to the said manor as belong to free or copyholders. Philips.

2. Estate in land.

Having now provided
A gentleman of noble parentage,
Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly allied. Shakespeare.
That earldom indeed had a royal jurisdiction and seignory, though the lands of that county in demesne were possessed for the most part by the ancient inheritors. Davies.

3. Land adjoining to the mansion, kept in the lord's own hand.

Those acts for planting forest-trees have hitherto been wholly ineffectual, except about the demesnes of a few gentlemen; and even there, in general, very unskillfully made. Swift.

70 DEMAND. v. a. [demandeur, Fr.]

1. To claim; to ask for with authority.
The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought, 'tis mine, and I will have it. Shakespeare.
2. To question; to interrogate.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered? 2 Sam. xi. 7.

If any friend of Caesar's demand why Brutus rose against Caesar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Caesar less, but that I loved Rome more. Shakespeare.

Young one,
Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems,
They crave to be demanded. Shakespeare.

The oracle of Apollo being demanded, when the war and misery of Greece should have an end, reply'd, When they would double the altar in Delos, which was of a cubick form. Peacham on Geometry.

3. [In law.] To prosecute in a real action.

DEMAND.† n. s. [demande, French.]

1. A claim; a challenging; the asking of any thing with authority.
This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones. Dan. iv. 17.
Giving vent, gives life and strength to our appetites; and he that has the confidence to turn his wishes into demands, will be but a little way from thinking he ought to obtain them. Locke.

2. A question; an interrogation.
I perceive, by this demand, you are not altogether of his counsel. Shakespeare, All's Well.

3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.
My bookseller tells me, the demand for those my papers increases daily. Addison.

4. [In law.] The asking of what is due. It hath also a proper signification distinguished from plaint; for all civil actions are pursued either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant or plaintiff. There are two manners of demands, the one of deed, the other in law: in deed, as in every præcipe, there is express demand: in law, as every entry in land-distress for rent, taking or seising of goods, and such like acts, which may be done without any words, are demands in law. Blount.

DEMANDABLE. adj. [from demand.] That may be demanded; requested; asked for.

All such demandable, for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, have been stayed in the way to the hammer. Bacon.

DEMANDANT. n. s. [from demand.]

1. He who is actor or plaintiff in a real action, because he demandeth lands. Coke.
2. A plaintiff; one that demands redress.

One of the witnesses deposed that dining on a Sunday with the demandant, whose wife had sat below the squire's lady at church, she the said wife dropped some expressions, as if she thought her husband ought to be knighted. Spectator.

DEMANDER.† n. s. [demandeur, Fr.]

1. One that requires a thing with authority.
2. One that asks a question.

Yet to so fair and courteous a demandeur,
That promises compassion, at worst pity,
I will relate a little of my story. Barton, and Fl. The Captain.

3. One that asks for a thing in order to purchase it.
They grow very fast and fat, which also bettereth their taste, and delivereth them to the demanders ready use at all seasons. Cervus.

4. A debtor; one that demands a debt.

DEMANDERESS.* n. s. [Fr. demanderesse.] A woman that is a plaintiff, or petitioner. Cutgrave.

DEMARCACTION.* n. s. [French; but modern in that and our own language.] Division; separation of territory.

The speculative line of demarcation, where obedience ought to end, and resistance must begin, is faint, obscure, and not easily definable. Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

DEMARCHE.* n. s. [old Fr. demarche.] Gait; march; walk.

Reason checks fancy in its most extravagant sallies, and imagination enlivens reason in its most solemn demarches.

Collect. of Letters in the London Journal, 1721. No. x.

DEMEAN.† n. s. [from the verb. Spenser sometimes writes the word, for the sake of the rhyme, demayne, as in the passage which Dr. Johnson had cited, without remarking it. But he copied from an inaccurate edition. I have therefore supplied the place of his imperfect example with one correct.] A mien; presence; carriage; demeanour; deportment.

The prince—
Purs'd him straight; in mynd to benywooken
Of all the vile demean and usage he,
With which he had those two so ill bestad. Spenser, F. Q. vi. vi. 18.

To DEMEAN.† v. a. [Norm. French, demesner; "demesnez, demeaned themselves well." Kelham.

Hence perhaps menager and demanager; whence our manage, that is, conduct, carriage, demeanour. See MANAGE.]

1. To behave; to carry one's self.

Those plain and legible lines of duty requiring us to demean ourselves to God humbly and devoutly, to our governors obediently, and to our neighbours justly, and to ourselves soberly and temperately. South.

A man cannot doubt but that there is a God; and that, according as he demeans himself towards him, he will make him happy or miserable for ever. Tillotson.

Strepson had long perplex'd his brains,
How with so high a nymph he might Demean himself the wedding-night. Swift.

How shall we value and demean ourselves, if we know not ourselves? Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 38.

DEM

2. Not necessarily connected with self, as Dr. Johnson's preceding definition seems to confine the word; to behave.

Alas, good Monsieur!

A' was a proper man, and fair demean'd,

A person worthy of a better temper.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Gent.

A man is reasonably to be presumed to have in him a sufficient stock of self-love to serve the ends of his nature and creation; and that is, that man demean and use his own body in that decorum which is most orderly and proportionate to his perfective end of a happy life.

Bp. Taylor, Life of Christ, Pref. § 12.

3. To lessen; to debase; to undervalue. The sense of the word in the passage from Shakspeare, which Dr. Johnson cites as a solitary example of it as used according to this definition, is dubious. An instance from a later, and most excellent, writer, will decide the point.

Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad;

Else he would never so demean himself.

Shakspeare.

Peter was so affected at his condescending to perform such a mean office, that he says to him, Lord, dost thou go about to wash my feet? It is a thousand times fitter, that I should wash thine; nor can I bear to see thee demean thyself thus.

Hodderidge, Fam. Expos. § 169.

4. To treat; to use in a bad manner. Obsolete.

That mighty man did her demean.

With all the evil terms, and cruel means,

That he could make.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 39.

DEMEANOUR.† n. s. [from To demean.] Formerly written also demeanure. Carriage; behaviour.

Of so insupportable a pride he was, that where his deeds might well stir envy, his demeanour did rather breed disdain.

Sidney.

Angels best like us, when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour.

Honker.

Giving order for the decent demeanure of the Corinthian women in the congregation.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 105.

His gestures fierce.

He mark'd, and mad demeanure, then alone,

As he suppos'd, all unobserv'd, misseen.

Milton, P. L.

Thus Eve, with sad demeanour meek,

Ill worthy I.

Milton, P. L.

He was of a courage not to be daunted, which was manifested in all his actions, especially in his whole demeanour at Rhee, both at the landing, and upon the retreat.

Clarendon.

DEMEANS. n. s. pl. properly demesnes. An estate in lands; that which a man possesses in his own right.

DEMEANURE.* n. s. Behaviour. See Demeanour.

Barret.

DEMEENCY.* n. s. [old Fr. démence, Lat. dementia.]

Madness.

Cockeram.

The Lyng his clemency.

Dispenseth with his demency.

Skelton, Poems, p. 161.

To DEMENTATE.† v. a. [old Fr. dementer, "tomber en démence," Lacombe; Lat. demento.] To make mad.

This mystery of iniquity began to work even in the apostles' time; many antichrists and hereticks were abroad; many sprung up since; many now present, and will be, to the world's end, to dementate men's minds, to seduce and captivate their souls.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 673.

DEMENTATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Infatuated; insane.

Arise, thou dementate sinner, and come to judgement!

Hammond, Works, iv. 522.

DEMENTATION.† n. s. [dementatio, Lat.] Making mad, or frantick.

Supposing the distemper under command from breaking out into any other sins besides its own demutation or stupidity.

Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 512.

DEM

DEMERIT. n. s. [demérite, Fr. from demeritis, of demereor, Latin.]

1. The opposite to merit; ill-deserving; what makes one worthy of blame or punishment.

They should not be able once to stir, or to murmur, but it should be known, and they shortened according to their demerits.

Spenser on Ireland.

Thou liv'st by me; to me thy breath resign;

Mine is the merit, the demerit thine.

Dryden.

Whatever they acquire by their industry or ingenuity should be secure, unless forfeited by any demerit or offence against the custom of the family.

Temple.

2. Anciently the same with merit; desert.

I fetch my life and being

From men of royal siege; and my demerits

May speak, unbosoming, to as proud a fortune

As this that I have reach'd.

Shakspeare, Othello.

To DEMERIT.† v. a. [demeriter, Fr.] To deserve blame or punishment.

Adam demerited but one sin to his posterity, viz. original, which cannot be augmented: but Christ hath poured out the abundance of his graces for our salvation.

Shelley's Learned Discourses, p. 140.

DEMERSED. adj. [from demersus, of demergo, Lat.] Plunged; drowned.

Dict.

DEMERSION. n. s. [demersio, Lat.]

1. A drowning.

2. [In chymistry.] The putting any medicine in a dissolving liquor.

Dict.

DEME'SNE. See DEMAINE.

DEMI.† inseparable particle. [demi, Fr. dimidium, Lat.] Half; one of two equal parts. This word is only used in composition; as demigod, that is, half human, half divine, Dr. Johnson says. But Demy has been adopted, without the aid of composition.

• See DEMY.

DEMI-CANNON. n. s. [demi and cannon.]

DEMI-CANNON Lowest. A great gun that carries a ball of thirty pounds weight and six inches diameter. The diameter of the bore is six inches two eighth parts.

Dict.

DEMI-CANNON Ordinary. A great gun six inches four eights diameter in the bore, twelve foot long. It carries a shot six inches one sixth diameter, and thirty-two pounds weight.

Dict.

DEMI-CANNON of the greatest Size. A gun six inches and six eighth parts diameter in the bore, twelve foot long. It carries a ball of six inches five eights diameter, and thirty-six pounds weight.

Dict.

What is this a sleeve? 'tis like a demi-cannon.

Shakspeare.

Ten engines, that shall be of equal force either to a cannon or demi-cannon, culverin or demi-culverin, may be framed at the same price that one of these will amount to.

Wilkins.

DEMI-CULVERIN. n. s. [demi and culverin.]

DEMI-CULVERIN of the lowest Size. A gun four inches two eights diameter in the bore, and ten foot long. It carries a ball four inches diameter, and nine pounds weight.

Dict.

DEMI-CULVERIN Ordinary. A gun four inches four eights diameter in the bore, ten foot long. It carries a ball four inches two eights diameter, and ten pounds eleven ounces weight.

DEMI-CULVERIN, Elder Sort. A gun four inches and six eights diameter in the bore, ten foot one third in length. It carries a ball four inches four eight parts diameter, and twelve pounds eleven ounces weight.

Milit. Dict.

They continue a perpetual volley of demi-culverins.

Raleigh.

DEM-

The army left two demi-culverins, and two other good guns.
Clarendon.

DEMI-DEVIL. n. s. [demi and devil.] Partaking of infernal nature; half a devil.

Will you, I pray, demand that demi-devil,
Why he hath thus ensnar'd my soul and body?
Shakespeare, Othello.

DEMI-GOD. n. s. [demi and god.] Partaking of divine nature; half a god; an hero produced by the cohabitation of divinities with mortals.

He took his leave of them, whose eyes bade him farewell
With tears, making temples to him as to a demi-god.
Sidney.

Be gods, or angels, demi-gods.
Transported demi-gods stood round,
And men grew heroes at the sound,
Enflam'd with glory's charms.
Nay, half in heaven, except (what's mighty odd)
A fit of vapours clouds this demi-god.
Milton, P. L. Pope.

DEMI-LANCE. n. s. [demi and lance.] A light lance; a short spear; a half-pike.

On their steel'd heads, their demi-lances wore
Small pennons, which their ladies' colours bore.
Light demi-lances from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs to gall the foe.
Dryden.

DEMI-MAN. n. s. [demi and man.] Half a man. A term of reproach.

We must adventure this battle, lest we perish by the complaints of this barking demi-man.
Knolles.

DEMI-NATURED.* adj. [demi and nature.] Partaking half the nature of another animal.

I have seen myself, and serv'd against, the French,
And they can well on horseback: but this gallant
Had witchcraft in't; he grew unto his seat;
And to such wondrous doing brought his horse,
As he had been incorp'd and demi-natur'd
With the brave beast.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

DEMI-PREMISES.* n. s. plur. [demi and premises.] Half premises.

They judge conclusions by demi-premises and half principles; they lay them in the balance, stript from those necessary material circumstances, which should give them weight, and by shew of falling uneven with the scale of most universal and abstracted rules, they pronounce that too high, which is not if they had the skill to weigh it.
Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 81.

DEMI-REP.* n. s. [demi, and an abbreviation of reputation.] A woman with half a reputation; suspected of unchastity, but not convicted.

The Sirens, those celebrated songstresses of Sicily, who were ranked among the demi-gods, as well as demi-reps of antiquity.
Burney, Hist. of Mus. 306.

DEMI-WOLF. n. s. [demi and wolf.] Half a wolf; a mongrel dog between a dog and wolf.

Spaniels, curs,
Showghs, water-rings, and demi-wolves, are 'cleped'
All by the name of dogs.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To DEMIGRATE.* v. a. [Lat. demigro. Our old word for emigrate.] To move from one place to another.

DEMIGRATION.* n. s. [Lat. demigratio.] Change of habitation; emigration.

DEMISE. v. a. [from demetre, demis, demise, Fr.] Death; decease. It is seldom used but in formal and ceremonious language, Dr. Johnson says. In fitt, it is used only, as Mr. Mason also has observed, of a crowned head, or of the crown itself, which suffers a demise or transfer by the death of the wearer of it.

About a month before the demise of queen Anne, the author retired.
Swift.

When we say the demise of the crown, we mean only, that in consequence of the disunion of the king's body natural from his body politick, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor.
Blackstone.

DEM

To DEMISE. v. a. [demis, demise, Fr.] To grant at one's death; to grant by will; to bequeath.

My executors shall not have power to demise my lands to be purchased.
Swift's Last Will.

DEMISSE.* adj. [Lat. demissus.] Humble.
He downe descended, like a most demise
And abject thrall, in flesh's frail attire.
Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Love.

DEMISSION. n. s. [demissio, Lat.] Degradation; diminution of dignity; depression.

Inexorable rigour is worse than a lasche demission of sovereign authority.
L'Estrange.

DEMISSELY.* adv. [from demiss.] In an humble manner.
Sherwood.

DEMISSORY.* See DIMISSORY.

To DEMIT. v. a. [demitto, Lat.].

1. To depress; to hang down; to let fall.
When they are in their pride, that is, advancing their train, if they decline their neck to the ground, they presently demit, and let fall the same.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. To submit; to humble.
Nature has taught her [the soul] to demit, when she, being heaven-born, demits herself to such earthly drudgery.
Norris, Let. to More.

DEMOCRACY. n. s. [δημοκρατία.] One of the three forms of government; that in which the sovereign power is neither lodged in one man, nor in the nobles, but in the collective body of the people.

While many of the servants, by industry and virtue, arrive at riches and esteem, then the nature of the government inclines to a democracy.
Temple.

The majority having the whole power of the community, may employ all that power in making laws; and executing those laws; and there the form of the government is a perfect democracy.
Locke.

DEMOCRAT.* } n. s. [from democracy. Words introduced into our language, soon after the democratical French revolution.] One devoted to democracy.

He endeavours to crush the aristocratick party, and to nourish one in avowed connexion with the most furious democrats in France.
Burke, Thoughts on French Affairs.

I would say to the most violent democrat in the kingdom, Suppose the business done: after seas of blood have been shed, millions of lives lost, towns plundered, villages burned, the royal family exterminated, and unutterable calamity has been endured by persons of all ranks—after all this has been done, what advantages will you have obtained beyond what you now possess?
Bp. Llandaff, (Watson), Charge in 1798, p. 19.

DEMOCRATICAL.* } adj. [Fr. democratique, Cotgrave.]

DEMOCRATICK.* } Pertaining to a popular government; popular.

They are still within the line of democratical enemies to truth.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

As the government of England has a mixture of democratical in it, so the right is partly in the people.
Arbuthnot.

Here be it thine to calm and guide
The swelling democratick tide.
Akenside.

It is a mere democratick body, unconnected with the crown or the kingdom.
Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

DEMOCRATICALY.* adv. [from democratical.] In a democratical manner.

This democratical embassy was democratically received.
Alg. Sidney.

DEMOCRATY.* n. s. [Gr. δημοκρατία, Fr. démocratie.]

This is our old word for democracy, which Mr. Mason has asserted to be of Milton's coinage. But it existed long before Milton wrote, and is used by many good writers, though wholly unnoticed by Dr. Johnson, and confined to Milton by Mr. Mason. It is also in our old lexicography.

Forms of commonwealths, monarchies, aristocracies, democracies.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 37.

A democracy is, where all the people have power and authority overrign.

Raleigh, Art of Empire, ch. i.

Thence to the famous orators repair,
Those ancient, whose resistless eloquence
Wielded at will that fierce democraſie. Milton, P. R. iv. 269.
At this rate, Phalaris could not have spoken any dialect of the Greek tongue; for every one of them was the language of a democracy, some where or other.

Boyle on Bentley's Dias, on Phalaris, p. 50.

To DEMOLISH. v. a. [demolir, Fr. demolir, Lat.]

To throw down buildings; to raze; to destroy.

I expected the fabrick of my book would long since have been demolished, and laid even with the ground. Tillotson.

Red lightning play'd along the firmament,
And their demolish'd works to pieces rent. Dryden.

DEMOLISHER.† n. s. [from demolish.] One that throws down buildings; a destroyer; a layer waste.

Nor are these masters such batterers and demolishers of stately and elegant buildings. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands, p. 185.

The builders too often prove the unhappy demolishers.

Clom. Ellis, Serm. May 29. 1661, p. 11.

DEMOLISHMENT.† n. s. [from demolish.] Ruin; destruction.

Look on his honour, sister,
That bears no stamp of time, no wrinkles on it,
No sad demolishment; nor death can reach it.

Beaumont, and Fl. Mind Lover.

Though the outward lights of the soul may be closed up by the interposure of the body's ruins; that is, the capacity of discourse and expressions much darkened; yet those very demolishments may, as I may say, break out new lights upward.

W. Montagu, Ess. P. ii. p. 196.

DEMOLITION.† n. s. [Fr. demolition.] The act of overthrowing or demolishing buildings; destruction.

This man defies 'em still, threatens destruction
And demolition of their arms and worship.

Beaumont, and Fl. Island Princess.

The devastation of our fruitful and pleasant villages; the demolition of our magnificent structures.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 158.

Two gentlemen should have the direction in the demolition of Dunkirk.

Swift.

DEMON.† n. s. [daemon, Lat. δαίμων, Gr. demon, Fr.] A spirit; generally an evil spirit; a devil.

See DEMONSHIP.

Their Baalim were nothing else but demons, or deified ghosts of men deceased.

Mede, Apost. of Latter Times, p. 31.

I let him strike, and now I see him fly:

Cur'd demon! O for ever broken lie

Those fatal shafts, by which I inward bleed.

Prior.

DEMONESS.† n. s. [from demon.] A pretended female divinity.

The Sichenites — had a goddess or demoneſs under the name of Jephthah's daughter.

Mede, Apost. of Latter Times, p. 31.

DEMONIACAL.† } adj. [Fr. demoniacque.]

DEMONIACK.

1. Belonging to the devil; devilish.

Hg, all unarm'd,

Shall chase thee with the terror of his voice

From thy demoniack holds, possession soul. Milton, P. R.

Influenced by the devil; produced by diabolical possession.

Demoniack phrensy, moping melancholy. Milton, P. R.

Inchanted by some evil spirit, or demoniack water-nymph.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands, p. 54.

This learned person gives a notable instance of demoniacal possession out of Ferrius, a very experienced physician, who was an eye-witness thereof.

Hallywell, Molampr. p. 78.

DEMONIACK.† n. s. [from the adjective. One of our oldest substantives. "I hold him certain a demoniacke." Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.] One possessed by the devil; one whose mind is disturbed and agitated by the power of wicked and unclean spirits.

Those lunatics and demoniacks that were restored to their right mind, were such as sought after him, and believed in him.

Bentley.

DEMONIAN. adj. [from demon.] Devilish; of the nature of devils.

Demonian spirits now, from the element

Each of his reign allotted, rightlier called

Powers of fire, air, water.

Milton, P. R.

DEMONO'CRACK. n. s. [δαίμων and κραίω.] The power of the devil.

Dict.

DEMONO'LATRY.† n. s. [Fr. demonolatric, Gr. δαίμων and λάτρεω.] The worship of the devil.

Dict.

Nicholaus Remigius, a man both pious and learned, in his book of demonolatric, doth profess, within the space of sixteen years, to have had the examination of near 2000, whereof 900 were condemned to death. Mer. Casaubon, of Credulity, p. 38.

DEMONO'LOGY.† n. s. [δαίμων and λογία.] Discomfite of the nature of devils. Thus king James entitled his book concerning witches.

I return you the manuscript you lent me of demonology.

Howell, Lett. iii. 33.

This inchanter is of no note, nor do I find his name in any famous authors of demonology. Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. i. 7.

DEMONOMIST.† n. s. [from demonomy.] One living in subjection to the rule or dominion of the devil.

Celebes — well peopled, but with bad people; no place engendering greater demonomists, or till of late worse savages.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 368.

DEMONOMY.† n. s. [δαίμων and νόμος, a rule or law.] The dominion of the devil.

These Javans are drunk in demonomy, and the more earnestly embrace it by how much their corrupt natures abhor honesty; whence it happens, that they trade in murder, adultery, theft, rapine, deceit, and all other wickedness.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 365.

DE'MONSHIP.† n. s. [from demon.] The state of a demon.

Plutarch doth acquaint us with this pretty conceit — that the souls of men took degrees after death; first, they commenced heroes, who were as probationers to a demonship; then, after a time sufficient, demons!

Mede, Apost. of Latter Times, p. 18.

DEMONSTRABLE. adj. [demonstrabilis, Lat.] That which may be proved beyond doubt or contradiction; that which may be made not only probable, but evident.

The grand articles of our belief are as demonstrable as geometry.

Glanville.

DEMONSTRABLENESS.† n. s. [from demonstrable.] Capability of demonstration.

Notwithstanding the demonstrableness both of the obligations and motives of morality, yet considering the manifest corruptness of the present estate which human nature is in, the generality of men must not by any means be left wholly to the workings of their own minds, to the use of their natural faculties, and to the bare convictions of their own reason; but must be particularly taught and instructed in their duty, must have the motives of it frequently and strongly pressed and inculcated upon them with great weight and authority, and must have many extraordinary assistances afforded them; to keep them effectually in the practice of the great and plainest duties of religion.

Clarke, Evid. of Nat. and Rel. Religion.

DEMONSTRABLY. adv. [from demonstrable.] In such a manner as admits of certain proof; evidently; beyond possibility of contradiction.

He should have compelled his ministers to execute the law, in cases that demonstrably concerned the publick peace.

Clarendon.

To DEMONSTRATE. v. a. [demonstro, Lat.] To prove with the highest degree of certainty; to prove in such a manner as reduces the contrary position to evident absurdity.

We cannot demonstrate these things so, as to shew that the contrary often involves a contradiction. Tillotson.

DEMONSTRATION. n. s. [demonstratio, Lat.]

1. The highest degree of deducible or argumental evidence; the strongest degree of proof; such proof as not only evinces the position proved to be true, but shews the contrary position to be absurd and impossible.

What appeareth to be true by strong and invincible demonstration, such as wherein it is not by any way possible to be deceived, thereunto the mind doth necessarily yield. Hooker.

Where the agreement or disagreement of any thing is plainly and clearly perceived, it is called demonstration. Locke.

2. Indubitable evidence of the senses or reason.

Which way soever we turn ourselves, we are encountered with clear evidences and sensible demonstrations of a Deity. Tillotson.

DEMONSTRATIVE. adj. [demonstrativus, Lat.]

1. Having the power of demonstration; invincibly conclusive; certain.

An argument necessary and demonstrative, is such as, being proposed unto any man, and understood, the man cannot chuse but inwardly yield. Hooker.

2. Having the power of expressing clearly and certainly.

Painting is necessary to all other arts, because of the need which they have of demonstrative figures, which often give more light to the understanding than the clearest discourses. Dryden.

DEMONSTRATIVELY. adv. [from demonstrative.]

1. With evidence not to be opposed or doubted.

No man, in matters of this life, requires an assurance either of the good which he designs, or of the evil which he avoids, from arguments demonstratively certain. South.

First, I demonstratively prove, That feet were only made to move. Prior.

2. Clearly; plainly; with certain knowledge.

Demonstratively understanding the simplicity of perfection, it was not in the power of earth to work them from it. Brown.

DEMONSTRATOR. † n. s. [Lat. demonstrator, Fr. demonstrateur.] One that proves; one that teaches; one that demonstrates.

If we well consider the true nature of progressive motion, and firm station on the ground, we shall soon conclude, that the instruments of them both are the best demonstrators of human strength. South, Partr. of Old Age, p. 66.

Whether an algebraist, fluxionist, geometrician, or demonstrator of any kind, can expect indulgence for obscure principles or incorrect reasonings? Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, Qu. 43.

DEMONSTRATORY. adj. [from demonstrate.] Having the tendency to demonstrate.

DEMORALIZATION.  n. s.* [from To demoralize.] Destruction of morals. Of very recent usage only.

The cause [of the crimes of the Creoles] is to be found in the existence of slavery; and the inevitable demoralization, which this accursed practice produces, is not checked by any system of religious instruction. Quarterly Rev. Nov. 1810.

TO DEMORALIZE.  v. a.* This verb is of late introduction into our language. It may be defined the opposite to our old word moralize; which, however, has not hitherto been explained agreeably to its usage by the excellent author of the Christian Life. "Those laws and circumstances which do moralize human actions, and render them reasonable, and holy, and good." Scott's Works, fol. ii. 129. To demoralize is to render them unreasonable, unholy, unjust. See To MORALIZE.

The pernicious influence of their demoralizing creed.

(rit. Rev. Aug. 1808.)

TO DEMULCE.  v. a.* [Lat. demulceo. See DEMULCENT.] To soothe; to pacify. Not now in use.

Wherewith Saturn was demulced and appeased.

Sir T. Elgot, Gov. fol. 64.

DEMULCENT. adj. [demulcens, Latin.] Softening; mollifying; assuasive.

Pease, being deprived of any aromatick parts, are mild and demulcent in the highest degree; but being full of aerial particles, are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbuthnot.

TO DEMUR. v. n. [demurer, Fr. dimorare, Ital. demorari, Lat.]

1. To delay a process in law by doubts and objections. See DEMURRER.

To this plea the plaintiff demurred. Walton, Angler.

2. To pause in uncertainty; to suspend determination; to hesitate; to delay the conclusion of an affair.

Upon this rub the English ambassadors thought fit to demur, and so sent into England to receive directions from the lords of the council. Hayward.

Running into demands, they expect from us a sudden resolution in things, wherein the devil of Delphos would demur. Brown, Vulg. Err.

He must be of a very sluggish or querulous humour, that shall demur upon setting out, or demand higher encouragements than the hope of heaven. Decay of Piety.

News of my death from rumour he receiv'd;
And what he wish'd, he easily believ'd;
But long demur'd, though from my hand he knew
I liv'd, so loth he was to think it true. Dryden.

3. To doubt; to have scruples or difficulties; to deliberate.

There is something in our composition, that thinks and apprehends, and reflects and deliberates, determines and doubts, consents and denies; that wills and demurs, and resolves and chooses, and rejects. Bentley.

TO DEMUR. v. a. To doubt of.

The latter I demur; for in their looks Much reason, and in their actions, oft appears. Milton, P. I.

DEMUR. † n. s. [old Fr. demor; Lat. demoratio.] Our own old word, is demour.] Doubt; hesitation; suspense of opinion.

I thank you for this demour; for I myselfe could have chosen no better for the purpose.

Abp. Cranmer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 77.

O progeny of Heaven, empyreal throes!

With reason hath deep silence and demur

Certainly the highest and dearest concerns of a temporal life are infinitely less valuable than those of an eternal; and consequently ought, without any demur at all, to be sacrificed to them, whensoever they come in competition with them. South.

All my demurs but double his attacks;

At last he whispers, Do, and we go wiffling.

Pope.

DEMURE. adj. [desmure, Fr.]

1. Sober; decent.

Lo! two most lovely virgins came in place,

With countenance demure, and modest grace. Spenser, P. Q.

Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,

Sober, steadfast, and demure. Milton, Il Pens.

2. Grave; affectedly modest: it is now generally taken in a sense of contempt.

After a demure travel of regard, I tell them I know my place, as I would they should do theirs. Shakespeare.

There be many wise men, that have secret hearts and transparent countenances; yet this would be done with a demure abasing of your eye sometimes. Bacon.

A cat lay and looked so demure as if there had been neither life nor soul in her. L. Strange.

So cat, transform'd, sat gravely and demure,

Till mouse appear'd, and thought himself secure. Dryden.

Joys sent and found, far in a country scene,

Truth, innocence, good-nature, look serene;

From which ingredients, first, the dextrous boy

Pick'd the demure, the awkward, and the coy. Swift.

DEM

TO DEMU'RE. v. n. [from the noun.] To look with an affected modesty; not used.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour,
Demuring upon me. Shakspeare.

DEMU'RELY. adv. [from demure.]

1. With affected modesty; solemnly; with pretended gravity.

Put on a sober habit,
Talk with respect, and swear but now and then,
Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely. Shakspeare.
Esop's damsel, turned from a cat to a woman, sat very demurely at the board's end, till a mouse ran before her. Bacon.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling, and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden.

2. In the following line it is the same with solemnly.

Warburton.

Hark, how the drums demurely wake the sleepers!

Shakspeare.

DEMU'RENESS. n. s. [from demure.]

1. Modesty; soberness; gravity of aspect.

Her eyes having in them such a cheerfulness, as nature seemed to smile in them; though her mouth and cheeks obeyed to that pretty demureness, which the more one marked, the more one would judge the poor soul apt to believe. Sidney.

2. Affected modesty; pretended gravity.

It is easy for him—to raise the operations of melancholy to the semblance of a mortified demureness and humiliation.

South, Sermon. v. 110.

The wanton and cunning woman—wipeth her mouth with great demureness and sobriety.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 28.

DEMU'RRAGE. n. s. [from dennur.] An allowance made by merchants to masters of ships, for their stay in a port beyond the time appointed.

DEMU'RRE. n. s. [demaurer, French; i. e. manere in aliquo loco vel morari.]

1. A kind of pause upon a point of difficulty, in an action; for, in every action, the controversy consists either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the case plain to the judge, or so hard and rare, as it breedeth just doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is assured of the law; and in such case the judge, with his associates, proceeds to judgement without farther work. But when it is doubtful to him and his associates, then is there stay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or else for all the justices to meet together in the Chequer-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the serjeants can say of both parts, to advise, and set down as law, whatsoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy. Coxcel.

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a demurrer. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. One who pauses in uncertainty.

And is Lorenz a demurrer still? Young, Night Th. 9.

DEMY. n. s. [Fr. demi.]

1. A term relating to the size of paper; as, demij, median, royal, or large; of which the demij is the smallest. Cockeram, in his old vocabulary, defines demij what is little.

2. The name of a scholar at Magdalene College, Oxford; where, there are thirty demies, or half-fellows, as it were; who, like scholars in other colleges, succeed to fellowships.

DEN

DEN. n. s. [den, Saxon.]

1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity, under ground; distinct from a hole which runs down perpendicularly.

They here dispersed, some in the air, some on the earth, some in the waters, some amongst the minerals, dens and caves under the earth. Hooker.

2. The cave of a wild beast.

What, shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fight him there? Shakspeare.

The tyrant's den, whose use, though lost to fame,

Was now th' apartment of the royal dame;

The cavern, only to her father known,

By him was to his darling daughter shown. Dryden.

'Tis then the shapeless bear his den forsakes;

In woods and fields a wild destruction makes. Dryden.

3. Den, the termination of a local name, may signify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon den imports both. Gibson's Camden.

DE'NARY.* n. s. [from the Lat. denarius, containing the number ten.] The number of ten.

They may very well be compared to the lowest figures, which are composed of lines, that owe their being to points;
—or to centenaries, that are composed of denaries, and they of units. Sir Kenelm Digby, Suppl. to Cabala, p. 248.

TO DENA'TIONALIZE.* v. a. [a word of recent introduction into our language from the very modern French.] To take away national rights; to destroy national privilege.

His Royal Highness can never admit, that neutral trade with Great Britain can be constituted a publick crime, the commission of which can expose the ships of any power to be denationalized.

Declar. of the Prince Regent of Gr. Brit. and Ir. Jan. 1813.

DENAY. n. s. [an old word, both as a substantive and verb. See TO DENAY.] Denial; refusal.

To her in haste, give her this jewel; say

My love can give no place, bide no denay. Shakspeare.

TO DENAY.* v. a. [an ancient usage of deny. We have also the verb to nay. Old Fr. denoier; Lat.
denego. See TO DENY.] To deny. Not now in use. It is, among old writers, a neuter verb also.

What were those three,

The which thy proffer'd curtesie denay'd.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 37.

The state of a cardinal—was naied and denaied him.

Holinshead, Chron. of Eng. p. 620.

Let him be denay'd the regentship.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

DENEGATION.* n. s. [Fr. denegation, Cotgrave.] A denying. Bullokar.

DENI'ABLE. adj. [from deny.] That which may be denied; that to which one may refuse belief.

The negative authority is also deniable by reason. Brown.

DENI'AL. n. s. [from deny.]

1. Negation; the contrary to affirmation.

2. Negation; the contrary to confession.

No man more impudent to deny, where proofs were not manifest; no man more ready to confess, with a repenting manner of aggravating his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fouler. Sidney.

3. Refusal; the contrary to grant, allowance, or concession.

Here comes your father; never make denial;

I must and will have Catharine to my wife. Shakspeare.

D E N

The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much.
Bacon.

At ev'ry fresh attempt, is repell'd
With faint denials, weaker than before.
Dryden.

4. Abjuration; contrary to acknowledgement of adherence.

We may deny God in all those acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: those are the proper scenes, in which we act our confessions or denials of him.
South.

DENIAL. n. s. [from deny.]

1. A contradictor; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a proposition.

By the word Virtue the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier by the word Virtue means only courage, or, at most, our duty towards our neighbour, without including the idea of the duty which we owe to God.
Watts.

2. A disowner; one that does not own or acknowledge.

All the late statutes which inflict capital punishment upon extollers of the pope's supremacy, deniers of the king's supremacy, jesuits, and seminaries, and other offenders of that nature, have, for their principal scope, not the punishment of the error of conscience, but the repressing of the peril of the estate.
Bacon, Charge at a Scss. for the Verge.

If it was so fearful when Christ looked his denier into repentance, what will it be when he shall look him into destruction?
South.

The deniers of the Being of God have no manner of advantage from that opinion of the eternity of the world, even supposing it could not be disproved.
Clarke on the Attributes.

3. A refuser: one that refuses.

It may be I am esteemed by my denier: sufficient of myself to discharge my duty to God as a priest, though not to men as a prince.
King Charles.

DENIER. n. s. [from denarius, Lat.] It is pronounced as deneer, in two syllables.] A small denomination of French money; the twelfth part of a sous.

You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?
— No, not a denier.
Shakspeare.

Have you no money left?
Not a denier.
Beaumont and Fl. Custom of the Country.

TO DENIGRATE. v. a. [denigro, Latin.] To blacken; to make black.

By suffering some impression from fire, bodies are casually or artificially denigrated in their natural complexion: thus are charcoals made black by an infection of their own suffitins.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

Hartshorn, and other white bodies, will be denigrated by heat; yet camphire would not at all lose its whiteness.
Boyle.
DENIGRATION. n. s. [denigratio, Lat.] A blackening, or making black.

These are the advenient and artificial ways of denigration, unassurably whereto may be the natural progress.
Brown.

In several instances of denigration the metals are worn off, or otherwise reduced into very minute parts.
Boyle.

DENIZATION. n. s. [from denizen.] The act of enfranchising or making free.

That the mere Irish were reputed aliens appears by the characters of denization, which in all ages were purchased by them.
Davies.

By birth each man
Is in this world a cosmopolitan,
A free-born burgess; and receives thereby
His denization from nativity.
Howell, Lett. Poem to K. Ch. I.

DENIZEN. n. s. [from dinasddyn, a man of the DENISON. n. s. [from dinesydd, free of the city, Welsh. The Norm. French deinzseins is used for denizens. V. Kellham.] A freeman; one enfranchised; a stranger made free.

Barrett.

Denizen is a British law term, which the Saxons and Angles found here and retained.
Davies.

Thus th' Almighty Sire began: ye gods,
Natives or denizens of blest abodes,
From whence these murmurs?
Dryden.

D E N

A great many plants will hardly, with nursing, be made to produce their seed out of their native soil; but corn, so necessary for all people, is fitted to grow and to seed as a free denizen of the world.
Grew.

He summons straight his denizens of air;
The lucid squadrons round the sails repair.
Pope.

TO DENIZEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To enfranchise; to make free.

You must give me leave to use new words of art, such as are proper to express new conceits, though they be yet strange, and not denizenized in our language.
Brysket, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606,) p. 44.

The Norman powers,
Whose name and honours now are denizen'd for ours.
Dryden, Polyolb. S. 17.

Pride, lust, covetize, being several
To these three places yet all are in all;
And mingled thus, their issue is incestuous;
Falsehood is denizen'd; virtue is barbarous.
Donne, Poems, p. 147.

DENOMINABLE. adj. [denomino, Latin.] That may be named or denoted.

An inflammation consists of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominable from other humours according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO DENOMINATE. v. a. [denomino, Latin.] To name; to give a name to.

The commendable purpose of consecration being not of every one understood, they have been construed as though they had superstitiously meant either that those places, which were denominated of angels and saints, should serve for the worship of so glorious creatures: or else those glorious creatures for defence, protection, and patronage of such places.
Hooker.

Predestination is destructive to all that is established among men, to all that is most precious to human nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, understanding and will; for what use can we have of our understandings, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? And if we act not voluntarily, what exercise have we of our wills?
Hammond.

DENOMINATION. n. s. old Fr. denomination, Kellham; denominatio, Latin.] A name given to a thing, which commonly marks some principal quality of it.

But is there any token, denomination, or monument of the Gauls yet remaining in Ireland, as there is of the Scythians?
Spenser on Ireland.

The liking or disliking of the people gives the denomination of good or bad; but does not really make or constitute it such.
Dryden.

Philosophy, the great idol of the learned part of the Heathen world, has divided it into many sects and denominations; as Stoicks, Peripateticks, Epicureans, and the like.
South.

All men are sinners: the most righteous among us must confess ourselves to come under that denomination.
Rogers.

DENOMINATIVE. adj. [from denominate.]

1. That which gives a name; that which confers a distinct appellation.

2. That which obtains a distinct appellation. This would be more analogically denominable.

The least denominative part of time is a minute, the greatest integer being a year.
Cocker's Arithm.

DENOMINATOR. n. s. [from denominate.] The giver of a name; the person or thing that causes an appellation.

Both the seas of one name should have one common denominator.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

DENOMINATOR of a Fraction, is the number below the line, shewing the nature and quality of the parts which any integer is supposed to be divided into: thus in $\frac{1}{8}$, the denominator shews you that the integer is supposed to be divided into 8 parts or half quarters, and the numerator 6 shews that you take 6 of such parts, i. e. three quarters of the whole. Harris.

When a single broken number or fraction hath for its denominator a number consisting of an unit, in the first place towards the left hand, and nothing but cyphers from the unit towards the right hand, it is then more aptly and rightly called a decimal fraction. Cocker's Arithmetick.

Denominator of any proportion is the quotient arising from the division of the antecedent by the consequent: thus 6 is the denominator of the proportion that 30 hath to 5, because 5) 30 (6. This is also called the exponent of the proportion or ratio. Harris.

DENOTABLE.* adj. [Lat. denoto.] Capable of being marked or distinguished.

In hot regions, and more spread and digested flowers, a sweet savour may be allowed, denotable from several human expressions. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 25.

To DENOTATE.* See To DENOTE.

DENOTATION.* n. s. [denotatio, Latin.] The act of denoting.

Mind and conscience are distinguished — that former being properly the denotation of the faculty merely speculative; or intellectual; this latter, of the practical judgement. Hammond, of Conscience.

DENOTATIVE.* adj. [from denote] Having the power to denote or shew. Cotgrave in V. Designatif.

What are the effects of sickness? the alteration it produces is so denotative, that a person is known to be sick by those who never saw him in health. Letters upon Physiognomy, p. 121.

To DENOTE.* v. a. [denoto, Latin. Some of our old vocabularies give to denotate instead of to denote. V. Bullekar and Cockeram.] To mark; to be a sign of; to betoken; to shew by signs: as, a quick pulse denotes a fever.

Thy wild acts denote

The unreasonable fury of a beast. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

You shall observe him;

And his own courses will denote him so,

That I may save my speech. Shakspeare, Othello.

DENOTEMENT.* n. s. [from denote.] Sign; indication; token.

They are close denotements, working from the heart, That passion cannot rule. Shakspeare, Othello.

DENOUEMENT.* n. s. [French.] The discovery of the plot of a drama, or plan of a poem. Introduced into our language by modern critics.

The denouement, as a pedantic disciple of Bossu would call it, of this poem, [the Rape of the Lock] is well conducted.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope, i. 250.

To DENOUNCE.* v. a. [denuncio, Latin; denoncer, French.]

1. To threaten by proclamation.

I denounce unto you this day that ye shall surely perish. Deut. xxxi. 18.

He of their wicked ways shall them admonish, denouncing wrath to come On their impentence. Milton, P. L.

They impose their wild conjectures for laws upon others, and denounce war against all that receive them not.

Dev. of Piety.

2. To threaten by some outward sign or expression.

He ended frowning, and his look denounc'd Desperate revenge, and battle dangerous To less than gods. Milton, P. L.

The sea grew white, the rolling waves from far, Like heralds, first denounce the wat'ry war. Dryden.

3. To give information against; to delate; to accuse publicly.

DEN

Archdeacons ought to propose parts of the New Testament to be learned by heart by inferior clergymen, and denounce such as are negligent. Ayliffe, Paragon.

DENOUNCEMENT.* n. s. [from denounce.] The act of proclaiming any menace; the proclamation of intended evil; denunciation.

False is the reply of Cain upon the denouncement of his curse, My iniquity is greater than can be forgiven. Brown.

Hooker would fain have the denouncement referred to the particular precept going before. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. i.

DENOUNCER.* n. s. [from denounce.] And old Fr. denuncer. One that declares some menace.

These illiterate denouncers never paralleled so much of any age as would contribute to the title of a century.

Milton, Observ. Art. of Peace, betw. E. of Orm. and Irish.

Here comes the sad denouncer of my fate,

To toll the mournful knell of separation. Dryden.

DENSE.* adj. [dense, old Fr. densus, Latin.]

Close; compact; approaching to solidity; having small interstices between the constituent particles.

The cause of cold is the density of the body, for all dense bodies are colder than most other bodies, as metals, stone, glass; and they are longer in heating than softer bodies.

Bacon.

In the air the higher you go, the less it is compressed, and consequently the less dense it is; and so the upper part is exceedingly thinner than the lower part which we breathe.

Locke.

To DENSHIRE.* v. a. A barbarous term of husbandry.

Burning of land, or burnbating, is commonly called denshiring, that is, Devonshiring or Denshigh-shiring, because most used or first invented there.

Mortimer.

DENSITY.* n. s. [densitas, Latin.] Closeness; compactness; close adhesion, or near approach of parts.

Whilst the densest of metals, gold, if foliated, is transparent, and all metals become transparent if dissolved in menstruums or vitrified, the opacity of white metals ariseth not from their density alone.

Newton.

The air within the vessels being of a less density, the outward air would press their sides together; and being of a greater density, would expand them so as to endanger the life of the animal.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DENT.* n. s. A stroke, or blow; and also a mark made by a blow. See DINT.

DENTAL.* adj. [dental, old Fr. dentalis, Lat.]

1. Belonging or relating to the teeth.

Parts similar, dissimilar, — muscular, guttural, dental.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. iii. 6.

2. [In grammar.] Pronounced principally by the agency of the teeth.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural.

Bacon.

The dental consonants are easy, therefore let them be next;

first the labial-dentals, as also the lingua-dentals. Holder.

DENTAL.* n. s. A small shell fish.

Two small black and shining pieces, seem, by the shape, to have been formed in the shell of a dental.

The modillions or dentelli, make a noble sort by graceful projections.

Spekman, No. 415.

DENTICULATION.* n. s. [denticulatus, Latin.] The state of being set with small teeth, or prominencies resembling teeth, like those of a saw.

He omits the denticulation of the edges of the bill, or those small oblique incisions made for the better retention of the prey.

Grew, Muscum.

D E N

DENTICULATED. adj. [denticulatus, Lat.] Set with small teeth.

DENTIFRICE. n. s. [dens and frico, Lat.] A powder made to scour the teeth.

Is this grey powder a good dentifrice? B. Jonson.

The shells of all sorts of shell-fish, being burnt, obtain a caustick nature: most of them, so ordered and powdered, make excellent dentifrices. Grew, Muscum.

To DENTIFY. v. a. [denteler, French.] To have the teeth renewed. Not in use.

The old countess of Desmond, who lived till she was seven score, did dentify twice or thrice, casting her old teeth, and others coming in their place. Bacon.

DENTIST. n. s. [dentiste, Fr. from dens, Lat.] One who professes to preserve the beauty, and to heal the diseases, of the teeth. A modern word both in French and English.

DENTITION. n. s. [dentitio, Lat.]

1. The act of breeding the teeth.

2. The time at which children's teeth are bred.

Dentition and location are for the most part contemporaries; toothings and speaking usually come and go together; the child cannot speak, till he put forth his teeth, neither can he speak well, when he sheds them, nor leave his lisping till they come again. Smith, Portr. of Old Age, (1666) p. 140.

To DENUATE. v. n. [denudo, Lat.] To divest; to strip; to lay naked.

Denude us of all, when that may fit us for our prizes. Hammond's Works, iv. 489.

I have put off righteousness like a garment, denuded myself of all that looks like holiness. Ibid. p. 515.

Till he has denuded himself of all incumbrances, he is unqualified. Decay of Piety.

DENUATION. n. s. [Fr. denudation, Cotgrave.]

The act of stripping or making naked.

There must be a denudation of the mind from all those images of our phantasy, how pleasing soever, that may carry our thoughts aside from those better objects.

Rp. Hall, Devout Soul, § 10.

To DENUDE. v. a. [denudo, Lat.] To strip; to make naked; to divest.

Not so much as a treaty can be obtained, unless we would denude ourself of all force to defend us from a visible strength marching against us. K. Charles, in Clarendon, B. vi.

If in summer-time you denude a vine-branch of its leaves, the grapes will never come to maturity. Itay on the Creation.

The eye, with the skin of the eye-lid, is denuded, to shew the muscle. Sharp, Surg.

To DENUNCIATE. v. a. [Lat. denuncio.] To denounce; to threaten.

The vicinage of Europe had not only a right, but an indispensable duty, and an exigent interest, to denunciate this new work before it had produced the danger we have so severely felt. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

DENUNCIATION. n. s. [denunciatio, Lat.]

1. The act of denouncing; the proclamation of a threat; a public menace.

In a denunciation or indictment of a war, the war is not confined to the place of the quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon. Christ tells the Jews, that, if they believe not, they shall die in their sins: did they never read those denunciations?

Ward.

Midst of these denunciations, and notwithstanding the warning before me, I commit myself to lasting durance. Congreve.

2. Publication; sanction.

She is fast my wife,

Save that we do the denunciation lack

Of publick order. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

This publick and reiterated denunciation of banns before matrimony, is an institution required and kept both by all the churches of the Roman correspondence, and by all the Reformed. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 9.

D E O

DENU'NCIATOR. n. s. [from denuncio, Lat.]

1. He that proclaims any threat.

2. He that lays an information against another.

The denunciator does not make himself a party in judgement, as the accuser does. Ayliffe's Purgation.

To DENY. v. a. [denier, Fr.; denego, Lat.]

1. To contradict; opposed to affirm.

2. To contradict an accusation; not to confess.

Sarah denied, saying, I laughed not; for she was afraid. Genesis.

3. To refuse; not to grant.

My young boy

Hath an aspect of intercession, which

Great nature cries — deny not. Shakespeare.

Ah, charming fair, said I,

How long can you my bliss and your's deny? Dryden.

4. To abnegate; to disown.

It shall be therefore a witness unto you, lest you deny your God. Josh. xxiv. 27.

5. To renounce; to disregard; to treat as foreign or not belonging to one.

The best sign and fruit of denying ourselves, is mercy to others. Sprat.

When St. Paul says, If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable; he considers Christians as denying themselves in the pleasures of this world, for the sake of Christ. Atterbury.

To DEOBSSTRUCT. v. a. [deobstruo, Lat.] To clear from impediments; to free from such things as hinder a passage.

It is a singular good wound-herb, useful for deobstructing the pores of the body. Mare, Ant. against Atheism.

Such as carry off the faeces and mucus, deobstruct the mouth of the lacteals, so as the chyle may have a free passage into the blood. Arbuthnot on Diet.

DEO'BSTRUENT. adj. [deobstruens, Lat.] Having the medicinal power to resolve viscidities, or to open by any means the animal passages.

All soaps are attenuating and deobstruent, resolving viscid substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DEO'BSTRUENT.* n. s. [from the adjective.] A medicine that has the power to resolve viscidities, or to open by any means the animal passages.

It is a powerful and safe deobstruent in cachectick and hysterick cases. Bp. Berkeley, Sins, § 6.

DEODAND. n. s. [old Fr. deodande, from the Lat. Deo dandum.] A thing given or forfeited to God for the pacifying his wrath, in case of any misfortune, by which any Christian comes to a violent end, without the fault of any reasonable creature; as, if a horse should strike his keeper, and so kill him; if a man, in driving a cart, and endeavouring to rectify something about it, should fall so as the cart-wheels, by running over him, should press him to death; if one should be felling a tree, and giving warning to company by, when the tree were near falling, to look to themselves, and any of them should nevertheless be slain by the fall of the tree: in these cases the horse, the cart-wheel, cart and horses, and the tree, are to be given to God; that is, sold and distributed to the poor, for an expiation of this dreadful event, though occasioned by unreasonable, senseless, and dead creatures: and though this be given to God, yet is it forfeited to the king by law, as executor in this case, to see the price of these distributed to the poor. Cruvel.

If a horse, or other animal, of his own motion, kill as well an infant, as an adult; or if a cart run over him; they shall in either case be forfeited as deadends, for this additional reason; that such misfortunes are in part owing to the negligence of the owner, and therefore he is properly punished by such forfeiture. Blackstone.

TO DEONERATE.* v. a. [Lat. deonero.] Our old word for exonerate, which is of no great age in our language. See TO EXONERATE.] To unload. Cockram.

TO DEOPPILATE. v. a. [de and oppilo, Latinf.] To obstruct; to clear a passage; to free from obstructions.

DEOPPILATION. n. s. [from deoppilate.] The act of clearing obstructions; the removal of whatever obstructs the vital passages.

Though the grosser parts be excluded again, yet are the dissoluble parts extracted, whereby it becomes effectual in deoppilations. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DEOPPILATIVE. † adj. [old Fr. deoppilatif.] Deobstruent.

A physician prescribed him a deoppilative and purgative apozem. Harvey.

DEORDINATION.* n. s. [Lat. de and ordinatio.] Disorder.

All things were of that kind, as did gather shew the frailty of nature than a deordination or reproach of it. Bacon, Collect. of Q. Elizabeth.

TO DEOSCULATE.* v. a. [Lat. deoscular. Dr. Johnson has given deosculatio, but overlooked the old verb.] To kiss. Cockram.

DEOSCUATION. n. s. [deosculatio, Lat.] The act of kissing.

We have an enumeration of the several acts of worship required to be performed to images, viz. processions, genuflections, thurifications, and deosculations. Stillingfleet.

TO DEPAINT. † v. a. [Fr. depeindre, depeint, depeint, from the Lat. depingo. Chaucer writes our word depeint; and Spenser, in his elder poetry, depeinct. See TO DEPEINCT.]

1. To picture; to describe by colours; to paint; to shew by a painted resemblance.

He did unwilling worship to the saint,
That on his shield depeinct he did see. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To describe. Indoet.

As Egean hath mournfully depeinct the civil wars of Pompey and Cæsar, so hath Daniell the civil wars of York and Lancaster. Mercer, Wit's Treasury, (1593.)

All this which I have depeinct to thee, are mirths and rousers of my mind. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quir. iii. 6.

Such ladies fair would I depaint
In roundelay, or sonnet quaint. Gay.

DEPAINTER.* n. s. [from depaint.] A painter. Obsolete.

5. To desist from a resolution or opinion.

His majesty prevailed not with any of them to depart from the most unreasonable of all their demands. Clarendon.

6. To die; to de cease; to leave the world.

As her soul was in departing; for she died. Gen. iii. 18.

Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy words. Luke, ii. 29.

7. To part with; to dispose of. Not now in use.

John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed with a part. Shakespeare, K. John.

He, that *depart*s with his own honesty

For vulgar praise, doth it too dearly buy. B. Jonson, Epigr.

TO DEPART. † v. a.

1. To quit; to leave; to retire from.

You have had dispatch in private by the consul;

You are will'd by him this evening,

To depart Rome.

B. Jonson.

2. To leave the world; not in use, Dr. Johnson says.

He had overlooked our liturgy.

We also bless Thy Holy Name for all thy servants departed this life in thy faith and fear. Communion Service.

As you wish Christian peace to souls departed,

Stand these poor people's friend.

Shakespeare.

TO DEPART. † v. a. [old Fr. departir, from the Lat. partiri, or dispartire.] To divide; to separate: a chymical term, Dr. Johnson says, without any further notice of the word. But the fact is, that this is one of our oldest verbs, in the usual sense of divide or separate. Wicliffe, Gower, and Chaucer, thus employ the word; and many later writers. It was not in use, or at least was not thus understood, soon after the Restoration. For, among the exceptions of the dissenters against our book of Common Prayer in 1661, the word, in the old marriage service, is thus branded: "Till death us depart:" This word depart is here improperly used!"

See the Exceptions in an Account of the Review, &c. of our Liturgy, 4to. 1661.

The word was extended into the present form do

part.

1. To separate; to part.

I N. take thee N. to my wedded wyf, to have and to holde fro this day forward, for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer; in sickness and in hele, tyl deth us depart.

Salisbury Manual, (1555), fol. 38. b.

The lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death depart thee and me. Ruth, i. 17. (Transl. 1378.)

And the deepe wound more deepe engor'd her heart,

That nought but death her dolour might depart.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. iv. 6.

2. To distribute.

The Holy Ghost departeth [gittes] amonge all churche.

Liber Primus, fol. 43.

DEPART. † n. s. [depart, Fr.]

1. The act of going away; now departure.

But that lewd lover did the most lament

For her depart.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 20.

I had in charge, at my depart from France,

To marry princess Margaret.

Shakespeare.

Since his depart, his sports
Though craving seriousness, and skill, past lightly
His careless execution. Beaum. and M. Two Noble Kinsmen.

2. Death.

When your grave father breathed his latest gasp,
Tidings, as swiftly as the post could run,
Were brought me of your loss, and his depart.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. [With chymists.] An operation so named, because the particles of silver are departed or divided from gold, or other metals when they were before melted together in the same mass, and could not be separated any other way.

Dict.

The chymists have a liquor called water of depart. Bacon.

DEPARTER. n. s. [from depart.] One that refines metals by separation.

DEPARTING. n. s. [from depart.]

1. A going away.

By faith Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel. Heb. xi. 22.

2. Separation.

Edw. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy leave?

Rich. A deadly groan, like life and death's departing.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. III.

DEPARTMENT. n. s. [departement, Fr. from dispartio, Lat.]

1. Separate allotment; province or business assigned to a particular person: a French term.

The Roman fleets, during their command at sea, had their several stations and departments: the most considerable was the Alexandrian fleet, and the second was the African.

Arbuthnot.

2. A division or extent of country under the same jurisdiction. This is an old French expression.

The ancient provinces of this kingdom [France] have been divided by the national assembly into eighty-three departments.

Guthrie, France.

The deputies of the departement choose their deputies to the national assembly.

Burke, on the Fr. Revolution.

DEPARTMENTAL. adj. [from department.] Belonging to a department, or province.

The game, played by the revolutionists in 1789 with respect to the French guards of the unhappy king, was now played against the departmental guards, called together for the protection of the revolutionists.

Burke, Def. to Brissot's Address.

DEPARTURE. n. s. [from depart.]

1. A going away.

For thee, follow

Who needs must know of her departure, and Do'st seem so ignorant, we'll force it from thee
By a sharp torture.

Shakespeare.

What besides

Of sorrow, and dejection, and despair,
Our frailty can sustain, thy tidings bring;
Departure from this happy place.

Milton, P. L.

They were seen not only all the while our Saviour was upon earth, but survived after his departure out of this world.

Addison.

2. Death; decease; the act of leaving the present state of existence.

Happy was their good prince in his timely departure, which barred him from the knowledge of his son's miseries.

Sidney.

3. A forsaking; an abandoning: with from.

The fear of the Lord, and departure from evil, are phrases of like import.

Tillotson.

DEPASCENT. adj. [depascens, Lat.] Feeding.

To DEPASTORE. v. a. [from depascor, Lat.] To eat up; to consume by feeding upon it.

They keep their cattle, and live themselves in bodies pasturing upon the mountains, and removing still to fresh land, as they have depastured the former.

Spenser, on Ireland.

To DEPASTORE. v. n. To feed; to graze. See To PASTURE.

If a man takes in a horse or other cattle to graze, and depasture, in his grounds.

Blackstone.

To DEPAUPERATE. v. a. [depaupero, Latin.] To make poor; to impoverish; to consume.

Bullock, and Cockram.

I cannot exclude hencefrom that change that befalleth the blood and natural humours of the body in the time of age: For they become low, and much depauperated.

Smith, Port. of Old Age, p. 184.

Lining does not depauperate; the ground will last long, and bear large grain.

Mortimer.

Great evacuations, which carry off the nutritious humours, depauperate the blood.

Arbuthnot.

DEPECTIBLE. adj. [from depecto, Lat.] Tough; clammy; tenacious; capable of being extended.

It may be also, that some bodies have a kind of lentor, and are of a more depectible nature than oil; as we see it evident in coloration; for a small quantity of saffron will tinct more than a very great quantity of brasil or wine.

Bacon.

To DEPEINCT. v. a. [depeindre, French.] To depict; to paint; to describe in colours. A word of Spenser, Dr. Johnson says: but Spenser followed the old French spelling, depeinct; as Chaucer followed that of depeint. See To DEPAINT.

The red rose medled with the white yfere,
In either cheek depeincten Evely chere.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. April

DEPECULATION. n. s. [Lat. depeculatio.] A robbing of the commonwealth. See PECULATION.

Cockram.

To DEPEND. v. n. [dependre, Fr. depeyde, Lat.]

1. To hang from.

Now nought but hoaric frost was scene, each branch tears down did send,

Whose dewie drops in isicles upon each bough depend.

Mit. for Mag. p. 355.

From the frozen beard

Long isicles depend, and crackling sounds are heard. Dryden.

From gilded roofs depending lamps display

Nocturnal beams, that emulate the day. Dryden.

There is a chain let down from Jove,

So strong, that from the lower end,

They say, all human things depend.

Swift.

The direful monster was our deserv'd

Two bleeding babes depending at her side.

Pope.

2. To be in a state influenced by some external cause; to live subject to the will of others: with upon.

We work by wit and not by witchcraft,

And wit depends on dilatory time. Shakespeare.

Never be without money, nor depend upon the courtesy of others, which may fail at a pinch.

Bacon.

3. To be in a state of dependence: to retain to others.

Be then *depend*d

Of fifty to disquantity your train;

And the remainder, that shall still depend,

To be such men as may besort your age.

Shakespeare.

4. To be connected with any thing, as with its cause, or something previous.

The peace and happiness of a society depend on the justice and fidelity, the temperance and charity of its members. Rogers.

5. To be in suspense; to be yet undetermined.

By no means be you persuaded to interpose yourself in any cause depending, or like to be depending in any court of justice.

Bacon.

The judge corrupt, the long depending cause,

And doubtful issue, of misconstru'd laws.

Prior.

6. To be fixed with attention.

The hearer on the speaker's mouth depends,

And thus the truest story never ends. Dryden, Virg. Æn. 4.

7. To DEPEND upon. To rely on; to trust to; to rest upon with confidence; to be certain of.

He resolved no more to depend upon the one, or to provoke the other. Clarendon.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog,
Depend upon it — he'll remain in dog. Addison.
I am a stranger to your characters, further than as common fame reports them, which is not to be depend'd upon. Swift.

DEPENDANCE. † } n. s. [old Fr. dependance.]
DEPENDANCY. }

1. The state of hanging down from a supporter.
2. Something hanging upon another.

On a neighb'ring tree descending light,
Like a large cluster of black grapes they show,
And make a long dependance from the bough.

Dryden, Virg. Georg. 4.

3. Concatenation; connexion; relation of one thing to another.

In all sorts of reasoning, the connexion and dependance of ideas should be followed, till the mind is brought to the source on which it bottoms. Locke.

4. State of being at the disposal or under the sovereignty of another: with upon.

Every moment we feel our dependance upon God, and find that we can neither be happy without him, nor think ourselves so. Tillotson.

5. The things or persons of which any man has the dominion or disposal.

Never was there a prince bereaved of his dependances by his council, except where there hath been either an over-greatness in one counsellor, or an over-strict combination in divers. Bacon.

The second natural division of power, is of such men who have acquired large possessions, and consequently dependances; or descend from ancestors, who have left them great inheritances. Swift.

6. Reliance; trust; confidence.

Their dependances on him were drowned in this conceit.

Hooker.

They slept in peace by night,

Secure of bread, as of returning light;
And with such firm dependance on the day,
That need grew pamp'rd, and forgot to pray. Dryden.

7. Accident; that of which the existence presupposes the existence of something else.

Modes I call such complex ideas, which, however compounded, contain not in them the supposition of subsisting by themselves, but are considered as dependances on, or affections of substances; such are the ideas signified by the words triangle, gratitude, murder. Locke.

DEPENDANT. † adj. [old Fr. dependant.]

1. Hanging down.
2. Relating to something previous.
3. In the power of another.

On God, as the most high, all inferior causes in the world are dependant. Hooker.

DEPENDANT. n. s. One who lives in subjection, or at the discretion of another; a retainer.

A great abatement of kindness appears as well in the general dependants, as in the duke himself also, and your daughter. Shakespeare.

For a six-clerk a person recommended a dependant upon him, who paid six thousand pounds ready money. Clarendon.

His dependants shall quickly become his proselytes. South.

DEPENDENCE. † } n. s. [from dependeo, Latn. This DEPENDENCY. } word, with many others of the same termination, are indifferently written with ance or ence, ency or ency, as the authors intended to derive them from the Latin or French.]

1. A thing or person at the disposal or discretion of another.

We invade the rights of our neighbours, not upon account of covetousness, but of ambition, that we may create dependences. Collier on Pride.

2. State of being subordinate, or subject in some degree to the discretion of another; the contrary to sovereignty.

Let me report to him

Your sweet dependency, and you shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to. Shakespeare.

- At their setting out they must have their commission, or letters patent from the king, that so they may acknowledge their dependency upon the crown of England. Bacon.

3. That which is not principal; that which is subordinate.

We speak of the sublunary worlds, this earth, and its dependencies, which rose out of a chaos about six thousand years ago. Burnet's Theory.

4. Concatenation; connexion; rise of consequents from premises.

Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense;
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As ne'er I heard in madness. Shakespeare.

5. Relation of any thing to another, as of an effect to its cause.

I took pleasure to trace out the cause of effects, and the dependence of one thing upon another in the visible creation.

Burnet, Theory.

6. Trust; reliance; confidence.

The expectation of the performances of our desire, is that we call dependence upon him for help and assistance. Stillingfleet.

DEPENDENT. adj. [dependens, Latn. This, as many other words of like termination, is written with ent or ant, as they are supposed to flow from the Latin or French.] Hanging down.

In the time of Charles the Great, and long since, the whole furs in the tails were dependent; but now that fashion is left, and the spots only worn, without the tails. Peacock.

DEPENDENT. n. s. [dependens, Lat.] One subordinate; one at the discretion or disposal of another.

We are indigent, defenceless beings; the creatures of his power and the dependents of his providence. Rogers.

DEPENDENT. † n. s. [from depend.] A dependant; one that reposes on the kindness or power of another.

What shalt thou expect,
To be dependant on a thing that leans?

Shakespeare.

The absolute stoical dependant on fate may starve for want of industry. Hammond, Pract. Catechism, iii. § 5.

I have neither followers, nor dependants. Swift to Lady B. G. L. cccxvii.

DEPERDITELY. * adj. [Lat. deperditus.] In a lost or ruined manner. See DEPERDITION.

The most deperditely wicked of all others, in whom was the root of wickedness. Duan King, Sermon (1608), p. 17.

DEPERDITION. † n. s. [Fr. deperdition, Cotgrave; from the Lat. deperditus.] Loss; destruction.

It may be unjust to place all efficacy of gold in the non-omission of weights, or deperdition of any ponderous particles. Brown.

A continual deperdition and reparation of the matter by nutrition and action. Ross on Sir K. Digby.

To DEPHLEGM. } v. a. [dephlegmo, low Lat.]
To DEPHLEGMATE. } To clear from phlegm, or aqueous insipid matter.

We have sometimes taken spirit of salt, and carefully dephlegmed it. Boyle.

DEPHLEGMATION. n. s. [from dephlegma.] An operation which takes away from the phlegm any spirituous fluid by repeated distillation, till it is at length left all behind. Quincy.

In divers cases it is not enough to separate the aqueous parts by dephlegmation; for some liquors contain also an unexpected quantity of small corpuscles, of somewhat an earthy nature, which, being associated with the saline ones, do clog and blunt them, and thereby weaken their activity. Boyle.

DEPLEGMENT. n. s. [from deplegm.] The quality of being freed from phlegm or aqueous matter.

The proportion betwixt the coralline solution and the spirit of wine, depends so much upon the strength of the former liquor, and the deplegmedness of the latter, that it is scarce possible to determine generally and exactly what quantity of each ought to be taken. Boyle.

To DEPICT. v. a. [depingo depictum, Lat.]

1. To paint: to portray; to represent in colours.

The cowards of Lacedæmon depicted upon their shields the most terrible beasts they could imagine. Bp. Taylor.

2. To describe; to represent an action to the mind.

When the distractions of a tumult are sensibly depicted, every object and every occurrence are so presented to your view, that while you read, you seem indeed to see them. Felton.

To DEPICTURE.  v. a.* [from de, Lat. and picture, v.]

To represent in colours.

They crackt spices the glass-windows, wherein the effigies of our Blessed Saviour hanging on the cross, or any one of his saints, was depicted. Waver, Funer. Monum.

'Twas paint, 'twas life! and sure to piercing eyes

The warrior's face depicted Henry's mien.

Shenstone, Love and Honour.

To DEPILATE.  v. a.* [Lat. depilo.] To pull off hair. Cockeram.

DEPILATION.  n. s.* [Lat. depilatio.] A pulling off the hair. Dryden uses this word.

DEPILATORY.  n. s.* [Fr. depilatoire, n. s.] Any ointment, salve, or water, which takes away hair. Cotgrave.

Bullockar, and Cockeram.

To DEPLORE. † v. a. [deploror, Fr. deploro, Lat.]

To lament; to bewail; to wail; to mourn; to bemoan; to express sorrow.

Visit by night your lady's chamber-window
With some sweet consort: to their instruments
Tune a deploring duple; the night's dead silence
Will well become such sweet complaining grievance.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

But chaste Diana who his death deplor'd,

With Æsculapian herbs his life restor'd.

Dryden.

If Arcite thus deplore

His sufferings; yet Palemon suffers more.

Dryden.

DEPLO'REDLY.  adv.* [from the participle deplor'd.]

Contemptibly; in a manner to excite contempt.

To be deploredly old, and affectedly young, is not only a great folly, but a gross deformity. 'Tis ridiculous to spend much of a moment's remnant in contending with the invincible wrinkles and irreparable ruins of old age, which nothing but a vizard can quite hide, or a miracle can wholly overcome.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 72.

DEPLO'REMENT.  n. s.* [from deploro.] A weeping; a lamenting. Cockeram.

DEPLO'ER. n. s. [from deploro.] A lamenter; a mourner; one that laments.

To DEPLOY.  v. a.* [Fr. déployer.] A military word of modern times, hardly wanted in our language; for it is, literally, to display. A column of troops is deployed, when the divisions spread wide, or open out.

DEPLUMATION. † n. s. [deplumation, Fr. deplumatio, Lat.]

1. A pluming, or plucking off the feathers. Cotgrave.

2. [In surgery.] A swelling of the eyelids, accompanied with the fall of the hairs from the eye-brows. Philips.

To DEPLUME. † v. a. [de and pluma, Lat.] To strip of its feathers.

At every new change and choice, the emperor was deplumed of some of his feathers, until in the end he was made naked of authority. Howard, Answ. to Dissem. 603, ch. 5.

Their wings deplum'd for starting from them.

B. Johnson, Underwoods.

To DEPO'NE. v. a. [depono, Lat.]

1. To lay down as a pledge or security.

2. To risque upon the success of an adventure.

On this I would depone

As much, as any cause I've known.

Hudibras.

DEPO'NENT. † n. s. [from depono, Lat.]

1. One that deposes his testimony in a court of justice; an evidence; a witness. See DEPOSITION.

Deposition is the testimony of a witness set down in writing, by way of answers to interrogatories exhibited in chancery, where such witness is called a deponent. Cowt.

2. [In grammar.] Such verbs as have no active voice are called deponents, and generally signify action only; as scitor, I confess.

Clark's Latin Grammar.

DEPO'NENT.  adv.* Applied to particular verbs in Latin. See the substantive.

A verb deponent endeth in r, like a passive; and yet, in signification, is but either active or neuter. Billy.

To DEPOPULATE. v. a. [depopuler, Lat.] To unpeople; to lay waste; to destroy inhabited countries.

Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself?

Shakespeare.

He turned his arms upon unarmed and unprovided people, to spoil only and depopulate, contrary to the laws both of war and peace.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

A land exhausted to the last remains,
Depopulated towns and driven plains.

Dryden.

Grim Death, in different shapes,
Depopulates the nations, thousands fall
His victims.

Philips.

To DEPOPULATE. v. n. To become dispeopled.

This is not the place to enter into an inquiry, whether the country be depopulating or not.

Goldsmith.

DEPOPULATION. n. s. [from depopulate.] The act of unpeopling; havock; waste; destruction of mankind.

O poore and miserable citie, what sundry torments, exci-sions, subversions, depopulations, and other evil adventures, hath hapned unto thee, since thou wert bereft of that noble court of sapience!

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 197.

How did'st thou grieve then, Adam! to behold
The end of all thy offspring, end so sad,

Depopulation! This another flood,
Of tears and sorrow a flood, thee also drown'd,
And sunk thee as thy sons.

Milton, P. L.

Remote thou hear'st the dire effect of war,
Depopulation.

Philips.

DEPOPULATOR. n. s. [from depopulate.] A dis-peopler; a destroyer of mankind; a waster of inhabited countries.

Our wry depopulators allege for their doings the king's and country's good; and we will believe them, when they can persuade us, that their private coffers are the king's exchequer.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 237.

To DEPORT. v. a. [deporter, Fr.] To carry; to demean; to behave: it is used only with the reciprocal pronoun.

Cyprian said to the dames of his time, that it was not enough for them to keep themselves from being corrupted by others' solicitations, unless they took care so to dress and deport themselves, that they might not be occasions of raising wanton thoughts in the beholders.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 247.

Let an ambassador deport himself in the most graceful manner before a prince.

Pope.

DEPORT. n. s. [from the verb.] Demeanour; grace of attitude; behaviour; deportment.

She Delia's self

In wit surpass'd, and goddess-like deport.

Milton, P. L.

Of middle age one rising, eminent

In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong.

Milton, P. L.

DEPORTATION. n. s. [deportatio, Lat.]

1. Transportation; exile into a remote part of the dominion, with prohibition to change the place of residence.

2. Exile in general.

An aljurion, which is a deportation for ever into a foreign land, was anciently with us a civil death.

Ayliffe.

DEPORTMENT. n. s. [deportement, Fr.]

1. Conduct; management; manner of acting.

I will but sweep the way with a few notes, touching the duke's own deportment in that island.

Wotton.

2. Demeanour; behaviour.

The coldness of his temper, and the gravity of his deportment, carried him safe through many difficulties, and he lived and died in a great station.

Swift.

DEPOSABLE. adj. [from depose.] Capable of being taken away.

Hereafter they shall be only keepers of the great seal, which, for title and office, are deposable; but they say, the lord chancellor's title is indelible.

Howell, Lett. i. iv. 176.

DEPOSAL. n. s. [from depose.] The act of depriving a prince of sovereignty. A modern word, but more distinct than deposition. See DEPOSITION.

The short interval between the deposal and death of princes is become proverbial.

Fox, Hist. of James II. p. 14.

A difficulty recently much increased by the captivity and deposal of the head of your church.

Lord Grenville, Lett. to Lord Fingall, 1810.

To DEPOSE. v. a. [deposer, Fr. Cotgrave; from dépono, Lat.]

1. To lay down; to lodge; to let fall.

Its shores are neither advanced one jot further into the sea, nor its surface raised by additional mud deposed upon it by the yearly inundations of the Nile.

Woodward.

2. To degrade from a throne or high station.

First, of the king: what shall of him become?

The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose.

Shakespeare.

May your sick fame still languish till it die;

Then, as the greatest curse that I can give,

Unpitied, be depos'd, and after live.

Dryden.

Deposed consuls, and captive princes, might have preceded him.

Tatler.

3. To take away; to divest; to strip of: not in use.

You may my glory and my state depose,

But not my griefs; still am I king of those.

Shakespeare.

4. To lay aside.

Our Lord is the Saviour of all men, as having effected that Almighty God hath deposed his wrath towards all mankind.

Barrow, Serm. vol. iii. S. 40.

5. To lay up as a security.

To depose my mind, as plainly as I may, safely in your breast.

Wotton, Rem. p. 481.

6. To give testimony; to attest.

'Twas he that made you to depose;

Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.

Shakespeare.

It was usual for him that dwelt in Southwark, or Tothill-street, to depose the yearly rent or valuation of lands lying in the North, or other remote part of the realm.

Bacon.

7. To examine any one on his oath. Not now in use.

According to our law,

Depose him in the justice of his cause.

Shakespeare.

To DEPOSE. v. n. To bear witness.

Love straight stood up and deposed, a lie could not come from the mouth of Zelmane.

Sidney.

DEPOSER. n. s. [from depose.] One who de-poses or degrades another from a throne or high station.

Then through the casement ventur'd so much face,

As kings depos'd shew, when through gates they peep

To see deposers to their crowning pass.

Davenant, Gondibert, iii. 3.

DEPOSING. n. s. [from depose.] The act of dethroning.

The persecuting bulls, interdicts, excommunications, de-posings, and such like, published and acted by them.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 17.

There should'st thou find one heinous article,

Containing the deposing of a king.

Shakespeare, K. Rich. II.

To DEPOSIT. v. a. [old Fr. depositer, Cot-grave; from depositum, Lat.] We write our word deposit. Dr. Johnson adds a final e. Lord Herbert uses depositate for this verb, Hen. VIII. p. 21.]

1. To lay up; to lodge in any place.

The eagle got leave here to deposit her eggs.

L'Estrange.

Dryden wants a poor square foot of stone, to shew where the ashes of one of the greatest poets on earth are deposited.

Garth.

When the vessels were open, and the insects had free access to the aliment within them. Redi diligently observed, that no other species were produced, but of such as he saw go in and feed, and deposit their eggs there, which they would readily do in all putrefaction. Bentley, Sermon, iv.

2. To lay up as a pledge, or security.
3. To place at interest.

God commands us to return as to him, to the poor, his gifts, out of mere duty and thankfulness; not to deposit them with him, in hopes of meriting by them! Sprat.

4. To lay aside.

It once again deposits its old colour and consistence, and so at length becomes perfectly changed into that true liquor of life, which is called blood.

Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 107.

[He] the second time deposited his conjugal intendments, and thenceforth courted and espoused, what he preserved inviolate, unto his death, the more eminent perfection of spotless virgin chastity. Roll, Life of Hammond, sect. 2.

DEPOSIT.† n. s. [depositum, Latin.] This Latin word was employed by us, early in the seventeenth century, as appears by the vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullekar, to denote a pledge or surety. Depositum continued to be so used till late in the last century.]

1. Any thing committed to the trust and care of another.

Trustees for the sacred deposit of the monarchy. Burke.

They have guarded this precious deposit of legal and constitutional liberty with care. Hurd.

2. A pledge; a pawn; a thing given as a security.

The spoils of the Macedonian conquest were the first deposit on which the [Roman] bank was established.

Pownall on Antiq. p. 110.

3. The state of a thing pawned or pledged.

They had since Marseilles, and fairly left it: they had the other day the Valtoline, and now have put it in deposit. Bacon.

DEPOSITARY.† n. s. [depositaire, Fr. depositarius, Latin.] One with whom any thing is lodged in trust.

I gave you all,

—Made you my guardians, my depositaries;

But kept a reservation to be follow'd

With such a number.

Shakespeare.

An honourable arbitrator, and a faithful depositary of the nuptial constitutions. Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded.

They themselves, [the Jews,] are the depositaries of these and all the other prophecies, which tend to their own confusion. Addison, Spectator, No. 495.

DEPOSITING.† n. s. [from To deposit.] A laying aside.

The difficulty will be to persuade the depositing of those lusts, which have, by, I know not what fascination, so endeared themselves. Decay of Chr. Piety.

DEPOSITION.† n. s. [from depositio, Lat.]

1. The act of giving publick testimony.

If you will examine the veracity of the fathers by those circumstances usually considered in depositions, you will find them strong on their side. Sir K. Digby.

A witness is obliged to swear, otherwise his deposition is not valid. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. The act of degrading a prince from sovereignty.

His [James the second's] former conduct, and the passage of Charles the second's reign, might rankle still at the hearts of some men, who could not be set to account among the causes of his deposition. Bolingbroke on the Study of Hist. Lett. 2.

3. [In canon law.] Deposition properly signifies a solemn depriving of a man of his clerical orders.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEPOSITORY.† n. s. [from deposite.] The place where any thing is lodged. Depositary is properly used of persons, and depository of places, Dr. Johnson says; who cites an example from Addison, in which, he says, the words are confounded. But, in truth, Addison's word is not depository, but depository; and I have carried the passage to the latter word. Dr. Johnson had been misled by a bad edition of the Spectator. But the word has been confounded in modern times.

Becket might have been justifiable, perhaps even laudable, for his steady maintenance of the privileges, which his church and order had acquired by the care of his predecessors, and of which he by his place was the depository.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. iii. 6.

DEPOSITUM.† n. s. [Latin.] That which is entrusted to the care of another; a deposit. See DEPOSIT.

Compare the tales of the elder Pliny with the Pseudodoxia Epidemica of Dr. Brown, and you will be surprized to find with what zeal the sacred depositum of error has been transmitted from age to age. Warburton on Prodiges, p. 5.

The secret — he delivered down to his successors in religious politics — a depositum, whereby his memory became so singularly endeared to them. Conventry, Phil. to Hyd. Cmo. 4.

DEPOT.† n. s. [French, depôt; from the Lat. depositem.] A place, in which stores are deposited for the use of an army; or where recruits for an army are assembled; applied either to barracks, or magazines. A modern word.

The islands of Guernsey and Jersey are at present (1794) the great depots of this kingdom. Brit. Crit. 1794, p. 203.

DEPRAVATION. n. s. [depravatio, Lat.]

1. The act of making any thing bad; the act of corrupting; corruption.

The three forms of government have their several perfections, and are subject to their several depravations: however, few states are ruined by defect in their institution, but generally by corruption of manners. Swift.

2. The state of being made bad; degeneracy; depravity.

We have a catalogue of the blackest sins that human nature in its highest depravation, is capable of committing. South.

3. Defamation; censure: a sense not now in use.

Stubborn critics are apt, without a theme

For depravation, to square all the sex.

Shakespeare.

TO DEPRAVE.† v. a. [depravo, Lat.]

1. To vitiate; to corrupt; to contaminate.

We admire the providence of God in the continuance of scripture, notwithstanding the endeavours of Infidels to abolish, and the fraudulency of hereticks to deprave the same. Hooker.

Who lives that's not depraved, or depraves?

Shakespeare.

But from me what can proceed,

But all corrupt; both mind and will deprav'd.

Milton, P. L.

A taste which plenty does deprave,

Loaths lawful good, and lawless ill does crave.

Dryden.

2. To misrepresent; to wrest; to defame.

Envy is blind, and can do nothing but deprave and speak ill of virtuous doing.

Barret.

I have heard his doings depraved of some, who did rather of malicious mind, or private grievance, seek to detract from the honour of his deeds, than of any just cause.

Spenser on Ireland.

Lest the same kneeling should by any persons, either out of ignorance and infirmity, or out of malice and obstinacy, be misconstrued and depraved; it is hereby declared, that thereby no adoration is intended, or ought to be done, either unto the sacramental bread and wine there bodily received, or unto any corporal presence of Christ's natural flesh and blood.

Communion Service, Declaration at the End.

Unjustly thou deprav'st it with the name

Of servitude, to serve whom God ordains.

Milton, P. L.

DEPRAVEDLY.* adv. [from the participle depraved.] Corruptedly; in a vitiated manner.

I have lived to behold the highest perversion of that excellent invention; [the press:] the name of his majesty defamed, the honour of parliament depraved; the writings of both depravedly, anticipatively, counterfeitedly imprinted.

Brown, Religio Medici, To the Reader.

DEPRAVEDNESS.† n. s. [from deprave.] Corruption; taint; contamination; vitiated state.

The natural man in this depravedness of estate cannot but offend God. Bp. Hall, Hon. of Marr. Clergy, (1620), p. 70.

What sins do you mean? Our original depravedness, and proneness of our eternal part to all evil. Hammond.

Cruelty — argues not only a depravedness of nature, but also a meanness of courage and imbecility of mind.

Temple, Introduct. Hist. Eng. p. 226.

DEPRÀVEMENT.† n. s. [from deprave.] A vitiated state; corruption.

He maketh men believe, that apparitions are either deceptions of sight, or melancholy depravements of fancy. Brown.

Such an irreligious depravement no longer may be soothed and flattered through custom. Milton, Tetrachordon.

DEPRÀVER.† n. s. [from deprave.] A corrupter; he that causes depravity; he that vilifies.

But I believe you, as I ever knew you,

A glorious talker, and a legend-maker

Of idle tales, and tricks; a depraver

Of your own truth.

Beaumont and Fl. Wild-goose-chase.

Notorious depraviers of the Book of Common Prayer.

Const. and Can. Ecc. 27.

These depraviers of Scripture shall, with glorious assurance, affirm to themselves and their compliers, the wonderful illapses and impulses of the divine spirit, when at the same time they contradict the holy catholic church and themselves; and when also many pretenders to a double portion of the spirit have acted as the eldest sons of Babel.

Puller, Moderat. Ch. of Eng. p. 100.

DEPRÀVING.* n. s. [from To deprave.] The act of traducing or vilifying.

If any parson, vicar, or other whatsoever minister, — shall preach, declare, or speak any thing in the derogation or depraving of the said Book, &c.

Act for the Uniformity of Common Prayer, &c. 1 Eliz. ch. 2.

DEPRÀVITY.† n. s. [from deprave.] Corruption; a vitiated state.

The preacher comes in the name of the great God of heaven and earth. — But his doctrines are received with impatience and disgust; his evidence is weighed in the false balance of prejudice and corruption, with a desire to find it weak and insufficient. And let this fatal prepossession once engage the mind, the clearer the evidence appears, the more offensive must it prove; the more must it be hated, and, of consequence, the more violently opposed: or, should it force its way through all the obstacles of depravity, it may be entertained for a while, but without a permanent and lively influence: Vicious habits and disorders — passions soon rescine their power.

Leland, Sermon on Infidelity.

To confound the notion of virtue and vice, shews as great a depravity in the understanding, as it does in the senses, to confound contrary perceptions.

Tottier, Sermon before the Univ. of Oxf. 1767.

TO DEPRÉCATE.† v. a. [old Fr. deprier, Lat. deprecator.]

1. To beg off; to pray deliverance from; to avert by prayer.

David kneeled upon his knees, to deprecate the captivity of his people. Hemst, Sermon. (1658), p. 204.

In deprecating of evil, we make an humble acknowledgement of guilt, and of God's justice in chastising, as well as clemency, in sparing the guilty. Grew.

Poverty indeed, in all its degrees, men are easily persuaded to deprecate from themselves.

Rogers.

The judgements which we would deprecate, are not removed.

Smalridge.

The Italian entered them in his prayer: amongst the three evils he petitioned to be delivered from, he might have deprecate greater evils. Baker, Reflect. on Learning.

2. To implore mercy of: this is not proper.

At length he sets

Those darts, whose points make gods adore

His might, and deprecate his pow'r.

Prior.

DEPRÉCATION.† n. s. [deprecatio, Lat.]

1. Prayer against evil.

Thy Son himself had a sadness in his soul to death; and he had a reluctance, a deprecation of death, in the approaches thereof; but he had his cordial too, Yet not my will, but thine be done. Doane, Devot. p. 280.

To this purpose is that excellent deprecation, "O God, merciful Father, that despisest not the sighing of a contrite heart, &c."

Bp. Prideaux, Euch. p. 225.

Stertnutation they generally conceived to be a good sign, or a bad one; and so, upon this motion, they commonly used a gratulation for the one, and a deprecation for the other.

Brown.

* I, with leave of speech implor'd,
And humble deprecation, thus reply'd

Milton, P. L.

2. Intreaty; petitioning.

3. An excusing; a begging pardon for.

Alexander of Hales and Bonaventure do maintain, that the power of the keys extends to the remission of faults, by way of intercession only and deprecation, not by imparting any immediate absolution. Bp. Usher, Reply to the Jesuit Malone, p. 87.

All sorts of reconciliation, in the very nature of the thing, suppose a deprecation of, or a satisfaction for, some misery, which first caused a breach between the persons thus to be reconciled.

South, Sermon. v. 465.

DEPRÉCATIVE.† } adj. [from deprecate.] * That DEPRÉCATORY. } serves to deprecate; apologetick: tending to avert evil by supplication.

Bishop Fox understanding that the Scottish King was still discontent, being troubled that the occasion of breaking of the truce should grow from his men, sent many humble and deprecatory letters to the Scottish king to appease him. Bacon.

I confess with shame, it was an unpardonable omission to proceed so far as I have already done, before I had performed the due discourses, expostulatory, supplicatory, or deprecatory, with my good lords the critics. Swift, Tale of a Tub, sect. 3.

DEPRÉCATOR. n. s. [deprecator, Lat.] One that averts evil by petition.

TO DEPRÉCIATE. v. a. [depreciare, Lat.]

1. To bring a thing down to a lower price.

2. To undervalue.

They presumed upon that mercy, which, in all their conversations, they endeavour to depreciate and misrepresent.

Addison.

A. there are none more ambitious of fame, than those who are coiners in poetry, it is very natural for such as have not succeeded in it to depreciate the works of those who have.

Spectator.

DEPRÉCIATION.* n. s. [from depreciate.] The act of lessening the worth or value of any thing.

It is fruitless to inquire which of two acts of duty be the more acceptable, where both are indispensable; and dangerous, it should seem, to form comparisons of two indispensable duties, where the preference of one tends to the depreciation of the other.

Burgess on the Div. of Christ, p. 34.

TO DEPRÉDATE. v. a. [depredari, Lat.]

1. To rob; to pillage.

2. To spoil; to devour.

It maketh the substance of the body more solid and compact, and so less apt to be consumed and depredated by the spirits.

Bacon.

DEPRÉDATION. n. s. [depredatio, Lat.]

1. A robbing; a spoiling.

Commissioners were appointed to determine all matters of piracy and depredations between the subjects of both kingdoms.

Hayward.

The land had never been before so free from robberies and depredations as through his reign. Wotton.

Were there not one who had said, Hitherto shalt thou come and no farther, we might well expect such vicissitudes, such clashing in nature, and such depredations and changes of sea and land. Woodward.

2. Voracity; waste.

The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture; and version of the same into air, appeareth in nothing more visible than in the sudden discharge or vanishing of a little cloud of breath, or vapour from glass, or the blade of a sword, or any such polished body. Bacon.

DEPREDATOR. n. s. [depredator, Lat.] A robber; a devourer.

It is reported, that the shrub called our Lady's Seal, which is a kind of briary, and coleworts, set near together, one or both will die: the cause is, for that they be both great depredators of the earth, and one of them starveth the other. Bacon.

We have three that collect the experiments, which are in all books; these we call depredators. Bacon.

TO DEPREHEND. † v. a. [old Fr. deprehender; Lat. deprehendo.]

1. To catch one; to take unawares; to take in the fact.

That wretched creature, being apprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker.

The woman, apprehended in adultery, she indeed called not strumpet; for she carried her name written in her forehead: She was taken in adultery. Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 244.

Who can believe men upon their own authority, that are once apprehended in so gross and impious an imposture. Mor.

2. To discover; to find out a thing; to come to the knowledge or understanding of.

The motions of the minute parts of bodies, which do so great effects, are invisible, and far not to the eye; but yet they are to be apprehended by experience. Bacon.

We shall not long be quiet; but, uncertain and desultory, leap out of one humour into another, like those whom we must study and apprehend, and so meet and apply ourselves unto them in every mode and disposition.

Farindon's Sermon. (1657,) p. 429.

TO DEPREHEND.  v. n.* To discover.

Surely in the books of Tully men may apprehend, that in him lacked not the knowledge of geometry, or music, or grammar. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 49. b.

DEPREHENSIBLE. † adj. [from deprehend.]

1. That may be caught.

2. That may be understood, or discovered. Dict.

Such [qualities] as are not discernible by sense, or deprehen[sible] by certain experiments.

Sir W. Petty, Advice to Hartlib, (1648,) p. 15.

DEPREHENSIBLENESS. n. s.

1. Capableness of being caught.

2. Intelligibleness; casiness to be understood.

DEPREHENSION. † n. s. [old Fr. deprehension, discovery; Lat. deprehensio.]

1. A catching or taking unawares.

Her deprehension is made an aggravation of her shame.

Bp. Hall, Contemp. The Woman taken in Adultery.

2. A discovery.

TO DEPRESS. † v. a. [from depressus, of deprimo, Lat.]

1. To press, or thrust down.

Unless an age too late, or cold Climate, or years, damp my intended wing

2. To let fall; to let down.

The same thing I have tried by letting a globe rest, and raising or depressing the eye, or otherwise moving it to make the angle of a just magnitude. Newton.

3. To humble; to deject; to sink.

Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty, and conclude that the making any progress in knowledge is above their capacities. Locke.

If we consider how often it breaks the gloom, which is apt to depress the mind, with transient unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure of life. Addison.

Passion can depress or raise
The heavenly, as the human mind. Prior.

DEPRESSION. n. s. [depressio, Lat.]

1. The act of pressing down.

Bricks of a rectangular form, if laid one by another in a level row between supporters sustaining the two ends, all the pieces between will necessarily sink by their own gravity; and much more, if they suffer any depression by other weight above them. Wotton.

2. The sinking or falling in of a surface.

The beams of light are such subtle bodies, that, in respect of them, even surfaces that are sensibly smooth are not exactly so: they have their own degree of roughness, consisting of little protuberances and depressions; and consequently such inequalities may suffice to give bodies different colours, as we see in marble that appears white or black, or red or blue, even when most carefully polished. Boyle.

If the bone be much depressed, and the fissure considerably large, it is then at your choice, whether you will enlarge that fissure, or continue it for the evacuation of the matter, and forbear the use of the trepan; not doubting but a small depression of the bone will either rise, or cast off, by the benefit of nature. Wicman.

3. The act of humbling or abasement.

Depression of the nobility may make a king more absolute, but less safe. Bacon.

DEPRESSION of an Equation [in algebra], is the bringing it into lower and more simple terms by division. Dict.

DEPRESSION of a Star [with astronomers], is the distance of a star from the horizon below, and is measured by the arch of the vertical circle or azimuth, passing through the star, intercepted between the star and the horizon. Dict.

DEPRESSIVE.  adj.* [from To depress.] Lowering; having the power to depress.

Ev'n where the keen depressive north descends.

Johnson, Britannia.

We must pronounce that substance to be ponderous, depressive, and earthy, which such a soul draws with it; and therefore it is burdened by such a clog.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Sm. Poems.

DEPRESSOR.  n. s.* [depressor, Lat.]

1. He that keeps or presses down.

2. An oppressor.

DEPRESSOR. [In anatomy.] A term given to several muscles of the body, whose action is to depress the parts to which they adhere.

DEPRIMENT. adj. [from deprimens, of deprimo, Lat.]

An epithet applied to one of the straight muscles that move the globe or ball of the eye, its use being to pull it downwards.

The exquisite equilibration of all opposite and antagonist muscles is effected partly by the natural posture of the body and the eye, which is the case of the attolent and depriment muscles. Derham.

DEPRIVABLE.  adj.* [from deprive.] Liable to deprivation.

Upon surmise — they gather, that the persons that enjoy them, [the church's grants and tolerations,] possess them wrongfully, and are deprivable at all hours! Hooker, v. § 81.

DEPRIVATION. n. s. [from de and privatio, Lat.]

1. The act of depriving, or taking away from.

2. The state of losing.

DEP

Fools whose end is destruction and eternal deprivation of being. Bentley.

DEPRIVATION [in law], is when a clergyman, as a bishop, parson, vicar, or prebend, is deprived, or deposed from his preferment, for any matter in fact or law. Phillips.

TO DEPRIVE. v. a. [from de and privo, Lat.]

1. To bereave one of a thing; to take it away from him; with of.

God hath deprived her of wisdom, neither hath he imparted to her understanding. Joh. xxxix. 17.

He lamented the loss of an excellent servant, and the horrid manner in which he had been deprived of him. Clarendon.

Now wretched Oedipus, deprived of sight, Led a long death in everlasting night. Pope.

2. To hinder; to debar from: Milton uses it without of.

From his face I shall be hid, deprived

His blessed countenance. Milton, P. L.

The ghosts rejected, are th' unhappy crew,

Deprived of sepulchres and funeral due. Dryden.

3. To release; to free from.

Most happy he,

Whose least delight sufficeth to deprive

Remembrance of all pains which him oppress. Spenser, F. Q.

4. To put out of an office.

A minister, deprived for incontinency, said, that if they deprived him, it should cost an hundred men's lives. Bacon.

DEPRIVEMENT. n. s. [from deprive.] The state of losing.

The widower may lament and condole the unhappiness of so many deprivements; and, having proved the troubles and importunities of the flesh, may find time and leisure for prayer and repentance. Ricaut, Greek Church, p. 360.

DEPRIVER. n. s. [from deprive.] That which takes away or bereaves.

Depriver of those solid joys,

Which sack creates. Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 38.

DEPTH. n. s. [Goth. diupith, "the deep," St. Luke, v. 4. See DEEP. Mr. H. Tooke considers depth as the third person singular of suppan, to sink.]

1. Deepness; the measure of any thing from the surface downwards.

As for men, they had buildings in many places higher than the depth of the water. Bacon.

We have large and deep caves of several depths: the deepest are sunk six hundred fathoms. Bacon.

The left to that unhappy region tends, Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden.

For though, in nature, depth and height Are equally held infinite,

In poetry the height we know, 'Tis only infinite below. Swift.

2. Deep place; not a shoal.

The false tides skim o'er the cover'd lead, And scamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryden.

3. The abyss; a gulph of infinite profundity.

When he prepared the heavens I was there, when he set a compass upon the face of the depth. Prov. viii. 27.

4. The middle or height of a season.

And in the depth of winter, in the night, You plough the raging seas to coasts unknown. Denham.

The earl of Newcastle, in the depth of winter, rescued the city of York from the rebels. Clarendon.

5. Abstruseness; obscurity.

There are greater depths and obscurities in an elaborate and well-written piece of nonsense, than in the most abstruse tract of school divinity. Adison, Whig Examiner.

6. Sagacity. See the seventh sense of DEEP.

As the reporters were but few, they were generally looked upon as persons of little depth and great simplicity; and such qualifications too frequently render men very credulous. South, Sermon, v. 172.

DEPTH of a Squadron or Battalion, is the number of men in the file. Milit. Dict.

TO DEPTHEN. v. a. [diepen, Dutch.] To deepen, or make deeper. Dict.

TO DEPUCLATE. v. a. [depuceler, Fr.] To deflower; to bereave of virginity. Dict.

TO DEPUULSE. v. a. [Lat. depello, depulsum.

Formed like the verb repulse. It is not noticed by Dr. Johnson, who however introduces depulsion, with no other authority than his own; which word, however, is in our old lexicography.] To drive away; to thrust often away. Cockeram.

DEPUSSION. n. s. [depulsio, Lat.] A driving or thrusting away. Cockeram.

DEPUISORY. adj. [from depulsus, Lat.] Putting away; averting. Dict.

TO DEPURATE. v. a. [depurere, Fr. from depurgo, Lat.] To purify; to cleanse; to free any thing from its impurities.

The instrument that doth depurate the best of blood, and defecate and exalt the vital spirits.

Smith, Worl. of Old Age, (1666,) p. 219. Chemistry enabling us to depurate bodies, and in some measure to analyze them, and take asunder their heterogenous parts, in many chemical experiments we may better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ. Boyle.

DEPURATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Cleansed; freed from dregs and impurities.

2. Pure; not contaminated.

Neither can any boast a knowledge depurate from the defilement of a contrary, within this atmosphere of flesh. Glanville.

DEPURATION. n. s. [depuratio, Lat.]

1. The act of separating the pure from the impure part of any thing.

Brimstone is a mineral body of fat and inflammable parts; and this is either used crude, and called sulphur vive, or is of a sadder colour, and, after deputation, such as we have in magdalous, or rolls of a lighter yellow. Brown, Vulg. Err.

What hath been hitherto discoursed inclines us to look upon the ventilation and deputation of the blood as one of the principal and constant uses of respiration. Boyle.

2. The cleansing of a wound from its matter.

TO DEPURE. v. a. [depurere, Fr.]

1. To cleanse; to free from impurities.

The wyndowes clear depured all of crystal. Hawes, Hist. of Gr. Amours, &c. (1555,) ch. 4.

2. To purge; to free from some noxious quality.

It produced plants of such imperfection and harmful quality, as the waters of the general flood could not so wash out or depure, but that the same deflection hath had continuance in the very generation and nature of mankind. Raleigh.

DEPURGATORY. adj. [Fr. depurgatoire.] Having power to purge. Cotgrave and Sherwood.

DEPUTATION. n. s. [deputation, Fr.]

1. The act of deputing or sending away with a special commission.

2. Vicegerency; the possession of any commission given.

Cut me off the heads Of all the favorites that the absent king In deputation left behind him here, When he was personal in the Irish war. Shakespeare.

He looks not below the moon, but hath designed the regiment of sublunary affairs into sublunary deputations. Brown. The authority of conscience stands founded upon its vicegerency and deputation under God. South.

To DEPUTE. v. a. [deputer, Fr.] To send with a special commission; to empower one to transact instead of another.

And Absalom said unto him, See thy matters are good and right, but there is no man deputed of the king to hear. 2 Sam. And Linus thus, deputed by the rest,

The heroes welcome, and their thanks express'd. Raiscommon.
A bishop, by deputing a priest or chaplain to administer the sacraments, may remove him. Aylife, Parergon.

DEPUTY. n. s. [deputé, Fr. from deputatus, Lat.]

1. A lieutenant; a viceroy; one that is appointed by a special commission to govern or act instead of another.

He exerciseth dominion over them as the viceroy and deputy of Almighty God. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

He was vouch'd his immediate deputy upon earth, and viceroy of the creation, and lord lieutenant of the world. South.

2. Any one that transacts business for another.

Presbyters, absent through infirmity from their churches, might be said to preach by those deputies, who, in their stead, did but read homilies. Hooker.

A man hath a body, and that body is confined to a place; but where friendship is, all offices of life are, as it were, grafted to him and his deputy; for he may exercise them by his friend. Bacon.

3. [In law.] One that exercises any office or other thing in another man's right, whose forfeiture or misdemeanour shall cause the officer or person for whom he acts to lose his office. Phillips.

To DEQUANTITATE. v. a. [from de and quantitas, Lat.]

• To diminish the quantity of.

This we affirm of pure gold; for that which is current, and passeth in stamp amongst us, by reason of its alloy, which is a proportion of silver or copper mixed therewith, is actually dequantitated by fire, and possibly by frequent extinction. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DER. A term used in the beginning of names of places. It is generally to be derived from deep, a wild beast, unless the place stands upon a river; for then it may rather be fetched from the British der, i. e. water. Gibson's Camden.

To DERACINATE. v. a. [deraciner, Fr.]

1. To pluck or tear up by the roots.

Her fallow lens,
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts
That should deracinate such savagery. Shakespeare.

2. To abolish; to destroy; to extirpate.

To DERAGN.† } v. a. [from disrationare, or dirationare, Lat. Dr. Johnson says.

To DERAIN. }
It is rather from the Norman French, dareigner, to make proof of, to make good; sometimes written desrener.]

1. To prove; to justify.

When the parson of any church is disturbed to demand tythes in the next parish by writ of indicavit, the patron shall have a writ to demand the advowson of the tythes being in demand; and when it is deraigned, then shall the plea pass in the court christian, as far forth as it is deraigned in the king's court. Blount.

2. To disorder; to turn out of course. Dict.

DERAIGNMENT. } n. s. [from deraign.]

DERAINMENT. }
1. The act of deraigning or proving.
2. A disordering or turning out of course.
3. A discharge of profession; a departure out of religion.

In some places the substantive deraignment is used in the very literal signification with the French desrayer, or desranger; that is, turning out of course, displacing, or setting out of order; as deraignment or departure out of religion; and deraignment or discharge of their profession, which is spoken of those religious men who forsook their orders and professions. Blount.

To DERA'NGE. v. a. fold Fr. desranger, to disorder, to disarray, to disorder. Cotgrave. Our word is modern. About twenty years since, it was condemned as a Gallicism. "We cannot but take notice, in derogation from our praise for correctness of style, that some few Gallicisms occur, such as derange for disarrange, &c." Brit. Crit. Sept. 1795, p. 237. But derange has gained ground; and is now common.] To turn out of the proper course; to disorder.

The republic of regicide—has actually conquered the finest parts of Europe; has distressed, disunited, deranged, and broke to pieces, all the rest. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

DERA'NGEMENT. n. s. [from derange. Formerly, deraignment was, in some places, used, as Blount and Cowel relate, in the literal signification of the French desranger, that is, turning out of course. See DERAIGNMENT, and Cowel in V. DERAIGNE.] Disorder. It is commonly applied to discomposure of mind, or intellect.

An anatomist, who understands the structure of the heart, might say beforehand that it would derange; but he would expect, I think, from the complexity of its mechanism, and the delicacy of many of its parts, that it should always be liable to derangement, or that it would soon work itself out. Paley, Nat. Theology, ch. 10.

DERA'Y. n. s. [from desrayer, Fr. to turn out of the right way.]

1. Tumult; disorder; noise.
2. Merriment; jollity; solemnity: not in use.

Douglas.

To DERE. v. a. [depuan, Sax.] To hurt. Obsolete. Some think that in the example it means daring.

So from immortal race he does proceed,
That mortal hands may not withstand his might;
Dred for his derring doe, and bloody deed;
For all in blood and spoil is his delight. Spenser, F. Q.

DERE. adj. Hurtful. See the 4th sense of DEAR.
DE'RELICT. adj. [Lat. derelictus.] Wilfully relinquished. See DERELICTS.

Taking out a patent in Charles the second's time for derelict lands. Letters (Sir P. Pett to A. Wood) i. 61.

DERELICTION.† n. s. [derelictio, Lat.]

1. The act of forsaking or leaving; abandonment.

A sorrow proceeding from the love of God, and conversion to him, and ending in a dereliction of all our sins. Bp. Taylor, Diss. against Popery, ch. 2. § 1.

2. The state of being forsaken.
There is no other thing to be looked for, but the effects of God's most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion. Hooker.

O Saviour, hadst thou not been thus forsaken, we had perished! Thy dereliction is our safety. Bp. Hall, Contempl. The Crucifixion.

'Tis true, Christ cried upon the cross, with a loud voice, saying, "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me?" But if that dereliction should signify a solution of the former union of his natures, the separation had been made not at his death, but in his life. Whereas indeed those words infer no more, than that he was bereft of such joys and comfort from the Deity, as should assuage and mitigate the acerbity of his present torments. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

DERELICTS. n. s. pl. [In law.] Goods wilfully thrown away, or relinquished by the owner. Dict.
TO DERIDE. † v. a. [old French, derider; Lat. derideo.] To laugh at; to mock; to turn to ridicule; to scorn.

Before such presence to offend with any the least unscemliness, we would be surely as loth as they who most reprehend or deride what we do. Hooker.

What shall be the portion of those who have derided God's word, and made a mock of every thing that is sacred and religious? Tillotson.

These sons, ye gods, who with flagitious pride Insult my darkness, and my groans deride. Pope.

Some that adore Newton for his fluxions, deride him for his religion. Bp. Berkeley.

DERIDER. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A mocker; a scoffer.

Lucian, a man learned and eloquent, but a derider of all religion. Woolton, Christian Man. (1766) sign. K. iij.

Upon the wilful violation of oaths, execrable blasphemies, and like contentments offered by deriders of religion, fearful tokens of divine revenge have been known to follow. Hooker.

We see what sort of scoffers they are, who are to come in the last days, impudent deriders of religion, because they are resolved on walking after their own lusts. Glanville, Sermon. p. 19.

2. A droll; a buffoon.

DERIDINGLY.  adv.* [from the participle deriding.] In a jeering manner.

His parasite was wont deridingly to advise him.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 37.

DERISION. n. s. [derisio, Lat.]

1. The act of deriding or laughing at.

Are we grieved with the scorn and derision of the profane? Thus was the blessed Jesus despised and rejected of men. Rogers.

Vanity is the natural weakness of an ambitious man, which exposes him to the secret scorn and derision of those he converses with. Addison.

2. Contempt; scorn; a laughing-stock.

I am in derision daily; every one mocketh me. Jer. xx. 7.

Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us. Ps. xlv. 13.

Ensnar'd, assaulted, overcome; led bound, Thy foes derision, captive, poor and blind, Into a dungeon thrust. Milton, S. A.

DERISIVE. adj. [from deride.] Mocking; scoffing.

O'er all the dome they quaff; they feast;

Derisive taunts were spread from guest to guest, And each in jovial mood his mate address. Pope.

DERISIVELY.  adv.* [from derisive.] In a mocking or contemptuous manner.

The Persians — [were] thence called Magus; derisively by other Ethnicks. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 243.

DERISORY. † adj. [derisorius, Lat.] Mocking; ridiculing.

The comick or derisory manner is further still from making shew of method. Shaftesbury.

DERIVABLE. † adj. [from derivo.]

1. Attainable by right of descent or derivation.

God has declared this the eternal rule and standard of all honour derivable upon me, that those who honour him shall be honoured by him. South.

2. Deducible, as from a root, from a cause, from a principle.

The second sort of arguments, from ourselves, are derivable from some of these heads. Wilkins on Prayer, ch. 4.

All these lamentable accidents were both subsequent upon, and derivable from sin, which was fully pardoned. South, Sermon. vi. 226.

TO DERIVATE.  v. a.* [Lat. derivo.] To derive. Obsolete. Hulot.

DERIVATION. n. s. [derivatio, Lat.]

1. A draining of water; a turning of its course.

When the water began to swell, it would every way discharge itself by any descents or declivities of the ground; and these issues and derivations being once made, and supplied with new waters pushing them forwards, would continue their course till they arrived at the sea, just as other rivers do. Barnet.

2. [In grammar.] The tracing of a word from its original.

Your lordship here seems to dislike my taking notice, that the derivation of the word Substance favours the idea we have of it; and your lordship tells me, that very little weight is to be laid on it, on a bare grammatical etymology. Locke.

3. The transmission of any thing from its source.

As touching traditional communication, and tradition of those truths that I call connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of those truths have had the help of that derivation. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

4. [In medicine.] The drawing of a humour from one part of the body to another.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote, or, it may be, contrary part, we call that revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation. Wharman.

5. The thing deduced or derived: not used.

Most of them are the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to. Glanville.

DERIVATIVE. adj. [derivativus, Lat.] Derived or taken from another.

As it is a derivative perfection, so it is a distinct kind of perfection from that which is in God. Hale.

DERIVATIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.] The thing or word derived or taken from another.

For honour, 'Tis a derivative from me to mine, And only that I stand for. Shakespeare.

The word Honestus originally and strictly signifies no more than creditable, and is but a derivative from honour, which signifies credit or honour. South.

DERIVATIVELY. † adv. [from derivative.] In a derivative manner.

Life is otherwise in God, than in the creatures; in Him originally, in them derivatively. Pearson on the Creed, Art. i.

TO DERIVE. † v. a. [deriver, Fr. from derivo, Latin.]

1. To turn the course of water from its channel.

Company lessens the shame of vice by sharing it, and abates the torrent of a common odium by deriving it into many channels. South.

2. To deduce; as from a root, from a cause, from a principle.

They endeavour to derive the varieties of colours from the various proportion of the direct progress or motion of these globules to their circumvolution, or motion about their own centre. Boyle.

Men derive their ideas of duration from their reflection on the train of ideas they observe to succeed one another in their own understandings. Locke.

From these two causes of the laxity and rigidity of the fibres, the methodists, an ancient set of physicians, derived all diseases of human bodies with a great deal of reason; for the fluids derive their qualities from the solids. Arbuthnot.

3. To communicate to another, as from the origin and source.

Christ having Adam's nature as we have, but incorrupt, deriveth not nature, but incorruption, and that immediately from his own person, unto all that belong unto him. Hooker.

4. To receive by transmission.

This property seems rather to have been derived from the Pretorian soldiers. Decay of Piety.

The censers of these wretches, who, I am sure, could derive no sanctity to them from their own persons; yet upon this account, that they had been consecrated by the offering incense:

in them, were, by God's special command, sequestered from all common use.

5. To communicate to by descent of blood.

Besides the readiness of parts, an excellent disposition of mind is derived to your lordship from the parents of two generations, to whom I have the honour to be known.

6. To spread; to diffuse gradually from one place to another.

The streams of the publick justice were derived into every part of the kingdom.

7. [In grammar.] To trace a word from its origin.

While we are deriving words from the Latin, we would not have the reader fancy that we owe all to the Latin, and have not many words that came down to us pure, and unmix'd, directly from the Saxon, Danish, Belgick, and Teutonic languages, and their dialects. For many of those words which of old we received from the Latins, and likewise many of those which we have more lately received from them by the mediation, or assistance, of the French, Italian, or Spanish, with some small variation according to the diversity and idiom of each dialect, are common to us with the Saxons, Danes, &c. and thence have come directly down to us, though they may be originally Latin.

Greenwood's Essay on Eng. Gramm. (1722,) p. 199.

To DERIVE. v. n.

1. To come from; to owe its origin to.

He that resists the pow'r of Ptolemy,
Resists the pow'r of heav'n; for pow'r from heav'n
Derives, and monarchs rule by gods appointed.

Prior.

2. To descend from.

I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well possess'd.

Shakespeare.

DERIVER. n. s. [from derive.] One that draws or fetches, as from the source or principle.

Such a one makes a man not only a partaker of other men's sins, but also a deriver of the whole intire guilt of them to himself.

South.

DERN.† adj. [bearn, Saxon.]

1. Sad; solitary; and it is so used in the north of England. See DEARN, and DERNFUL. Dern is used by Chaucer for secret.

2. Barbarous; cruel. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson says. I could never find that the word was used in this sense.

DERNFUL.* adj. [from deru.] Mournful. Not in use.

The birds of ill presage this lucklesse chance foretold
By dernfull noise.

Brysket, Mourning Musc of Thestylis.

DERNIER. adj. Last. It is a mere French word, and used only in the following phrase.

In the Imperial chamber, the term for the prosecution of an appeal is not circumscrib'd by the term of one or two years, as the law elsewhere requires in the Empire, this being the dernier resort and supreme court of judicature.

Ayliff.

DERNLY.* adv. [from deru.] See DEARNLY. Mournfully; anxiously. Obsolete.

Next stroke he should have slaine,
Had not the lady, which by him stood bound,
Dernly unto her called to abstaine
From doing him to dy.

Spenser, F. Q.

To DEROGATE.† v. a. [derogo, Lat.]

1. To do an act so far contrary to a law or custom, as to diminish its former extent; distinguished from abrogate.

By several contrary customs and stiles used here, many of those civil and canon laws are controuled and derogated.

Hule.

2. To lessen the worth of any person or thing; to disparage; to minish.

Hudoc.

To DEROGATE. v. n.

1. To detract; to lessen reputation, with from.

We should be injurious to virtue itself: if we did derogate from them whom their industry hath made great.

Hooker.

2. To degenerate; to act beneath one's rank, or place, or birth.

Is there no derogation in't?

— You cannot derogate, my lord.

Shakespeare.

DEROGATE.† adj. [from the verb.] Degraded; damaged; lessened in value.

That he should obteyne, if he might, of the king, his father, his gracious pardon; whereby no law or justice should be derogate.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 102.

Into her womb convey sterility;

Dry up in her the organs of increase,

And from her derogate body never spring

A babe to honour her!

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

DEROGATELY.* adv. [from derogate.] In a manner which lessens honour or respect.

I must be laugh'd at,

If, or for nothing, or a little, I

Should say myself offended; and with you

Chiefly? the world; more laugh'd at, that I should

Once name you derogately, when to sound your name

It not concern'd me.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

DEROGATION. n. s. [derogatio, Lat.]

1. The act of weakening or restraining a former law or contract.

It was indeed but a wooing ambassage, with good respects to entertain the king in good affection; but nothing was done or handled to the derogation of the king's late treaty with the Italians.

Bacon.

That which enjoins the deed is certainly God's law; and it is also certain, that the scripture, which allows of the will, is neither the derogation nor relaxation of that law.

South.

2. A delamation; detraction; the act of lessening or taking away the honour of any person or thing. Sometimes with to, properly with from.

Which, though never so necessary, they could not easily now admit, without some fear of derogation from their credit; and therefore that which once they had done, they became for ever after resolute to maintain.

Hooker.

So surely he is a very brave man, neither is that any thing which I speak to his derogation; for in that I said he is a mingled people, it is no dispraise.

Spenser on Ireland.

The wisest princes need not think it any diminution to their greatness, or derogation to their sufficiency, to rely upon counsel.

Bacon.

I say not this in derogation to Virgil, neither do I contradict any thing which I have formerly said in his just praise.

Dryden.

None of these patriots will think it a derogation from their merit to have it said, that they received many lights and advantages from their intimacy with my lord Somers.

Addison.

DEROGATIVE. adj. [derogativus, Lat.] Detracting; lessening the honour of: not in use.

That spirits are corporeal seems to me a conceit derogative to himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

DEROGATORILY.† adv. [from derogatory.] In a detracting manner.

Dict.

He was of a high rough spirit, and spoke derogatorily of Sir Anias Pawlet.

Aubrey, of Cardinal Wolsey, Anec. ii. 187.

DEROGATORINESS. n. s. [from derogatory.] The act of derogating.

Dict.

DEROGATORY.† adj. [derogatorius, Latin; derogatoire, Fr.] Detracting; that lessens the honour of; dishonourable. With to or from; and formerly with against.

They live and die in their absurdities, passing their days in perverted apprehensions and conceptions of the world, derogatory unto God and the wisdom of the Creation.

Brown.

Who seeth not that it is but a meer mockery to make them, [rules,] to the end their bulls and dispensations may have as many clauses derogatory against them?

Harnar, Tr. of Beza's Sermon, p. 161.

DES

New detestable doctrines, derogatory to the blood of Christ, which moderate men even of her own [Rome's] subjects detest.

Bp. Bedell, Serm. on Rev. l. xviii. 14.

These deputed beings are derogatory from the wisdom and power of the Author of Nature, who doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods, than employing these subservient divinities. Cheyne.

DE'RRING.* adj. [Sax. deappan, to dare.] Daring. Spenser uses this word repeatedly with do and doers; and once as a substantive, for competition. But these terms have long been obsolete. See TO DERE. The contemporary commentator on Spenser calls derring do "manhood and chivalry."

All mightie men and dreadfull derring doers.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 38.

DE'RVIS.† n. s. [dervis, French, Dr. Johnson says. But this word requires further notice. In the Persian language, the dervis means a beggar, or poor man; and is written dervich. The word has been assimilated to our druids and witches, in a passage too curious to be here omitted: "Monachorum etiam et sacerdotum genus apud Turcas ab antiquissimis temporibus conservatum, Dervis, et nonine, et re Druides refert. Eadem enim populo preestare pollicentur, quæ Druides majoribus nostris, ut ex iis elucet, quæ Turnfort in Itinerario Orientali, tom. ii. p. 393. habet. Dervis autem eodem modo à Druidibus derivatur, quo Anglorum Witch, magus, incantator; quod sonus et genuina pronuntiatio magis evincit, quam literarum scriptura." Keyser, Antiq. Septentr. et Celticae, Hanov. 1729, p. 152.] A Turkish priest, or monk.

Even there, where Christ vouchsaf'd to teach,
Their dervises dare an impostor preach.

Sandys.

The dervis at first made some scruple of violating his promise to the dying brachman; but told him, at last, that he could conceal nothing from so excellent a prince. Spectator.

DE'SART.* See DESERT.

DE'SCANT.† n. s. [discanto, Italian, Dr. Johnson says. But the Italians have not that word. Biscanto is their expression, as Mr. Malone also observes. Our word is probably from the old French deschant, "a descant; deschanter, to descant, or sing descant." Cotgrave, and Sherwood. Lat. decanto.]

1. A song or tune composed in parts; a variety of sounds produced by an instrument or voice. See TO DESCANT.

Neither shall the sweet organs — be played upon, — nor yet the freshe descante, pryngonge, counterpoint, and faburden be called for.

Bale on the Revel. P. iii. (1550.) sign. B. 8.

Nay, now you are too flat,

And mar the conceit with too harsh a descant. Shakspeare.

The wakeful nightingale,

She all night long her amorous descant sung. Milton, P. L.

He that at midnight should hear, as I have often done, the sweet descants, the natural rising and falling, the doubling and redoubling of the nightingale's voice, might well be lifted above earth. Wallon's Angler.

2. A discourse; a disputation; a disquisition branched out into several divisions or heads. It is commonly used as a word of censure or contempt. Adopted from the musical sense, of running a descant or division.

Look you get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shakspeare.

DES

• We whet our malice and arrogance upon one another, by applauding each other in censuring those above; in running spiteful descants on their actions, and arraigning their maladministration at the tribunal of our majesty.

Scott's Works, ii. 37.

Kindness would supplant all unkind reportings, and severe descants upon our brethren. Government of the Tongue.

TO DE'SCANT.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sing in parts; to run a division or variety upon notes with the voice or instrument.
2. To discourse at large; to make speeches: in a sense of censure or contempt. From the musical sense.

Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time;
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Upon which plain-song of the poets I thus descant.

Spenser on Prodiges, p. 63.

• Com'st thou for this, vain boaster, to survey me,
To descant on my strength, and give thy verdict?

Milton, S. A.

A virtuous man should be pleased to find people descanting upon his actions, because, when they are thoroughly canvassed and examined, they turn to his honour. Addison.

DESCANTING.* n. s. [from descant.] Remark; conjecture; guess.

If mysteries were received rather in the simplicity in which they are delivered in the Scriptures, than according to the descantings of fanciful men upon them, they would not appear much more incredible than some of the common objects of sense and perception.

Burnet, Life of Lord Rochester, p. 107.

TO DESCE'ND. v. n. [descendo, Lat.]

1. To go downwards; to come from a higher place to a lower; to fall; to sink.

The rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock.

Matt. vii. 25.

The brook that descended out of the mount.

Deut. ix. 21.

He cleft his head with one descending blow.

Dryden.

Foul with stains

Of gushing torrents and descending ruins,

Addison.

O goddess! who, descending from the skies,
Vouchsaf'd thy presence to my wond'ring eyes.

Pope.

2. To come down, in a popular sense, implying only an arrival at one place from another.

He shall descend into battle, and perish. 1 Sam. xxvi. 10.

3. To come suddenly or violently; to fall upon as from an eminence.

For the pious sire preserve the son;

His wish'd return with happy pow'r befriend,

And on the suitors let thy wrath descend.

Pope.

4. To go down, in a figurative sense.

[He] with holiest meditations fed,

Into himself descended.

Milton, P. R.

5. To make an invasion.

The goddess gives th' alarm; and soon is known

The Grecian fleet, descending on the town.

Dryden.

A foreign son upon the shore descends,

Whose martial fame from pole to pole extends. Dryden.

6. To proceed as from an original; to be derived from.

Despair descends from a mean original; the offspring of fear, laziness, and impatience.

Collier against Despair.

Will is younger brother to a baronet, and descended of the ancient family of the Wimbles.

Addison.

7. To fall in order of inheritance to a successor.

Should we allow that all the property, all the estate of the father, ought to descend to the eldest son; yet the father's natural dominion, the paternal power, cannot descend unto him by inheritance.

Locke.

DES

The inheritance of both rule over man and property, is things spring from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke.

Our author provides for the descending and conveyance down of Adam's monarchical power to posterity, by the inheritance of his heir, succeeding to his father's authority. Locke.

8. To extend a discourse from general to particular considerations.

Congregations discerned the small accord that was among themselves, when they descended to particulars. Decay of Piety.

To DESCEND. v. a. To walk downward upon any place.

He ended, and they both descend the hill;
Descended, Adam to the bower, where Eve
Lay sleeping.

Milton, P. L.

In all our journey through the Alps, as well when we climbed as when we descended them, we had still a river running along with the road. Addison.

In the midst of this plain stands a high hill, so very steep, that there would be no mounting or descending it, were not it made up of a loose crumbled earth. Addison.

DESCENDANT. n. s. [descendant, Fr. descendens, Lat.]

The offspring of an ancestor; he that is in the line of generation at whatever distance.

The descendants of Neptune were planted there. Bacon.

O, true descendant of a patriot line,
Vouchsafe this picture of thy soul to see. Dryden.

He revealed his own will and their duty, in a more ample manner than it had been declared to any of my descendants before them. Atterbury.

DESCENDENT. adj. [descendens, Latin. It seems to be established that the substantive should derive the termination from the French, and the adjective from the Latin.]

1. Falling; sinking; coming down; descending.

There is a regress of the sap in plants from above downwards; and this descendent juice is that which principally nourishes both fruit and plant. Ray on the Creation.

2. Proceeding from another as an original or ancestor.

More than mortal grace
Speaks thee descendent of ethereal race. Pope.

DESCENDIBILITY. n. s. [from descendible.] Conformity to the rules of descent.

He must necessarily take the crown subject to these laws, and with all its inherent properties; the first and principal of which was its descendibility. Blackstone.

DESCENDIBLE. adj. [from descend.]

1. Such as may be descended; such as may admit of a passage downwards.

2. Transmissible by inheritance.

According to the customs of other countries those honorary fees and infundations were descendible to the eldest, and not to all the males. Hale, Com. Law of Eng.

DESCENSION. n. s. [descensio, Lat.]

1. The act of going downwards, falling or sinking; descent.

2. A declension; a degradation.

From a god to a bull! a heavy descension:

It was Jove's case. From a prince to a 'prentice! a low transformation: that shall be mine. Shakespeare.

3. [In astronomy.] Right descension is the arch of the equator, which descends with the sign or star below the horizon of a direct sphere.

Oblique descension is the arch of the equator, which descends with the sign below the horizon of an oblique sphere. Ozanam.

DESCENSIONAL. adj. [from descension.] Relating to descent.

DES

DESCENDIVE. n. s. [from descension.] Descending; having power to descend. Sherwood.

DESCENT. n. s. [descensus, Lat. descente, Fr.]

1. The act of passing from a higher to a lower place.

Why do fragments from a mountain rent,
Tend to the earth with such a swift descent? Blackmore.

2. Progress downwards.

Observing such gradual and gentle descents downwards, in those parts of the creation that are beneath men, the rule of analogy may make it probable, that it is so also in things above. Locke.

3. Obliquity; inclination.

The heads and sources of rivers flow upon a descent, or an inclining plane, without which they could not flow at all. Woodward, Nat. Hist. P. iii.

4. Lowest place.

From th' extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust below thy feet. Shakespeare.

5. Fall from a higher state; degradation.

O foul descent, that I who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd,
Into a beast; and mix'd with bestial slime
This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton, P. L.

6. Invasion; hostile entrance into a kingdom: in allusion to the height of ships.

At the first descent on shore, he was not immured with a wooden vessel, but he slid countenance the landing in his long-boat. Wotton.

The duke was general himself, and made that unfortunate descent upon the Isle of Rhee, which was attended with a miserable retreat, in which the flower of the army was lost. Charendon.

Arise, true judges, in your own defence,
Controul those foplings, and declare for sense;
For should the fools prevail, they stop not there,
But make their next descent upon the fair. Dryden.

7. Transmission of any thing by succession and inheritance.

If the agreement and consent of men first gave a sceptre into any one's hand, that also must direct its descent and conveyance. Locke.

8. The state of proceeding from an original or progenitor.

All of them, even without such a particular claim, had great reason to glory in their common descent from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to whom the promise of the blessed seed was severally made. Atterbury.

9. Birth; extraction; process of lineage.

I give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent!
God knows, I will not do it. Shakespeare.

Turnus, for high descent and graceful mien,
Was first, and favour'd by the Latian queen. Dryden.

10. Offspring; inheritors; those proceeding in the line of generation.

If care of our descent perplex us most,
Which must be born to certain woe. Milton, P. L.

From him

His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win. Milton, P. L.

11. A single step in the scale of genealogy; a generation.

No man living is a thousand descents removed from Adam himself. Hosker.

Then all the sons of these five brethren reign'd
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents the crown retain'd,
Till aged Heli by due heritage it gain'd. Spenser, F. Q.

12. A rank in the scale of subordination.

How have I then, with whom to hold converse,
Saw with the creatures which I made, and those
To me inferior; infinite descents
Beneath what other creatures are to thee? Milton, P. L.

DESERTATION. † n. s. [from deserate.] The abolition of consecration.

They sentenced him [Zoilus] to suffer by fire, as the due reward of his desertions. Parnell, Life of Zoilus.

DESERT. † n. s. [desertum, Latin; Fr. desert, which Cotgrave renders "a desert," a method of spelling this substantive, which obtained formerly; for Sandys also writes "desart-land," in his Paraphrase of Lamentations, p. 8. And so Sir T. Herbert, in the example which I add. In several publications of modern times the word has also been so given; as in Stevens's edition of Shakspeare, &c.] A wilderness; solitude; waste country; uninhabited place.

Be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword.
If trembling I inhibit; then protest me

The baby of a girl. Shakspeare.

Last night we crost over an inhospitable sandy desert, which was ten miles broad. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 170.

He, looking round on every side, beheld
A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades. Milton, P. R.

DESERT. adj. [desertus, Lat.] Wild; waste; solitary; uninhabited; uncultivated; untilld.

I have words

That would be howld out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shakspeare.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deut. xxxii. 10.

The promises and bargains between two men in a desert island are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another. Locke.

TO DESERT. v. a. [deserter, Fr. desero, Lat.]

1. To forsake; to fall away from; to quit meanly or treacherously; to abandon.

I do not remember one man, who heartily wished the passing of that hill, that ever deserted them, till the kingdom was in a flame. Dryden.

2. To leave; to abandon.

What is it that holds and keeps the orbs in fixed stations and intervals, against an incessant and inherent tendency to desert them? Bentley.

TO DESERT.* v. n. To quit the army, or regiment, in which one is enlisted.

If any militia man, having joined the corps, shall desert during the time of annual exercise, &c. Stat. Militia Act.

DESERT. n. s. [properly dessert: the word is originally French.] The last course; the fruit or sweetmeats with which a feast is concluded. See DESSERT.

DESERT. † n. s. [old Fr. deserte, "recompense." Lacombe. Or the participle of deserve; deserv'd, desert.]

1. Qualities or conduct considered with respect to rewards or punishments; degree of merit or demerit.

Being of necessity a thing common, it is, through the manifold persuasions, dispositions, and occasions of men, with equal desert both of praise and dispraise, shunned by some, by others desired. Hooker.

The base of th' mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere

To propagate their states. Shakspeare.

Use every man after his desert, and who shall scape whipping? Shakspeare.

2. Proportional merit; claim to reward.

All desert imports an equality between the good conferred and the good deserved, or made due. South.

3. Excellence; right to reward; virtue.

More to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both. Shakspeare.

DESERTER. † n. s. [Lat. desertor.]

1. He that has forsaken his cause or his post: commonly in an ill sense.

The members of both houses, who at first withdrew, were counted deserters, and outed of their places in parliament. King Charles.

Streight to their ancient cells, recall'd from air,
The recruit'd deserters will repair. Dryden.

Hosts of deserters, who your honour sold,
And basely broke your faith for bribes of gold. Dryden.

2. He that leaves the army in which he is enlisted.

They are the same deserters, whether they stay in our own camp, or run over to the enemy's. Decay of Piety.

A deserter, who came out of the citadel, says the garrison is brought to the utmost necessity. Tatler, No. 59.

3. He that forsakes another; an abandoner.

The fair sex, if they had the deserter in their power, would certainly have shewn him more mercy than the Bacchanals did Orpheus. Dryden.

Thou, false guardian of a charge too good,
Thou mean deserter of thy brother's blood. Pope.

DESERTFUL.* adj. [desert and full.] High in desert; meritorious.

My Lords, how much your country owes you both,

The due reward of your desertful glories
Must to posterity remain. Braun. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

But to another task the author's pen
Hath been employ'd, in this desertful book.

Verses prefixed to Verstegan's Rest. of Dec. Intelligence.

DESERTION. † n. s. [Fr. desertion, Lat. desertio.]

1. The act of forsaking or abandoning a cause or post.

Every compliance that we are persuaded to by one, is a contradiction to the commands of the other; and our adherence to one, will necessarily involve us in a desertion of the other. Rogers.

2. [In theology.] Spiritual despondency; a sense of the dereliction of God; an opinion that grace is withdrawn.

Whiles thou, O Saviour, shalt enable me to say, My God, I shall hope never to sink under thy desertions. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Christ hears and sympathizes with the spiritual agonies of a soul under desertion, or the pressures of some stinging affliction. South.

3. Quitting the army or regiment, in which one is enlisted.

Desertion from the king's armies in time of war is, by the standing law of the land, made felony. Blackstone.

DESERTLESS. † adj. [from desert.] Without merit; without claim to favour or reward.

It stays not long on thy desertless arm.

Braun. and Fl. Wit at Sev. Weapons.

As if he had been giving some booty, or begged office to a sort of his desertless grooms. Milton, Epiconoclastes.

She said she lov'd;
Lov'd me desertless, who, with shame, confess
Another flame had seiz'd upon my breast. Dryden.

DESERTLESSLY.* adv. [from desertless.] Underservedly.

But now people will call you valiant, desertlessly I think, yet, for their satisfaction, I will have you fight with me.

Braun. and Fl. King and no King.

DESERTRESS.* n. s. [from deserter.] She who forsakes her duty.

Cleave to a wife; but let her be a wife, let her be a real help, a solace, not a nothing, not an adversary, not a revelation. Milton, Tr. revelation.

TO DESERVE. v. a. [deservir, Fr.]

of either good or ill.

Those they honoured, as having power, an agate snuff box; men deserved of them. being unwilling to be in her eyes.

What he deserves of you and me I know. Addison.

Yet well, if here would end
The misery: I deserv'd it, and would bear
My own deservings.

A mother cannot give him death; though he Deserves it, he deserves it not from me.
Since my Orsini's death I have not seen
A beauty so deserving to be queen.

Milton, P. L.

Dryden.

Dryden.

To DESERVE. v. a. To be worthy of reward.

According to the rule of natural justice one man may merit and deserve of another.

South.

Courts are the places where best manners flourish,
Where the deserving ought to rise.

Ottway.

DESERVEDLY. adv. [from deserve.] Worthily; according to desert, whether of good or evil.

For him I was not sent, nor yet to free
That people victor once, now vile and bast,
Deservedly made vassal.

Milton, P. R.

A man deservedly cuts himself off from the affections of that community which he endeavours to subvert.

Addison.

DESERVER. n. s. [from deserve.] A man who merits rewards. It is used, I think, only in a good sense, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, used in an ill sense by Archbishop Laud.

Their love is never link'd to the deserver.
Till his deserts are pass'd.

Shakspeare.

Be very careful, that it be not done upon any pretence whatsoever, for the man certainly is an ill deserver.

Abp. Laud, 1st of his Ch. of Ox. p. 126.

Heavy, with some high minds, is an overweight of obligation; or otherwise great deservers do perchance grow intolerable presumers.

Wotton.

Emulation will never be wanting amongst poets, when particular rewards and prizes are proposed to the best deservers.

Dryden.

DESERVING. n. s. [from deserve.] Desert; degree of merit or demerit.

We are accounted righteous before God, only for the merit of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ by faith, and not for our own works or deservings.

Articles of Religion, Art. 11.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings.

Shakspeare.

I deserv'd it, and would bear
My own deservings.

Milton, P. L.

He had been a person of great deservings from the republick, was an admirable speaker, and very popular.

Swift.

DESERVINGLY. adv. [from deserving.] Worthily; according to good desert.

We have raised Sejanus, from obscure and almost unknown gentry, to the highest and most conspicuous point of greatness; and, we hope, deservingly.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

DESHABILLE. n. s. See DISHABILLE.

DESICCANTS. n. s. [from desiccate.] Applications that dry up the flow of sores; driers.

This, in the beginning, may be prevented by desiccants, and wasted.

Wiseman.

To DESICCATE. v. a. [desicco, Latin.]

1. To dry up; to exhaust of moisture.

In bodies desiccated by heat or age, when the native spirit goeth forth, and the moisture with it, the air with time getteth into the pores.

Bacon.

Seminal ferments were elevated from the sea, or some desiccated places thereof, by the heat of the sun.

Hale.

2. To exhale moisture.

Where there is moisture enough, or superfluous, there wine goeth to digest and desiccate the moisture.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. The COATE. n. s. To grow dry; to be drained
I'll pay six.

Before a friend is cited amongst the Greeks themselves, as a

If the spirits issue out of the body, there follows desiccation, induration, and consumption.

Bacon.

DESICCATIVE. adj. [Fr. desiccatif, Cotgr.] That which has the power of drying.

All those authors that have written of mineral waters, do generally agree, that they are of a desiccative or drying nature.

Ferrand, Love's Melancholy, (1665,) p. 358.

To DESIDERATE. v. a. [desidero, Latin.] To want; to miss; to desire in absence. A word scarcely used.

Eclipses are of wonderful assistance toward the solution of this so desirable and so much desiderated problem.

Cheyne.

DESIDERATUM. [Latin.] Somewhat which enquiry has not yet been able to settle or discover; as, the longitude is the desideratum of navigation, The trisection of an angle, and the quadrature of a circle, are the desiderata of geometry.

DESIDIOS. adj. [desidiosus, Latin.] Idle; lazy; heavy.

Dict.

To DESIGN. v. a. [designo, Latin; dessigner, Fr.]

1. To purpose; to intend any thing.

2. To form or order with a particular purpose: with for.

The acts of religious worship were purposely designed for the acknowledgement of a being, whom the most excellent creatures are bound to adore as well as we.

Stillingfleet.

You are not for obscurity design'd.

But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind.

Dryden.

3. To devote intentionally: with to.

One of those places was designed by the old man to his son.

Clarendon.

He was born to the inheritance of a splendid fortune; he was designed to the study of the law.

Dryden.

4. To plan; to project; to form in idea.

We are to observe whether the picture or outlines be well drawn, or, as more elegant artizans term it, well designed; then, whether it be well coloured, which be the two general heads.

Wotton.

Thus while they speed their pace, the prince designs

The new elected seat, and draws the lines.

Dryden.

5. To mark out by particular tokens: little used.

'Tis not enough to make a man a subject, to convince him that there is regal power in the world; but there must be ways of designing and knowing the person to whom this regal power of right belongs.

Locke.

DESIGN. n. s. [Fr. dessing.]

1. An intention; a purpose.

Leave these sad designs

To him that hath more cause to be a mourner.

Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

2. A scheme; a plan of action.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays design only for a day, without any prospect to the remaining part of his life?

Tillotson.

3. A scheme formed to the detriment of another.

A sedate settled design upon another man's life, put him in a state of war with him against whom he has declared such an intention.

Locke.

4. The idea which an artist endeavours to execute or express.

I doubt not but in the designs of several Greek medals one may often see the hand of an Apelles or Protogenes.

Addison.

Thy hand strikes out some new design,

Where life awakes and dawns at every line.

Pope.

DESIGNABLE. adj. [designo, Lat.]. Distinguishable; capable to be particularly marked out.

The power of all natural agents is limited: the mover must be confined to observe these proportions, and cannot pass over all these infinite designable degrees in an instant.

Digby.

DESIGNATE.* adj. [Lat. designatus.] Marked out; chosen; appointed. See DESIGNATION.

Richard Plantagenet, duke of Gloucester, and king of England, — was the younger son of Sir Richard Plantagenet, the fourth duke of that royal family, and king of England, designated by king Henry the sixth, and by the most noble senate and universal synod of this kingdom, the high court of parliament.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. (1646,) p. 3.

To DESIGNATE.* v. a. [Lat. designo.] To point out; to distinguish. The adjective appears to be of considerable age in our language; but the verb, I think, is not so. Neither of them is noticed by Dr. Johnson.

Of these [faults] so few examples occur, that it would be invidious to designate them. Brit. Crit. Jul. 1801.

DESIGNATION. n. s. [designatio, Lat.]

1. The act of pointing or marking out by some particular token.

This is a plain designation of the duke of Marlborough: one kind of stuff used to fatten land is called marle, and every body knows that borough is a name for a town. Swift.

2. Appointment; direction.

William the Conqueror forbore to use that claim in the beginning, but mixed it with a titular pretence, grounded upon the will and designation of Edward the Confessor. Bacon.

3. Import; intention.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon by the mind as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily in their first designation only to those things which have parts, and are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

DESIGNATIVE.* adj. [Fr. designatif.] Appointing; shewing; declaring. Cotgrave.

DESIGNEDLY. adv. [from design.] Purposely; intentionally; by design or purpose; not ignorantly; not inadvertently; not fortuitously.

Uses made things: that is to say, some things were made designedly, and on purpose for such an use as they serve to. Ray on the Creation.

The next thing is sometimes designedly to put children in pain; but care must be taken that this be done when the child is in good humour. Locke.

DESIGNER.† n. s. [from design.]

1. One that designs, intends, or purposes; a purposer.

2. A plotter; a contriver; one that lays schemes.

The meanest worldly interest of the ambitious or covetous designer. Maimond of Conscience.

It has therefore always been both the rule and practice for such designers to suborn the publick interest, to countenance and cover their private. Decay of Piety.

3. One that forms the idea of any thing in painting or sculpture.

There is a great affinity between designing and poetry; for the Latin poets, and the designers of the Roman medals, lived very near one another, and were bred up to the same relish for wit and fancy. Addison.

4. One that plans a building, a garden, or the like. Unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.

The giant being a man of extraordinary dimensions, it was impossible to do this affair [to measure him by a quadrant] any other way than your designers use when they take the height of a country people.

Reasons of Mr. Bays changing his Religion, (1688,) Pref. In pursuance of our present taste in gardening, every good painter of landscape appears to me the most proper designer.

Shenstone, Thoughts on Gardening.

Kent, and other designers of this century, [the eighteenth,] must have had an idea of the thing intended.

Graves, Recollect. of Shenstone, p. 64.

DESIGNFULNESS.* n. s. [design and fulness.] Abundance of design, formed to the detriment of another.

All the portraiture of human nature is drawn over with dusky shades and irregular features of base designfulness and malicious cunning. Barrow, Sermon, vol. ii. S. 7.

DESIGNING. part. adj. [from design.] Insidious; treacherous; deceitful; fraudulently artful.

'Twould shew me poor, indebted, and compelled,

Designing, mercenary; and I know

You would not wish to think I could be bought. Southern.

DESIGNING.* n. s. [from design.] The art of delineating the appearance of natural objects.

Whether France and Flanders could have drawn so much money from England for figured silks, lace, and tapestry, if they had not had academies for designing?

Bp. Berkeley, Quercus, § 65.

DESIGNLESS.† adj. [from design.]

1. Without intention; without design; unknowing; inadvertent.

2. Without scheme or project.

That designless love of sinning and ruining his own soul.

Hammond's Works, iv. 513.

DESIGNLESSLY. adv. [from designless.] Without intention; ignorantly; inadvertently.

DESIGNMENT. n. s. [from design.]

1. A purpose and intent.

The sanctity of the Christian religion excludes fraud and falsehood from the designments and aims of its first promulgators. Decay of Piety.

'Tis a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes and designments, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

2. A scheme of hostility.

News, lords, our wars are done:

The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,

That their designment halts. Shakespeare.

She received advice both of the king's desperate estate, and of the duke's designments against her. Hayward.

3. The idea or sketch of a work.

The scenes which represent cities and countries are not really such, but only painted on boards and canvass; but shall that excuse the ill painture or designment of them? Dryden.

When absent, yet we conquer'd in his right;
For though that some mean artist's skill were shewn

In mingling colours, or in placing light,

Yet still the fair designment was his own. Dryden.

DESINENCE.* n. s. [Fr. desinence, from desino, Lat.] A close; an ending. Sherwood.

In their poesies, the fettering together the series of the verses, with the bonds of like cadence or desinence of rhyme, which if it be unusually abrupt, and not dependent in sense upon so near affinity of words, I know not what a loathsome kind of harshness and discordance it breedeth to my judicial ear.

Bp. Had. Postscript to his Satires.

DESINENT.* adj. [Lat. desinens.] Ending; extreme; lowermost.

In front of this sea were placed six tritons — their upper parts human — their desinent parts fish.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

DESIRABLE.† adj. [old Fr. desirable; Lat. desiderabilis.]

1. To be wished with earnestness.

Adjudged cases, collected by men of great sagacity, will improve his mind, toward acquiring this desirable amplitude and extent of thought. Watts.

He cannot but confess, that it is a thing the most desirable to man, and most agreeable to the goodness of God, that he should send forth his light and his truth by a special revelation of his will. Rogers.

2. Pleasing; delightful.

She then let drop some expression about an agate snuff-box: I immediately took the hint, and bought one, being unwilling to omit any thing that might make me desirable in her eyes. Addison.

Our own sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, seem to have something good and desirable in them. Watts.

DESIRABLENESS. * n. s. [from desirable.] That which is wished with earnestness.

Painted beauty is a great argument of the desirableness of that which is true and native.

Goodman, Winter's Ev. Conference, P. i.

DESIRE. n. s. [desir, Fr. desio, Ital. desiderium, Lat.] Wish; eagerness to obtain or enjoy.

Desire is the uneasiness a man finds in himself upon the absence of any thing, whose present enjoyment carries the idea of delight with it. Locke.

Drink provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance. Shakespeare.

Desire's the vast extent of human mind; It mounts above, and leaves poor hope behind. Dryden.

It is in a man's power only to observe what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding, or else to direct the sort, and call in such as he hath a desire or use of. Locke.

TO DESIRE. v. a. [desirer, French; desiderare, Latin.]

1. To wish; to long for; to covet.

Thou shalt not desire the silver or gold. Deut. vii. 25.

2. To express wishes; to appear to long.

Jove beheld it with a desiring look. Dryden.

3. To ask; to intreat.

Sir, I intreat you home with me to dinner.

— I humbly do desire your grace of pardon; I must away this night. Shakespeare.

But since you take such interest in our woe, And Troy's disastrous end desire to know, I will restrain my tears, and briefly tell What in our last and fatal night befell. Dryden.

4. To require; to demand. Not in use.

A doleful case desires a doleful song, Without vain art or curious compliments. Spenser.

DESIREFUL. n. s. [from desire.] One that is eager of any thing; a wisher.

I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desires. Shakespeare.

DESIRELESS. * adj. [desire and less.] Without desire.

The appetite is dull and desireless. Donne, Devot. p. 25.

DESIROUS. † adj. [old Fr. desireux.] Full of desire; eager; longing after; wishing for.

The same piety which maketh them that are in authority desirous to please, and resemble God by justice, inflameth every way men of action with zeal to do good. Hooker.

Be not desirous of his dainties, for they are deceitful meat. Prov. xxiii. 3.

Men are drowsy, and desirous to sleep before the fit of an ague, and yawn and stretch. Bacon.

Adam the while, Waiting desirous her return, had wove Of choicest flowers a garland. Milton, P. L.

Conjugal affection, Prevailing over fear and timorous doubt, Hath led me on desirous to behold Once more thy face. Milton, P. L.

DESIROUSLY. † adv. [from desirous.] Eagerly; with desire; with ardent wishes. Dict.

Do they not rather come hither slowly, sit here uneasily, and depart desirously?

South, Sermon on Div. Worship, i. 272.

DESIROUSNESS. n. s. [from desirous.] Fulness of desire; eagerness. Dict.

TO DESIST. v. n. [desisto, Latin.] To cease from any thing; to stop; with from.

Desist, thou art discerned,

And toil'st in vain; nor art in vain molest. Milton, P. R.
There are many who will not quit a project, though they find it pernicious or absurd; but will readily desist from it, when they are convinced it is impracticable. Addison.

DESISTANCE. n. s. [from desist.] The act of desisting; cessation.

Men usually give freeliest where they have not given before, and make it both the motive and excuse for their desistance from giving any more, that they have given already. Boyle.

DESDITIVE. adj. [desitus, Latin.] Ending; concludent; final.

Inceptive and desitive propositions are of this sort: the fogs vanish as the sun rises; but the fogs have not yet begun to vanish; therefore the sun is not yet risen. Watts.

DESK. † n. s. [Sax. dyrc, a table, as well as a dish; Teut. disch; Ital. disco. See also DESS.] An inclining table for the use of writers or readers, made commonly with a box or repository under it.

Tell her in the desk,

That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry,

There is a purse of ducats.

He is drawn leaning on a desk, with his bible before him. Shakespeare.

Walton's Angler.

I have been obliged to leave unfinished in my desk the heads of two essays. Pope.

Not the desk with silver rails,

Nor bureau of expence,

Nor standish well japan'd, avails

To writing of good sense. Swift.

TO DESK. * v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up, as in a desk; to treasure.

Or if you into some blind convent fly,

You're inquisition'd straight for heresy,

Unless your daring frontispiece can tell

News of a relick, or brave miracle;

Then are you entertain'd and desk'd up by

Our Ladies psalter and the rosary;

There to remain, till that their wisdoms please

To let you loose among the novices.

John Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 2.

DESOLATE. † adj. [desolatus, Latin.]

1. Without inhabitants; uninhabited.

Let us seek some desolate shade, and there

Weep our sad bosoms empty. Shakespeare.

This hefo appears at first in a desolate island, sitting upon the side of the sea. Broomer.

2. Deprived of inhabitants; laid waste.

This city will be desolate, without an inhabitant. Jer. xxvi.

3. Solitary; without society.

Tamar remained desolate in her brother Absalom's house.

2 Sam. xiii. 20.

Desolate, desolate, will I hence, and die. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

TO DESOLATE. v. a. [desolo, Latin.] To deprive of inhabitants; to lay waste; to make desert.

The island of Atlantis was not swallowed by an earthquake; but was desolated by a particular deluge. Bacon.

Thick around

Thunders the sport of those, who with the gun

And dog, impatient, bounding at the shot,

Worse than the season, desolate the fields. Thomson.

DESOLATELY. † adv. [from desolate.] In a desolate manner. Sherwood.

DESOLATER. * n. s. [from desolate.] One who causes desolation.

He shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease, and commanding over a wing of abominations be a desolator, or make desolation. Made on Daniel, p. 39.

But who is this desolator, or maker of desolations?

Id. p. 44.

DESOLATION. † n. s. [old Fr. desolation.]

1. Destruction of inhabitants; reduction to solitude.

What with your praises of the country, what with your discourse of the lamentable desolation thereof made by those Scots, you have filled me with a great compassion. Spenser on Ireland.

Without her follows to myself and thee,

Herself, the land, and many a Christian soul,

Death, desolation, ruin, and decay. Shakespeare.

2. Gloominess; sadness; melancholy; destitution.

That dwelling place is unnatural to mankind; and then the terribleness of the continual motion, the desolation of the far being from comfort, the eye and the ear having ugly images before it, doth still vex the mind, even when it is best armed against it.

Then your hose shall be ungartered, and every thing about you demonstrate a careless desolation.

My desolation does begin to make
A better life.

To complete

The scene of desolation stretch'd around,
The gun guards stand.

3. A place wasted and forsaken.

How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations!

Jer. l. 23.

DE'SOLATOR.* See DESOLATER.

DE'SOLATORY.* adj. [from devolute.] Causing or inflicting desolation.

These desolatory judgements are a notable improvement of God's mercy.

By Hall, Rem. p. 55.

DESPA'IR.* n. s. [desespoir, French.] This word is rarely found in the plural; and as Dr. Johnson has wholly omitted to notice this; I may here observe, that "despairs, equivocations, &c." are in Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 693.]

1. Hopelessness; despondence; loss of hope.

Despair is the thought of the unattainableness of any good, which works differently in men's minds, sometimes producing uneasiness or pain, sometimes rest and indolency.

Locke.

You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope, or never discovered it, stoop with despair.

Sidney.

We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair.

2 Cor. iv. 8.

Wegry'd, forsaken, and pursu'd at last,

All safety in despair of safety plac'd,

Courage he thence resumes, resolv'd to bear

All their assaults, since 'tis in vain to fear.

Denham.

Equal their flame, unequal was their care;

One lov'd with hope, one languish'd with despair.

Dryden.

2. That which causes despair; that of which there is no hope.

Strangely visited people,

All swell'n and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye;

The mere despair of surgery, he cures;

Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,

Put on with holy prayers.

Shakespeare.

3. [In theology.] Loss of confidence in the mercy of God.

Are not all or most evangelical virtues and graces in danger of extremes? As there is, God knows, too often a defect on the one side, so there may be an excess on the other; may not hope in God, or godly sorrow, be perverted into presumption or despair?

Sprat.

To DESPA'IR.* v. n. [desesperer, Norm. French; despero, Latin.]

1. To be without hope; to despond; with of before a noun.

Though thou drewest a sword at thy friend, yet despair not; for there may be a turning.

Eccles. xii. 11.

We commend the wit of the Chinese, who despair of making of gold, but are mad upon making of silver.

Bacon.

Never despair of God's blessings here, or of his reward hereafter; but go on as you have begun.

Wake.

2. Without of.

Despair thy charm.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

And Love, despairing in her heart a place,

Would needs take up his lodging in her face.

Lord Lansdowne, Ess. on Unnat. Rights.

To DESPA'IR.* v. a. To cause to despair.

Having no hope to despair the governor to deliver it [the fort] into their enemies' hands.

Sir R. Williams, Act. of the Low Countries, p. 30.

DESPA'IRABLE.* adj. [Fr. desesperable.] Unhopeful.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

DESPA'IRER.* n. s. [from despair.] One without hope.

He cheers the fearful, and commends the bold,

And makes despairers hope for good success.

Dryden.

DESPA'IRFUL.* adj. [despair and fail.] Hopeless.

Obsolete.

That sweet but sour despairful care.

Sidney.

Other sorts of cries also used amongst the Irish, — avour of the Scythian barbarism; as their lamentations at their burials, with despairful outcries.

Spenser on Ireland.

DESPA'IRINGLY.* adv. [from despairing.] In a manner betokening hopelessness or despondency.

Think not to fasten thy imperfections on the stars, and so despairingly conceive thyself under a fatality of being evil.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 7.

He speaks severely and despairingly of our society.

Hoyle.

To DESPA'TCH.* v. a. [French depescher, depêcher.

We had formerly the verb depeach in one of the senses of our present word. See Huloet's Dict. in voce. From the time that Dr. Johnson published his Dictionary, the spelling of despatch, in conformity to its French origin, has been only partial; dispatch, as Mr. Nares has justly remarked, seeming to be fixed beyond the power of any etymologist.]

1. To send away hastily.

Doctor Theodore Coleby, a sober man, I despatched immediately to Utrecht, to bring the moxa, and learn the exact method of using it.

Temple.

The good Aeneas, whose paternal care

Julius' absence could no longer bear,

Despatch'd Achates to the ships in haste,

To give a glad relation of the past.

Dryden.

2. To send out of the world; to put to death.

Edmund, I think, is gone,

In pity of his misery, to despatch

His knighted life.

Shakespeare.

And the company shall stone them with stones, and despatch them with their swords.

Ezek. xxiii. 47.

In combating, but two of you will fall;

And we resolve we will despatch you all.

Dryden.

Despatch me quickly, I may death forgive;

I shall grow tender else, and wish to live.

Dryden.

3. To perform a business quickly; as, I despatched my affairs, and ran hither.

Therefore commanded he his chariot-man to drive without ceasing, and to despatch the journey, the judgment of God now following him.

2 Mac. ix. 4.

No sooner is one action despatched, which, by such a determination as the will, we are set upon, but another uneasiness is ready to set us on work.

Locke.

4. To conclude an affair with another.

What, are the brothers parted?

— They have despatch'd with Pompey; he is gone.

Shakespeare.

DESPA'TCH.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Hasty execution; speedy performance.

Affected despatch is one of the most dangerous things to business that can be.

Bacon.

You'd see, could you her inward motions watch,

Feigning delay, she wishes for despatch;

Then to a woman's meaning would you look,

Then read her backward.

Granville.

The despatch of a good office is very often as beneficial to the solicitor as the good office itself.

Addison.

2. Conduct; management. Obsolete.

You shall put

This night's great business into my despatch,

Which shall, to all our nights and days to come,

Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Shakespeare.

*3. Express; hasty messenger or message; as despatches were sent away.

DESPA'TCHER.* n. s. [I have placed the word here, among Dr. Johnson's family of despatch; though it is, like some of those in his examples, not spelt with an e.]

1. That which destroys, or makes an end of.

Avaryce was the other despatcher, which hath made an end both of our libraries and books without respect.

Boyle, Pref. to Leland's Illu. sig. B.4.

2. One who performs business.

The dataire [is] a dater of writings, and more particularly the dater or dispatcher of the pope's bulls; an ordinary officer in the court of Rome. Cotgrave in V. Dataire.

DESTA'TCHFUL. adj. [from despatch.] Bent on haste; intent on speedy execution of business.

So saying, with dispatchful looks in haste
She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent. Milton, P. L.

Let one dispatchful bid some swain to lead
A well fed bullock from the grassy mead. Pope.

DESPECTION.* n. s. [Lat. despectio.] A looking down; figuratively, a despising.

They who take either of these guides, reason or grace, to carry them up to this cliff of meditation, may cast down their thoughts in a calm despection of all those shining attractives which they see to be so transitory.

W. Montagu, Dev. Ess. (1648.) P. i. p. 362.

DESPERA'DO.* n. s. [Pure Spanish. The French have, in their old language, the phrase "louer à la desespérade, to throw at all, to set all on sixes and sevens." This suits the character of the desperado.] One who is desperate, furious, without fear of danger or consequences. We had formerly the substantive desperate for men of this character; which, like desperado, is unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.

This dismal tragedy, perpetrated not by any private desperadoes of that faction. The Cloak in its Colours, (1679.) p. 9.

DESPERATE. adj. [desperatus, Latin.]

1. Without hope.

Since his exile she hath despis'd me most;
Forsworn my company, and rail'd at me,
That I am desperate of obtaining her. Shakespeare.

2. Without care of safety; rash; precipitant; fearless of danger.

Can you think, my lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel;
Or be a known friend 'gainst his highness' pleasure,
Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,
And live a subject? Shakespeare.

He who goes on without any care or thought of reforming, such an one we vulgarly call a desperate person, and that sure is a most damning sin. Hammond.

3. Irrecoverable; unsurmountable; irrecoverable.

These debts may be well called desperate ones; for a mad man owes them. Shakespeare.

In a part of Asia the sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth, before they are dead, and left there. Locke.

I am a man of desperate fortunes, that is, a man whose friends are dead; for I never aimed at any other fortune than in friends. Pope to Swift.

4. Mad; hot-brained; furious.

Were it not the part of a desperate physician to wish his friend dead, rather than to apply the best endeavours of his skill for his recovery? Spenser on Ireland.

5. It is sometimes used in a sense nearly ludicrous, and only marks any bad quality predominating in a high degree.

Concluding all mere desperate sots and fools,
That durst depart from Aristotle's rules Pope.

DESPERATE.* n. s. A desperate man.

A troop of execrable giants, violent oppressors of men, thieves, and adulterous desperates.

Dunne, Hist. of the Septuagint, (1633.) p. 204.

DESPERATELY. adv. [from desperate.]

1. Furiously; madly; without attention to safety or danger.

Your eldest daughters have foredone themselves,
And desperately or dead Shakespeare.

There might be somewhat in it, that he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately as before he had done uncivilly. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. In a great degree; violently: this sense is ludicrous.

She fell desperately in love with him, and took a voyage into Sicily in pursuit of him. Addison.

DESPERATENESS. n. s. [from desperate.] Madness; fury; precipitance.

The going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopefully, confidently, in wilful habits of sin, is called a desperateness also; and the more bold thus, the more desperate. Hammond.

DESPERATION. n. s. [from desperate.] Hopelessness; despair; despondency.

Desperation

Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them. Shakespeare.

As long as we are guilty of any past sin, and have no promise of remission, whatever our future care be, this desperation of success chills all our industry, and we sin on, because we have sinned. Hammond.

DESPICABLE. adj. [despicabilis, Latin.] Contemptible; vile; mean; sordid; worthless. It is applied equally to persons or things.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God were in his sight so vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.

Their heads as low
Bow'd down in battle, sunk before the spears

Of despicable foes. Milton, P. L.

All the earth he gave thee to possess and rule,
No despicable gift. Milton, P. L.

Not less ev'n in this despicable hero,
Than when my name shook Africk with affright,
And froze your hearts beneath your torrid zone. Dryden.

All the quiet that could be expected from such a reign, must be the result of absolute power on the one hand, and a despicable slavery on the other. Addison.

When men of rank and figure pass away their lives in criminal pursuits and practices, they render themselves more vile and despicable than any innocent man can be, whatever low station his fortune and birth have placed him in. Addison.

DESPICABLENESS. n. s. [from despicable.] Meanness; vileness; worthlessness.

We consider the great disproportion between the infinity of the reward and the despicableness of our service.

Decay of Piety.

DESPICABLY. adv. [from despicable.] Meanly; sordidly; vilely.

Here wanton Naples crowns the happy shore,
Nor vainly rich, nor despicably poor;
The town in soft solemnities delights,
And gentle poets to her arms invites. Addison.

DESPICIENCY.* n. s. [Lat. despicientia.] A looking down; figuratively, contempt; a despising.

It is very probable, that to shew their despiciency of the poor Gentiles, and to pride themselves in their prerogative and discretion from them, they [the Jews] affected to have such acts there done. Mede, Diatr. p. 191.

DESPISABLE.* adj. [from despise.] Contemptible; despicable; regarded with contempt. A word scarcely used but in low conversation, Dr. Johnson says. But it is in our old lexicography, without this note of degradation. See Huloet's Dict. It is also used by an author, whom Dr. Johnson has sometimes cited, though he has overpassed him here, in a very serious and affecting application.

I, that was respected by the honourable title of wife, am now rejected by the despicable name of a widow: I, that flourished like a fruitful vine upon the house-top, am now neglected and trodden under feet.

Quarles, Judg. and Mercy, The Widow.

I am obliged to you for taking notice of a poor old distressed courtier, commonly the most despicable thing in the world.

Arbutnot to Pope.

DES

DESPI'SAL.* n. s. [from despise.] Scorn; contempt.
No man is so mean but he is sensible of despise, and may find means to shew his resentment.

Patrick on Proverbs, xi. 12.
Policy, the great idol of a carnal reason, is that which insensibly works the soul to a despise of religion.

South, Serm. viii. §85.

To DESPISE.† v. a. [despiser, old Fr., Skinner's despicio, Lat. "You, my lord, high in birth and fortune, are a spectator from the summit of a high tower, or a high hill: the consequence of which is, that you can see nothing beautiful below you; at least nothing but with diminished beauty; and what you cannot see, you naturally disregard. Hence it is, that the word despise signifyeth, in the original, to look down upon things from above." Delany, Observ. on Lord Orrery's Remarks on the Life of Swift, p. 255.]

1. To scorn; to contemn; to slight; to disrespect.
For, lo, I will make thee small among the Heathen, and despised among men. Ser. xlix. 15.
My sons their old unhappy sire despise,
Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes. Pope.

2. In Shakspeare it seems once to signify abhor, as from the Italian despettare.
Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard. Shakspeare.

DESPISEDNESS.* n. s. [from the participle despised.]
The state of being despised.
He went foolishness to confute wisdom, weakness to bind strength, despisedness to vanquish pride.
Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

DESPI'SER. n. s. [from despise.] Contemner; scorner.
Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy distress?
Or else a rude despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty? Shakspeare.
Wisdom is commonly, at long running, justified even of her despisers. Government of the Tongue.
Thus the atheists, libertines, and despisers of religion, usually pass under the name of free-thinkers. Swift.

DESPI'SING.* n. s. [from despisc.] Scorn; contempt.
If any person shall declare or speak any thing in derogation, depraving, or despising of the same book, then &c.
Act for Uniform. of Comm. Prayer, &c. 1 Eliz. ch. 2.
All my contempt and *despising*s of Thy spiritual favours have not yet made Thee withdraw them.
Whole Duty of Man.

DESPI'TE.† n. s. [despite, old Fr.; "en despite, in contempt." Kelham. This is exactly the sense of the second definition of our word; which also is sometimes used with in understood. The Dutch spyt is likewise vexation, despise, scorn; "spyt, zyn bakkus," in spite of his teeth. See SPITE.]

1. Malice; anger; malignity; maliciousness; spleen; hatred.
Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee! Shakspeare.
With men these considerations are usually the causes of despite, disdain, or aversion from others; but with God they pass for reasons of our greater tenderness towards others. Spital.

2. Defiance; unsubdued opposition.
The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;
Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date. Shakspeare.
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame;
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. Shakspeare.
Know I will serve the fair in thy despite. Dryden.

DES

I have not quitted yet a victor's right;
I'll make you happy in your own despite. Dryden.
Say, would the tender creature in despite
Of heat by day, and chilling dews by night,
Its life maintain?
Thou, with rebel insolence, did'st dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian;
And in despite, ev'n of thy father's justice,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms. Rowe.

3. Act of malice; act of opposition.
[He] hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace. Heb. x. 29.
It would be all his solace and revenge,
As a despite done against the Most High,
Thee once to gain companion of his woe. Milton, P. L.

To DESPI'TE.† v. a. [old Fr. despiter.] To vex; to offend; to disappoint; to give uneasiness to.
Saturn, with his wife Rhea, fled by night, saving the town on fire, to despite Bacchus. Raleigh.

DESPI'TEFUL. adj. [despite and full.] Malicious; full of spleen; full of hate; malignant; mischievous: used both of persons and things.
I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakspeare.
Preserve us from the hands of our despiteful and deadly enemies. King Charles.
Mean while the heinous and despiteful act
Of Satan, done in Paradise, was known
In heaven. Milton, P. L.

DESPI'TEFULLY. adv. [from despiteful.] Maliciously; malignantly.
Pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you. Matthew, v. 44.

DESPI'TEFULNESS. n. s. [from despiteful.] Malice; hate; malignity.
Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture, that we know his meekness, and prove his patience. Wisd. ii. 19.

DESPI'TEOUS.† adj. [old Fr. despiteux or dépitéux; modern, despiteux; without pity, cruel. Chaucer uses both despitous and despitously.] Malicious; furious. A word now out of use.
The knight of the red-cross, when him he spy'd
Spurring so hot with rage despiteous,
Gan fairly couch his spear. Spenser, F. Q.
Turning despiteous torture out of doors. Shakspeare.

DESPI'TEOUSLY. adv. [from despiteous.] In a furious manner: not in use.
The mortal steel despiteously entail'd.
Deep in their flesh, quite thro' the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their gambenous falls. Spenser, F. Q.

To DESPOIL.† v. a. [old Fr. despoüiller, Lat. despolio.]

1. To rob; to deprive: with of.
Despoil'd of warlike arms, and known shield. Spenser.
You are nobly born,
Despoiled of your honour in your life. Shakspeare.
Waiting with hellish rancour imminent
To intercept thy way, or send thee back
Despoil'd of innocence, of faith, of bliss. Milton, P. L.
He, pale as death, despoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryden.
Ev'n now thy aid,
Eugene, with regiments unequal prest,
Awaits: this day of all his honours gain'd
Despoils him, if thy succour opportune
Defends not the sad hour. Philips.

2. To divest by any accident.
These formed stones despoil'd of their shells, and exposed upon the surface of the ground, in time moulder away. Woodward.

3. Simply to strip: not in use. This, however is the oldest employment of our word.

DES

And for that nothing of her old gere
She should bring into his house, he bad
That women should despoilen her right there;
Of which these clothes weren nothing glad
To handle her clothes wherein she was clad.

Chaucer, Clerk's Tale.

A groom gau despoil
Of puissant arms, and laid in easy bed. Spenser, F. Q.
DESPOILER.* n. s. [from despoil.] A plunderer; a robber. Hulot.

DESPOLIATION. n. s. [from despolio, Lat.] The act of despoiling or stripping.

To DESPO'ND.† v. a. [old Fr. despondre; Lat.
despondeo.]

1. To despair; to lose hope; to become hopeless or desperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling, and not to despond for any miscarriages or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Estrange.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and desponding weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which providence has given us for a guide:
and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all cheerfully, for the rest, to the good pleasure of Heaven with trust and resignation. L'Estrange.

Phyſick is their bane:
The learned leaches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryden.
Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty; and conclude that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities. Locke.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of such a virtue, or such a vice: he is well apprized that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, some may terrify the conscience, some may allure the slothful, and some encourage the desponding mind. Watts.

DESPO'NDENCY.† n. s. [from despondent.] Despair;
hopelessness; desperation.

These generations of the animal life—are anger, zeal, indignation, sorrow, derision, mirth,—despondency, triumph, or gloriation. More, Conject. Cobb. p. 231.

Religion is r friend to laziness and stupidity, or to supine and sottish despondencies of mind, under the pretence of compliances with Providence.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 58.

DESPO'NDENT. adj. [from despondens, Lat.] Despairing;
hopeless; without hope.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldest atheists, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be surprised with solitude or sickness, are the most suspicious, timorous, and despondent wretches in the world. Bentlen.

Congregat'd thrushes, linnets, sit
On the dewy tree, a dull despondent flock. Thomson.

DESPO'NDER.* n. s. [from despond.] One who is without hope.

I am, no desponder in my nature. Swift.

DESPO'NDINGLY.* adv. [from the participle desponding.] In a hopeless manner.

Swift, without a penny in his purse, was despondingly looking out of his window, to gape away the time.

Sheridan, Life of Swift.

To DESPO'NSATE,† v. a. [desponso, Lat. This is no modern word, though it stands in Dr. Johnson's Dictionary without any authority but his own; for desponsated occurs for betrothed, in the old vocabulary of Cockeram.] To betroth; to affiance; to unite by reciprocal promises of marriage.

DES

DESPO'NSATION. n. s. [from desponsate.] The act of betrothing persons to each other.

DE'SPOT.† n. s. [old Fr. despote, Gr. δεσπότης; from δεσπόω, to rule.] An absolute prince; one that governs with unlimited authority. This word is not in use, except as applied to some Dacian prince; as, the despot of Servia. So far Dr.
Johnson. Mr. Mason observes, that "the foregoing remark was true enough at the time it was written; but the French revolutionists have been very liberal in conferring this title."—If Dr.
Johnson or Mr. Mason had opened the old dictionary of Cotgrave, the word would have presented itself to them not as one of exclusive or modern usage only; for thus Cotgrave writes, two centuries since: "DESPOTE, a despot, the chief or sovereign lord of a country."

The friends of Jacobins are no longer despots; the betrayers of the common cause are no longer traitors!

Burke on a Régicide Peace.

DESPO'TICAL.† } adj. [Fr. despotique. But it may DESPO'TICK. } be questioned, whether our own is not the older word; and so from despot.] Absolute in power; unlimited in authority; arbitrary; unaccountable.

God's universal law
Gave to the man despotic power
Over his female in due awe,
Nor from that right to part an hour,
Smile she or lour.

Milton, S. A.

In all its directions of the inferior faculties, reason conveyed its suggestions with clearness, and enjoined them with power: it had the passions in perfect subjection; though its command over them was but persuasive and political, yet it had the force of cogive and despotic. South.

We may see in a neighbouring government the ill consequences of having a despotic prince, for notwithstanding there is vast extent of lands, and many of them better than those of the Swiss and Grisons, the common people among the latter are in a much better situation. Addison.

Patriots were forced to give way to the madness of the people, who were now wholly bent upon single and despotic slavery. Swift.

DESPO'TICALLY.* adv. [from despotic.] In an arbitrary manner.

Fortescue well distinguished between a monarchy despoti-cally regal, and a political or civil monarchy. Burke.

DESPO'TICALNESS. n. s. [from despotic.] Absolute authority.

DE'SPOTISM.† n. s. [despotisme, Fr. from despot.]
Absolute power.

The invention of these juvenile pretenders to liberty was, in reality, nothing more than a servile imitation of one of the poorest resources of doting despotism. Burke.

To DESPUMATE.† v. n. [despumer, old French;
despumo, Lat. Our own elder word was despumic, which occurs in the vocabulary of Cockeram.] To throw off parts in foam; to froth; to work.

DESPUMATION. n. s. [from despumate.] The act of throwing off excrementitious parts in scum or foam.

DESQUAMATION.† n. s. [from squama, Lat.]
The act of scaling foul bones. Term of chirurgery. Dr. Johnson says; and it also appears in the old vocabulary of Cockeram, that "to desquame" was "to scale a fish."

DESQUAMATORY.* n. s. [from desquamation.] An instrument, by which chirurgical desquamation is performed.

In the tail of these, came the surgeons laden with pincers, crane-bills, catheters, desquamatories, dilaters, scissors, saws.

L'Estrange, Quevedo's Visions, p. 28.

DESS.* n. s. [Teut. disch, a table; old Fr. dais, the same; whence the low, Lat. dasium, a table in a hall higher than the rest. Thus in our ancient vocabulary, the Prompt. Parvulorum, "des" is defined "a hyc benche." In Huloet's old dictionary, "dess" is "a lecturn to lay a book upon," that is, a desk. This old word was written also deis, as in Chaucer.]

1. A table on a raised floor; the high table, to use an expression yet retained in some of our colleges for the table at the top of the hall. Obsolete.
Wel semed eche of hem a fayre burgeis,
To sitten in a gild halle, on the deis. Chaucer, C. T. Prolog.

2. A desk, on which a book is laid.
And next to her sate goodly Shamefastnesse,
Ne ever durst her eyes from ground upreare,
Ne ever once did looke up from her desse.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. x. 50.

DESSE'RT. n. s. [desserte, Fr.] The last course at an entertainment; the fruit, or sweetmeats set on the table after the meat.

To give thee all thy due, thou hast the art
To make a supper with a fine dessert. Dryden.
At your dessert bright pewter comes too late,
When your first course was well serv'd up in plate. King.

To DESTINATE.† v. a. [destino, Lat.] To design for any particular end or purpose.

God is that point, in every part of the world, from whom every creature in the world doth proceed; by whom they are preserved; and unto whom they be destinated.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622), p. 298.

His purpose, fix'd when yet the world was young,
And oracles, so oft by prophets sung,
Now rushing on their destinated end,
No orisons nor sacrifice can bend.

Birds are destinated to fly among the branches of trees and bushes.
Sandys, Christ's Passion, p. 5.
Ray on the Creation.

DESTINATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Fixed; determined; designed.

The first exposition of our opposites is set down by Walo Messalinus, a destinate adversary to episcopacy.

Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, p. 99.

Art cannot regain
One poor hour lost, nor rescue a small fly
By a fool's finger destinate to die.

Habington, Cast. Funerals of G. Talbot.

DESTINATION.† n. s. [Fr. destination.] The purpose for which any thing is appointed; the ultimate design.

The passages through which spirits are conveyed to the members, being almost infinite, and each of them drawn through so many meanders, it is wonderful that they should perform their regular destinations without losing their way.

Glanville.

There is a great variety of apprehensions and fancies of men, in the destination and application of things to several ends and uses. Hale.

To DESTINE. v. a. [destino, Lat.]

1. To doom; to devote; to appoint unalterably to any state or condition.

Wherefore cease ye then?

Say they who counsel war: we are decreed,
Reserv'd, and destin'd to eternal woe:
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more? Milton, P. L.

All altars flame; before each altar lies,
Drench'd in his gore, the destin'd sacrifice. Dryden.

2. To appoint to any use or purpose.
Too thin blood strays into the immediately subordinate vessels, which are destined to carry humours secreted from the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. To devote; to doom to punishment or misery: used absolutely.

May Heav'n around this destin'd head
The choicest of its curses shed. Prior.

4. To fix unalterably.
The infernal judge's dreadful pow'r,
From the dark urn shall throw thy destin'd hour. Prior.

DE'STINY. n. s. [destinée, Fr.]

1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate of living beings.

Thou art neither like thy sire or dam;
But like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided. Shakespeare.

2. Fate; invincible necessity.

He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fall of famous children born of me;
But who can turn the stream of destiny,
Or break the chain of strong necessity,

Which fast is ty'd to Jove's eternal seat? Spenser, F. Q.

How can hearts, not free, be tried whether they serve

Willing or no, who will but what they must

By destiny, and can no other choose? Milton, P. L.

Had thy great destiny but given thee skill

To know, as well as pow'r to act her will. Denham.

Chance, or forceful destiny,

Which forms in causes first what'er shall be. Dryden.

3. Doom; condition in future time.

At the pit of Acheron
Meet me i' th' morning: thither he
Will come to know his destiny. Shakespeare.

DE'STITUTE. adj. [destitutus, Lat.]

1. Forsaken; abandoned: with of.

To forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, may endure. Hooker.

2. Abject; friendless.

He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer. Psalms cii. 17.

3. In want of.

Take the destin'd way
To find the regions destitute of day. Dryden.

Nothing can be a greater instance of the love that mankind has for liberty, than such a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campania of Rome, which lies in the same country, destitute of inhabitants. Addison.

DE'STITUTE.* n. s. One who is deprived of comfort; who is in want of friends.

O, my friends, have pity on this poor destitute, for the hand of God hath touched her.

P. St. John, Sermon. (1737), p. 224.

To DE'STITUTE.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To forsake; to leave; to disappoint.

It is good, in all causes, for every man to understand not only his advantages, but also his disadvantages; lest, expecting greater matters than the cause will afford, he be needlessly offended, when his expectation is destituted.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1622), p. 8.

Suppose God do thus destitute us, yet our anxiety or solicitude, our using of unlawful means, can never be able to relieve or secure us. Haymond, Pract. Catechism, iii. § 5.

DESTITUTION.† n. s. [Fr. destitution.] Want; the state in which something is wanted: applied to persons.

That destitution in food and cloathing is such an impediment, as, till it be removed, suffereth not the mind of man to admit any other care. Hooker.

They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great destitution, that justly any man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them. Hooker.

The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution is set down by the civil laws of a kingdom: in destitution or want of such rules, we are to observe the necessity of the creditor, the time of the delay, and the special obligations of friendship. Taylor.

TO DESTROY. v. a. [destruo, Lat. destruire, Fr.]

1. To overturn a city; to raze a building; to ruin.
The Lord will destroy this city. Gen. xix. 14.
2. To lay waste; to make desolate.
Soliman sent his army, which burnt and destroyed the country villages. Knolles.

3. To kill.

A people, great and many, and tall as the Anakims; but the Lord destroyed them before them, and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead. Deut. ii. 21.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shakespeare.

The wise providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their destruction, though they use them not as food; as, the peacock destroys snakes and adders; the weasel, mice and rats; spiders, flies; and some sorts of flies destroy spiders. Hale.

4. To put an end to; to bring to nought.

Do we not see that slothful, intemperate, and incontinent persons destroy their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Bentley.

There will be as many sovereigns as fathers: the mother too hath her title, which destroys the sovereignty of one supreme monarch. Locke.

DESTROYABLE.  adj.* [from destroy.] Able to be destroyed. Hudqet.

DESTROYER. n. s. [from destroy.] The person that destroys or lays waste; a murderer.

It is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it: it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the destroyer was an Assyrian. Raleigh.

Triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods!
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and slayers of men. Milton, P. L.

Yet, guiltless too, this bright destroyer lives;
At random wounds, nor knows the wound she gives. Pope.

TO DESTROY.  v. a.* [Lat. destructus.] This word, as the opposite to construct, and formed like that from a Latin participle, is worth notice; though it certainly is new in use.] To destroy.

The world which perished by water, was no other than the sublunary world; the heaven whereof is that which we call air, but the Scripture heaven; which sublunary heaven, together with the earth, was marred by that general deluge; and the creatures, belonging to them both, either wholly destroyed, or marvellously corrupted from that they were before.

Mede, Paraphr. on St. Peter, (1642.) p. 12.

DESTRUCTIBLE. adj. [from destruo, Lat.] Liable to destruction.

DESTRUCTIBILITY. n. s. [from destructible.] Liable-ness to destruction.

DESTRUCTION. n. s. [destructio, Lat.]

1. The act of destroying; subversion; demolition.
2. Murder; massacre.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shakespeare.

3. The state of being destroyed; ruin; murder suffered.

If that your moody discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction. Shakespeare.

When that which we immortal thought,
We saw so near destruction brought,
We felt what you did then endure,
And tremble yet, as not secure. Waller.

4. The cause of destruction; a destroyer; a depopulator: as a consuming plague.

The destruction that wasteth at noon-day. Ps. xci. 6.

5. [In theology.] Eternal death.

Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction. St. Matthew.

DESTRUCTIVE. adj. [destructivus, low Lat.]

1. Having the quality of destroying; wasteful; causing ruin and devastation; that which brings to destruction.

In ports and roads remote,
Destructive fires among whole fleets we send. Dryden.

One may think, that the continuation of existence, with a kind of resistance to any destructive force, is the continuation of solidity. Locke.

2. With of.

He will put an end to so absurd a practice, which makes our most refined diversions destructive of all politeness. Addison.
Both are defects equally destructive of true religion. Rogers.

3. With to.

In a firm building, even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish which is of a perishable kind, destructive to the strength. Dryden.

Excess of cold, as well as heat, pains us; because it is equally destructive to that temper which is necessary to the preservation of life. Locke.

DESTRUCTIVELY. adv. [from destructive.] Ruinously; mischievously; with power to destroy.

What remains but to breathe out Moses's wish? O that men were not so destructively foolish. Decay of Piety.

DESTRUCTIVENESS. n. s. [from destructive.] The quality of destroying or ruining.

The vice of professors exceeds the destructiveness of the most hostile assaults, as intestine treachery is more ruinous than foreign violence. Decay of Piety.

DESTRUCTOR. n. s. [from destroy.] Destroyer; consumer.

Helmout withly calls the fire the destructor and the artificial death of things. Boyle.

DESUDATION. n. s. [desudatio, Lat.] A profuse and inordinate sweating, from what cause soever.

DESUETUDE. † n. s. [old Fr. dessuétude; Lat. desuetudo.] Cessation to be accustomed; discontinuance of practice or habit.

This soft voluptuous nation, after so long a desuetude from arms, could not repel their fury.

Howell, Lett. i. i. 35. (dated in 1621.)

By the irruption of numerous armies of barbarous people, those countries were quickly fallen off, with barbarism and desuetude, from their former civility and knowledge. Hale.

We see in all things how desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things wherein we are conversant. Government of the Tongue.

DESULTORY. † adj. [desultorius, Latin, Dr. Johnson says. I may add, that desultorius, which means leaping, vaulting, frisking to and fro, was applied by the Romans to horses properly trained, and running with the greatest speed, close to each other, without either bridle or saddle, upon which, in the midst of their career, persons would cast and recast themselves from one to another horse. Whence also the French chevaux desultoirs; and the active rider by his leaping, obtained the name of "desulteur, sauteur qui passe d'un cheval sur un autre." Lacombe. Thus we see, by analogy, the force of our figurative expression, desultory.]

1. Roving from thing to thing; unsettled; immethodical; unconstant. Desultorious is not in use.

'Tis not for a desultory thought to atone for a few course of life, nor for any thing but the superinducing of a virtuous habit upon a vicious one, to qualify an effectual conversion.

L'Estrange.

DET

Let but the least trifle cross his way, and his desultory fancy presently takes the scent, leaves the unfinished and half-mangled notion, and skips away in pursuit of the new game.

Norris.

Take my desultory thoughts in their native order, as they rise in my mind, without being reduced to rules, and marshalled according to art.

Felton on the Classics.

This desultory character seems to have thrived in no vocation. — He was by turns a fiddler and a farmer, a grasper and a poet, with equal success.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 199.

2. Wavering; literally, by starts and leaps, in a hurry.

I mark'd his desultory face,
His gestures strange, and varying face.

T. Warton's Ode on the Suicide.

DESULTORIUM. n. s. [from desultory.] The quality of being desultory.

Ash.

TO DESUME. v. a. [desumo, Lat.] To take from any thing; to borrow.

This pebble doth suppose, as pre-existent to it, the more simple matter out of which it is desumed, the heat and influence of the sun, and the due preparation of the matter.

Hale.

They have left us relations suitable to those of Ælian and Pliny, whence they desumed their narrations.

Brown.

Laws, if convenient and useful, are never the worse, though they be desumed and taken from the laws of other countries.

Hale.

TO DETACH. v. a. [detacher, Fr.]

1. To separate; to disengage; to part from something.
The heat takes along with it a sort of vegetative and terrestrial matter, which it detaches from the uppermost stratum.

Woodward.

The several parts of it are detached one from the other, and yet join again one cannot tell how.

Pope.

2. To send out part of a greater body of men on an expedition.

If ten men are in war with forty, and the latter detach only an equal number to the engagement, what benefit do they receive from their superiority?

Addison.

DETAICHMENT. n. s. [from detach.] A body of troops sent out from the main army.

The Czar dispatched instructions to send out detachments of his cavalry, to prevent the King of Sweden's joining his army.

Tatler, No. 55.

Besides materials, which are brute and blind, Did not this work require a knowing mind?
Who for the task should fit detachments chuse
From all the atoms.

Blackmore.

TO DETAIL. v. a. [detailler, Fr.] To relate particularly: to particularise; to display minutely and distinctly.

They will perceive the mistakes of these philosophers, and be able to answer their arguments, without my being obliged to detail them.

Cheyne.

DETAIL. n. s. [Fr. detail, "a piecemealing, a hewing or cutting in pieces; hence also, retail, small sale, or a selling by parcels, or in pieces." Cotgrave.] A minute and particular account.

I chuse, rather than trouble the reader with a detail here, to defer them to their proper place.

Woodward.

I was unable to treat this part of my subject more in detail, without becoming dry and tedious.

Pope.

DETAILED. n. s. [from detail.] One who relates particulars. A modern word.

Individuality was sunk in the number of detailers.

Seward's Lett. vi. 135.

TO DETAIN. v. a. [detenir, Fr. detineo, Lat.] Spenser has once used detain as a substantive; but he has not been, and will not be, followed.

1. To keep that which belongs to another.

Detain not the wages of the singing; for every degree of detention of it, beyond the time, is injustice and uncharitableness.

By Taylor.

DET

2. To withhold; to keep back.

These doings sting him
So venomously, that burning shame detain'd him
From his Cordelia.

Shakespeare.

He has described the passion of Calypso, and the indecent advances she made to detain him from his country.

Broomer.

3. To restrain from departure.

Let us detain thee until we shall have made ready a kid.

Judg. xiii. 17.

Had Orpheus sung it in the nether sphere,

So much the hymn had pleas'd the tyrant's ear,

The wife had been detain'd to keep her husband there.

Dryden.

4. To hold in custody.

Every confinement of the person is an imprisonment, even by forcibly detaining one in the publick streets.

Blackstone.

DETAINDER. n. s. [from detain.] The name of a writ for holding one in custody, Dr. Johnson says. It may be a corruption of detainer; but the writ for the purpose here named is called detinue. See DETINUE.

DETAINER. n. s. [from detain.]

1. He that holds back any one's right; he that detains any thing.

Judge of the obligation that lies upon all sorts of injurious persons; the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, and cheaters of men's inheritances.

By Taylor.

2. Confinement; detention.

St. Paul sends him back again, that Philomen might have no reason to be angry at his longer detainer.

By Smalbridge.

3. In law, the act of unlawfully holding back the right of another person.

Deprivation of possession may also be by an unjust detainer of another's goods.

Blackstone.

TO DETECT. v. a. [delectas, Lat.]

1. To discover; to find out any crime or artifice.

There's no true lover in the forest, cleaving every minute and groaning every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time as well as a clock.

Shakespeare.

Though should I hold my peace, yet thou
Wouldst easily detect what I conceal.

Milton, P. L.

2. To discover in general.

The utmost infinite ramifications and inosculation of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses.

Ray.

DETECTOR. n. s. [Lat. detector.] Our own word is sometimes so written. A discoverer; one that finds out what another desires to hide.

Oh heavens! that this treason were not; or not I the detector.

Shakespeare.

Hypocrisy has a secret hatred of its detector; that which will bring it to a test which it cannot pass.

Davey of Puty.

DETECTION. n. s. [from detect.]

1. Discovery of guilt or fraud, or any other fault.

Should I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her then from the ward of her purity.

Shakespeare.

That is a sign of the true evangelical zeal, and note for the detection of its contrary: it should abound more in the mild and good-natured affection, than in the vehement and wrathful passions.

Spirit.

Detection of the incoherence of those discourses was wholly owing to the syllogistical form.

Locke.

2. Discovery of any thing hidden.

Not only the sea, but rivers and rains also, are instrumental to the detection of amber, and other fossils, by washing away the earth and dirt that concealed them.

Woodward.

DETENTION. n. s. [from detain.]

1. The act of keeping what belongs to another.

How goes the world, that I am thus encountered
With clamorous claims of debt, of broken bonds
And the detention of long since due debts
Against my honour?

Shakespeare.

2. Confinement; restraint.

This worketh by determition of the spirits, and constipation of the tangible parts. Bacon.

To DETER. v. a. [deterreo, Lat.] To discourage by terror; to fright from any thing.

I never yet that deterred from duty.

Deterred by thy inimitable maid. Waller.

Many and potent enemies tempt and deter us from our duty, yet our case is not hard, so long as we have a greater strength on our side. Tillotson.

Beauty or unbecomingness are of more force to draw or deter imitation, than any discourses which can be made to them. Locke.

The ladies may not be deterred from corresponding with me by this method. Addison.

My own face deters me from my glass;

And Kneller only shews what Celia was. Prior.

DETERMENT. n. s. [from deter.] Cause of discouragement; that by which one is deterred. A good word, but not now used.

This will not be thought a discouragement unto spirits, which endeavour to advantage nature by art; nor will the ill success of some be made a sufficient determent unto others. Brown, Vulg. Err.

These are not all the determents that opposed my obeying you. Boyle.

To DETERGE. v. a. [detergo, Lat.] To cleanse a sore; to purge any part from feculence or obstructions.

Consider the part and habit of body, and add or diminish your simples as you design to deterge or incarnate. Wiseman.

Sea salt preserves bodies, through which it passeth, from corruption, and it detergeth the vessels, and keeps the fluids from putrefaction. Arbuthnot.

DETERGENT. adj. [from deterge.] Having the power of cleansing.

The food ought to be nourishing and detergent. Arbuthnot.

DETERGENT. n. s. That which cleanses.

The virtues of the most valuable preparation, I mean salt of amber, are in a great degree answered by tar-water, as a detergent. Bp. Berkeley, Ser. § 23.

To DETERIORATE. v. a. [old Fr. deteriorer; Lat. deterior.] To impair; to make worse.

DETERIORATION. n. s. [deterioration, Fr.] The act of making any thing worse; the state of growing worse.

Thus has the Porte—after reducing the Ottoman empire to extreme weakness, and internal symptoms of ruin, irretrievable by a government in a regular progress of deterioration, lost an important territory. Guthrie, Russia.

DETERMINABLE. adj. [from determine.] Capable of being certainly decided.

For the extent, or tenour, of this court of chancery, I shall divide it into five natures. The first is, when the court doth embrace, or retain, causes both in matter and substance merely determinable, and fit for the common law. Bacon, Speech in Chancery.

Whether all plants have seeds were more easily determinable, if we could conclude concerning harts-tongue, ferns, and some others. Brown, Vulg. Err.

About this matter, which seems so easily determinable by sense, accurate and sober men widely disagree. Boyle.

To DETERMINATE. v. a. [determiner, French.] To limit; to fix; to determine; to terminate: not in use.

The fly-slow hours shall not determine

The dateless limit of thy dear exile. Shakespeare.

DETERMINATE. adj. [determinatus, Latin.]

1. Settled; definite; determined.

Demonstrations in geometry, if they are not more evident and exact than in extension, yet they are more general in their use, and determinate in their application. Locke.

To make all the planets move about the sun in circular orbits, there must be given to each, by a determinate impulse, those present particular degrees of velocity which they now have, in proportion to their distances from the sun and to the quantity of the solar matter. Huygh.

2. Established; settled by rule; positive.

Scriptures are read before the time of divine service, and, without either choice or still, regulated by any determinate order. Hosker.

3. Decisive; conclusive.

I th' progress of this business,

E're a determinate resolution; he;

I mean the bishop, did require a respite. Shakespeare.

4. Fixed; resolute.

Like men disposed in a long peace, more determinate to do, than skilful how to do. Sidney.

5. Resolved.

My determinate voyage is more extravagancy. Shakespeare.

DETERMINATELY. adv. [from determinate.]

1. Resolutely; with fixed resolve.

The queen obeyed the king's commandment, full of raging agonies, and determinately bent, that she would seek all loving means to win Zelmune. Sidney.

In those errors they are so determinately settled, that they pay into falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hosker.

2. Certainly; unchangeably.

Think thus with yourselves, that you have not the making of things true or false; but that the truth and assistance of things is already fixed and settled, and that the principles of religion are already either determinately true or false, before you think of them. Watson.

DETERMINATION. n. s. [from determine.]

1. Absolute direction to a certain end.

When we voluntarily waste much of our lives, that remission can by no means consist with a constant determination of will or desire to the greatest apparent good. Locke.

2. The result of deliberation; conclusion formed; resolution taken.

They have acquainted me with their determination, which is to go home, and to trouble you no more. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

The proper acts of the intellect are intellection, deliberation, and determination or decision. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

It is much disputed by divines, concerning the power of man's will to good and evil in the state of innocence; and, upon very nice and dangerous precipices, stand their determinations on either side. South.

Consult thy judgement, affections and inclinations, and make thy determination upon every particular; and be always as suspicious of thyself as possible. Calamy.

3. Judicial decision.

He confined the knowledge of governing to justice and lenity, and to the speedy determination of civil and criminal causes. Gulliver's Travels.

4. [Fr. determination.] Expiration; end. Used only by lawyers; as, from and after the determination of the said lease.

DETERMINATIVE. adj. [from determine.]

1. That which uncontrollably directs to a certain end.

That individual action which is justly punished as sinful in us, cannot proceed from the special influence and determinative power of a just cause. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

2. That which makes a determination.

If the term added to make up the complex subject does not necessarily or constantly belong to it, then it is determinative, and limits the subject to a particular part of its extension; as, every pious man shall be happy. Watts.

DETERMINATOR. n. s. [from determine.] One who determines.

They have recourse unto the great determinator of virginity, conceptions, fertility, and the inscrutable infinitude of the whole body. Brown.

Choose them an author out of all present divines, whom they would make determine and determinator between us and them. Bp. Marten, Episcopary Sermons, p. 10.

To DETERMINE. v. a. [determiner, Fr. determiner, Latin.]

1. To fix; to settle.

It is concluded he shall be prostrate.

— It is determin'd, not concluded yet.

But so it must be, if the King's ministry.

More particularly to determine the proper season for granting. I do not see how it can be made a study, but as an inroduction to rhetoric.

Locke.

2. To conclude; to fix ultimately.

Probability, in the nature of it, supposes that a thing may, or may not be so, for any thing that yet appears, or is certainly determined on the other side.

South.

Milton's subject was still greater than Homer's or Virgil's:

it does not determine the fate of single persons or nations, but of a whole species.

Addison.

Determination hangs on every word we speak,

On every thought, still the concluding stroke

Determines all, and closes our design.

Addison.

3. To bound; to confine.

The knowledge of men hitherto hath been determined by the view or sight; so that whatsoever is invisible, either in respect of the fineness of the body itself, or the smallness of the parts, or of the subtilty of the motion, is little enquired.

Bacon.

The principium individuationis is existence itself, which determines a being of any sort to a particular time and place, incommunicable to two beings of the same kind.

Locke.

No sooner have they climbed that hill, which thus deter- mines their view at a distance, but a new prospect is opened.

Atterbury.

4. To adjust; to limit; to define.

He that has settled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another, which is really distinguishing.

Locke.

5. To influence the choice.

You have the captives,

Who were the opposites of this day's strife:

We do require them of you, so to use them

As we shall find their merits and our safety.

May equally determine.

Shakespeare.

A man may suspend the act of his choice from being deter- mined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined it.

Locke.

As soon as the studious man's hunger and thirst makes him uneasy, he, whose will was never determined to any pursuit of good cheer, is, by the uneasiness of hunger and thirst, presently determined to eating and drinking.

Locke.

6. To resolve.

Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay

David.

1 Sam. xx. 33.

7. To decide.

I do not ask whether bodies so exist, that the motion of one cannot be without the motion of another: to determine this other way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum.

Locke.

8. To put an end to; to destroy.

Now where is he, that will not stay so long

Till sickness hath determin'd me?

Shakespeare.

To DETERMINE. v. n.

1. To conclude; to form a final conclusion.

We expect great tidings, which perhaps

Of us will soon determine, or propose

New laws to be observ'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. To settle opinion.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand which way the leaped shall determine of it.

Locke.

3. To end; to come to an end.

They were apprehended, and after conviction the danger determined by their deaths.

Hayward.

Alas! springs from a gratified passion, as most of the pleasure of sin does, must needs determine with that passion.

South.

4. To make a decision.

The road shall show of us

How honourably and how kindly we Determine for him.

Shakespeare.

5. To end consequentially.

Revolutions of state, many times, make way for new institutions and forms; and often determine in either setting up some tyrannical house, or bringing in some conquest from abroad.

Temple.

6. To resolve concerning any thing.

Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met

Is to determine of the coronation.

Shakespeare.

DETERMINER. n. s. [from determining.] One, who makes a determination or decision.

Good M. doctor determiner, how prove you that Antichrist's persecution shall dure but these years and a half?

Fulke's Retentive, (1580,) p. 158.

Those which know least of things past or present, are usually the most confident determiners upon many mean occasions concerning things future.

Spencer on Prodiges, p. 52.

DETEREATION. n. s. [de and terra, Latin; deterer,

French.] Discovery of any thing, by removal of the earth that hides it; the act of unburying.

This concerns the raising of new mountains, deterations or the devolution of earth down upon the valleys, from the hills and higher grounds.

Woodward.

DETERSION. n. s. [from detergo, Latin.] The act of cleansing a sore.

I endeavoured deterision; but the matter could not be discharged.

Wieman.

DETERSIVE. † adj. [Fr. detersif.] Having the power to cleanse.

Bullakar, and Sherwood.

DETERSIVE. n. s. An application that has the power of cleansing wounds.

We frequently see simple ulcers afflicted with sharp humours, which corrode them, and render them painful, sordid ulcers,

if not timely relieved by detersives and lotions.

Wieman.

TO DETEST. v. a. [detestor, Latin.] To hate; to abhor; to abominate.

Nigh thereto the ever-damned beast

Durst not approach; for he was deadly made,

And all that life preserved did detest.

Spenser, F. Q.

Glory grows guilty of detested crimes,

When for fame's sake, for praise an outward part,

We bend to that the working of the heart.

Shakespeare.

I've liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods

Detest my baseness.

Shakespeare.

There is that naturally in the heart of man which abhors sin as sin, and consequently would make him detest it both in himself and others too.

South.

Who dares think one thing, and another tell,

My heart detests him as the gates of hell.

Pope.

DETESTABLE. † adj. [Fr. detestable.] Our word, in old poetry, is found with the accent on the first syllable; and continued to be so used in Shakspere's time; as the following example shews.

Milton places it on the second.] Hateful; abhorred;

abominable; odious.

He sent also that detestable singler Apollonius with an army of two and twenty thousand.

2 Mac. v. 24.

Beguill'd, divorc'd, wrong'd, spighted, slain!

Most detestable death.

Shakespeare.

He desired him to consider that both armies consisted of Christians, to whom nothing is more detestable than effusion of human blood.

Hayward.

DETESTABLY. adv. [from detestable.] Hatefully;

abominably; odiously.

It stands here stigmatised by the apostle as a temper of mind, rendering men so detestably bad, that the great enemy of mankind neither can nor desires to make them worse.

South.

DETESTABLENESS. n. s. [from detestable.] The quality of being detestable.

It is their intrinsic hatefulness and detestableness, which originally inflame us against them. [detestable principles.]

A. Smith, Theory of Mor. Sent. p. 11.

DETESTATION. † n. s. [Fr. detestation.]

† Hatred; abhorrence; abomination.

DET

Then only did misfortune make her see what she had done, especially finding in us rather detestation than pity. Sidney.

2. It is sometimes used with for, but of seems more proper.

Bloodshed—a sin, in the hatred and detestation of which heaven and earth seem to strive for the mastery.

South, Sermon. xi. 40.

The detestation you express
For vice in all its glitt'ring dress. Swift.

Our love of God will inspire us with a detestation for sin, as what is of all things most contrary to his divine nature. Swift.

DETESTER.† n. s. [from detest.] One that hates or abhors. Sherwood.

It grew high time for the English nation to think of recovering itself from some of that infamy and loud reproach, that the spilling of innocent royal blood, and the profane invasion of all that was sacred or civil had brought upon it, in the opinion of all the nations round about, that stood as spectators and detesters of those religious barbarities, those villainies cloaked and sanctified with the name of reformation.

South, Sermon. ix. 115.

To DETHRONE.† v. a. [detroner, Fr. de and throne, Latin.] To divest of regality; to throw down from the throne; to deprive of regal dignity.

In proportion as the queen became the object of public hatred, the dethroned king was regarded with pity.

Hume, Hist. of Eng.

DETHRONEMENT.* n. s. [from dethrone.] The act of dethroning.

DETHRONER.* n. s. [from dethrone.] One who contributes towards depriving of regal dignity.

The hand of our dethroners is not only against, but hath prevailed against, and (to their power) blotted out the remembrance of the regal and sacerdotal throne.

Archdeacon Anway, Tablet of Mod. (1661), p. 170.

To DETHRONIZE.* v. a. [from dethrone.] To unthrone; to put out of a throne.

Cotgrave in V. Destroner.

DETI'NUR. n. s. [detenue, French.] A writ that lies against him, who, having goods or chattels delivered to him to keep, refuses to deliver them again. Cowel.

To DETONATE.* v. n. [Lat. detono.] To make a great noise, like thunder.

DETONATION. n. s. [detono, Latin.] A noise more forcible than the ordinary crackling of salts in calcination; as in the going off of the pulvis or aurum fulminans, or the like. It is also used for that noise, which happens upon the mixture of fluids that ferment with violence; as oil of turpentine with oil of vitriol, resembling the explosion of gunpowder. Quincy.

A new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, till the detonation occasioned by the former be either quite or almost altogether ended; unless it chance that the puffing matter do blow the coal too soon out of the crucible. Boyle.

To DETONIZE.† v. a. [old Fr. detoniser, Lacombe; from detono, Latin.] To calcine with detonation. A chymical term.

Nineteen parts in twenty of detonized nitre is destroyed in eighteen days. Arbutnot on Air.

DETORSION.* n. s. [Lat. detorsus. Sometimes written detortion.] A departure from the original design.

Cross those detorsions, when it [the heart] downward tends,
And when it to forbidden heights pretends.

Donne, Poems, p. 327.

To DETORT. v. a. [detortus, of detorqueo, Latin.] To wrest from the original import, meaning, or design.

DET

They have assumed what amounts to an infallibility in the private spirit, and have detorted texts of scripture to the sedition, disturbance, and destruction of the civil government. Dryden.

DETO'RTION.* n. s. [from detort.] The act of turning any thing from its original import. Whit.

DETO'UR.* n. s. [French.] A turning; a way about. The word has recently crept into our language.

To DETRACT.† v. a. [detractio, Latin; detracter, French.]

1. To derogate; to take away by envy, calumny, or censure, any thing from the reputation of another: with from.

Those were assistants in private, but not trusted to manage the affairs in public; for that would detract from the honour of the principal ambassador. Bacon.

No envy can detract from this: it will shine in history, and, like swans, grow whiter the longer it endures. Dryden.

2. Without from.
Nor I, with biting verse, have yet
Detracted any man. Hulot, in V. Detract.

3. To take away; to withdraw.
By the largeness of the cornices they hinder both the light within, and likewise detract much from the view of the front without. Walton.

The multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen propriety in it. Boyle.

DETRACTER.† n. s. [old Fr. detracteur, mod. detracteur; Lat. detractor. Our own word is oftener written detractor. See DETRACTOR.] One that takes away another's reputation; one that impairs the honour of another.

I am right glad to be thus satisfied, in that I yet was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors with the certain knowledge of their slanderous untruths. Spenser on Ireland.

Whether we are so entirely sure of their loyalty upon the present foot of government as you may imagine, their detractors make a question. Swift.

Away the fair detractors went,
And gave by turns their censures vent. Swift.

DETRACTIO.† n. s. [detractio, Latin; detractio, French.]

1. Detractio, in the native importance of the word, signifies the withdrawing or taking off from a thing; and, as it is applied to the reputation, it denotes the impairing or lessening a man in point of fame, rendering him less valued and esteemed by others, which is the final aim of detractio. Ayliffe.

I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detractio; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakespeare.

Fame, that her high birth to raise,
Seem'd erst so lavish and profuse,
We may justly now accuse
Of detractio from her pride. Milton, Arcades.

If detractio could invite us, discretion surely would restrain us from any derogatory intention.
To put a stop to the insults and detractions of vain men, I resolved to enter into the examination. Woodward.

To consider an author as the subject of obloquy and detractio, we may observe with what pleasure a work is received by the invidious part of mankind, in which a writer falls short of himself. Addison.

2. A withdrawing; a taking away. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson, or any of our lexicographers.

You shall enquire of the unlawful taking of partridges, and pheasants, or fowl, the detractio of the eggs of the wild-fowl, &c. Bacon, Charge at the Sessions for the Verge, p. 18.

DET

DETRACTIOUS.* adj. [from detract.] Lessening the honour of a thing; dishonourable.

Johnson in V. Derogatory.

DETRACTIVE.* adj. [from detract.]

1. Having the power to take or draw away.

Finding that his patient hath any store of herbs in his garden, [the surgeon] straightway will apply a detractive plaster. Knights, Tr. of Truth, (1580.) fol. 28.

2. Disposed to derogate, to take away by slander.

The iniquity of an envious and detractive adversary.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1533.) p. 276.

DETRACTOR.* n. s. [Lat. detractor.] One that takes away another's reputation. See DETRACTER.

Leaving the envy or displeasure to the detractor.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 211.

He that hath the gift of good reputation, if his name be any thing touched by the detractor, how unquiet is he!

Homilies, ii. 226.

All poets are mad, a company of bitter satirists, detractors, or else parasitical applauders!

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

The detractor represents the perfection of him, whom he hates, lessened and diminished from what they really are, partly by a malicious concealment, partly by calumny and direct slander. South, Sermon ix. 193.

DETRACTORY.* adj. [from detract.] Defamatory by denial; derogatory. Sometimes with to, properly from.

This is not only derogatory unto the wisdom of God, who hath proposed the world unto our knowledge, and thereby the notion of himself, but also detractory unto the intellect and sense of man, expressly disposed for that inquisition. Brown.

In mentioning the joys of heaven, I use the expressions I find less detractory from a theme above our praises. Boyle.

The detractory lye takes from a great man the reputation that justly belongs to him. Arbutnot.

DETRACTRESS.* n. s. [from detract.] A censorious woman.

If any shall detract from a lady's character, unless she be absent, the said detractress shall be forthwith ordered to the lowest place of the room. Addison.

TO DETRECT.* v. a. [Lat. detrecto.] To refuse; to decline. Not in use.

He [Moses] detrected his going into Egypt, upon pretence that he was not eloquent. Fotherby, Altheom. (1622.) p. 194.

DETRACTATION.* n. s. [Lat. detrectatio.] A refusing to do a thing. Not in use. Cockeram.

DETRIMENT.* n. s. [Lat. detrimentum, Latin.] Loss; damage; mischief; diminution; harm.

Difficult it must be for one Christian church to abolish that which all had received and held for the space of many ages, and that without any detriment unto religion. Hooker.

I can repair
That detriment, if such it be, to lose
Self-lost.

Milton, P. L.

If your joint power prevail, the affairs of hell

No detriment need fear: go, and be strong. Milton, P. L.

There often fall out so many things to be done on the sudden, that some of them must of necessity be neglected for that whole year, which is the greatest detriment to this whole mystery. Boetyn's Calendar.

Let a family burn but a candle a night less than the usual number, and they may take in the Spectator without detriment to their private affairs. Addison.

DETRIMENTAL.* adj. [from detriment.] Mischievous; harmful; causing loss.

Among all honorary rewards, which are neither dangerous nor detrimental to the donor, I remember none so remarkable as the titles which are bestowed by the emperor of China: these are never given to any subject till the subject is dead. Addison.

Obstinacy in prejudices, which are detrimental to our country, ought not to be mistaken for virtuous resolution and firmness of mind. Addison.

DEU

DETRITION.* n. s. [Lat. detrictio, detrictus, Latin.] The act of wearing away.

The brush of time is the gradual detrition of time.

Stevens, Note on Shakspeare, R. Hen. VI. P. II.

TO DETRUDE.* v. a. [Lat. detrudo, Latin.] To thrust down; to force into a lower place.

Such as are detruded down to hell,

Either, for shame, they still themselves retire;

Or, tied in chains, they in close prison dwell. Davies.

Philosophers are of opinion, that the souls of men may, for their misdeeds, be detruded into the bodies of beasts. Luche.

At thy command the vernal sun awakes

The torpid sap, detruded to the root

By wintry winds.

Thomson.

TO DETRUNCATE.* v. a. [Lat. detruncō, Latin.]

To lop; to cut; to shorten by deprivation of parts.

Cockeram.

DETRUNCATION.* n. s. [from detruncate.] This word, like detruncate, was in use nearly two centuries since, as appears by its introduction into Cockeram's vocabulary. Neither to this, nor to the verb, has Dr. Johnson, however, given any other authority than his own. That of a century since I have found in a very valuable compilation; and the word has afforded to Johnson an expression of notable effect in his admirable preface to his dictionary; of which expression many have believed, and some have unjustly asserted, our great lexicographer to be the coiner.] The act of lopping or cutting.

This can never prove either any interpolations in the former, or detruncations in the latter. Biblioth. Bibl. (Or. 1720.) p. 58.

It may sometimes happen, by hasty detruncation, that the general tendency of the sentence may be changed; the divine may desert his tenets, or the philosopher his system.

Johnson, Pref. to his Dictionary.

DETRUSION.* n. s. [Lat. detrusio, Latin.] The act of thrusting or forcing down.

The insolent detrusion of imperial authority.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of Murr. Clergy, (1620.) p. 282.

Upon this foul revolt and apostasy of their [the angels'] from their primeval glory, followed their punishment; which was their dejection and detrusion into the caliginous regions of the air. Hallywell, Melamp. (1681.) p. 13.

From this detrusion of the waters towards the side, the parts towards the pole must be much increased. Keil against Burnet.

DETURBATION.* n. s. [Lat. deturbo, Latin.] The act of throwing down; degradation. Dict.

TO DEVAST.* v. a. [Lat. devasto.] To plunder; to waste; to destroy. Not now in use. But devastate supplies its place.

She [the eagle] dwells among the rocks—

From wounds her eaglets suck the reeking blood,
And all-devastating war provides her food.

Sandys, Paraphr. of Job, p. 58.

TO DEVASTATE.* v. a. [Lat. devastō.] To waste. See TO DEVAST.

DEVASTATION.* n. s. [Lat. devastatio, Latin.] Waste; havock; desolation; destruction.

The flames of hostile fury rising up in our towns and cities; the devastation of our fruitful and pleasant villages.

Bp. Hall, Ref. p. 153.

By devastation the rough warrior gains,

And farmers fatten most when famine reigns.

That flood which overflowed Attica in the days of Ogyges, and that which drowned Thessaly in Deucalion's time, made cruel havock and devastation among them. Woodward.

DEUCE.* n. s. [old Fr. deter; modern, deuc.]

1. Two. A word used in games, for a card or die with two spots.

You are a gentleman and a gambler; then, I am sure, you know how much the gross sum of deuce acc amounts to.

Shakspeare.

DEV

1. The devil. See DEUSE.

To DEVELOPE. v. a. [developer, French.] To disengage from something that enfolds and conceals; to disentangle; to clear from its covering.

Take him to develop, if you can,
And hew the block off and get out the man. Pope, Dunciad.

DEVELOPEMENT. * n. s. [Fr. developement, "an unfolding, manifesting, spreading open," Cotgrave.]

The act of minutely shewing; an exhibition.

These observations on Thomson — might still be augmented by an examination and development of the beauties in the loves of the birds, in Spring; a view of the torrid zone, in Summer; the rise of fountains and rivers, in Autumn; a man, perishing in the snow, in Winter. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope, i. 49.

DEVERGENCE. n. s. [devergentia, Latin.] Declivity; declination. Dict.

To DEVEST. v. a. [devestir, French; devestio, Latin.]

This word is more frequently written divest; though devest is the correct spelling, and some of our old lexicographers so give the word. But, like dispatch, divest seems to disdain submission to etymology.]

1. To strip; to deprive of clothes.

Friends all but now
In quarter and in terms like bride and groom,
Devesting them for bed. Shakespeare.

Then of his arms Andronicus he devests,
His sword, his shield he takes, and plumed crests. Denham.

2. To annul; to take away any thing good.

What are those breaches of the law of nature and nations, which do forfeit and devest all right and title in a nation to government? Bacon.

3. To free from any thing bad.

Come on thou little inmate of this breast,
Which for thy sake from passions I devest. Prior.

DEVEX. adj. [deveras, Latin.] Bending down; declivous; incurvated downwards.

DEVEX. * n. s. Used for deverity by an old writer of considerable merit, but improperly.

Upon the western sands,
Following the world's devex, he meant to tread,
To compass both the poles, and drink Nile's head. May, Lucan, B. 10.

DEVEXITY. v. n. [Fr. devexité, "a hollowness, bowing, or bending," Cotgrave.] Incurvation downwards; declivity.

The heaven's devexity, [deverity]
Devics, Wil's Pilgrimage, sign. N. i. b.

To DEVIATE. v. n. [de via decedere, Latin, Dr.

Johnson says. But our word is immediately from the French devier, or desprier, "to mislead or put out of the way; also, to die." Cotgrave. So the old Fr. devial, he is dead. V. Lacombe.]

1. To wander from the right or common way.

The rest to some faint meaning make pretence,
But Shadwell never deviates into sense. Dryden.

Thus Pegasus, if nearer way to take,
May boldly deviate from the common track. Pope.

What makes all physical and moral ill?

These natural deviates, and here wonders will. Pope.
Besides places which may deviate from the sense of the author, it would be kind to observe any deficiencies in the diction. Pope.

2. To go astray; to err; to sin; to offend.

DEVIATION. n. s. [from deviate.]

1. The act of quitting the right way; error; wandering.

These bodies constantly move round in the same tracts, without making the least deviation. Chéyne.

2. Variation from established rule.

Having once surveyed the true and proper natural alphabet, we may easily discover the deviations from it, in all the alphabets in use, either by defect of single characters, of letters, or by confusion of them. Holler.

DEV

3. Offence; obligity of conduct.

Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground, that they may not bring error into habit. Clarke.

DEVISE. v. n. [deviser, French; disegno, Italian.]

1. A contrivance; a stratagem.

This is our device.
That Calista at this oak shall meet with us. Shakespeare.
He intended it as a political device to lessen their interest, and keep them low in the world. Atterbury.

2. A design; a scheme formed; project; speculation.

Touching the exchange of laws in practice with laws in device, which they say are better for the state of the church, if they might take place: the farther we examine this, the greater cause we find to conclude, although we continue the same we are, the harm is not great. Hooker.

His device is against Babylon, to destroy it. Jer. li. 11.
There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless, the counsel of the Lord shall stand. Prov. xix. 21.

3. The emblem on a shield; the ensign armorial of a nation or family.

Then change we shields, and their devices bear;
Let fraud supply the want of force in war. Dryden.
Hibernia's harp, device of her command,
And parent of her myth, shall there be seen. Prior.
They intend to let the world see what party they are of,
by figures and designs upon these fans; as the English grant used to distinguish themselves by devices on their shields. Addison.

4. Invention; genius.

He's gentle; never schooled; and yet learned; full of noble device, of all sorts enchantingly beloved. Shakespeare.

5. A spectacle; a show. See DEVICEFUL.

Masques and devices, welcome! Beaumont and Fl. Coronation.

DEVICEFUL. adj. [from device.]

1. Full of costly spectacles, and splendid exhibitions.

To tell the glory of the feast that day,
The goodly service, the deviceful sights,
The bridegroom's state, the bride's most rich array. Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 3.

2. Inventive; full of speculation.

Some clarks doe doubt in their devicefull art,
Whether this heavenly thing whereof I treat,
To werten Mercie, be of Justice part. Spenser, F. Q. v. x. 1.

DEVISEFULLY. * adv. [from deviceful.] In a manner curiously contrived.

I had not taught thee then the alphabet
Of flowers; how they, devicefully being set
And bound up, might with secrecy
Deliver errands. Donne, Poems, p. 77.

DEVIL. v. n. [diabolus, Saxon; diabolus, Latin.] It were more properly written diwel, Dr. Johnson says.

To this Mr. Nares assents; but thinks that it will not probably be adopted; though the Saxon and Latin words already given, he says, require it. A grammarian of the 17th century has opposed this spelling, which seems to have been defended in his time; as indeed the word was usually then written.

"Devil or rather deevil, not dewel, as some, far fetching it from diabolus, would have it." For as

God cometh of good, (which in the old Saxon was written with a single d, and the Netherlanders yet say goed), so doth deevil come of evil, malus; as the Sax. of be yfel, the same." Bailey's Eng. Gr. 1633. Index. The Sax. deorl, I may add, warrants the present spelling.]

1. A fallen angel; the tempter and spiritual enemy of mankind.

DEV

Are you a man?

— Ay and a bold one, that dare look on that.
Which might appal the devil. Shakespeare.

2. A wicked man or woman.

See thyself, devil:
Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. Shakespeare.

3. A ludicrous term for mischief.

A war of profit mitigates the evil;
But to be tax'd, and beaten, is the devil. Granville.

4. A kind of expletive, expressing wonder or vexation.

The things we know, are neither rich nor rare;
But wonder how the devil they got there! Pope.

5. A kind of ludicrous negative, in an adverbial sense.

The devil was well, the devil a monk was he!
It is a fine thing to visit castles, and lodge in inns at a man's pleasure, without paying the devil a cross. Proverb.

6. It is also a ludicrous expletive of elder times, coupled with and, implying, after an enumeration of some things, several understood. Bale appears to have been fond of applying it, in his zeal against popery; for he uses it half a dozen times, at least, in the little work which I cite. It is yet absurdly retained in low language.

Applied bells, bedes, organs, songs, wax-light, pictures, reliquies, banners, crosses, altars, holy water, and the devyll and all of such idolatrous beggary. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quir. iv. 25.

Bale, Yet a Course at the Romishe Foxe, (1543.) fol. 65.

DEVILING.* n. s. [from devil.] A young devil. See DEVILKIN.

Engender young devilinge. Beaum. and Fl. Knight of Malta.
DEVILISH.* adj. [Sax. deoflic.]

1. Partaking of the qualities of the devil; diabolical; mischievous; malicious; destructive.

Gynecia mistrusted greatly Cecropia, because she had heard much of the devilish wickedness of her heart. Sidney.

For grief thereof, and devilish despite,
From his infernal furnace forth he threw
Huge flames, that dimm'd all the heaven's light,
Enroll'd in dusky smoke and brimstone blue. Spenser, F. Q.

He trains his devilish enginery, impal'd
On every side with shadowy quadrons deep. Milton, P. L.

2. Having communication with the devil.

The duchess, by his suggestion,
Upon my life began her devilish practices. Shakespeare.

3. An epithet of abhorrence or contempt.

A devilish knave! besides the knave is handsome, young, and blithe: all those requisites are in him that delight. Shakespeare.

4. Excessive: in a ludicrous sense.

Thy hair and beard are of a different die,
Short of one foot, distorted of one eye,
With all these tokens of a knave complete,
If thou art honest, thou'rt a devilish cheat. Addison.

DEVILISHLY.* adv. [from devilish.] In a manner imitating the devil; diabolically.

Being so truth, so devilishly bent one towards another, how is it possible, but that we should be discontent of all sides, full of cares, woes, and miseries. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 116.

These trumpeters followed them with continual alarms of damnation, if they did not venture life, fortune, and all, in that wickedly and devilishly those impostors called the cause of God. South, Sermon, 1430.

DEVILISHNESS.* n. s. [from devilish.] The quality of the devil. Sherrard.

Some shall they die with the words of their false doctrine, having a glorious shine of wisdom in superstition and devilish-ness. Book of the Revel. P. I. Chap. F. 1.

Besides the devilishness of the doctrine in conveying the ordinance of God. Sp. Sermon, Sermon, p. 144.

DEV

DEVILISM.* n. s. [from To deviliate.] The state of devils.

Did ever any man look for heaven in hell before? Did ever any seek for the greatest good in the worst of evils? This is not heresy, but meer devilism. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 150.

TO DEVILIZE.* v. a. [from devil.] To place among devils.

Unjust favours are no less injurious than derogations; he that should deify a saint, should wrong him as much, as he that should devilize him. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 13.

DEVILKIN.* n. s. [from devil.] A little devil.
Clarissa.

DEVILSHIP.* n. s. [from devil.] The character of a devil.

Noisy nothing! stalking shade!
By what witchcraft wert thou made!
Empty cause of solid harms!
But I shall find out counter-charms,
Thy airy devilship to remove
From this circle here of love. Cowley, Descript. of Honour.

DEVIOUS.* adj. [devius, Latin.]

1. Out of the common track.

Creusa kept behind: by choice we stray
Through every dark and every devious way. Dryden.
In this minute devious subject, I have been necessitated to explain myself in more words than may seem needful. Holder.

2. Wandering; roving; rambling.

Every man
And every blooming pleasure wait without
To bless the wildly devious morning walk. Thomson.

3. Erring; going astray from rectitude.

One devious step, at first setting out, frequently leads a person into a wilderness of doubt and error. Clarissa.
Some lower muse perhaps, who lightly treads
The devious paths where wanton fancy leads. Rowe.

4. It is used likewise of persons. Roving; idly vagrant; erring from the way.

TO DEVIRGINATE.* v. a. [Lat. devirgino.] To de-flour; to deprive of virginity. See TO DEPUCELATE.
This word is given Cockeram's old dictionary, and in the later one of Robertson. But it is not now in use.

DEVISABLE.* adj. [from devise.]

1. Capable of being contrived, or invented.

In courts on earth, if there be no records; there is scarce devisable a legal traverse or a trial.

Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, (1649.) p. 189.

2. Possible to be excogitated.

God hath not prevented all exceptions or evils devisable by curious or captious wits, against his dispensations.

Barrow, Sermon, vol. ii. S. 11.

3. That may be granted by will.

It seems sufficiently clear, that, before the conquest, lands were devisable by will. Blackstone.

TO DEVISE.* v. a. [deviser, French, as of devisare, to look about. Spinner.]

1. To contrive; to form by art; to invent; to exco-gitate; to strike out by thought.

Whether they, at their first coming into the land, or afterwards, by trading with other nations which had letters, learned them of them, or devised them among themselves, is very doubtful. Spenser on Ireland.

He could by his skill draw after him the weight of five thousand bushels of grain, and devise those rare engines which shot small stones at hand, but great ones afar off. Peucham.

Ye sons of art, one curious piece devise,
From whose construction nation shall arise. Blackmore.

2. To plan; to scheme.

Behold I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you. Jer. xli. 11.

TO DEVISE.* v. n. To consider; to contrive; to lay plans; to form schemes: anciently with of.

DEV

Her merry fit she freshly sent to rear.

And did of joy and jollity devise.

Herself to cherish and her guest to cheer.

Spenser, F. Q.

But sith now safe ye seized have the shore,

And well arrived are, high God be blest;

Let us devise of ease and everlasting rest.

Spenser, F. Q.

Since we are so far entered, let us pray you, a little devise of those evils by which that country is held in this wretched case, that it cannot, as you say, be secured.

Spenser on Ireland.

Devise but how you'll use him when he comes, and let us two devise to bring him thither.

Shakespeare.

DEVISE. † n. s. [devise, a will, old French; probably from the Lat. divisio.]

1. The act of giving or bequeathing by will.

This word is properly attributed in our common law to him that bequeaths his goods by his last will or testament in writing; and the reason is, because those that now appertain only to the devisour, by this act are distributed into many parts.

Cowell.

The alienation is made by devise in a last will only; and the third part of these profits is there demandable.

Locke.

2. Contrivance. See DEVICE.

God hath omitted nothing needful to his purpose, nor left his intention to be accomplished by our devices.

Hooker.

To DEVISE. † v. a. [from the noun.] To grant by will.

A law term.

DEVISEE. n. s. He to whom something is bequeathed by will.

DEVISER. n. s. [from devise.] A contriver; an inventor.

Being divided from truth in themselves, they are yet farther removed by adventitious deception; for true it is, if I say they are daily mocked into error by devisers.

Brown.

The authors of useful inventions, the devisers of wholesome laws, as were the philosophers of antient times, were honoured as the fathers and prophets of their country.

Græc.

DEVISOUR. † n. s. He that gives by will. See DEVISE.

Mr. Mason is indignant at Dr. Johnson's writing devisour; which word, he says, is against all legal authority, and should therefore be altered to devisor. It is probable, however, that Johnson's is the old legal form from the ancient French deviseur, a testator; and so written, in contradistinction to deviser or devisor, both of which were formerly indiscriminately used for a contriver.

DEVILTABLE. adj. [devilabilis, Lat.] Possible to be avoided; avoidable.

Dict.

DEVITATION. n. s. [devitatio, Latin.] The act of escaping or avoiding.

Dict.

DEVOCATION. * n. s. [Lat. devotio.] A calling away; a seduction.

He that makes it his business to be freed and released from all its [sorcery's] enchantments and fluttering devocations, and endeavours wholly to withdraw himself from the love of corporeity, and too near a sympathy with the frail flesh; he by it endures such a divine principle, as lifts him up above the fate of this inferior world, and adorns his mind with such an awful majesty as beats back all enchantments.

Hallywell, Melamp. p. 97.

DEV'ID. adj. [vuide, French.]

1. Empty; vacant; void.

When I awoke and found her place devaid.

And nought but pressed grass where she had lien.

I sorrow'd all to much at earnest joy'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. Without any thing, whether good or evil; free from; in want of.

He sung it from him, and devaid of dread,

Upon him lightly leaped without need.

Spenser, F. Q.

That the soul and angels are devaid of quantity and dimension, and that they have nothing to do with proper locality, is generally opinioned.

Glanville.

The notion of this chariot will still be easier as it ascends higher, till at length it shall become utterly devaid of gravity, when the least strength will be able to bestow upon it a swift motion.

DEV

Wilkins, Math. Magick.

His warlike mind, his soul devaid of fear,

His high designing thoughts were figur'd there,

As when, by magick, ghosts are made appear.

Dryden.

We Tyrians are not so devaid of sense,

Nor so remote from Phoebus' influence.

Dryden.

DEV'OR. † n. s. [devoir, French.] It was formerly our word for endeavour. "Do your devor and your diligent labour." Mystery of Candlemas-Day, 1512.]

1. Service. A sense now not used.

To restore again the kingdom of the Marston, he offered him their utmost devor and service.

Knolles.

Madam, if any service or devor

Of a poor errant knight may right your wrongs,

Command it. Beaum. and Fl. Knight of the Burning Pestle.

2. Act of civility or obsequiousness.

Gentlemen who do not design to marry, yet pay their devoirs to one particular fair.

Spectator.

Aukward and supple, each devor to pay,

She flatters her good lady twice a-day.

Popc.

To DEVOLVE. † v. a. [devolvere, Latin.]

1. To roll down.

Through splendid kingdoms he devolves his maze,

Now wanders wild through solitary tracts

Of life-deserted sand.

Thomson.

Every headlong stream

Devolves its winding waters to the main.

Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

2. To move from one hand to another.

Upon the duke of Ormond, the king had wholly devolved the care and disposition of all affairs in Ireland.

Temple.

Because they found too much confusion in such a multitude of statesmen, they devolved their whole authority into the hands of the council of sixty.

Addison.

The whole power, at home and abroad, was devolved upon that family.

Swift.

The matter which devolves from the hills down upon the lower grounds, does not considerably raise and augment them.

Woodward.

To DEVOLVE. † v. n.

1. To roll down.

2. To fall in succession into new hands. [The word, in this sense, is now written, I think, both with on and to. Dr. Johnson seems to prefer the latter, by his own example.]

Supposing people, by wanting spiritual blessings, did lose all their right to temporal, yet that forfeitures must devolve only to the supreme Lord.

Decay of Piety.

His estate is said to have been fifteen hundred a-year, which by his death devolved to Lord Somerville of Scotland.

Johnson, Life of Somerville.

DEVOLUTION. n. s. [devolutio, Latin.]

* The act of rolling down.

The raising of new mountains, deterrations, or the devolution of earth down upon the valleys from the hills and high grounds, will fall under our consideration.

Woodward.

2. Removal successive from hand to hand.

The jurisdiction exercised in those courts is devolved from the crown of England, and the last devolution is to the king by way of appeal.

Hale.

DEVORATION. n. s. [from devoro, Latin.] The act of devouring.

Dict.

DEVOTARY. * n. s. [from devote.] One devoted to a particular worship; a votary.

To whose shrine, [Diana's] there went up a more famous and frequent pilgrimage of devotaries, than to any holy land of their's within the isle.

Gregory's Works, (4th edit. 1684.) p. 50.

To DEVOTE. v. a. [devotus, devotus, Latin.]

1. To dedicate; to consecrate; to appropriate by vow.

No devoted thing that a man shall devote unto the Lord, of all that he hath, both of man and beast, and of the field of his possession, shall be sold or redeemed. Lev. xxvii. 27.

What black magician conjures up this hex?
To stop devoted charitable deeds? Shakespeare.

They impious, dar'd to pray
On herds devoted to the god of day. Pope.

2. To addict, as to a sect, or study.
If persons of this make should ever devote themselves to science, they should be well insured of a solid and strong constitution of body. Watts.

3. To condemn; to resign to ill.
Allens were devoted to their rapine and despoil.
Decay of Piety.

4. To addict, to give up to ill.
The Romans having once debauched their senses with the pleasures of other nations, they devoted themselves unto all wickedness. Greiv.

5. To curse; to execrate; to doom to destruction.
I do
Those wicked tents devoted; lest the wrath
Impendent, raging into sudden flame, Distinguish not. Milton, P. L.

Goddess of minds, and conscious of our hearts,
So keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,
When, hissing through the skies, the feather'd deaths were dealt. Dryden.

Let her, like me, of ev'ry joy forlorn,
Devote the hour when such a wretch was born:
Like me to deserts and to darkness run. Rowe.

DEVOTED, adj. For devoted.
Belly-devote friars, whom hunger and loss of hope have made wickedly treful. Sir F. Sandys, State of Religion.

Let's be no stocks, nor no stocks, I pray;
Or so devote to Aristotle's checks. Shakespeare, Tim. of Ath.
How oft a sudden lost,
Defac'd, deflower'd, and now to death devote! Milton, P. L.
Ah why, Penelope, this causeless fear,
To render sleep's soft blessings insincere!
Alike devote to sorrow's dire extreme,
The day reflection, and the midnight dream. Pope.

DEVOTE, n. s. One devoted to a particular service, or purpose.

One professeth himself a devote, or peculiar servant to our Lord. Sir F. Sandys, State of Religion.
Swallowed with infinite consolation by their meagre devotes. Swift, Tale of a Tub, edit. 1704.

DEVOTEDNESS, n. s. [from devote.] The state of being devoted or dedicated; consecration; addictiveness.

Whatever may fall from my pen to her disadvantage, relates to her but as she was, or may again be, an obstacle to your devotedness to unaplick love. Boyle.

The raising of our obligation unto virtue, may be styled natural religion; that is to say, a devotedness unto God, so as to act according to his will. Greiv.

DEVOTED, n. s. [devot, French.] The word is of no great age in our language; but I have seen it in a poem published a little before the appearance of the Spectator. Dr. Johnson gives no example. The Spectator applies the word, throughout a pointed and elegant letter, to a female of the character,] One erroneously or superstitiously religious; a bigot.

A devote is one of those who disparage religion by their in-different and uninterested introduction of the mention of virtue and all other such things. Spectator, No. 354.

Flippings have a place amongst those different ways of doing penance: They are either enjoined by confessions, or willingly undergone by devotees.

Serret's Popery in France to Serret's (1735) p. 57.
Secluded from conversation, as usual, she now entertained the visions of a devotee. Goldsmith, Eccl. 19.

Let not then either the sober moralist, or the gay man of the world, any longer treat this most holy affection (the love of God) with derision and contempt, as a mere ideal unintelligible notion, fit only for the cloistered monk, or the superstitious devote. Bp. Porteus, Sermon. 1.4.

DEVOTEMENT, n. s. [from devote.] The act of devoting by a solemn dedication.

Her [Iphigenia's] devotement was the demand of Apollo, and the joint petition of all Greece.

Hurd, Notes on Hor. Art of Poetry.

DEVOTER, n. s. [from devote.] One devoted to a particular service; a worshipper.

Where one doth profess himself a devotee, or peculiar servant of our Lord; whose towns sometimes, as Siena by name, are devotees of our Lady.

Sir Miles Sandys, Essays, (1634,) p. 196.

DEVOTION, n. s. [devotion, French; devotio, Lat.]

1. The state of being consecrated or dedicated.

2. Piety; acts of religion; devoutness.
Mean time her warlike brother on the seas
His waving streamers to the winds displays,
And vows for his return, with vast devotion, pay. Dryden.

3. An act of external worship.
Religious minds are inflamed with the love of public devotion. Hooker.
For as I passed by and beheld your devotion, I found an altar with this inscription, To the unknown God. Acts, xvii. 23.
In vain doth man the name of just expect,
If his devotions he to God neglect. Denham.

4. Prayer; expression of devotion.
An aged holy man,
That day and night said his devotion,
No other worldly business did apply. Spenser, P. Q.
Your devotion has its opportunity: we must pray always, but chiefly at certain times. Sprat.

5. An obligation devoted to charitable or pious use.
Whilst these sentences are in reading, the deacons, churchwardens, or other fit person appointed for that purpose, shall receive the alms for the poor, and other devotions of the people, in a decent basin. Communion Service, Rubric after the Offertory.

6. The state of the mind under a strong sense of dependance upon God; devoutness; piety.
Grateful to acknowledge whence his good
Descends, thither with heart and voice, and eyes
Directed in devotion, to adore
And worship God supreme, who made him chief
Of all his works. Milton, P. L.

From the full choir, when loud Hosannas rise,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice;
Amid that scene, if some reverent eye
Glance on the stone where our cold reliques lie,
Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heav'n,
One human tear shall drop, and be forgiven. Pope.

Devotion may be considered either as an exercise of public or private prayers at set times and occasions, or as a temper of the mind, a state and disposition of the heart, which is rightly affected with such exercises. Barrow on Christ's Perfection.

7. An act of reverence, respect, or ceremony.
Whither away so fast?
Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the princely princes there. Shakespeare

8. Strong affection; ardent love; such as makes the lover the sole property of the person loved.

Be opposite all planets of good luck,
To my proceeding all, with pure heart's love,
Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter. Shakespeare.

He had a particular reverence for the person of the king, and the more extraordinary devotion for that of the prince, as he had had the honour to be trusted with his education. Clarendon.

9. Earnestness; ardour; eagerness.

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone that may fully discover him their opposite. Shakespeare.

10. Disposal; power; state of dependance on any one.

Arundel castle would keep that rich corner of the country at his majesty's devotion. Clarendon.

DEVOTIONAL. adj. [from devotion.] Pertaining to devotion; annexed to worship; religious.

Nor are the soberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and juncture of hearts, which I desire to bear in holy offices, to be performed with me. King Charles.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate, by a few demure looks, with some devotional postures and grimaces. South.

DEVOTIONALIST. n. s. [from devotional.] A man zealous without knowledge; superstitiously devout.

This is the more modern word. See DEVOTIONIST.

This point being once admitted, it is but to give a religious turn to this natural softness, and you have the complete image of a French devotionist. Copentry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

DEVOTIONIST. n. s. [from devotion.] One who is only formally, or superstitiously, devout.

There are certain zealous devotionists, which abhor all set forms and fixed hours of invocation. Bp. Hall, Soliloq. 73.

Such a way as the story of the saint, and the allusion to her name, most naturally leads the fancy of the devotionist to think suitable for her. More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 4.

DEVOTO. n. s. Another name for a devotee, which see; and perhaps the older word.

In confidence of this conceit, such numbers of devotos in all times have pretended enthusiasm and extraordinary illapse from heaven. Spencer, Vulg. Proph. (1665.) Pref. a. 2. h.

This hath been commonly experimented by the devotos of all religions. Scott's Works, (1718.) vol. ii. p. 129.

DEVOTOR. n. s. [Lat. devotus.] One who reverences or worships.

His sacred hand He [Christ] lifted up, And round about on his devotor seat His bounteous blessing. Beaumont's Psyche, C. ix. st. 123.

To DEVOUR. v. a. [from vorare, Latin: vorare, French. Dr. Johnson's first definition of this word squares with the Greek original, which he has not noticed, viz. βορὰ, the food, properly, of beasts; whence vorare, to devour, by the change of b into v, which is not uncommon in the Latin adaptation of a Greek word. V. Morin, Fr. and Gr. Lex. Etymol.]

1. To eat up ravenously, as a wild beast or animal of prey.

We will say none evil beast hath devoured him. Genesis, xxx. 33.

We've without dances though: there cannot be That culture in you to devour so many As will to treatise dedicate themselves, Finding it so inclin'd. Shakespeare.

So looks the peat up lion o'er the wretch That trembles under his devouring paw. Shakespeare.

2. To destroy or consume with rapidity and violence.

A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth. Joel, ii. 3.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd, Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd; It was the waste of war. Dryden.

Notwithstanding that Socrates lived in the time of this devouring pestilence at Athens, he never caught the least infection. Addison.

3. To swallow up; to annihilate.

He seemed in swiftness to devour the way. Shakespeare.
Such a pleasure as grows fresher upon enjoyment; and though continually fed upon, yet is never devoured. South.

Death stalks behind thee, and each flying hour Does some loose remnant of thy life devour. Dryden.

4. To enjoy with avidity.

Longing they look, and gaping at the sight, Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight. Dryden.

DEVOURER. n. s. [from devour.] A consumer; he that devours; he that preys upon.

Rome is but a wilderness of tygers: Tygers must prey, and Rome affords no prey But me and mine: how happy art thou then, From these devourers to be banished? Shakespeare.
Since those leviathans are withdrawn, the lesser devourers supply their place: fraud succeeds confidence. Deacy of Piety.

Carp and tench do best together, all other fish being devourers of their spawn. Mortimer.

DEVOURINGLY. adv. [from the part. devouring.] In a consuming manner. Hulot.

DEVOUT. adj. [from devot, old Fr. devotus, Latin.]

1. Pious; religious; devoted to holy duties.

We must be constant and devout in the worship of our God, and ready in all acts of benevolence to our neighbour. Rogers.

2. Filled with pious thoughts.

For this, with soul devout, he thank'd the god; And, of success secure, return'd to his abode. Dryden.

3. Expressive of devotion or piety.

Anon dry ground appears, and from his ark The ancient sire descends, with all his train: Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout, Grateful to heaven. Milton, P. I.

DEVOUT. n. s. Another of our elder phrases for a devotee.

They are not to be the ordinary followers of Antichrist, but they are to be his special devouts, and as it were sworn slaves. Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, (1616.) p. 147.

DEVOUTLESSNESS. n. s. [from devout and less.] Want of devotion.

The last point of this armour be the darts of devoutlessness, unmercifulness, and epicurism; which fly abroad in every place; for few or none there be that serve God devoutly. Bp. of Chichester's Two Sermons, (1576.) sign. C. 6. b.

DEVOUTLY. adv. [from devout.] Piously; with ardent devotion; religiously.

Her grace rose, and with modest paces Came to the altar, where she kneel'd; and saint-like, Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly. Shakespeare.

One of the wise men, having a while attentively and devoutly viewed and contemplated this pillar and cross, fell down upon his face. Bacon.

Her twilights were more clear than our mid-day, She dreamt devoutlier than most use to pray. Donne.

Think, O my soul, devoutly think, How, with affrighted eyes, Thou saw'st the wide extended deep In all its horrors rise! Addison.

To second causes, we seem to trust, without expressing, so devoutly as we ought to do, our dependance on the first. Atterbury.

DEVOUTNESS. n. s. [from devout.] Piety. Dr.

Johnson uses this word in one of his definitions of devotion, but has omitted all further notice of it in his dictionary. It occurs in the old dictionary of Sherwood.

'Twas observed before, that there are some who have a sort of devoutness and religion in their particular complexion. Glanville, Sermon. p. 52.

To DEVOW. v. a. [Lat. devoveo.] To give up; to addict.

To the inquiry And search of which, your mathematical head Hath so devow'd itself. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

DEUSE. n. s. [more properly than deus, Junius, from Dusius, the name of a certain species of evil spirits.

Dr. Johnson might have added what St. Augustine says of the name: "dæmones, quos Dussos Galli nuncupant." De Civ. Dei, lib. xv. cap. 23. They are artfully represented as great followers of women; whence the old Teutonick dyse is said to have been formed for a concubine. V. Keyser, Antiq. Septentrion. p. 457. And Kilian in V. Duxse.] The devil: a ludicrous word.

'Twas the prattiest prologue, as he wrote it;
Well, the deuse take me if I ha'n't forgot it. Congreve.

DEUSED.* adj. [from deuse.] Excessive, in the absurd sense of devilish; as, the man has a deused deal of pride. A law word; not used in serious writing.

DEUTEROGAMIST.* n. s. [from deuterogamy.] He who enters into a second marriage.

He had published for me against the deuterogamists of the age. Goldsmith, Vic. of Wakefield, ch. 18.

DEUTEROGAMY.* n. s. [deutero and gamō.] A second marriage.

You here see that unfortunate divine, who has so long, and it would ill become me to say successfully, fought against the deuterogamy of the age. Goldsmith, Vic. of Wakefield, ch. 14.

DEUTERONOMY.* n. s. [Gr. deutero and nomos, Fr. deuteronomie.] The second book of the law; the fifth book of Moses.

The book of Deuteronomy brings down the Sacred History to the year of the world 2552, and completes the volume of the Pentateuch; of which every part is uniformly and consistently perfect. Gray, Key to the Old Testament.

DEUTEROSCOPY. n. s. [deutero and scopia.] The second intention; the meaning beyond the literal sense: not in use.

Not attaining the deuteroscopy, or second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their consequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO DEW.* v. a. [Some have thought the Greek deuō, to moisten, the parent of this word. The Saxons, however, had the verb deapian, whence the substantive; which is, that which is wetted; the participle, as Mr. Tooke observes, of deapian; and therefore the verb is not, as Dr. Johnson asserts, from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moisten; to bedew.

A trickling stream of balmy moist sovereign,
And dainty dew, which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plain,
As it had dewed been with timely rain. Spenser, F. Q.

With him pour we in our country's purge,
Each drop of us.

— Or so much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Shakspeare.

Give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournful tears. Shakspeare.

He ceas'd discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words, which these he breath'd. Milton, P. L.

Phaeton above the rest appears,
In sable garments, dew'd with gushing tears. Dryden.

In Gallick blood again
He dews his reeking sword, and strows the ground
With headless ranks. Philips.

DEW. n. s. [Sax. deaw, Dutch.] The moisture upon the ground.

Fogs which we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months, are nothing but a vapour consisting of water; which vapour was sent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the sun then being above the horizon, taking it at the surface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmosphere, it was not discernible: the sun being now gone off, the vapour stagnates at and near the earth, and saturates the air till it is so thick as to be easily visible therein: and when at length the heat there is somewhat further spent, which is usually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cherishes, cools, and refreshes. Woodward.

Never yet one hour in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep.

But with his timorous dream was still awak'd. Shakspeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous dew indeed;

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;

His dew falls ev'ry where. Shakspeare.

She looks as clear

As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakspeare.

Dews and rain are but the returns of moist vapour condensed. Bacon.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,

And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

DEWBENT.* part. adj. [from dew and bent.] Bent by dew.

Thing is the balmy breath of morn,

Just as the dew-bent rose is born. Thomson, Hymn on Solitude.

The dew-bent primrose kiss'd the breech-swept ground.

A. Hill, The Wedding Day.

DEWBERRY. n. s. [from dew and berry.]

Dewberries, as they stand here among the more delicate fruits, must be understood to mean raspberries, which are also of the bramble kind.

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries, Hamlet.

With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries. Shakspeare.

DEWBESPENT. part. [from dew and bespent.] Sprinkled with dew.

This evening last, by then the chewing flocks

Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb

Of knot-grass dewbespent, and were in fold,

I sat me down to watch upon a bank

With ivy canopied, and interwove

With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton, Comus.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.] The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the sparkling of dew.

He, now to prove his late renewed might,

High brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,

Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite

That to the skull a yawning wound it made. Spenser, F. Q.

DEWDROP. n. s. [from dew and drop.] A drop of dew which sparkles at sun-rise.

I must go seek some dewdrops here,

And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear. Shakspeare.

An host

Innumerable! as the stars of night,

Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun

Impearls on every leaf, and ev'ry flower. Milton, P. L.

Rest, sweet as dewdrops on the flower's lawns,

When the sky opens, and the morning dawns. Tickel.

DEW-DROPPING.* part. adj. [from dew and drop.]

Wetting as with dew.

Half in a blush of clustering roses lost,

Dew-dropping Egleas to the shade retires. Thomson, Summer.

DEW-IMPEARLED.* part. adj. [from dew and impearl.] Covered with dewdrops, which resemble pearls.

Where nightingales in Arden sit and sing

Amongst the dainty dew-impearled flowers. Dryden, Sonnet.

DEWLAP. n. s. [from lapping or licking the dew.]

The flesh that hangs down from the throat of a swine.

Large rolls of fat about his shoulders slung

And from his neck the double dewlap hung. Addison.

2. It is used in Shakspeare for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And sometimes for a gossip's bowl, in very likeness of a roasted crab; And when she drinks against her lips I-bob, And on the wither Shakspeare pour the ale.

DEW-LAP. adj. [from dew and lap.] Furnished with dewlaps.

Who would believe that there were mountaineers Dew-lap'd like bulls, whose throats hang at 'em Shakspeare.
Wallow of dew?

The dew-lap'd bull now chafes along the plain, While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein. Gay.

DEW-WORM. n. s. [from dew and worm.] A worm found in dew.

For the trout, the dew-worm, which some call the lob-worm, and the brandling, are the chief. Walton.

DEWY. † adj. [Sax, deu, deu.]

1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.

From the early dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each Plant of the field. Milton, P. L.

Where two adverse winds,
Sublim'd from dewy vapours in mid sky,
Engage with hoarse shock, the ruffled buine Rous'd stormy. Philips.

2. Moist with dew; roscid.

The joyous day can early to appear,
And fair Aurora from her dewy bed
Of aged Tithone can herself to rear,
With rosy cheeks, for shame as blushing red. Spenser.

The bee with honied thigh
That at her flowery work doth sing,
And his waters murmuring,
With such consort as they keep,
Entice the dewy feather'd sleep. Milton, Il Pens.
His dewy locks distill'd

Besides the succour which cold Ancien yields,
The rocks of Hiericus and dewy fields. Dryden.

A term used in heraldry.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my side. Shakspeare.

DEXTERITY. † n. s. [dexterité, old Fr. dexteritas, Lat. from dexter, (Gr. δεξιτερη), the right hand, which is chiefly employed in workmanship. Hence our handiness is dexterity.]

1. Readiness of limbs; activity; readiness to attain skill; skill; expertness.

2. Readiness of contrivance; quickness of expedient; skill of management.

His wisdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers, when they press'd him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off. Bacon.

They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dexterity. South.

The same Protestants, by their dexterity, make themselves the national religion, and dispose the church-revenues among their pastors. Swift.

DEXTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Lat.]

1. Expert in any manual employment; active; ready; as a dexterous workman.

For both their dextrous hands the lance could wield. Pope.

2. Expert in management; subtle; full of expedients.

They confine themselves, and are dextrous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner, with which they content themselves. Locke.

DEXTEROUSLY. adv. [from dexterous.] Expertly; skilfully; artfully.

The magistrate sometimes comes to his own office de-terminately, but by seeing the minister. South.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dexterously to throw the lucky dice. Dryden.

DEXTEROUSNESS. n. s. [from dexterous.] Skill.

Respect to the dexterousness and propensity of the child, being descended directly from his father of the same trade, the father is more careful to instruct him, and to discover to him all the mystery thereof. Howell, Lett. iii. 2.

A man who is even in reason more than half beaten; being taken at a disadvantage, from which he hath no way to extricate himself but by the dexterousness of his ingenuity. Fullan, Res. ii. 20.

As for any tunicle or skin, which should hinder the liver from ennobling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it diffuseth its virtue by mere irradiation, but by its veins and proper vessels. Brown, Vulg. Err.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differenced by dextrality. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DEY. n. s. The title of the supreme governor of Algiers in Barbary, who is call'd bey at Tunis. See Shaw's Travels, 4to. p. 28.

DIABETES. n. s. [diabasis.] A morbid capaciousness of urine; a fatal colligation by the urinary passages.

An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colligations; as in fluxes, hectic sweats and coughs, diabetes, and other consumptions. Derham, Phys. Theology.

DIABOLICAL. adj. [from diabolus, Lat.] Devilish; DIABOLICK. } partaking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; nefarious; pertaining to the devil.

This, in other beasts observ'd,
Doubt might beget of diabolick power,
Active within, beyond the sense of brute. Milton, P. L.

Does not the ambitious, the covinous, and the revengeful man know very well, that the thirst of blood, and affection of dominion by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and Nature? L'Estrange.

The practice of lying is diabolical exercise, and they that use it are the devil's children. Ray.

Damned spirits must needs be all envy, despair, and rage; and have so much of a diabolical nature in them, as to wish all men to share their misery. Asterbury.

DIABOLICALLY. adv. [from diabolical.] In a devilish or malicious manner. Sherwood.

DIABOLICALNESS. n. s. [from diabolical.] The quality of a devil.

You must know then that H-d-g-r, the manager of masques, is a devil disguised in human shape. I wonder he did not change his face as well as his body, but that retains its primitive diabolicalness. Dr. Warton, Satire of Rensselaer House.

DIA'BOLISM. n. s. [from diabolus, Lat.]

1. The actions of the devil.

While this he hotly disclaimeth the devil, he not guilty of diabolism. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 16.

2. Possession by the devil.

He was now projecting — the face of diabolism and exorcisms. Warburton, Deor. of Gr. ii. 238.

DIA'CYLON. n. s. [old Fr. diacylon, or diacylon; Gr. δια and κύλον, juke.] A mollifying plaster, made of juices. Corymbe.

He thought it better, as better it was, to assume his faded dignity with half a yard square of diacylon. Duden in a Regicide Poem.

DIACODIUM n. s. [Gr. diacodē and diacodē, the head of a poppy; Fr. diacode.] The syrup of poppies.

I can keep my tongue quiet by diacodium. Johnson, Lett.

DIA'CONAL adj. [Fr. diaconal, from the Lat. diaconus.] Of one belonging to a deacon. A proper word, is contradistinguished to archidiaconal.

Coleridge and Shedd.

DIACONISTICS n. s. [diaconia.] The doctrine of sounds.

DIACRITICAL adj. [Gr. diakritikos.] Distinguishing DIACRITICK n. s. A point or mark.

The Greek ϵ does not pass into the Arabic ϵ or η — distinguished only by the diacritical points; the one having two points, the other three, as joined to the syllable racter.

Wallis, to Bp. Lloyd, (1699), Wilson's Epist. Corr. i. 123.
From f , in the Icelandic alphabet, v is distinguished only by a diacritical point. Johnson, Gramm. of the Eng. Tongue.

DIADEM n. s. [diademe, Fr. diademe, Lat. diadema, Gr. from $\delta\acute{\iota}\alpha$ and $\delta\acute{\iota}\omega$, to bind; a diadem being the band round the heads of kings. See Scapulae Lex. and Morin Fr. and Gr. Etym. Dict.]

1. A tiara; an ensign of royalty bound about the head of Eastern monarchs.

The sacred diadem in pieces rent,

And purple robe gored with many a wound.

As the cobblers' temples ties,

To keep the hair out of their eyes;

From whence 'tis plain the diadem,

That princes wear, derives from them.

Spenser.

Swift.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.

A crown,
Golden in show, is but a wreath of thorns;
Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and sleepless nights,
To him who wears the regal diadem.

Milton, P. R.

Why should he ravish then the diadem
From your grey temples, which the hand of time Must shortly plant on his?

Denham.

Faction, that once made diadems her prey,
And stole our prince in his triumphant way,
Fled like a mist before this radiant day.

Roscommon.

DIADEMED adj. [from diadema.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

Not so, when diadem'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,
Her priestless muse forbids the good to die,
And opens the temple of eternity.

Pope.

DIADROM n. s. [diadromos.] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.

It is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of an inch, an inch one tenth of a philosophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum; whose diadroms, in the latitude of forty-five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a sixtieth of a minute.

Locke.

DIAERESIS n. s. [diæresis.] The separation or disjunction of syllables; as air.

DIAGNOSTICK n. s. [diagnostikos.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.

Laid by down some indisputable marks of this vice, that when we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house — let us hear your diagnostics. Colley on Pride.

One of our physicians proved disappointed of his prognosticks, or diagnostics. Harvey on Consumption.

DIA'GONAL adj. [Gr. diagonalis.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The monotropy of the hodge is ill-contrived, and with some disadvantage; the shortness being fixed unto the legs of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal movers. Brown, Vulg. Err.

All sorts of stone composed of granules, will cut and rise in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally and parallel to the side of the strata.

Woodward.

DIA'GONAL n. s. [from the adjective.] A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into a certain number of equal parts. Locke.

DIA'GONALLY adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by philosophers according to common acceptance, that is, respectively from one man unto another, or constant site to each, as though that should be the right to one, which is on contrast or facing, stand athwart or diagonally unto the other, but were distinguished according unto their activity and predominant locomotion, on the either side. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DIAGRAM n. s. [diagramma.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.

Many a fair precept in poetry is like a seeming demonstration in the mathematics; very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation. Dryden.

Why do not these persons make a diagram of these cognitive lines and angles, and demonstrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Bentley.

DIAGRAMMICAL adj. [Gr. $\delta\acute{\iota}\alpha$ and $\gamma\acute{\rho}\alpha\mu\mu\alpha$, to describe.] Descriptive; as, "the diagrammatical art, the art of painting or carving." Cockeram.

DIAGRYSTATES n. s. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All choleric humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydium, mixed with tartar, or some acid, or rhubarb powder. Boyle.

DIAL n. s. [diale, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or shadow shews the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is short;

To spend that shortness basely were too long,

Though life did ride upon a dial's point,

Still ending at the arrival of an hour. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants or animals; and the day shadow steals away upon the dial, and the quickest eye can discover no more but that it is gone. Glennville.

DIAL-PLATE n. s. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

Strada tells us that the ancients, being each of them possessed of a magnetical needle, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four-and-twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. Addison, Spect.

DIALECT n. s. [diálexis.]

1. The subdivision of a language; as the Attick, Dorick, Ionick, Æolick, dialects.

2. Style; manner of expression.

When themselves do practise that whereof they write, they change their dialect; and those words they shun, as if there were in them some secret sting. Hooker.

3. Language; speech.

In her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect,

Such as moves men. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

If the conferring of a kindness did not bind the person upon whom it was conferred, to the returns of gratitude, what, in the universal dialect of the world, are kindnesses still called? South.

DIALECTICAL. † adj. [from dialectick.]

1. Logical; argumental.

Those dialectical subtleties that the schoolmen employ about physiological mysteries, more declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge of sober lovers of truth.

Boyle.

2. Respecting dialect, or the subdivision of a language.

Schleiermacher supposes, that we have the book of Job as it was penned at first without any translations, as at that time the Hebrew and Arabic language was the same, with a small dialectical variation only. Hodges on Job, Prelim. Discourse.

Dr. Johnson was scarcely at all aware of the authenticity of ancient dialectical words, and therefore seldom gives them any place in his Dictionary.

Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng. Language.

DIALECTICIAN. * n. s. [Fr. dialecticien.] A logician; a reasoner.

DIALECTICK. n. s. [from dialectica.] Logick; the art of reasoning.

DIALECTICK. * adj. [from the substantive.] Argumental.

Masters of the dialectick science, so able to guide our reason, assist in the discovery of truth, and fix the understanding in possession of it. Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 237.

DIALING. † n. s. [from dial.] The sciaterick science; the knowledge of shadow; the act of constructing dials on which the shadow may shew the hour.

This hypothesis may be tolerated in physicks, as it is not necessary in the arts of dialling or navigation to mention the true system or earth's motion. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 283.

DIALIST. n. s. [from dial.] A constructor of dials.

Scientifick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes. Mason.

To DIALOGISE. * v. n. [old Fr. dialogiser. Lacombe.] To discourse in dialogue.

These interlocutory and dialogising dreams, were not unknown even to the very heathens. Philosophy, Alchem. p. 126.

DIALOGISM. * n. s. [Fr. dialogisme, Gr. διαλογισμός.] A feigned speech between two or more.

His foolish dialogism is a fighting with his own shadow.

Fulke's Retentive, (1580,) p. 306.

DIALOGIST. † n. s. [Fr. dialogiste.] A speaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.

The like doth Cicero assert in many places, sometimes in the person of his dialogists, sometimes according to his own sense. Barrow, Sermon, vol. ii. S. 8.

Our writer goes stumbling on, and adds, That as to Plato's arguments for the immortality of the soul, Cicero says to his dialogist, let us not produce them. Bentley, Phil. Lipsienus.

I am very far from censuredly insinuating, that this dialogist is the only person who hath managed the dispute, I speak of, with candour. Skelton, Deism Revealed, Pref.

DIALOGISTICALLY. * adv. [from dialogist.] In the manner of a dialogue.

In his Prophecy he [Malachi] proceeds most dialogistically.

Bp. Richardson on the O. Test, p. 449.

DIALOGUE. † n. s. [old Fr. dialogue, from the Gr. διαλογος.] A conference; a conversation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have contrived in praise of the owl and cuckoo? Shakespeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked sex! Lucivious dialogues are innocent with you. Dryden, Span. Friar.

In easy dialogues is Fletcher's praise;

He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raise. Dryden.

To DIALOGUE. * v. n. [from the noun.] To discourse with another; to converse.

Do not dialogue with thy shadow? Shakespeare, Timon.

DIALOGUE-WRITER. * n. s. One who writes feigned conversations between two or more.

It is somewhat singular, that so many modern dialogue-writers should have failed in this particular, when so many of the most celebrated wits of modern Italy had given them eminent examples of the contrary proceeding.

Dr. Warburton, Essay on Pope.

DIALYSIS. n. s. [from διαλύσις.] The figure in rhetoric by which syllables or words are divided.

DIAMANTINE. * adj. [old Fr. diamanté, Ital. diamantino, "diamantine." Florio.] Adamantine; hard as a diamond.

In Destiny's hard diamantine rock.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, (1616,) p. 83.

DIAMETER. * n. s. [from δια and μετρον.] The line, which passing through the centre of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The space between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy, is seventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a gross account, about one hundred and twenty thousand miles. Raleigh.

The bay of Naples is the most delightful one that I ever saw: it lies in almost a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter. Addison on Italy.

DIAMETRAL. † adj. [from diameter.]

1. Describing the diameter, relating to the diameter.

That conjunction or opposition maketh an eclipse, which is diametral, that is, when the center of the earth and the centers of both the luminaries shall be in the same line, which happeneth to be there only, where the moon's eccentric circle toucheth the sun's in that line, which is therefore called the eccentric.

Gregory's Posthuma, (1650,) p. 130.

2. Opposite.

There are gentlewomen and male guests, Of several humours, carriage, constitution, Profession too; but so diametral, One to another, and so much oppos'd, As if I can but hold them altogether,

And draw 'em to the distance of themselves, But till the distance of the distance, I shall have just occasion to believe,

My wit is magisterial.

B. Jonson, Magickal Lady.

Your own oppositions [are] direct and diametral to God and his holy law.

Abp. Sancroft, Sermon, p. 79.

DIAMETRALLY. † adv. [from diametral.] According to the direction of a diameter; in direct opposition.

Their doctrine being directly and diametrically repugnant unto the Scriptures of the prophets and apostles.

Harmer, Transl. of Beza's Sermon, p. 151.

A learned priest might have known councils enow diametrically opposite to each other.

Bp. Hall, Hom. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 239.

Christian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrically opposed to profaneness and impiety of actions. Hammond.

DIAMETRICAL. * adj. [from diameter.]

1. Describing a diameter.

2. Observing the direction of a diameter.

The sin of calumny is set in a most diametrical opposition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbour as ourselves.

Government of the Tongue.

DIAMETRICALLY. * adv. [from diametrical.] In a diametrical direction.

He persuaded me to consent to what was diametrically against his conscience and his honour, and, in truth, his security.

Clarendon.

This intercepted in its passage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the stratum diametrically, glides along the lower surface of it, perverting the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the said dense stratum and that which lies underneath it.

Woodward.

DIAMOND. n. s. [Diamant, Fr. adamas, Lat.]

The diamond, the most valuable and hardest of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the purest water; and is constantly distinguished from all other substances by its vivid splendour, and the brightness of its reflections. It is extremely various in shape and size, being found in the greatest quantity very small, and the larger ones extremely seldom met with. The largest ever known is that in the possession of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and seventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth seven hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and forty-four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the strongest fires, except the concentrated solar rays, without hurt; and even the infinitely fiercest of all fires does it no injury, unless directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glass-house fire for many days, and if taken carefully out, and suffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before; but if taken hastily out, it will sometimes crack, and even split into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the East Indies and the Brasil; and though they are usually found clear and colourless, yet they are sometimes slightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of some metalline particles.

Hill on Fossils.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner;
Or, for the diamond, the chain you promised.
I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched bent of the brow. Shakespeare.

The diamond is preferable and vastly superiour to all others in lustre and beauty; and in hardness, which renders it more durable and lasting, and therefore much more valuable than any other stone. Woodward.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs
Fair as the star that ushers the dawn. Blackmore.

The lively diamond drives away purple rays,
Collected light, compact. Thomson.

DIAMONDED.  adj.* [from diamond.] In squares, like diamonds.

Break a stone in the middle, or top a bough of a tree, and one shall behold the grain diamonded (by some secret cause in Nature) diamonded or streaked in the fashion of a lozenge. Fuller, Profane State, p. 368.

DIAPASE. n. s. [δια πασων.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapason. See DIAPASON.

And 'twixt them both a quantant was the base,
Proportion'd equally by seven and nine.
Nine was the circle set in heaven's place,
All which compacted made a good diapase. Spenser.

The seven numbers and melodious measure
With which I wont the winged words to tie,
And make a tuneful diapase of pleasures,
Now being let to run at liberty. Spenser.

DIAPASME.  n. s.* [diapasm, Gr. διαπασμα, from δια, to sprinkle or throw about.] A powder or perfume.

There's an excellent diapasm in a chain too, if you like it.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

DIAPHAN. n. s. [διαφανης.] Diaphan denotes a chord which includes all tones, as is the same with that we call an eighth, or an octave; because there are but seven tones or notes, and then the eighth is the same again with the first. Harris.

DIA

It discovereth the true coincidence of sounds into diapasons, which is the return of the same sound. Beacon.

Harsh din
Broke the fair music that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whose love their motion sway'd
In perfect diapason, whilst they stood
In first obedience, and their state of good. Milton, Ode.
Many a sweet note, many a sweet fall,
A full-mouth diapason swallows all. Crashaw.
From harmony from heav'nly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

DIAPER. n. s. [diapre, Fr. of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. Anderson, in his History of Commerce, conjectures, that diaper, a species of printed linen, took its name from the city of Ypres in Flanders, where it was first made, being originally called di-pre. Marton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 176. But it may be from the Italian diapra, jasper; jasper being spotted or figured. V. Du Cange s. V. DIASPER.]

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures; the finest species of figured linen after damask.

Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft silken tissue;
Nor any weaver, which his work doth boast
In diaper, in damask, or in lawn,
Might in their diverse cunning outpare
With this so curious net-work to compare. Spenser.
Whether our linen-manufacture would not find the benefit of this institution? and whether there be any thing that makes us fall short of the Dutch, in damask diapers, and printed linen? Berkeley, Quirish, p. 126.

2. A napkin or towel.
Let our handkerchief him with a silver basin
Fan of rose-water, and beset with flowers;
Another bear the ewe, a third a diaper. Shakespeare.

To DIAPER. v. a. [diaprer.] "This term, which is partly obsolete, occurs in the provisor's rolls of the great wardrobe, containing deliveries for furnishing rich habiliments, at tilts and tournaments, and other ceremonies. It properly signifies embroidering on a rich ground." Peacham's Complete Gentlemen, p. 345.]

1. To variegate; to diversify; to flower.

For fear the stones her tender feet should wrong,
The ground he strew'd with flowers all along,
And diaper'd like the discoloured mead. Spenser.
Flora useth to clothe our grand-dame Earth with a new livery, diapered with various flowers, and chequered with delightful objects. Howell, Voc. Forest.

2. To draw flowers upon clothes.
If you diaper upon folds, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the half; for reason tells you, that your fold must cover somewhat unseen. Peacham on Drawing.

DIAPHANED.  adj.* [diaphaner, to clear, from the Gr. δια and φαω.] Transparent. Not opaque.

Drinking of much wine hath the virtue to make bodies diaphanized or transparent. Full Transl. of Boccaccio, (1626) p. 53.

DIAPHANEITY. n. s. [Fr. diaphaneite, from diaphane.] Transparency, pellucidness; power of transmitting light.

Because the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to transmit the light which the eye should always stand open, would be apt to grow dry and shrink, and lose their diaphaneity; therefore are the eyelids so contrived as often to wink, that so they may, as it were, glaze and varnish them over with the moisture they contain. Ray.

DIAPHA'NICK. adj. [dia and phaino.] Transparent; pellucid; having the power to transmit light.

Air is an element superior and lighter than water, through whose vast, open, subtle, diaphanick, or transparent body, the light afterwards created, easily transpired. Raleigh.

DIAPHANOUS. adj. [dia and phaino.] Transparent; clear; translucent; pellucid; capable to transmit light.

Aristotle calleth light a quality inherent, or cleaving to a diaphanous body. Raleigh.

When he had taken off the insect, he found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to those which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Ray.

DIAPHORETICAL.  adj.* [Fr. diaphoretique; Gr. dia-phoretikos.] Sudorifick.

Medhinks there may be an excellent medicinal extraction drawn (by prudence directed by grace) out of the nature of temporal felicity, in order to the fortifying our minds, which may not improperly be called the spirit or salt of human frillity, since it may work upon the mind as physicians say, those kind of diaphoretical medicines do upon the body. W. Montague, Dev. Fes. (1648), i. p. 60.

DIAPHORETICK. adj. [diaphoreticus.] Sudorifick; promoting a diaphoresis or perspiration; causing sweat.

A diaphoretick medicine, or a sudorifick, is something that will provoke sweating. Watts.

DIAPHORETICK.  n. s.* [from the adjective.] A sudorifick medicine.

Diaphoreticks, or promoters of perspiration, help the organs of digestion, because the attenuation of the aliment makes it perspirable. Arbuthnot.

DIAPHRAGM.  n. s.* [Fr. diaphragme; Gr. διάφραγμα.]

1. The midriff which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower.

It must be owned, we are not conscious of the systole and diastole of the heart, or the motion of the diaphragm. Bp. Hall, Sermon, 257.

2. Any division or partition which divides a hollow body.

It consists of a fasciculus of bodies round, about one sixth of an inch in diameter, hollow, and filled into numerous cells by means of diaphragms, which run throughout the whole length of the body. Woodward on Fossils.

DIARRHOEA. n. s. [διαρροια.] A flux of the belly, whereby a person frequently goes to stool, and is cured either by purging off the cause, or restraining the bowels. Quincy.

During his diarrhoea I healed up the fontanels. Wise man.

DIARRHOETICK. adj. [from diarrhoea.] Promoting the flux of the belly; solutive; purgative.

Millet is diarrhetick, cleansing, and useful in diseases of the kidneys. Arbuthnot.

DIARIST.  n. s.* [from diary.] One who keeps a regular account of transactions.

DIARY.  n. s.* [old Fr. diaire, Lacombe; diarium, Lat.] An account of the transactions, accidents, and observations of every day; a journal.

In sea-voyages, where there is nothing to be seen but sky and sea, men make diaries; but in land-travel, wherein so much is to be observed, they omit it. Bacon.

I go on in my intended diary. Talbot.

DIASTEM.  n. s.* [Gr. διάστημα.] In musick. A name applied to a simple interval, in contradistinction to a compound one, which has been called a system.

DIASTOLE. n. s. [διαστολη.]

1. A figure in rhetoric, by which a short syllable is made long.

2. The dilatation of the heart.

The systole seems to resemble the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole is flying out again to its natural state. Ray on the Creation.

DIASTYLE. [dia and stylon, a pillar.] A sort of edifice where the pillars stand at such a distance from one another, that three diameters of their thickness are allowed for intercolumniation. Harris.

DIATESERON. n. s. [of dia and tseron, four.] An interval in musick, composed of one greater tone, one lesser, and one greater semi-tone, its proportion being as four to three. It is called, in musical composition, a perfect fourth. Harris.

DIATRACK. [of di and track.] The ordinary sort of musick which proceeds by different tones, either in ascending or descending. It contains only the two greater and lesser tones, and the greater semi-tone. Harris.

DIA TRIBE.  n. s.* [Gr. διατριβη.] A disputation, or continued discourse. Bailey.

DIATYCK Tone. [of dia and tyck.] In the ancient Greek musick, divided two fourths, one on each side of it, and which being joined to either, made a fifth. This is, in our musick, from A to B.

They allowed to this diatryck tone, which is our La, Mi, the proportion of nine to eight, as being the unspeakable difference of the fifth and fourth. Harris.

DIBBLE.  n. s.* [from dipfel, Dutch, a sharp point, Skinner; from dabble, Junius.] A small spade; a pointed instrument with which the gardeners make holes for planting.

Through cunning, with dibble, rake, mattock, and spade, By line and by level trim garden is made. Tusser's Hush.

I'll not put The dibble in earth to set one slip of them. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Yet for all this there comes another strange gardener, that never knew the soil, never handled a dibble or spade to set the least pot-herb that grew there. Milton, Animad. Rem. Def.

TO DIBBLE.  v. n.* Formerly "to dib or dip," Barrett. A term used by anglers. See TO DAPE.

This stone-fly, then, we dape or dibble with, as with the drake. Wallon's Angler.

DIBSTONE. n. s. A little stone which children throw at another stone.

I have seen little girls exercise whole hours together, and take abundance of pains to be expert at dibstones. Locke.

DICACITY.  n. s.* [dicacitas, Lat.] Pertness; sauciness; much talk, or prating. Bullock.

As every one had something to say to Jerry, so Jerry had something to say to every one; and this gave a sort of potent dicacity to his repartees, by no means agreeable to the natural ability of his disposition. Graves, Spiritual Quixote, i. 8.

DICE. n. s. The plural of die. See DIE.

It is above a hundred to one against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice: now, after we have cast all the trials but one, it is with as much odds at the last remaining one, as it was at the first. Bullock.

TO DICE.  v. n.* [from the noun.] To game with dice.

I was as viciously given as a gentleman need be, virtuous enough; and dice little; diced not above seven times a week. Shakespeare, Rom. IV.

DICE-BOX. n. s. [dice and box.] The box from which the dice are thrown.

What would you say, should you see the sparker shaking her elbow for a whole night together, and thumping the table with a dice-box? Johnson, Guardian.

DIC

DICER. n. s. [from dice.] A player at dice; a gamester.

They make marriage vows
As false as dicers' oaths Shakespeare, Hamlet.

DICH. This word seems corrupted from dit for do it.

Rich men sit, and I eat root;
Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus, Shakespeare, Tim.
TO DICHOTOMIZE. v. a. [from dichotomy.] To separate; to divide.

That great city might well be dichotomized into cloisters and hospitals.

There was all Italy (resembled by geographers for the fashion thereof, to a man's leg) troubled with the incurable gout of schism and faction; not a city of note in it which was not dichotomized into the sect of the Guelphs, which favoured the Pope, and Gibellines, which adhered to the Emperour.

Nor hath the book of creation in the Scripture, the Beresith, or natural philosophy of the Bible given us any hint for such a resolution; that some should be born to riot, and others to famish, some to be glutted, and others to starve, that mankind should be thus dichotomized into such extreme distant fates, some to reign in Paradise for ever, others to be thrown over the wall as out of the Adamites' stove, to pine and freeze among thorns and briars.

DICHOTOMY. n. s. [dichotomia.] Distribution of ideas by pairs.

Some persons have disturbed the order of nature, and abused their readers by an affectation of dichotomies, trichotomies, squares, twelves, &c. Let the nature of the subject, considered together with the design which you have in view, always determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

DICKENS. A kind of adverbial exclamation, importing, as it seems, much the same with the devil; but I know not whence derived.

Where had you this pretty weathercock?
—I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of.

What a dickens does he mean by a trivial sum?
But han't you found it, sir?

DICKER of Leather. n. s. [dicra, low Lat.] Ten hides. Not peculiar to leather, as Dr. Johnson limits the meaning; for a dicker of iron contained ten bars of iron. See Blount's Anc. Tenures, p. 33.

TO DICTATE. v. a. [dicto, Latin.] To deliver to another with authority; to declare with confidence.

The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
And studded amber darts a golden ray;
Such, and not nobler, in the realms above,
My wonder dictates is the dome of Jove.

Whatsoever is dictated to us by God himself, or by men who are divinely inspired, must be believed with full assurance. Watts.

DICTATE. n. s. [dictatum, Latin.] Rule or maxim delivered with authority; prescription; prescript.

These right helps of art which will scarce be found by those who serve, confine themselves to the dictates of others.

For what the Grecian dictates say,
And Samian sounds o'er Senta's hills convey.

DICTATE. n. s. [from dictate.] The act or practice of dictating or prescribing.

What tempest and prodigious opinions have been set on foot, and maintained to the death, under the pretence of the dictation and descent of God's Spirit!

DICTATOR. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A magistrate of Rome made in times of exigence and distress, and invested with absolute authority.

DID

Kind dictators made, when they came home,
Their vanquish'd foes free citizens of Rome.
Julius with honour, tam'd Rome's foreign foes;
But patriots fell, ere the dictator rose.

2. One invested with absolute authority.
Unanimous they all commit the care,
And management of this main enterprize,
To him their great dictator.

3. One whose credit or authority enables him to direct the conduct or opinion of others.
Say, that you were the emperor of pleasures,
The great dictator of fashions, for all Europe,
And had the pomp of all the courts and kingdoms,
Laid forth unto the show? to make yourself
Gaz'd and admir'd at? you must go to bed,
And take your natural rest: then all this vanisheth.

Nor is it a small power it gives one man over another, to have the authority to be the dictator of principles, and teacher of unquestionable truths.

That riches, honours, and outward splendour, should set up persons for dictators to all the rest of mankind, is a most shameful invasion of the right of our understanding.

DICTATORIAL. adj. [from dictator.] Authoritative; confident; dogmatical; overbearing.

A young academick often dwells upon a journal, or an observer that treats of trade and politics in a dictatorial style, and is lavish in the praise of the author.

DICTATORSHIP. n. s. [from dictator.]

1. The office of dictator.
This is the solemnest title they can confer under the principedom, being indeed a kind of dictatorship.

2. Authority; insolent confidence.
This is that perpetual dictatorship which is exercised by Lucretius, though often in the wrong.

DICTATORY. adj. [from dictator.] Overbearing; dogmatical.

Our English, the language of men ever famous and foremost in the achievements of liberty, will not easily find servile letters enow to quell such a dictatory presumption englished.

DICTATURE. n. s. [dictatura, Lat.] The office of a dictator; dictatorship.

DICTION. n. s. [diction, Fr. dictio, Lat.] Style; language; expression.

There appears in every part of his diction, or expression, a kind of noble and bold purity.

DICTIONARY. n. s. [dictionarium, Lat.] A book containing the words of any language in alphabetical order, with explanations of their meaning; a lexicon; a vocabulary; a word-book.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and left an account that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations; that they are afraid of letters and characters, notes, and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing; and not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtler vocabulary of Satan.

Is it such a fault to translate simulacra images? I see what a good thing it is to have a good catholic dictionary.

An army, or a parliament, is a collection of men; a dictionary, or nomenclature, is a collection of words.

DID. of do. [do, Saxon.]

1. The preterite of do.
Thou canst not say I did it.
What did that greatness in a woman's mind:
Ill lodg'd and weak to act what it design'd.

2. The sign of the preter-imperfect tense, or perfect.
When did his person learning fix a brand,
Or rail at arts he did not understand?

3. It is sometimes used emphatically; as, I did really love him.

DIE

DIDACTICAL. } adj. [didacticus, Fr. from Gr. διδάσκω.] Preceptive; giving precepts: as a didactic poem is a poem that gives rules for some art; as the Georgicks.

We shall not need here to describe, out of their didactical writings, what kind of prayers, and what causes of confidence they teach towards the Blessed Virgin Mary and all Saints.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 2. § 9.

I am very glad that he finds vacancy from his other cares to bestow some hours upon the institution of youth; he finding in himself a great promptness in such didactic work.

Worthington to Hartlib, (1661.) Ep. 16.

The means used to this purpose are partly didactical, and partly protreptical, demonstrating the truth of the gospel; and then urging the professors of those truths to be steadfast in the faith, and to beware of infidelity.

Ward on Infidelity.

DIDAPPER. } n. s. [from dip, Dr. Johnson says. Ray remarks, that this bird is also called dabchick, which is sometimes written dipchick. The present word has been also written divedapper.] A bird that dives into the water.

The misery of man may fitly be compared to a didapper, who when she is under water, past our sight, and indeed can seem no more to us, rises again, shakes but herself, and is the same she was.

Beaumont and Fl. Woman-hater.

DIDASCALETIC. } adj. [διδασκαλικός.] Preceptive; didactic; giving precepts in some art.

I found it necessary to form some story, and give a kind of body to the poem: under what species it may be comprehended, whether didascalich or heroic, I leave to the judgement of the critics.

Prior.

TO DIBBER. } v. a. [diddern, Teut. zittern, Germ.] To quake with cold; to shiver. A provincial word. Dr. Johnson says, after Skinner. It may be added, that in the north of England it is so used. It occurs also in the old dictionary of Sherwood, as a word of general usage: "To dibber with cold."

TO DIDDLE. } v. n. To totter; to move like a child, or an aged person. See TO DADDLIE.

And when his forward strength began to bloom,
To see him diddle up and down the room!
O, who would think so sweet a babe as this Should ere be slain by a false-hearted kiss.

Quarles, Divine Fancies, i. 4.

DIDRACHM. } n. s. [Fr. didrachme, Gr. δίδραχμή.] A piece of money.

A — didrachm, the fourth part of an ounce of silver, which was the tribute, &c.

Bp. Taylor, Life of Christ, iii. § 14.

DIST. The second person of the preter tense of do. See DID.

Oh last and best of Scots! who didst maintain Thy country's freedom from a foreign reign.

Dryden.

DIDUCTIO. } n. s. [diductio, Latin.] Separation by withdrawing one part from the other.

He ought to shew what kind of strings they are, which, though strongly fastened to the inside of the receiver and superficies of the bladder, must draw as forcibly one as another, in comparison of those that within the bladder draw so as to hinder the diductio of its sides.

Boyle.

TO DIE. } v. a. [Sax. deagan, to tinge; from deaz, or dean, a colour; or, as some think, from the Gr. δύω, to dip.] This word is often, and should be always, written dye: in order to distinguish it from to die, to expire. But Dr. Johnson has made no distinction.] To tinge; to colour; to stain.

So much did her thoughts

Had entertain'd, as dy'd her cheeks with pale.

Milton, P. L.

All white, a virgin saint she sought the skies;

For marriage, though it sullies not, it dies.

Dryden.

DIE

DIE. } n. s. [from the verb.] Colour; tincture; stain; hue acquired.

It will help me nothing.

To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me,
Which makes my white part black.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

We have dainty works of feathers of wonderful lustre, excellent dies, and many.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

Darkness we see emerges into light.

And shining suns descend to sable night;

Ev'n heav'n itself receives another die,

When weary'd animals in slumbers lie

Of midnight ease; another, when the gray

Of morn preludes the splendour of the day.

Dryden.

It is surprising to see the images of the mind stamped upon the aspect; to see the cheeks take the die of the passions, and appear in all the colours of thought.

Collier of the Aspect.

TO DIE. } v. n. [Goth. deya, Sax. deabian. See DEAD and DEATH.]

1. To lose life; to expire; to pass into another state of existence.

Thou dost kill me with thy falsehood; and it grieves me not to die, but it grieves me that thou art the murderer.

Sidney.

Nor did the third his conquests long survive,

Dying ere scarce he had begun to live.

Addison, Ovid.

Oh let me live my own, and die so too!

To live and die is all I have to do!

Pope.

2. To perish by violence or disease.

The dira only served to confirm him in his first opinion, that it was his destiny to die in the ensuing combat.

Dryden.

Talk not of life or ransom, he replies,

Patroclus dead, whoever meets me, dies:

In vain a single Trojan sues for grace;

But least the sons of Priam's hateful race:

Die then my friend! what boots it to deplore!

The great, the good Patroclus is no more!

He, far thy better, was foredoom'd to die;

And thou, dost thou, bewail mortality?

Pope, Homer.

3. It has by before an instrument of death.

Their young men shall die by the sword; their sons and daughters shall die by famine.

Jerem. xi. 22.

4. Of before a disease.

They often come into the world clear, and with the appearance of sound bodies; which, notwithstanding, have been infect'd with disease, and have died of it, or at least have been very infirm.

Wiceman.

5. For commonly before a privative, and of before a positive cause: these prepositions are not always truly distinguished.

At first she startles, then she stands amaz'd;

At last with terror she from thence doth fly,

And bathes the wat'ry glass wherein she gaz'd,

And shuns it still, although for thirst she dies.

Davies.

He in the laden vineyard dies for thirst.

Addison.

Hipparchus being passionately fond of his own wife, who was enamour'd of Bathyllus, leaped and died of his fall.

Addison.

6. To be punished with death.

If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

What is the love of our neighbour?

— The valuing him, as the image of God, one for whom Christ died.

Hammond.

7. To be lost; to perish; to come to nothing.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone?

Of sorriest fancies your companion making,

Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

If any sovereignty, on account of his property, had been vested in Adam, which in truth there was not, it would have died with him.

Locke.

Whatever pleasure any man may take in spreading whispers, he will find greater satisfaction by letting the secret die within his own breast.

Spectator.

8. To sink; to faint.

His heart died within him, and he became as a stone.

1 Sam. xxv. 1.

DIE

9. [In theology.] To perish everlastingly.
So long as God shall live, so long shall the damned die.
Shakespeare on Providence.

10. To languish with pleasure on tenderness.
To sounds of heav'nly harps she dies away,
And melts in visions of eternal day. Pope.

11. To vanish.
This battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light. Shakespeare.
The smaller stains and blemishes may die away and disappear, amidst the brightness that surrounds them; but a blot of a deeper nature casts a shade on all the other beauties, and darkens the whole character. Addison, Spectator.

12. [In the style of lovers.] To languish with affection.
The young men acknowledged in love-letters, that they died for Rebecca. Tatler.

13. To wither, as a vegetable.
Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. St. John, xii. 24.

14. To grow vapid, as liquor.

DIE. n. s. pl. dice. [dé, French; dis, Welsh.]

1. A small cube, marked on its faces with numbers from one to six, which gamblers throw in play.
Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shakespeare.

I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

He knows which way the lot and the die shall fall, as perfectly as if they were already cast. South.

2. Hazard; chance.

Itsoons his cruel hand Sir Guyon staid,
Temp'ring the passion with advisement slow,
And must'ring might on enemy dismay'd;
For th' equal die of war he well did know. Spenser, F. Q.

So both to battle fierce arranged are;
In which his harder fortune was to fall
Under my spear: such is the die of war. Spenser, F. Q.
Thine is the adventure, thine the victory;
Well has thy fortune turn'd the die for thee. Dryden.

3. Any cubick body.

Young creatures have learned spelling of words by having them pasted upon little flat tablets of dies. Watts.

DIE. n. s. plur. dies. The stamp used in coinage.

Such variety of dies made use of by Wood in stamping his money, makes the discovery of counterfeits more difficult. Smif.

DIER. n. s. [from dier.] One who follows the trade of dying; one who dies cloaths.

The fleece, that has been by the dier stain'd,
Never again its native whiteness gain'd. Waller.

There were some of very low rank and professions, who acquired great estates: cobblers, diers, and shoemakers gave publick shows to the people. Arbuthnot on Coins.

DIET. n. s. [dieta, low Latin; diata, Gr.] So far Dr. Johnson. Diata is used by Cicero, Att. 4. 3. The old Pydiette must be also noticed. See Du Cange in DIETA.]

1. Food; provisions for the mouth; victuals.

They care for no other delicacy of fare, or curiosity of diet, than to maintain life. Raleigh.

Time may come, when men
With angels may participate; and find
No inconvenient diet, nor too light fare. Milton, P. L.

No part of diet, in any season, is so healthful, so natural, and so agreeable to the stomach, as good and well-ripened fruits. Temple.

Milk appears to be a proper diet for human bodies, where acrimony is to be purged or avoided; but not where the canals are obstructed; it being void of all saline quality. Arbuthnot.

DIE

2. Food regulated by the rules of medicine, for the prevention or cure of any disease.

I commend rather some diet for certain seasons, than frequent use of physick; for those diets alter the body more, and trouble it less. Bacon.

I restrained myself to so regular a diet, as to eat flesh but once a-day, and little at a time, without salt or vinegar. Temple.

3. Allowance of provision.

For his diet, there was a continual diet given him of the king of Babylon. Jeram. lii. 34.

DIET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To feed by the rules of medicine.

She diets him with fasting every day,
The swelling of his wounds to mitigate,
And made him pray both early and eke late. Spenser, F. Q.
Shew a while like fearful war,

To diet rank minds sick of happiness,
And purge th' obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Shakespeare, Ham. IV.

He was not taken well; he had not din'd:
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold; and then
We put upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd
These pipes, and these conveyances of blood,
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priestlike fasts; therefore I'll watch him
Till he be dieted to my request. Shakespeare, Coriol.

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness; for it is my office. Shakespeare.

Henceforth my early care
Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease,
Till, dieted by thee, I grow mature
In knowledge as the gods, who all things know. Milton, P. L.
We have lived upon expedients, of which no country had less occasion: we have dieted a healthy body into a consumption, by plying it with physick instead of food. Swift.

2. To give food to.

I'm partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath leapt into my seat. Shakespeare, Othello.

3. To board; to supply with diet.

TO DIET. v. n.

1. To eat by rules of physick.

2. To eat; to feed.

And join with thee calm Peace and Quiet;
Spare Fast, that oft with gods doth diet. Milton, H. P.

DIET-DRINK. n. s. [diet and drink.] Medicated liquors; drink brewed with medicinal ingredients.
The observation will do that better than the lady's diet-drinks, or apothecary's medicines. Locke.

DIET. n. s. [from dies, an appointed day, Skinner; from diet, an old German word signifying a multitude, Junius.] An assembly of princes or estates.
An emperor in title without territory, who can ordain nothing of importance but by a diet, or assembly of the estates of many free princes, ecclesiastical and temporal. Raleigh.

DIETARY. adj. [from diet.] Pertaining to the rules of diet. Dict.

DIETARY. n. s. A medicine of diet. Hulot.
There is a publication of the sixteenth century entitled "The old man's dietary."

DIETER. n. s. [from diet.] One who prescribes rules for eating; one who prepares food by medicinal rules.

He sauc'd our broth as Juno had been sick,
And he her dieter. Shakespeare, Cymb.

DIETETICAL. adj. [old Fr. dietaique, Gr. diatritikos.] Our word has also been written dictical, and by a physician, unless it be an error of the press. "The three fountains of physick, namely, dictical, chirurgical, and pharmaceutical." Ferrand, Love Melancholy, 1640, p. 237.] Relating to diet; belonging to the medicinal cautions about the use of food.

He received no other counsel than to refrain from cold drink, which was but a dietetical caution, and such as culinary prescription might have afforded. Brown, Vulg. Err.

This book of Cheyne's became the subject of conversation, and produced even sects in the dietetical philosophy.

Arbuthnot on Aliments, Pref.

DI'ETING.* n. s. [from diet.] The act of eating by -- rules.

With much greater care, doubtless, than the Persian king could appoint for his queen Esther those maiden diets and set prescriptions of baths and odours, which may render her at last more amiable to his eye. Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov.

DIFFARREATION.* n. s. [Lat. dis and farreatio.]

The putting of a cake; a sacrifice performed between man and wife at their divorcement, among the Romans, as confarreatio was at their marriage. See CONFARREATION. Bullokar.

To DIFFER. v. n. [differe, Latin.]

1. To be distinguished from; to have properties and qualities not the same with those of another person or thing.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a diff'ring sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon.

Thy prejudices, Syphax, wont discern

What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,

Nor how the hero differs from the brute. Addison, Cato.

The several parts of the same animal differs in their qualities. Arbuthnot.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man of judgement shall sometimes hear ignorant men differs; and know well within himself that those which so differs mean one thing, and yet they themselves never agree. Bacon.

Here uncontroll'd you may in judgement sit:

We'll never differs with a crowded pit. Rowe.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.

In things purely speculative, as these are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differs from one another in our opinions and sentiments. Burnet's Theory.

There are certain measures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate those who differs with you in their sentiments. Addison, Frecholder.

Others differs with me about the truth and reality of these speculations. Cheyne.

To DIFFER.* v. a. To make different.

In thy immortal part,

Man, as well as I, thou art:

But something 'tis that differs thee and me. Cowley.

DIFFERENCE.* n. s. [difference, Fr. differentia, Latin.]

1. State of being distinct from something; contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a difference between customs of the church doth no harm. Hooker.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of blood, but to the succession of virtue. Raleigh.

Thus born alike, from virtue first began
The diff'rence that distinguish'd man from man:

He claim'd no title from descent of blood,

But that which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

Though it be useful to discern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to consider every difference that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes, under every such difference. Locke.

3. The disproportion between one thing and another caused by the qualities of each.

You shall see great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Oh the strange difference of man and man!

To thee a woman's services are due;

My fool usurps my body.

Here might be seen a great difference between men practised to fight, and men accustomed only to spoil. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

4. Dispute; debate; quarrel; controversy.

What was the difference?

— It was a contention in publick.

He is weary of his life that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad after daylight. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Nothing could have fallen out more unluckily than that there should be such differences among them about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending differences. Sandys.

5. Distinction.

Our constitution does not only make a difference between the guilty and the innocent, but, even among the guilty, between such as are more or less criminal. Tillotson.

6. Point in question; ground of controversy.

Are you acquainted with the difference,

That holds this present question in the court? Addison, Frecholder.

7. A logical distinction.

Some are never without a difference, and commonly, by amusing men with a subtilty, blanch the matter. Bacon.

8. Evidences of distinction; differential marks.

Henry had the title of sovereign, yet did not put those things in execution which are the true marks and differences of sovereignty. Davies.

9. Distinct kind.

This is notoriously known in some differences of brake or fern.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To DIFFERENCE.* v. a. [Fr. differentier.] *To cause a difference; to make one thing not the same as another.

You know it in common practice in your trades and merchandise, that when a man hath bought a parcel of commodities he sets his mark upon them; to distinguish them from the rest in the warehouse; so doth our God; he sets a mark upon his own; where by they are plainly differentiated from others. Ep. Hall, Remains, p. 134.

By human law and human persuasion, a magistrate and a private man are primarily differentiated.

Dr. Jackson's Works, iii. 937.

Most are apt to seek all the differences of letters in those articulating motions; whereas several combinations of letters are framed by the very same motions of those organs, which are commonly observed, and are differentiated by other concurrent causes. Holder.

Grass differentiated a civil and well cultivated region from a barren and desolate wilderness. Ray.

We see nothing that differentiates the courage of Mnestheus from that of Sergesthus. Pope, Essay on Homer.

DIFFERENT.* adj. [old Fr. different.]

1. Distinct; not the same.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison on Italy.

2. Of contrary qualities.

The Britons change

Sweet native home for unwholesome air,
And other climes, where different food and soil Portend distempers. Philips.

3. Unlike; dissimilar.

Neither the shape of faces, nor the age, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair; because men are as different from each other, as the regions in which they are born are different. Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

Happiness consists in things which produce pleasure, and, in the absence of those which cause any pain: now these, to different men, are very different things. Locke.

DIFFERENTIAL.* adj. [from different.] Differential method is applied to the doctrine of infinitesimals, or infinitely small quantities, called the arithmetick of fluxions. It consists in descending from whole quantities to their infinitely small differences, and comparing together these infinitely small differences, of what kind soever they be, and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analysis of infinitesimals. Harris.

By differential profundity, is understood the different kinds of things descending. More, Notes upon Psychonivia.

DIFFERENTLY. adv. [from different.] In a different manner.

He may consider how differently he is affected by the same thought, which presents itself in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by an ordinary genius. Addison.

DIFFERINGLY. adv. [from differing.] In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a surface may remit the light so differingly, as to vary a colour. Boyle.

DIFFICILE.† adj. [difficile, Fr. difficilis, Latin.]

1. Difficult; hard; not easy; not obvious. Little used, Dr. Johnson says. But it is frequent in our old authors; and is usually written difficile, not without the e, as Dr. Johnson writes it; who also has printed Bacon's difficileness without it, where the authority of a good edition of the Essays does not countenance it. Yet Dr. Johnson writes facile, not facil.

Nothing almost escaped that he achieved not, were the thing never so difficile. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 74.

Hope oft fancies that to be facile in the attainment, which reason in the event shows difficile: so as prudence we see is of force, where force prevails not.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 88.

That that should give motion to an unwieldy bulk, which itself hath neither bulk nor motion, is of as difficile apprehension as any mystery in nature. Glanville, Scepais.

Latin was no more difficil,

Than for a blackbird 'tis to whistle. Hudibras.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be persuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficile in granting the dispensation, doth use it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit, that he had touched none of those deniers which had been levied by popes in England. Bacon.

DIFFICILENESS. n. s. [from difficil.] Difficulty to be persuaded; incomppliance; impracticability. A word not in use, but proper.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness, or frowardness, or aptness to oppose, or difficulness, or the like; but the deeper sort, to envy and mere mischief.

Bacon, Essay of Goodness.

TO DIFFICULTATE.* v. a. To make difficult. An old and forgotten word; but not improper as the opposite to facilitate. Cotgrave and Sherwood give this verb under difficuler and difficultate.

DIFFICULT. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Hard; not easy; not facile.

If it be difficult [in the margin] in the eyes of this people.

Zachar. viii.

2. Troublesome; vexatious.

3. Hard to please; peevish; morose.

TO DIFFICULTATE.* v. a. [old Fr. difficuler.] To render difficult; to perplex. This word is not likely to be revived. The late lord chancellor Thurlow was fond of using the verb difficult; as, he difficulted the matter; but he was pronounced unjustifiable in this usage. The old French verb, we see, upholds him; and the old English offers a synonyme. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

DIFFICULTY. adv. [from difficult.] Hardly; with difficulty; not easily.

A man who has always indulged himself in the full enjoyment of his station, will difficultly be persuaded to think any methods unjust that offer to continue it. Rogers, Sermons.

DIFFICULTY. n. s. [from difficult; difficulté, French.]

1. Hardness; contrariety to easiness or facility.

The religion which, by this covenant, we engage ourselves to observe, is a work of labour and difficulty; a service that requires our greatest care and attention. Rogers.

2. That which is hard to accomplish; that which is not easy.

They mistake difficulties for impossibilities: a pernicious mistake certainly; and the more pernicious, for that men are seldom convinced of it, till their convictions do them no good. South.

3. Distress; opposition.

Thus, by degrees, he rose to Jove's imperial seat:

Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

4. Perplexity in affairs; uneasiness of circumstances.

They lie under some difficulties, by reason of the emperor's displeasure, who has forbidden their manufactures. Addison on Italy.

5. Objection; cavil.

Men should consider, that raising difficulties concerning the mysteries in religion, cannot make them more wise, learned, or virtuous. Swift.

TO DIFFIDE.† v. n. [diffido, Latin.] Our word is not of Dryden's coinage, which the solitary example, given by Dr. Johnson, might lead the reader to imagine.] To distrust; to have no confidence in.

To cleanse the soul from sin, and still diffide

Whether our reason's eye be clear enough

To intromit true light. More, Cupid's Conflict, Poems, 1647.

Since the Divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, we have no more colour left to diffide in the means of rectifying the enormities of our infirm nature, than a malefactor, that were offered grace for asking it, had reason to fall sick and die for fear of his former sentence. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 81.

With hope and fear

The woman did the new solution hear:

The man diffides in his own augury,

And doubts the gods.

Dryden.

DIFFIDENCE. n. s. [from diffide.]

1. Distrust; want of confidence in others.

No man almost thought himself secure, and men durst scarce commune or talk one with another; but there was a general diffidence every where. Racine, Hen. VII.

You have brought scandal

To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt

In feeble hearts, propense enough before

To waver.

Milton, S. A.

2. Doubt; want of confidence in ourselves.

If the evidence of its being, or that this is its true sense, be only on probable proofs, our assent can reach no higher than an assurance or diffidence, arising from the more or less apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense;

And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.

Whatsoever atheists think on, or whatsoever they look on, all do administer some reasons for diffidence and diffidence, lest possibly they may be in the wrong; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley.

DIFFIDENT. adj. [from diffide.]

1. Distrustful; doubting others.

Be not diffident

Of wisdom; she deserts thee not, if thou

Dismiss not her, when most thou need'st her nigh.

Milton, P. L.

Pliny speaks of the Scres, the same people with the Chinese, as being very shy and diffident in their manner of dealing.

Arbutnot.

2. Doubtful of an event, used of things; uncertain.

I was really so diffident of it, as to let it lie by me these two years, just as you now see it. Pope.

3. Doubtful of himself; not confident.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency as not willingly to admit the counsel of others; but yet I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates.

King Charles.
Clerissa.

Distress makes the humble heart diffident.

DIFFIDENTLY. * adv. [from diffident.] In a manner not presumptuous.

In man humility's alone sublime,
Who diffidently hopes he's Christ's own care.

Smart, Hymn to the Supreme Being.

To DIFFIND. v. a. [diffindo, Latin.] To cleave in two; to split.

Dict.

DIFFINITIVE. * adj. [Lat. diffinio, diffinitum.] Determinate; definitive.

The tribunal where we speak being not diffinitive (which is no small disadvantage) I now promised to ease his memory myself with an extract of what I had said.

Sir H. Wotton, Letters, p. 537.

DIFFUSION. n. s. [diffusio, Latin.] The act of cleaving or splitting.

Dict.

DIFFLATION. n. s. [difflare, Latin.] The act of scattering with a blast of wind.

Dict.

DIFFLUENCE. } n. s. [from diffluo, Latin.] The DIFFLUENCY. } quality of falling away on all sides; the effect of fluidity; the contrary to consistency.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form; but rather a consistence or determination of its diffuency, and omitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

DIFFLUENT. adj. [diffluens, Latin.] Flowing every way & not consistent; not fixed.

DIFFORM. adj. [from forma, Latin.] Contrary to uniform; having parts of different structure; dissimilar; unlike; irregular: as a difform flower, one, of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refractions of difform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities; such as are veins, an uneven polish, or fortuitous position of the pores of glass.

Newton.

DIFFORMITY. * n. s. [from difform.] Diversity of form; irregularity; dissimilitude.

In respect of uniformity with the primitive church, as of difformity.

Shapton, Portr. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 138. b. While they murmur against the present dispose of things, they desire in them a difformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind, that formed all things best.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

There must [thus] needs be infinite difformity in the publick worship; and all the benefits which were, before, the consequences of conformity and unity, will be lost.

Bp. Taylor, on Extemp. Prayer.

Necessity, isolate in itself, is simple and uniform and universal, without any possible difference, difformity, or variety whatsoever.

Clarke on the Attributes, § 7.

DIFFRANCHISEMENT. n. s. [franchise, French.] The act of taking away the privileges of a city.

To DIFFUSE. * v. a. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. To pour out upon a plane, so that the liquor may run every way; to pour without particular direction.

When these waters began to rise at first, long before they could swell to the height of the mountains, they would diffuse themselves every way.

Burnet's Theory.

2. To spread; to scatter: to disperse.

That from man

With his huge sail began to lay about;

From whose stern presence they diffused ran,

Like scatter'd chaff, the which the wind away doth fan.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 47.

Wisdom had ordain'd

Good out of evil to create; instead

Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room, and thence diffuse
His good to worlds, and ages, infinite.

Milton.

No sect wants temples to propagate and diffuse it.
Decay of Piety.

A chief renown'd in war,

Whose race shall bear aloft the Latian name,

And through the conquer'd world diffuse our fame.

Dryden.

His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,

And charity itself was in his face.

Dryden's Good Parson.

DIFFUSE. * adj. [old Fr. diffus, Lat. diffusus.]

1. Scattered; widely spread.

2. Copious; not concise.

The reasoning of them is sophistical and inconclusive; the style diffuse and verbose.

Dr. Walton, Ess. on Pope.

3. Difficult. This sense assigned to the word by Huloet, and exemplified by Skelton, is unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.

John Lydgate

Writeth after an higher rate;

It is diffuse to fynde

The sentence of his mind.

Skelton, Poems, p. 237.

DIFFUSED. * participial adj. [from diffuse.]

1. This word seems to have signified, in Shakspeare's time, the same as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once,

With some diffused song.

Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

He grows like savages,

To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire,

And every thing that seems unnatural.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

2. Extended; at full length.

See how he lies at random, carelessly diffus'd,

With languish'd head unpropt.

Milton, S. A.

DIFFUSEDLY. adv. [from diffused.] Widely; dispersedly; in manner of that which is spread every way.

DIFFUSEDNESS. * n. s. [from diffused.] The state of being diffused; dispersion.

Sherwood.

DIFFUSELY. adv. [from diffuse.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; not concisely.

DIFFUSER. * n. s. [from diffuse.] One who spreads or disperses.

If the Jews were such diffusers of secular learning, why are the wisest men of their own nation, such as Joseph, Moses, Solomon, and David, characterized and deciphered to us in the Bible with a comparison so advantageous to the wisdom of other nations; as, that they were skilled in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, that their wisdom excelled all the wisdom of the east countries and of Babylon?

Manningham's Disc. (1681,) p. 32.

DIFFUSIBLE. * adj. [from diffuse.] Capable of being diffused.

DIFFUSION. n. s. [from diffuse.]

1. Dispersion; the state of being scattered every way.

Whereas all bodies act either by the communication of their natures, or by the impressions and signatures of their motions, the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former operation, and the species audible of the latter.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A sheet of very well sleeked marble paper did not cast distinct colours upon the wall, nor throw its light with an equal diffusion; but threw its beams, unstated and bright, to this and that part of the wall.

Boyle on Colours.

2. Copiousness; exuberance of style.

DIFFUSIVE. adj. [from diffuse.]

1. Having the quality of scattering any thing every way.

Diffusive of themselves, where-e'er they pass

They make that warmth in others they expect.

Their valour works like bodies on a glass

And does its image on their men project.

Dryden.

2. Scattered; dispersed; having the quality of suffering diffusion.

All liquid bodies are diffusiv; for their parts being in motion, have no connexion, but glide and fall off any way.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over.

South.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mass,
And upward shoot, and kindle as they pass,

And with diffusive light adorn their heav'nly place: Dryden.

Cherish'd with hope, and fed with joy it grows;

Its cheerful buds their opening bloom disclose,

And round the happy soil diffusive odour flows. Prior.

3. Extended.

They are not agreed among themselves where infallibility is seated; whether in the pope alone, or a council alone, or in both together, or in the diffusive body of Christians. Tillotson.

DIFFUSIVELY. † adv. [from diffusive.] Widely; extensively; every way.

Εκκλησία — means diffusively the whole community of the Christians. Bentley, Phil. Lips. p. 35.

DIFFUSIVENESS. † n. s. [from diffusive.]

1. Extension: dispersion; the power of diffusing; the state of being diffused.

The reflection of this quality upon us should be our diffusiveness; that we should so be lights, as that we should give light; so have light in ourselves, that we should give it unto others. H. Hall, Rem. p. 43.

The most obvious and most general notion of this catholicism consisteth in the diffusiveness of the Church.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 9.

2. Want of conciseness; large compass of expression.

The fault that I find with a modern legend, is its diffusiveness: you have sometimes the whole side of a medal overrun with it. Addison on Medals.

To DIG. v. a. preter. dug, or digged; part. pass. dug, or digged. [Dic, Saxon, a ditch; dyger, Danish, to dig.]

1. To pierce with a spade.

Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall; and when I had digged in the wall, I beheld a door. Ezek. viii. 8.

2. To form by digging.

Seek with heart and mouth to build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down; and to fill up the mines that you have digged by craft and subtlety, to overthrow the same. Whigitt.

He built towers in the desert, and digged many wells; for he had much cattle. 2 Chron. xxvi. 10.

3. To cultivate the ground by turning it with a spade.

The walls of your garden, without their furniture, look as ill as those of your house; so that you cannot dig up your garden too often. Temple.

Be first to dig the ground, be first to burn the branches lopt. Dryden, Virg.

4. To pierce with a sharp point.

A ravenous vulture in his open'd side,
Her crooked beak and cruel talons try'd;
Still for the growing liver dig'd his breast,
The growing liver still supply'd the feast. Dryden, Æn.

5. To gain by digging.

It is digged out of even the highest mountains, and all parts of the earth contingently; as the pyrites. Woodward.

Nor was the ground alone requir'd to bear
Her annual income to the crooked share;
But greedy mortals, rummaging her store,
Dig'd from her entrails first the precious ore. Dryden, Ovid.

To DIG. v. n. To work with a spade; to work in making holes, or turning the ground.

They long for death, but it cometh not: and dig for it more than for hid treasures. Job, iii. 21.

The Italians have often dug into lands described in old authors, as the places where statues or obelisks stood, and seldom failed of success. Addison, Travels.

To DIG up. v. a. To throw up that which is covered with earth.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It would not slake mine ire. Shakspeare.

DIGAMMA. * n. s. [Greek.] "The letter Γ so called, because he beareth a form like the Greek letter gamma, made double." Bullokar. It is originally an Æolick letter. The Lombardick Γ in later times is an exact double gamma.

Towering o'er your alphabet, like Saul,
Stands our digamma, and o'erlops them all. Pope, Dunciad.

DIGAMY. † n. s. [old Fr. digamic, Gr. δυγαμία.] Second marriage; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first: as bigamy, having two wives at once.

They parallel the antick Romans, who (as Tacitus, Macellin, and Tertullian tell us) so hated digamy (both in enjoying two wives at one time, and being twice married) as no holocaust was ever offered, no holy fire lookt unto by such, nor such as issued from such parents. See T. Herbert, Travels, p. 46.

Dr. Champney only proves, that archbishop Cranmer was twice married; which is not denied: but brings nothing to prove that such bigamy or digamy rather deprives a bishop of the lawful use of his power of ordaining. Bishop Verne.

DIGASTRICK. * adj. [Fr. digastrique, Lat. digastricus, Gr. δις and γαστήρ, the belly. It has been printed, inaccurately, in Paley's Natural Theology, diagas-trick.] Applied to a muscle of the lower jaw, as having, as it were, a double belly.

A certain muscle, called the digastrick, rises on the side of the face. Paley, Nat. Theology, p. 142.

DIGERENT. adj. [digerens, Lat.] That which has the power of digesting, or causing digestion. Dict.

DIGEST. n. s. [digesta, Lat.] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpose to make a particular digest, or recompilement to the laws of mine own nation. Bacon.

Laws in the digest shew that the Romans applied themselves to trade. Arbuthnot on Coms.

To DIGEST. † v. a. [digerere, digestum, Lat.]

1. To distribute into various classes, or repositories; to range or dispose methodically.

When that I heard where Richmond did arrive,
I did digest my bands in battell-ray. Mar. for Aug. p. 763.

2. To concoct in the stomach, so as that the various particles of food may be applied to their proper use.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear? Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Each then has organs to digest his food;
One to beget, and one receive the brood. Prior.

3. To soften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghill: a chymical term.

To be sure he will rather have the primitive man to be produced by a long process in a kind of digesting habuema, where all the heavier lees may have time to subside, and a due equilibrium be maintained, not disturbed by any such rude and violent shocks. Bentley, Serm. iv. p. 133.

4. To range methodically in the mind: to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper use.

Blessed Lord, who hast caused all holy scriptures to be written for our learning; grant that we may in such wise hear them, read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest them, that by patience and comfort of thy holy word we may embrace, and ever hold fast, the blessed hope of everlasting life, which thou hast given us in our Saviour Jesus Christ. Collect, 2nd Sund. in Ade.

DIG

Chosen friends, with sense refin'd,
Learning digested well.

Thomson.

5. To reduce to any plan, scheme, or method.

Our play,
Leaps o'er the vault and firstlings of those broils,
Ginning i' the middle: starting thence away,
To what may be digested in a play.

Shakespeare.

My words and deeds they daily wrest,
And in their thoughts my fall digest.

Sandys, Ps. p. 88.

6. To receive without loathing or repugnance; not to reject.

First, let us go to dinner.

— Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.

— No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk;

Then howsoever thou speak'st, 'mong other things

I shall digest it.

The pleasure of numbers is, that rudeness and barbarism might the better taste and digest the lessons of civility.

Peacham.

7. To receive and enjoy.

Cornwall and Albany,

With my two daughters dowers, digest the third.

Shakespeare.

8. [In chirurgery.] To dispose a wound; to generate pus in order to a cure.

To DIGEST: v. n. To generate matter as a wound, and tend to a cure.

DIGESTIBLE. n. s. [from digest.]

1. He that digests or disposes.

2. He that digests or concocts his food.

People that are bilious and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digesters.

Arbuthnot.

3. A strong vessel or engine, contrived by M. Papin,
'wherein to boil, with a very strong heat, any bony substances, so as to reduce them into a fluid state.'

Quincy.

4. That which causes or strengthens the concoctive power.

Rice is of excellent use for all illnesses of the stomach, a great restorer of health, and a great digestor.

Temple.

DIGESTIBLE. adj. [from digest.] That which is capable of being digested or concocted in the stomach.

Those medicines that purge by stool are, at the first, not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

DIGESTION. † n. s. [Fr. digestion.]

1. The act of digesting or concocting food in the stomach.

Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Digestion is a fermentation begun, because there are all the requisites of such a fermentation; heat, air, and motion: but it is not a complete fermentation, because that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the stomach: vegetable putrefaction resembles very much animal digestion.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by measures and weights, or any general Lessian rules; but must vary with the vigour or decays of age or of health, and the use or disuse of air or of exercise, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find or suspect of the present strength or weakness of digestion.

Temple.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion.

South.

2. The preparation of matter by a chymical heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digestion, or maturation of some metals, will produce gold.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,
Raise all the labour-houses of the air,
And lay crude vapours in digestion there?

Blackmore.

3. Reduction to a plan; the act of methodising; the maturation of a design.

DIG

The digestion of the counsels in Sweden is made in senate, consisting of forty counsellors, who are generally the greatest men.

Temple.

4. The act of disposing a wound to generate matter.

5. The disposition of a wound or sore to generate matter.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion.

Sharpe, Surgery.

DIGESTIVE. † adj. [Fr. digestif.]

1. Having the power to cause digestion, or to strengthen the stomach.

A chylifactory menstruum, or a digestive preparation, drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Capable by heat to soften and subdue.

The earth and sun were in that very state; the one active, piercing, and digestive by its heat; the other passive, receptive, and stored with materials for such a production.

Hale.

3. Methodising, adjusting.

To business, ripen'd by digestive thought,

This future rule is into method brought.

Dryden.

DIGESTIVE. n. s. An application which disposes a wound to generate matter.

Dressed it with digestives.

Wiseman on Abscesses.

DIGESTURE. n. s. Concoction: not used.

Neither tie yourself always to eat meats of easy digesture:
such as veal, sweetbreads.

Harvey.

DIGGABLE.  adj.* [from To dig.] That may be digg'd.

Huloet.

DIGGER. n. s. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a spade.

When we visited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the sky seemed clear, there would suddenly arise a steam so thick, that it would put out their candles.

Boyle.

To DIGHT. † v. a. [Dialect, to prepare, to regulate,
Saxon.]

1. To dress; to deck; to bedeck; to embellish; to adorn. It seems always to signify the past; the participle passive is dight, as dighted in Hudibras is perhaps improper. So far Dr. Johnson. But dight does not always signify the past; and dighted is as regular from dight, as plighted is from plight.
Butler, in his Hudibras, follows another quaint describer. Spenser also, and Beaumont and Fletcher, in the present definition, confute Dr.
Johnson's remark.

But now, ye shepherd lasses, who shall lead

Your wandring troops, or sing your virelays?

Or who shall dight your bow'rs, sith she is dead

That was the lady of your holy-days? Spenser, Daphneida.

Have a care, you dight things handsomely; I will look over you.

Beaumont and Fl. Coxcomb.

In an instant they were dighted, and came cleanly off, though they went foully on.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quixote.

Let my due feet never fail

To walk the staidous cloisters pale,

And love the high embowed roof,

With antick pillar massy proof,

And storied windows richly dight,

Casting a diu religious light.

Milton, Il Pens.

Just so the proud insulting lass

Array'd and dighted Hudibras.

Hudibras.

2. To put on.

On his head his dreadful hat he dight,

Which maketh him invisible to sight.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

DIGIT. n. s. [digitus, Latin.]

1. The measure or length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digits high, or somewhat more, the quicksilver will not fall, but remain suspended in the tube, because it cannot press the subjacent mercury with so great a force as does the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmosphere. Boyle, Spring of the Air.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon.
3. Any of the numbers expressed by single figures; any number to ten: so called from counting upon the fingers.

Not only the number seven and nine, from considerations abstruse, have been extolled by most, but all or most of other digits have been as mystically applauded. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DIGITAL.* adj. [Lat. digitalis.] Pertaining to a finger. Bailey.

DIGITATED. adj. [from digitus, Latin.] Branched out into divisions like fingers; as a digitated leaf is a leaf composed of many small leaves.

For animals multifidous, or such as are digitated, or have several divisions in their feet, there are but two that are uniparous; that is, men and elephants. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DIGLADIATION.* n. s. [digladiatio, Latin.] A combat with swords; any quarrel or contest.

Mingle no matter of doubtful credit with the simplicity of truth; but gently stir the mould about the root of the question, and avoid all digladiations. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

The noblest digladiation is in the theatre of ourselves. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 24.

Aristotle seems purposely to intend the cherishing of controversial digladiations, by his own affection of an intricate obscurity. Glanville, Scepais.

DIGNIFIED. adj. [from dignify.] Invested with some dignity: it is used chiefly of the clergy.

Abbots are stiled dignified clerks, as having some dignity in the church. Ayliffe, Parergon.

DIGNIFICATION. n. s. [from dignify.] Exaltation.

I grant that where a noble and ancient descent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that person. Walton's Angler.

To DIGNIFY. v. a. [from dignus and facto, Latin.]

1. To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Used chiefly of the clergy.

2. To honour; to adorn; to give lustre to; to improve by some adventitious excellence, or honourable distinction.

Such a day,

So fought, so followed, and so fairly won,

Came not till now to dignify the times,

Since Caesar's fortunes! Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Not that we think us worthy such a guest,

But your worth will dignify our feast. B. Jonson.

No turbot dignify my boards;

But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

DIGNITARY. n. s. [from dignas, Latin.] A clergyman advanced to some dignity, to some rank above that of a parochial priest.

If there be any dignitaries, whose preferments are perhaps not liable to the accusation of superfluity, they may be persons of superior merit. Swift.

DIGNITY.* n. s. [old French digneté, from dignitas, Latin.]

1. Rank of elevation.

Angels are not any where spoken so highly of as our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and are not in dignity equal to him. Hooker.

2. Grandeur of mien; elevation of aspect.

Some men have a native dignity, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands. Clarissa.

3. Advancement; preferment; high place.

Faster than spring-time shows its blossoms thought on thought, And not a thought but thinks on dignity. Shakespeare.

For those of old,

And these late dignities heap'd up to them. Shakespeare.

4. [Among ecclesiasticks.] By a dignity we understand that promotion or preferment to which any jurisdiction is annexed. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Maxims; general principles; κρυπτα δοξαι.

The sciences concluding from dignities, and principles known by themselves, receive not satisfaction from probable reasons, much less from bare asseverations. Brown.

6. [In astrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any sign.

DIGNO'TION. n. s. [from dignosco, Latin.] Distinction; distinguishing mark.

That temperamental dignotions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we are not averse to concede. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To DIGRESS.* v. n. [digressus, Latin.]

1. To turn aside out of the road.

2. To depart from the main design of a discourse, or chief tenour of an argument.

Let my talk return thither from whence it digressed. Barret
Thus far have I digressed, readers, from my former subject.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

In the pursuit of an argument there is hardly room to digress into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the signification of any term. Locke.

3. To wander; to expatiate.

It seemeth, to digress no farther, that the Tartarians, spreading so far, cannot be the Israelites. Brewerwood.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to transgress; to deviate; not in use.

I am come to keep my word.

Though in some part am forced to digress,
Which at more leisure I will so excuse

As you shall well be satisfied.

Shakespeare.

Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,

Digressing from the valour of a man.

Shakespeare

DIGRESSION. n. s. [digressio, Latin.]

1. A passage deviating from the main tenour or design of a discourse.

The good man thought so much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digressions to him. Sidney.

He, she knew, would intermix

Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute

With conjugal carresses.

Milton, P. L.

Here some digression I must make, 't accusé

Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful muse.

Denham.

To content and fill the eye of the understanding, the best authors sprinkle their works with pleasing digressions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers. Dryden.

2. Deviation.

The digression of the sun is not equal; but near the equinoctial intersections, it is right and greater; near the solstices, more oblique and lesser. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DIGRESSIONAL.* adj. [from digression.] Deviating from the main purpose.

Milton has judiciously avoided Fletcher's digressional ornaments, which, however poetical, are here unnecessary.

Warton, Notes on Milton.

DIGRESSIVE.* adj. [from To digress.] Expatiating.

The wild diffusion of the sentiments, and the digressive sallies of imagination, would have been compressed and restrained by confinement of rhyme. Johnson, Life of Young.

DIGRESSIVELY.* adv. [from digressive.] In the way of digression. Used, according to Mr. Malone, by the celebrated W. Pitt, Earl of Chatham.

To DIJUDICATE.* v. a. [Lat. dijudico.] To determine by censure.

Cockram.

The church of Rome, when she commends unto us the authority of the church in adjudicating of scriptures, seems only to speak of herself.

Hales, Rem. p. 160.

DIJUDICATION.* n. s. [dijudicatio, Latin.] Judicial distinction.

Cockram.

DIKE.* n. s. [dic, Saxon; dyk, Erse.]

1. A channel to receive water.

The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring sound
The rising rivers float the nether ground.
The king of dykes! than whom, no sluice of mud
With deeper sable blots the silver flood. Dryden, Virgil.
Pope, Dunciad.

2. A mound to hinder inundations. [probably from the Celt. digh, solid, strong; though Dr. Johnson has made no distinction. So the Fr. digue; and the Gr. τειχος, a wall, whence the Germ. teich, and the Dutch dyke.]

God, that breaks up the flood-gates of so great a deluge, and all the art and industry of man is not sufficient to raise up dykes and ramparts against it. Cowley.

To DIKE. * v. n. [Sax. dician, to dig.] To work with a spade. This word, as well as diker for ditcher formed from it, is obsolete.

It were better dike and delve,
And stand upon the right faith,
Than know all that the bible saith,
And erre as some clerkes do. Gower, Conf. Am. Prol.

To DILACERATE. * v. a. [dilacero, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accomplished period, struggling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks those parts which restrained him before. Brown, Kelp. Lri.

Their greatest pride is expressed in the adorning their ears and noses; supposing them most courtly who dilacerate their ears widest. T. Herbert, Tran. p. 337.

DILACERATION. * n. s. [from dilaceratio, Latin.] The act of rending in two.

Deep was that sense and grievous was that pain which those scourges produced, when the plowmen plowed upon his back and made long their furrows: the dilaceration of those nervous parts created a most sharp and dolorous sensation. Pearson, on the Creed, Art. 4.

The greatest sensation of pain is by the obstruction of the small vessels, and dilaceration of the nervous fibres. Arbuthnot.

To DILANIATE. v. a. [dilano, Latin.] To tear; to rend in pieces.

Rather than they would dilanate, the entrails of their own mother, and expose her thereby to be ravished, they met half way in a gallant kind. Howell, Ling. Trans.

DILANIATION. * n. s. [from dilano.] A tearing in pieces.To DILAPIDATE. * v. n. [dilapido, Latin.] To go to ruin; to fall by decay.

The church of Elgin had, in the intestine tumults of the barbarous ages, been laid waste by the irruption of an Highland chief, whom the bishop had offended; but it was gradually restored to the state of which the traces may be now discerned, and was at last not destroyed by the tumultuous violence of Knox, but more shamefully suited to dilapidate by deliberate robbery and frippery indifference. Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands.

To DILAPIDE. * v. a. To make desert; to consume wastefully.

Many pluralists do reside at one living for the greater part, and at the other for some considerable part, of the year; and do neither dilapidate, nor neglect alms or hospitality.

Was her moderation seen in dilapidating the revenues of the church? Hurd.

The old patrimonial mansion is desolated, and even the parish church unroofed and dilapidated

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. iv. 43.

DILAPIDATION. * n. s. [dilapidatio, Latin.]

1. The incumbent's suffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his ecclesiastical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the same: and it likewise extends to his committing, or suffering to be committed, any wilful waste in or upon the glebe-woods, or any other inheritance of the church.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

'Tis the duty of all church-wardens to prevent the dilapi- dations of the chancel and mansion-houses belonging to the rector or vicar. Ayliffe's Parergon.

So great a demand, as the bishop had upon his predecessor's executors for dilapidations, could not very soon, or very easily, be brought to an accommodation.

Louth, Life of Wykeham, p. 59.

2. Ruin or decay in general.

I have often heard it said, that, by keeping a strict account of incomes and expences, a man might easily preserve an estate from dilapidation. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

DILAPIDATOR. * n. s. [from dilapidate.] One who occasions dilapidation.

It is alleged, that non-residence and dilapidations for the most part go hand in hand; that you shall seldom see a non-resident, but he is also a dilapidator.

H. Wharton, Def. of Pluralities, p. 156.

DILATABILITY. n. s. [from dilatable.] The quality of admitting extension.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extensive-ness of the gullets of serpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray.

By this continual contractibility and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a constant motion.

Arbuthnot.

DILATABLE. * adj. [old Fr. dilatable.] Capable of extension.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches called bronchia: these end in small air-bladders, dilatable and contractible, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILATATION. * n. s. [old Fr. dilatation, Lat. dilatatio.]

This is one of our oldest substantives, being used by Chaucer in the sense of enlargement. Bishop Reynolds has employed this word in a manner, which well illustrates the etymology of it. "A second effect of joy is opening and dilatation of the heart and countenance, expressing the serenity of the mind, whence it hath the name of letitia, as it were a broad and spreading passion." Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 21.]

1. The act of extending into greater space: opposed to contraction.

The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are so easy and so subtle, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aright. Holder.

I might also add—the contraction or dilatation of the apple of the eye. Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 100.

2. The state of being extended; the state in which the parts are at more distance from each other.

Joy causeth a cheerfulness and vigour in the eyes; singing, leaping, dancing, and sometimes tears: all these are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the spirits into the outward parts. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions. Newton.

To DILATE. * v. a. [dilato, Lat.]

1. To extend; to spread out; to enlarge: opposed to contract.

But ye thereby much greater glory get,
Than had ye sorted with a prince's peer;
For now your light doth more itself dilate,
And in my darkness greater doth appear. Spenser, F. Q.

He hath so dilated himself with the beams of prosperity, that he lies open to all dangers.

Bp. Hall, Charact. The Unthrif.

I have been hammered, and dilated upon the anvil, as our countryman Breakspear (Adrian IV.) said of himself; I have been strained through the limbeck of affliction.

Bacon, Lett. i. vi. 50.

Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated stood,
Like Teneriff, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton, P. L.

Opener of mine eyes,
Dim erst; dilated spirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead: which for thee
Chiefly I sought; without thee, can despise. Milton, P. L.

Through all the air his sounding strings dilate
Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late. Waller.

Diffus'd, it rises in a higher sphere;
Dilates its drops, and softens into air. Prior.*

I mark the various fury of the winds;
These neither seasons guide, nor order binds:
They now dilate, and now contract, their force;
Various their speed, but endless is their course. Prior.

The second refraction would spread the rays one way as much as the first doth another, and so dilate the image in breadth as much as the first doth in length. Newton.

2. To relate at large; to tell diffusely and copiously.

But he would not endure that woful theam
For to dilate at large; but urged sore,
With piteous words, and pitiful implore,
Him hasty to arise. Sympser, F. Q.*

I observing,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively. Shakspeare, Othello.

To DILA'TE.† v. n.

1. To widen; to grow wide.

And Naphtali, which borders on
Or Jordan, where his stream dilates. Sandys, Ps. p. 107.
His heart dilates and glories in his strength. Addison.

2. To speak largely and copiously.

I will not talk of that, at which himself was silent, his condemnation; whereby the Lord of life was delivered to the power of death: nor will I dilate of his crucifying. Walsall, Life of Christ, (1615.) sign. C. i. b.*

It may be behoveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly, and by themselves; or their ministers to dilate upon it, and improve their lustre, by any addition or eloquence of speech. Clarendon.

DILA'TE.* adj. [from the verb.] Extensive.

And it is fit a good and honest prince,
Whom they out of their bounty have instructed
With so dilate and absolute a power,
Should owe the office of it to their service,
And good of all and every citizen. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

DILA'TER.* n. s. [from dilate.] One who enlarges or extends.

Thy labours shew thy will to dignify
The first dilatere of thy famous nation;
And whilst thy lines their glories signify,
They likewise do increase thy reputation. Shelton, Verses pref. to Verstigan's Restitution.

DILA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. dilation, Lat. dilatatio.] Delay.

What construction canst thou make of our wilful dilatations, but as a stubborn contempt? Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

DILA'TOR.* n. s. [from dilate.] That which widens or extends.

The buccinators, or blowers up of the cheeks, and the dilatators of the nose, are too strong in choleric people. Arbutnot.

DILA'TORILY.* adv. [from dilatory.] In a sluggish or procrastinating manner.

Some time in March I finished the Lives of the Poets, which I wrote in my usual way, dilatorily, and hastily, unwilling to work, and working with vigour and haste. Johnson, Prayers and Medit. p. 190.

DILA'TORINESS.† n. s. [from dilatory.] The quality of being dilatory; slowness; sluggishness.

If the parliament would enact that a sum should be defalked from the ordinary fees of the lawyer, and that no cause should depend in any court above a time which they should prefix;
this would very much remedy the dilatoriness of their processes.
Moral State of England, (1670.) p. 63.

DILA'TORY.* adj. [dilatatoire, Fr. dilatorius, Lat.]

Tardy; slow; given to procrastination; addicted to delay; sluggish; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious suits in a higher court, would be but dilatory, and so to little purpose. Hayward.

What wound did ever heal but by degrees?
Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;
And wit depends on dilatory time. Shakspeare, Othello.

These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools and knaves. Gray.

A dilatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without design. Addison, Spect.

DILE'CCTION.† n. s. [dilectio, Lat.] The act of loving; kindness.

These words mine, and thine, proceeded first of iniquitie, because men did not observe mutual and natural dilection.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1555.) sign. H. ii.
And this was the first testimony of the infinite dilection of God towards man.

Harmar, Transl. of Beza's Sermon, (1586.) p. 29.
A bone not far from his heart, to put him in mind of dilec-tion and love to the woman.

Bp. of London's Fine Paintme, (1614.) p. 27.
So free is Christ's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief. Boyle, Seraph. Love.

DILE'MMA.† n. s. [διλημμα.]

1. An argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions. A young rhetorician applied to an old sophist to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he should gain a cause. The master sued for his reward, and the scholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cause, I shall withhold your pay, because the judge's award will be against you; if I lose it, I may withhold it, because I shall not yet have gained a cause. On the contrary, says the master, if you gain your cause, you must pay me, because you are to pay me when you gain a cause; if you lose it, you must pay me, because the judge will award it.

A dilemma, that Morton used, to raise benevolence, some called his fork, and some his crotch. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Hope, whose weak being ruin'd is Alike if it succeed, and if it fails;
Whom good or ill does equally confound,
And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound. Conley.

2. A difficult or doubtful choice; a vexatious alternative.

Between this dilemma of deaths, the sharp pikes of the soldiers on the one side, and fury of the fire, on the other; he preferred the former, not as most honourable, and best complying with a military soul; (not being at leisure, alas, in time of torment, to stand on terms of credit;) but as least painful. Fuller, Profane State, p. 479.

A strong dilemma in a desperate case!
To act with infamy, or quit the place. Swift.

A dire dilemma; either way I'm sped;
If foes, they write, if friends, they read me dead. Pope.

DILETTANTE.* n. s. [plur. dilettanti, Italian.]

One who delights in cultivating or promoting science. A society of dilettanti, composed of distinguished characters, was formed in this country about half a century since, and still exists under this appellation.

He told me a current story of a simple English country squire, who was persuaded by certain dilettanti of his acquaintance to see the world, and to become knowing in men and manners.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

DILIGENCE. n. s. [diligentia, Lat.] Industry; assiduity; constancy in business; continuance of endeavour; unintermitted application; the contrary to idleness.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. 2 Tim. iv. 9.
Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure. 2 Pet. i. 10.

DILIGENT. adj. [diligens, Lat.]

1. Constant in application; persevering in endeavour; assiduous; not idle; not negligent; not lazy.

Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings. Prov. xxii. 29.

2. Constantly applied; prosecuted with activity and perseverance; assiduous.

And the judges shall make diligent inquisition. Deut. xix.

DILIGENTLY. adv. [from diligent.] With assiduity; with heed and perseverance; not carelessly; not idly; not negligently.

If you inquire not attentively and diligently, you shall never be able to discern a number of mechanical motions. Bacon.

The ancients have diligently examined in what consists the beauty of good postures. Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

DILL. n. s. [dile, Sax.] It hath a slender, fibrous, annual root; the leaves are like those of fennel; the seeds are oval, plain, streaked, and bordered.

Dill is raised of seed, which is ripe in August. Mortimer.

DILUCID.† adj. [old Fr. dilucid, from dilucidus, Lat.]

1. Clear; not opaque.

2. Clear; plain; not obscure.

To DILUCIDATE. v. a. [from dilucidare, Lat.] To make clear or plain; to explain; to free from obscurity.

I shall not extenuate, but explain and dilucidate, according to the custom of the ancients. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DILUCIDATION. n. s. [from dilucidatio, Lat.] The act of making clear; explanation; exposition.

DILUCIDLY.† adv. [from dilucid.] Clearly; evidently. Bailey.

DILUENT. adj. [diluens, Lat.] Having the power to thin and attenuate other matter.

DILUENT. n. s. [from the adjective.] That which thins other matter.

There is no real diluent but water: every fluid is diluent, as it contains water in it. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To DILUTE.† v. a. [diluo, Lat.]

1. To make thin; to attenuate by the admixture of other parts.

Drinking a large dose of diluted tea, as she was ordered by a physician, she got to bed. Locke.

The diluent ought to be thin to dilute, demulcent to temper, or acid to subdue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To make weak.

The chamber was dark, lest these colours should be diluted and weakened by the mixture of any adventitious light. Newton.

DILUTE.† adj. Thin; attenuated; weakened; figuratively, poor.

I say, it is not evident that he so much reprehends him for the notation of the word, as for the application of it to such a sense as he there expresses; which is much different from that sense we have proposed, and far more dilute.

More, Ser. Churches, Pref.

The religion of the Jews was much wrapped up in shadow and mystery; they had but dilute ideas of God's nature, and scant discoveries of his will.

Bacon, Ser. vol. iii. S. 3.

Now it seems very dilute and insipid to direct the intention of these laws only against jugglers, miracle-mongers, or impostors.

Hallywell, Melampus, &c.

If the red and blue colours were more dilute and weak, the distance of the images would be less than an inch; and if they were more intense and full, that distance would be greater.

Newton.

DILUTER. n. s. [from dilute.] That which makes any thing else thin.

Water is the only diluter, and the best dissolvent of most of the ingredients of our aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILUTION. n. s. [dilutio, Lat.] The act of making any thing thin or weak.

Opposite to dilution is coagulation, or thickening, which is performed by dissipating the most fluid parts by heat, or by insinuating some substances, which make the parts of the fluid cohere more strongly. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILUVIAN. adj. [from diluvium, Lat.] Relating to the deluge.

Suppose that this diluvian lake should rise to the mountain tops in one place, and not diffuse itself equally into all countries about. Burnet, Theory.

DIM.† adj. [dim, Sax. dy, Welsh; dow, Erse; according to Dr. Johnson. It is the participle of the Sax. dimnian, to darken, according to Mr. Horne Tooke; and was formerly written dimmed. The old Goth. dimma, darkness, must not, however, be overpassed.]

1. Not having a quick sight; not seeing clearly.

For her true form, how can my spark discern,
Which, dim by nature, art did never clear? Davies.

2. Dull of apprehension.

The understanding is dim, and cannot by its natural light discover spiritual truths. Rogers.

3. Not clearly seen; obscure; imperfectly discovered.

We might be able to aim at some dim and seeming conception, how matter might begin to exist by the power of that eternal first Being. Locke.

Something, as dim to our internal view,
Is thus perhaps the cause of all we do. Pope.

4. Obstructing the act of vision; not luminous; somewhat dark.

Her face right wond'rous fair did seem to be,
That her broad beauty's beam great brightness threw
Through the dim shade, that all men might it see. Spenser, F. Q.

How is the gold become dim? how is the most fine gold changed. Lament. iv. 1.

To DIM.† v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exercise of vision.

As where the Almighty's lightning brand does light,
It dims the dazed eye, and daunts the sense quite. Spenser, F. Q.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much use of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also dim-sighted. Bacon.

Every one declares against blindness, and yet who almost is not fond of that which dims his sight? Locke.

For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head,
With all such reading as was never read. Pope, Dunc.

2. To make less bright; to obscure.

A ship that through the ocean wide,
By conduct of some star doth make her way,
When as a storm hath dim'd her trusty guide,
Out of her course doth wander far away. Spenser.

D I M

Thus while he spake, each passion dimin'd his face, Thrice chang'd. Milton, P. L.
The principal figure in a picture is like a king among his courtiers, who dim all his attendants. Dryden.

DIM-SIGHTED.* adj. [dim and sight.] Having weak eyes.

Nor may the least suspicion of pride fall upon many women, who while they modestly use help to their complexions, are the more humbled and dejected, under the defects they find of native beauty, or lively colour; the remedying of which, by artificial applications, can be no more temptation to pride, than the use of crutches, or spectacles, to those that are lame, and dim-sighted. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 99.

First then for chronology, how dim-sighted are the ancients in the computation of time. Hakewill on Providence, p. 246.

We are only deceived in what is not discerned, and to err is but to be blind or dim-sighted as to some perceptions.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 3.

DIMBLE.* n. s. The same word as dingle, that is, a valley between two hills, according to Mr. Warton in his notes on Milton; supposed by Mr. Whalley, the commentator on Ben Jonson, to be a corruption of it; and defined a dingle by Mr. Mason in his Supplement. The word is no corruption; but perhaps a bower, a retreat, a cell, is the true meaning; and the Sax. dim hól, a cave, is believed to be its origin.

The scene [is] Sherwood; consisting of a landscape of a forest, hills, valleys, cottages, a castle, a river, pastures, herds, flocks, all full of country simplicity; Robin Hood's bower, his well, the witch's dimble, the swineherd's oak, the hermit's cell.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

Deep in a gloomy dimble she doth dwell.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

Satyrs, that in shades and gloomy dimbles dwell.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 2.

And in a dimble near, ev'n as a place divine,
For contemplation fit, an ivy-cieled bower.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 26.

DIMENSION.* n. s. [dimension, Fr. dimensio, Lat.] Space contained in any thing; bulk; extent; capacity. It is seldom used but in the plural, Dr. Johnson says. But he had overlooked both Shakspeare and Milton, as Mr. Mason also has observed. The three dimensions are length, breadth, and depth.

And in dimension, and the shape of nature,

A gracious person. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

A dark

Illimitable ocean, without bound,

Without dimension.

Milton, P. L.

These, as a line, their long dimension drew.

Milton, P. L.

He try'd

The tomb, and found the strait dimensions wide.

Dryden.

My gentleman was measuring my walls, and taking the dimensions of the room.

Swift.

DIMENSIONLESS.* adj. [from dimension.] Without any definite bulk.

In they pass'd

Dimensionless through heav'nly doors.

Milton, P. L.

DIMENSITY.* n. s. [Lat. dimensus.] Extent; capacity.

If of the smallest stars in sky

We know not the dimensity;

If those bright sparks which them compose,

The highest mortal wits do pose;

How then, poor shallow man, can'st thou

The Maker of these glories know?

Howell, Lett. iv. 44.

DIMENSIVE.* adj. [dimensus, Lat.] That which marks the boundaries or outlines.

All bodies have their measure and their space;

But who can draw the soul's dimensive lines?

Davies.

D I M

DIMETER.* adj. [Lat. dimeter; "dimeter versus."] Having two poetical measures.

The Octosyllable metre—was in reality the ancient Dimeter Iambick.

Tyrwhitt, Essay on the Lang. and Versif. of Chaucer.

Dict.

To DIMINISH. v. a. [diminuo, Lat.]

1. To make less by abscission or destruction of any part; the opposite to increase.

That we call good which is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us. Locke.

2. To impair; to lessen; to degrade.

Impiously they thought

Thee to diminish, and from thee withdraw

The number of thy worshippers.

Milton, P. L.

3. To take any thing from that to which it belongs: the contrary to add.

Nothing was diminished from the safety of the king by the imprisonment of the duke.

Hayward.

Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall you diminish aught from it.

Deut. iv. 2.

To DIMINISH. v. n. • To grow less; to be impaired.

What judgement I had increases rather than diminishes; and thoughts, such as they are, come crowding in so fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject.

Dryden.

Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye;

Before the Boreal blasts the vessels fly.

Pope's Odyssey.

DIMINISHINGLY.* adv. [from diminish.] In a manner tending to villify, or lessen.

I never heard him censure, or so much as speak diminishingly of any one that was absent.

Locke.

DIMINUENT.* adj. [Lat. diminuens.] Lessening.

The comparative degree in such kind of expressions, being usually taken for a diminutive term.

Bp. Sanderson's Sermons, Pref.

DIMINUTE.* adj. [Lat. diminutus.] Small; diminutive.

The first seeds of things are little and diminute.

Sir A. Gorges.

DIMINUTELY.* adv. [from diminute.] In a manner which lessens.

An execration only; but that, too, elliptically and diminutely uttered.

Bp. Sanderson on Promiss. Oaths, i. § 10.

DIMINUTION.* n. s. [diminutio, Lat.]

1. The act of making less; opposed to augmentation. The one is not capable of any diminution or augmentation at all by men; the other apt to admit both.

Hooker.

2. The state of growing less; opposed to increase.

The gravitating power of the sun is transmitted through the vast bodies of the planets without any diminution, so as to act upon all their parts, to their very centres, with the same force, and according to the same laws, as if the part upon which it acts were not surrounded with the body of the planet.

Newton.

Finite and infinite seems to be looked upon as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily to those things which are capable of increase or diminution.

Locke.

3. Discredit; loss of dignity; degradation.

Gladly to thee

Heroick laurel'd Eugene yields the prime;

Nor thinks it diminution to be rank'd

In military honour next.

Philips.

4. Deprivation of dignity; injury of reputation.

Make me wise by thy truth, for my own soul's salvation, and I shall not regard the world's opinion or diminution of me.

King Charles.

They might raise the reputation of another, though they are a diminution to his.

Addison, Spect.

5. [In architecture.] The contraction of the diameter of a column, as it ascends.

DIMINUTIVE, adj. [diminutivus, Lat.] Small; little; narrow; contracted.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

It is the interest of mankind, in order to the advance of knowledge, to be sensible they have yet attained it but in poor and diminutive measure.

Glanville, Seepis.

The light of man's understanding is but a short, diminutive, contracted light, and looks not beyond the present.

South.

If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race of lovers, we should, in a little time, see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature.

Addison.

They know how weak and awkward many of those little diminutive discourses are.

Watts.

DIMINUTIVE, † n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A word formed to express littleness; as, lapillus in Latin, a little stone; maisonette, in French, a little house; männiken, in English, a little man.

He afterwards proving a dainty and effeminate youth, was commonly called, by the diminutive of his name, Peterkin or Perkin.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Sim, while but Sim, in good repute did live;
Was then a knave, but in diminutives

Cotton.

2. A small thing: a sense not how in use.

Follow his chariot; monster-like, be shewn

For poor'st diminutives, for doits!

Shakespeare.

3. That which diminishes, or abates.

Diet, diminutives, alteratives, cordials, correctors, as before, intermixt as occasion serves.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 403.

DIMINUTIVELY, adv. [from diminutive.] In a diminutive manner.

DIMINUTIVENESS, † n. s. [from diminutive.] Smallness; littleness; pettiness; want of bulk; want of dignity.

At all our concerts he was a constant, but an invisible performer; for, while he stood on tip-toes thrumming his bass-viol, the diminutiveness of his figure was totally eclipsed by the expansion of his instrument.

Student, ii. 225.

DIMISH, adj. [from dim.] Somewhat dim; somewhat obscure.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,

My eyes are somewhat dimish grown;

For nature, always, in the right,

To your decays adapts my sight.

Swift.

DIMISSIION,  n. s.* [Lat. dimissio.] Leave to depart.

Huloet.

DIMISSORY, † adj. [dimissorius, Lat.] Our word was formerly written, as it is now sometimes pronounced, (in both cases improperly,) demissory.]

1. That by which a man is disprised to another jurisdiction.

A bishop of another diocess ought neither to ordain or admit a clerk, without the consent of his own proper bishop, and without the letters dimissory.

Ayliffe's Paragon.

2. Granting leave to depart. See DIMISSIION.

Old Simeon's craving his letters dimissory, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace.

Bp. Prideaux, Euchol. (1636,) p. 101.

TO DIMIT,  v. a.* [Lat. dimitto.] To allow to go; also, to grant to farm.

Huloet.

DIMITY, n. s. A fine kind of fustian, or cloth of cotton.

I directed a trowse of fine dimity.

Wiseman.

DIMLY, adv. [from dim.]

1. Not with a quick sight; not with a clear perception.

Unspcakable! who sit above these heathen

To us invisible, or dimly seen,

In these thy lowest works.

Milton, P. L.

2. Not brightly; not luminously.

In the beginning of our pumping the air, the match appeared well lighted, though it had almost filled the receiver with fumes; but by degrees it burnt more and more dimly.

Boyle, Spring of the Air.

I saw the angelick guards from earth ascend,

Grice'd they must now no longer man attend;

The beams about their temples dimly shone;

One would have thought the crime had been their own.

Dryden.

DIMMING,  n. s.* [from dim.] Obscurity.

All of us have cause

To wail the dimming of our shining star.

Shakespeare, K. Rich. III.

DIMNESS, † n. s. [Sax. dimner.]

1. Dulness of sight.

Not with a total blindness, (for then they would not have sought for the door of Lot's house, but rather have groped for the way home) but such a dimness that they could not see any thing distinctly, or in its right place.

Bp. Patrick, on Genesis.

2. Want of apprehension; stupidity.

Answerable to this dimness of their perception, was the whole system and body of their religion.

Deacy of Party.

DIMPLE, n. s. [dint, a hole; dimble, a little hole; by a careless pronunciation dimple. Skinner.] A small cavity or depression in the cheek, chin, or other part.

The dimple of the upper lip is the common measure of them all.

Green.

In her forehead's fair half round,

Love sits in open triumph crown'd;

He in the dimple of her chin,

In private state, by friends is seen.

Prior.

TO DIMPLE, v. n. [from the noun.] To sink in small cavities, or little inequalities.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in,

And smiling eddies, dimpled on the main.

Dryden.

Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,

As shallow streams run dimpling all the way.

Pope.

DIMPLED, adj. [from dimple.] Set with dimples.

On each side her,

Stood pretty dimpled boys like smiling Cupids.

Shakespeare.

DIMPLE, † adj. [from dimple.] Full of dimples; sinking in little inequalities.

The wanderers of heaven

Each to his home retire, save those that love

To take their pastime in the troubled air,

Or skimming flutter round the dimple pool.

Thomson, Winter.

As the smooth surface of the dimple flood,

The silver-slipper'd virgin lightly trod.

Warton, Isis.

DIN, † n. s. [dyn, a noise; dynan, to make a noise, Sax. dyna, to thunder, Icelandick.] Thus, in some parts of the west of England, thunder is called dinder. The word was also formerly written deun.]

A loud noise; a violent and continued sound.

And all the way he roared as he went,

That all the forest with astonishment

Thereof did tremble; and the beasts therein

Fled fast away from that so dreadful din.

Spenser, Hubb. Talc.

O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear;

To make an earthquake; sure, it was the roar

Of a whole herd of lions.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

While the cock with lively din

Scatters the rear of darkness thin,

And to the stack or the barn-door

Stoutly struts his dame before.

Milton, L'All.

Now night o'er heav'n

Inducing darkness, grateful truce impos'd,

And silence, on the odious din of war.

Milton, P. L.

DIN

How, while the troubled elements around,
Earth, water, air, the stunning din resound,
Through streams of smoke and adverse fire he rides,
While every shot is level'd at his side.

Some independent ideas, of no alliance to one another, are, by education, custom, and the constant din of their party, so coupled in their minds, that they always appear there together.

Locke.

To DIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stun with noise; to harass with clamour.

Rather live.

To din thee for his bread, and din your ears
With hungry cries.

Otway, Venice Pres.

2. To impress with violent and continued noise.

What shall we do, if his majesty puts out a proclamation commanding us to take Wood's halfpence? This hath been often *din*ned in my ears.

Swift.

To DINE. v. n. [diner, Fr.] To eat the chief meal about the middle of the day.

Perhaps some merchant hath invited him,
And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner:
Good sister, let us dine and never fret.

Shakspeare.

Myself, he, and my sister,

To-day did dine together.

Shakspeare.

He would dine with him the next day.

Clarendon.

Thus, of your heroes and brave boys,

With whom old Homer makes such noise,

The greatest actions I can find,

Are, that they did their work and din'd.

Prior.

To DINE. v. a. To give a dinner to; to feed.

Boil this restoring root in generous wine,

And set beside the door the sickly stock to dine.

Dryden, Virgil.

DINE'TICAL. adj. [din'tikal.] Whirling round; verti-genous.

Some of late have concluded, from spots in the sun, which appear and disappear again, that besides the revolution it maketh with its orb, it hath also a dinectical motion, and rolls upon its own poles.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

A spherical figure is most commodious for dinectical motion, or revolution upon its own axis.

Ray.

To DING.† v. a. pret. and part. dinged and ding.

[Gael. dingam, to push, to drive, to thrust; Irish, dingim; Sax. denegan, to beat: Goth. deinga, the same. The word is common in the North of England.]

1. To dash with violence.

Ding them all down from fair Jerusalem,
And mew them up in thy deserved Bedlem.

Marston, Sat. (1598,) S. 4.

Prometheus

Is ding'd to hell, and vulture cuts his heart.

Ibid. S. 5.

This giant carrier would have been more merciful to his hand, if he had known against the jaw-bones of what creature he so often dinged his fist.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quia.

2. To impress with force.

To DING. v. n. To bluster; to bounce; to huff. A low word.

He huffs and dings, because we will not spind the little we have left, to get him the title of lord Stat.

Arbutnot.

DING-DONG. n. s. A word by which the sound of bells is imitated.

Let us all ring fancy's knell;

Ding, dong, Bell.

Shakspeare.

D'INGLE.† n. s. [from ben, or bin, a hollow, Sax.]

A hollow between hills; a dale. See CLOUGH.

In dingles deep and mountains hoar.

Grayton, Muse's Elysium.

I know each lane and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell of this wild wood;

And every bosky bourn from side to side,

My daily walks, and ancient neighbourhood.

Milton, Comus.

Stretch'd among the dingles pied

Of a green dingle's sloping side.

T. Warton, Öde.

DIN

DINGLE-DANGLE. An adverbial expression, denoting any thing carelessly pendant. The old dictionary of Sherwood gives the verb dingle-dangle.

By dingle, which he [Peck] thinks is no where else to be found in our language, he understands boughs hanging dingle- dangle over the edge of the dell. Warton, Notes on Milton.

D'INGINESS. n. s. [from dingy.] The quality of being dingy or brownish.

D'INGY. adj. [Sax. duuz; Swedish, dingig.]

error by the intemperance of his meal, or the deluge of drink.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

D'NNER. n. s. [diner, French.] The chief meal; the meal eaten about the middle of the day.

Let me not stay a jot for dinner.

Go, get it ready.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Before dinner and supper, as often as it is convenient, or can be had, let the publick prayers of the church, or some parts of them, be said publickly in the family.

Bp. Taylor.

The jolly crew, unmindful of the past,

The quarry share, their plenteous dinner haste.

Dryden, Æn.

D'NNER-TIME. n. s. [dinner and time.] The time of dining.

At dinner-time,

I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.

Shakspeare.

Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme,

Happy to catch me just at dinner-time.

Pope.

DINT.† n. s. [Sax. dynt, a blow; which Mr. Horne

Tooke asserts to be the past participle of dynan, to din, to make a noise. See Div. of Purley, ii. 305.

This, however, is not probable. It is more likely to be from ding, to strike, to dash with violence. See To DING. This word was formerly written dent.]

1. A blow; a stroke.

Much daunted with that dint, her sense was daz'd;

Yet kindling rage, herself she gather'd round.

Spenser.

Neither vainly hope

To be invulnerable in these bright arms,

Though temper'd heavenly; for that mortal dint,

Save he who reigns above, none can resist.

Milton, P. L.

2. The mark made by a blow; the cavity remaining after a violent pressure.

He embrac'd her naked body o'er,

And, straining hard the statue, was afraid

His hands had made a dint and hurt the maid.

Dryden.

3. Violence; force; power.

Now you weep, and, I perceive, you feel

The dint of pity.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

They daily run themselves upon the dint of the Apostle's sentence against evil-speaking.

Hooker, Ecc. Pol. Pref.

We are to wrest the whole Spanish monarchy out of the hands of the enemy, and, in order to it, to work our way into the heart of his country by dint of arms.

Addison.

The dewlap'd bull now chafes along the plain,

While burning love ferments in every vein;

His well arm'd front against his rival aims,

And by the dint of war his mistress claims.

Gay.

I have myself known a man, from the lowest conditions of life, without friends or education, not knowing so much as to write or read, bred to no trade or calling, by pure dint of day-labour, frugality, and foresight, to have grown wealthy.

Bp. Berkeley, Word to the Wise.

To DINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with a cavity by a blow, or violent impression.

With greedy force each other doth assail,
And strike so fiercely that they do impress
Deep dinted furrows in the batter'd walls:
The iron walls to ward their blows were weak and frail.
Spenser, F. Q.

Leave, leave, fair bride, your solitary bed,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nurseth sadness; and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint.

Donne, Poems, p. 114.

Deep dinted wrinkles on her cheek she draws;

• Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden, En.

DINUMERATION.† n. s. [diminutio, Lat.] The act of numbering out singly.

Bullock and Cockeram.

DIO'CESAN. n. s. [from diocesis.] A bishop as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.

As a diocesan you are like to outdo yourself in all other capacities, and exemplify every word of this discourse. South.

I have heard it has been advised by a diocesan to his inferior clergy, that they should read some of the most celebrated sermons printed by others. Tuttler.

DIO'CESAN.* adj. [from diocesis.] Pertaining to a diocese.

The SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE looks with peculiar hope and satisfaction to the permanent zealous aid and co-operation of the diocesan and district committee.

Account of the Soc. for prom. Chr. Knowledge.

DIO'CESS.† n. s. [Norman, Fr. deocisse; Lat. diocesis.] It is a Greek word compounded of δια and ἐκκλῆσια.

1. The circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction; for this realm has two divisions, one into shires or counties, in respect of temporal policy; another into dioceses, in respect of jurisdiction ecclesiastical. Cowel.

None ought to be admitted by any bishop but such as have dwelt and remained in his diocesis a convenient time. Whitgift.
He should regard the bishop of Rome as the islanders of Jersey and Guernsey do him of Constance in Normandy; that is, nothing at all; since by that French bishop's refusal to swear unto our king, those isles were annexed to the diocesis of Winchester. Raleigh, Essays.

St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prince, ruler of the church, and intrusted with a large diocesis containing many particular cities, under the immediate government of their respective elders, and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.

2. A district of division of a country, generally speaking; not noticed by Dr. Johnson, or any of our lexicographers. But this is the original meaning.

Wild boars are no rarity in this diocesis, which the Moors hunt and kill in a noisy pasture.

L. Addison, Description of W. Barbary, ch. ii. (Oxf. 1671.)

DIO'PTICAL, and DIO'PTICK.* So the next words are now sometimes written.

DIO'PTRICAL.† adj. [διόπτρα, Gr. Dr. Johnson.]

DIO'PTRICK.† son says; but it is more immediately from διόπτρα, Lat. dioptra, a perspective glass.] Affording a medium for the sight; assisting the sight in the view of distant objects.

Being excellently well furnished with dioptrical glasses, he had not been able to see the sun spotted. Boyle.

View the asperities of the moon through a dioptrick glass, and venture at the proportion of her hills by their shadows.

More, Ant. against Atheism.

DIO'PTRICKS.† n. s. A part of opticks, treating of the different refractions of the light passing through different mediums; as the air, water, glasses, &c.

Harris.

He has added much to the theory of dioptricks; much to the manufacture itself of grinding good glasses.

Sprat, Hist. of R. Soc. p. 314.

DIPORISM.* n. s. [Gr. διπορισμός.] Distinction, or definition, which in few words explains what is spoken of.

To eat things sacrificed to idols, is a mode of idolatry; but, by a prophetic diporism, it signifies idolatry in general.

More, Expos. of New Churches, p. 72.

DIPORISTICALLY.* adv. [from diporism.] In a distinguishing manner.

Ye are not so pure and clean as ye ought to be, and free from the fists of the flesh; which vice is here noted by Nicolaitism diporistically, as idolatry in general before by eating things sacrificed to idols.

More, Expos. of New Churches, p. 72.

DIPORHOSIS. n. s. [διπορῶσις, of διπορῶν, to make strait.] A surgical operation, by which crooked or distorted members are restored to their primitive and regular shape. Harris.

To DIP.† v. a. pret. dipped; particip. dipped, or dipt. [dippen, Dutch; bippan, Saxon; diupjan, Goth.]

1. To immerge; to put into any liquor.

The person to be baptized may be dipped in water; and such an immersion or dipping ought to be made thrice, according to the canon.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

Old Corineus compass'd thrice the crew,

And dipp'd an olive branch in holy dew,

Which thrice he sprinkled round, and thrice aloud

Invok'd the dead, and then dismiss'd the crowd. Dryden, En.

He turn'd a tyrant in his latter days,

And from the bright meridian where he stood,

Descending, dipp'd his hands in lovers' blood. Dryden, Fables.

The kindred arts shall in their praise conspire;

One dip the pencil, and one string the lyre.

Pope.

Now on fancy's easy wing convey'd,

The king descended to th' Elysian shade;

There in a dusky vale, where Lethe rolls,

Old Bavius sits to dip poetick souls.

Pope, Duicid.

So fishes rising from the main,

Can soar with moisten'd wings on high;

The moisture dry'd, they sink again,

And dip their wings again to fly.

Swift.

2. To moisten; to wet.

And thou not mortal, yet a cold shudd'ring dew

Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove

Speaks thunder.

Milton, Comus.

3. To be engaged in any affair.

When men are once dipt, what with the encouragements of sense, custom, facility, and shame of departing from what they have given themselves up to, they go on till they are stifled.

L'Estrange.

In Richard's time, I doubt, he was a little dipt in the rebellion of the commons.

Dryden, Fables.

4. To engage as a pledge: generally used for the first mortgage.

Be careful still of the main chance, my son;

Put out the principal in trusty hands,

Live on the use, and never dip thy lands.

Dryden, Pers.

To DIP. v. n.

1. To sink; to immerge.

We have snakes in our cups, and in our dishes; and whoever dips too deep will find death in the pot.

L'Estrange.

2. To enter; to pierce.

The vulture dipping in Prometheus' side,

His bloody beak with his torn liver dy'd.

Granville.

3. To enter slightly into any thing.

When I think all the repetitions are struck out in a copy, I sometimes find more upon dipping in the first volume.

Pope.

4. To take that which comes first; to choose by chance.

With what ill thoughts of Jove art thou possess'd?

Would'st thou prefer him to some man? Suppose

I dipp'd among the worst, and Staius chose? Dryden, Pers.

DIP.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Depression; the sinking or falling in of a surface; as, the depression or dip of the visible horizon; which denotes its sinking or dipping below the true horizontal plane; whether caused by some variation of the atmosphere, or by the different height of the observer's eye above the surface of the sea.

D I P

Chambers.

Great columns of stone hang down the face of some of these rocks almost perpendicularly, or with a very slight dip.

Pennant.

2. The act of taking that which comes first. This is used only in low languages.

DIPCHICK. n. s. [from dip and chick.] The name of a bird.

Dipchick is so named of his diving and littleness. Carew.
DIPETALOUS. adj. [dis and πτελον.] Having two flower-leaves.

DIPHTHONG. n. s. [διφθονγ.] A coalition of two vowels to form one sound; as vain, leaf, Caesar.

We see how many disputes the simple and ambiguous nature of vowels created among grammarians, and how it has begot the mistake concerning diphthongs: all that are properly so are syllables, and not diphthongs, as is intended to be signified by that word.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

Make a diphthong of the second eta and iota, instead of their being two syllables, and the objection is gone.

Pope.

DIPLOE. n. s. The inner plate or lamina of the skull.

DIPLOMA. n. s. [διπλωμα, Gr. diploma, Lat. diploma.] A letter or writing conferring some privilege, so called because they used formerly to be written on waxed tables, and folded together.

My present design is more relating to the nature of letters, than to the diploma or charters themselves.

Humph. Wanley to Dr. Smith, Anec. i. 80.

DIPLOMACY. n. s. [from diploma.]

1. A privileged state.

At a very early period in the diplomacy of humiliation, a gentleman was sent on an errand, of which, from the motive of it, whatever the event might be, we can never be ashamed.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

2. A body of envoys.

The foreign ministers were ordered to attend at this investiture of the directory; for so they call the managers of their burlesque government. The diplomacy, who were a sort of envoys, were quite awe-struck with "the pride, pomp, and circumstance" of this majestick senate!

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

DIPLOMA'TICK. adj. [Fr. diplomatique.]

1. Relating to the art of deciphering all old written characters and abbreviations.

One of the principal objects of the following work, is the illustration of what for near two centuries has been called the diplomatick science; the knowledge of which will enable us to form a proper judgement of the age and authenticity of manuscripts, charters, records, and other monuments of antiquity.

Astle on the Orig. and Prog. of Writing, Introd.

2. Respecting envoys and ambassadors, or the privileges belonging to them; and sometimes to others, in a publick capacity.

The ambassadors from the rights of man, and their admission into the diplomatick system, I hold to be a new era in this business.

Burke on French Affairs.

His lordship is a great member of the diplomatick body; he has of course all the fundamental treaties, which make the publick statute law of Europe, by heart.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

DIPPER. n. s. [from dip.] One that dips in the water.

The chief enemy was a dipper, Pharaoh; the first and last of kings that were so, as the Red Sea can witness; he could not away with Moses skilled in all the learning of the Egyptians, nor with eloquent Aaron.

Whitlock, Manners of the English.

In which number, I must be forced to reckon that doctor, who in a late equivocating treatise plausibly set aloft against the Dippers, diving the while himself with a more deep prelatical malignance against the present state and church-government, mentions with ignominy "the Tractate of Divorce."

D I R

Milton, Tristramchord.

Our townsmen, since of floods they must turn skippers, Will change religion too, and so turn dippers.

Cicero, Poms, &c. p. 18.

DIPPING Needle. n. s. A device which shows a particular property of the magnetick needle, so that, besides its polarity or verticity, which is its direction of altitude, or height above the horizon; when duly poised about an horizontal axis, it will always point to a determined degree of altitude, or elevation above the horizon, in this or that place respectively.

DIPSAS. n. s. [Latin, from διψαω, to thirst.] A serpent, whose bite produces the sensation of unquenchable thirst.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphibœna dire,
Cerastes horn'd, hydras, and ellops drear,
And dipsas.

Milton, P. L.

DIPTOE. n. s. [διπλωτα.] A noun consisting of two cases only.

Clark.

DIPTYCH. n. s. [διπτυχα, Lat. two leaves folded together.] A register of bishops and martyrs.

They had a lower degree of remembrance for bishops, and confessors, and all other eminent persons departed this life; whom they not only praised in orations at their funerals, but writ their names in their diptychs or two-leaved records: which contained, in one page, all the names of the living; in the other, the dead that were of note in the church.

Ep. Lloyd, Sermon. p. 19.

The commemoration of saints was made out of the diptychs of the church, as appears by multitudes of places in St. Austin.

Stillingfleet.

DIRE. adj. [dirus, Lat.] Dreadful; dismal; mournful; horrible; terrible; evil in a great degree.

Women fight,

To doff their dire distresses.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

More by intemperance die

In meats, and drinks, which on the earth shall bring

Discases dire, of which a monstrous crew

Before thee shall appear.

Milton, P. L.

Hydras, and gorgons, and chimeras dire.

Milton.

Or what the cross, dire-looking planet smites,

Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bites.

Dire was the tossing, deep the groans, despair

Tended the sick.

Milton, P. L.

Discord! dire sister of the slaughter'd pow'r,

Small at her birth, but rising ev'ry hour;

While scarce the skies her horrid head can bound,

She stalks on earth, and shakes the world around.

Pope.

DIRE'CT. adj. [directus; Lat.]

1. Strait, not crooked.

2. Not oblique.

The ships would move in one and the same surface; and consequently must needs encounter when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross lines.

Bentley.

3. [In astronomy.] Appearing to an eye on earth to move progressively through the zodiac; not retrograde.

Two geomantick figures were display'd,

Above his head, a warrior and a maid,

One when direct, and one when retrograde.

Dryden, Fab.

4. Not collateral, as the grandson succeeds his grand-sire in a direct line.

5. Apparently tending to some end, as in a strait line.

Such was as then the state of the king, as it was then by direct means to seek her. And such was the state of his captivated will, as he would delay no time of seeking her.

Stanley.

D I R

He that does this, will be able to see off all that is superfluous; he will see what is pertinent, what coherent, what is direct to, what slides by the question. Locke.

6. Open; not ambiguous.

There be that are in nature faithful and sincere, and plain and direct; not crafty and involved. Bacon.

7. Plain; express.

He no where, that I know, says it in direct words. Locke.

To DIRE'CT.† v. a. [old Fr. directer; Lat. dirigo, directum.]

1. To aim or drive in a strait line.

Two eagles from a mountain's height,
By Jove's command direct their rapid flight. Pope.

2. To point against as a mark.

The spear flew hissing through the middle space,
And pierc'd his throat, directed at his face. Dryden, Æneid.

3. To regulate; to adjust.

It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. Jer. x. 23.
Wisdom is profitable to direct. Eccles. x. 10.

ALL that is in a man's power, is to mind what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding; or else to direct and sort, and call in such as he desires. Locke.

4. To prescribe certain measure; to mark out a certain course.

He directeth it under the whole heavens, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth. Job, xxxvii. 3.

5. To order; to command: to direct is a softer term than to command.

DIRE'CTER.† n. s. [directeur, Fr. director, Lat.] See DIRECTOR.

1. One that directs; one that prescribes. Sherwood.
2. An instrument that serves to guide any manual operation.

DIRE'CTION. n. s. [directio, Lat.]

1. Aim at a certain point.

These men's opinions are not the product of judgement, or the consequence of reason; but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice, and without direction. Locke.

The direction of good works to a good end, is the only principle that distinguishes charity. Bp. Smalbridge.

2. Tendency of motion impressed by a certain impulse.

No particle of matter, nor any combination of particles, that is, no body can either move of itself, or of itself alter the direction of its motion. Chambers.

3. Order; command; prescription.

From the counsel that St. Jerome giveth Læta, of taking heed how she read the apocrypha; as also by the help of other learned men's judgements, delivered in like case, we may take direction. Hooker.

I put myself to thy direction. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The nobles of the people digged it by the direction of the law-giver. Numb. xxi. 18.

Men's passions and God's direction seldom agree. King Charles.

General directions for scholastic disputers, is never to dispute upon mere trifles. Watts.

4. Regularity; adjustment.

All nature is but art unknown to thee,
All chance, direction which thou canst not see. Pope.

DIRE'CTIVE. adj. [from direct.]

1. Having the power of direction.

A law therefore generally taken, is a directive rule unto goodness of operation. Hooker.

A power of command there is without all question, though there be some doubt in what faculty this command doth principally reside, whether in the will or the understanding. The true resolution is, that the directive command for counsel is in the understanding; and the applicative command, or empire, for putting in execution of what is directed, is in the will. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbs.

D I R

On the directive powers of the former, and the regularity of the latter, whereby it is capable of direction, depends the generation of all bodies. Grew.

2. Informing; shewing the way.

Nor visited by one directive ray,
From cottage streaming, or from airy hall. Thomson.

DIRE'CTLY. adv. [from direct.]

1. In a strait line; rectilincally.

The more a body is nearer to the eyes, and the more directly it is opposed to them, the more it is enlightened; because the light languishes and lessens the farther it removes from its proper source. Dryden, DuRoi.

There was no other place assigned to any of this matter, than that whereunto its own gravity bore it, which was only directly downwards, whereby it obtained that place in the globe which was just underneath. Woodward.

If the refracted ray be returned directly back to the point of incidence, it shall be refracted by the incident ray. Newton, Opticks.

2. Immediately; apparently; without circumlocution; without any long train of consequence.

Infidels being clean without the church, deny directly and utterly reject the very principles of Christianity, which hereticks embrace erroneously by misconstruction. Hooker.

No man hath hitherto been so impious, as plainly and directly to condemn prayer. Hooker.

By asserting the scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have unavoidably created to myself enemies in the papists directly, because they have kept the scripture from us what they could. Dryden, Pref. to Rel. Laici.

His work directly tends to raise sentiments of honour and virtue in his readers. Adison, Freeholder.

No reason can be assigned, why it is best for the world that God Almighty hath absolute power, which does not directly prove that no mortal man should have the like. Swift.

DIRE'CTNESS. n. s. [from direct.] Straitness; tendency to any point; the nearest way.

They argued from celestial causes only, the constant vicinity of the sun, and the directness of his rays; never suspecting that the body of the earth had so great an efficiency in the changes of the air. Bentley.

DIRE'CTOR. n. s. [director, Lat.]

1. One that has authority over others; a superintendant; one that has the general management of a design or work.

Himself stood director over them, with nodding or stamping, shewing he did like or dislike those things he did not understand. Sidney.

In all affairs thou sole director. Swift.

2. A rule; an ordinance.

Common forms were not design'd
Directors to a noble mind. Swift.

3. An instructor; one who shews the proper methods of proceeding.

They are glad to use counsellors and directors in all their dealings of weight, as contracts, testaments. Hooker.

4. One who is consulted in cases of conscience.

I am her director and her guide in spiritual affairs. Dryden.

5. One appointed to transact the affairs of a trading company.

What made directors cheat in south-sea year? Pope.

6. An instrument in surgery by which the hand is guided in its operation.

The manner of opening with a knife, is by sliding it on a director, the groove of which prevents its being mis-guided. Sharp, Surg.

DIRECTORIAL.† adj. [from director.]

1. Giving direction; enacting rule.

The emperor's power in the collective body, or the diet, is not directorial, but executive. Guthrie, Germany.

2. Respecting a government of France, called the directory.

When this defect was to be weighed against the editorial conquest, merely as an object of a value at market, the principle of better became perfectly ridiculous.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

DIRECTORY.† n. s. [from director.] The book which the factious preachers published in the rebellion for the direction of their sect in acts of worship.

As to the ordinance concerning the directory, we cannot consent to the taking away of the book of common prayer.

Oxford Reasons against the Covenant.

Under the directory there will be as different religions, and as different desires, and as differing forms, as there are several varieties of men and manners under one half of heaven.

Bp. Taylor on Estemp. Prayer.

The king's body [Ch. I.] being by the banners set down near the place of burial, the bishop of London stood ready with the service-book in his hands to have performed his last duty to the king his master, according to the order or form for the burial of the dead, set forth in the Book of Common-Prayer, which the lords likewise desired; but would not be suffered by Col. Whitecote the governour, by reason of the directory, to which (said he) he and others were to be conformable.

Sir T. Herbert's Memoirs.

DIRECTORY.* n. s. [old Fr. directoire, a rule; Lat. directio.] A direction; a guide. This sense, of which Dr. Johnson takes no notice, is of higher antiquity than that which he assigns to the book of the factious preachers. It is in the old vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar.

But by the way this example of Christ's choosing illiterate men to this weighty function of the ministry, is no more our directory to follow, than it is to choose such as we (if possible) knew Judasses as he did.

Whitlock, Manners of the English.

The bishop being writ to, to send an account out of the Casuistical directories for confessors, about the sins proper for kings to be interrogated in confession, returned this answer.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 222.

DIRECTORY.* n. s. The name of the democratick French government in modern times.

The foreign ministers were ordered to attend at this investiture of the directory; — for so they call the managers of their burlesque government.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

DIRECTORY.* adj. [Fr. directoire.]

I. Guiding.

This needle, touched with the stone, and directing towards the north and south, the mariners, as the magnetical philosophers, call their directory needle.

Gregory's Posthum. (1650.) p. 281.

2. Commanding.

Every law may be said to consist of several parts: one declaratory, whereby the rights to be observed, and the wrongs to be eschewed, are clearly laid down; another directory, whereby the subject is enjoined to observe those rights, and abstain from the commission of those wrongs. Blackstone.

DIRECTRESS.* n. s. [from director.] She who directs or governs.

Our reason being the noblest principle of our nature, that by which we are raised above the level of brutes, yea by which we are allied to angels, and do border upon God himself, ought upon that account, to be submitted to, as the supreme regent and directress of all our other powers, and to be looked upon as the rule of our will, and the guide of all our animal motions. Scott, Christian Life, i. 3.

DIRECTRIX.* n. s. [from director.] She who manages or directs.

Every part of the body studying as it were to pay [by adorning itself to its best advantage] some tribute of comeliness, as an homage to the face; which is not only the queen and sovereign of human and visible beauty, but the regent and directrix of the whole body's culture, motion, and welfare.

Bp. Taylor, Art of Hands. p. 24.

DIREFUL.* adj. [This word is frequent among the poets, but has been censured as not analogical: all other words compounded with full consisting of a substantive and full, as dreadful, or full of dread; joyful, or full of joy. So far Dr. Johnson. I must add, that good writers, besides the poets use this word; as the fine sentence of Bishop Richardson, and the remarks of Dr. Addison and Bishop Hall, now added to the examples, shew. Dr. Addison's use of the word carries the etymology to the Latin diræ, curses; and full, i. e. full of curses; which removes the want of analogy, which Dr. Johnson states. But all other words compounded with full, do not exist of a substantive and full; witness resentful, admitted by Dr. Johnson himself into his dictionary.] Dire; dreadful; dismal.

Point of spear it never piercen would,
Ne dint of direful sword, divide the substance could.

Spenser, F. Q.

But yet at last, whereas the direful fiend,
She saw not stir, off shaking vain affright,
She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end;
Then God she pray'd, and think'd her faithful knight.

Spenser, F. Q.

Direful hap betide that hated wretch
That makes us wretched by the death of thee. Shakespeare.
The dehortation in this case is urgent; the accusation dreadful; the sin itself direful.

Bp. Richardson on the Old Test. (1655.) p. 302.

This notice of the ceremony is very agreeable to the execratory, which is now used by them, [the Jews:] wherein they profoundly curse the Christian; desiring that God would smite them as he did the first born of Egypt. And though this direful prayer is not found in the Liturgy printed at Venice, yet I am assured by a good author, that it is extant in the Macthor of the Cracovian impression.

L. Addison, State of the Jews, (1675.) p. 179.

The holy prophet predicts and foretels things so direful to God's people.

Bp. Bull's Works, ii. 716.

The voice of God himself speaks in the heart of men, whether they understand it or no; and by secret intimations gives the sinner a foretaste of that direful cup, which he is like to drink more deeply of hereafter.

Smith.

I curs'd the direful author of my woes:
'Twas told again, and thence my ruin rose.
Achilles' wrath, to Greeks the direful spring
Of woes unnumber'd, heavenly goddess, sing.

Dryden.

Pope.

DIREFULNESS.* n. s. [from direful.] Dreadfulness; horreur.

The direfulness of this pestilence is more emphatically set forth in these few words, than in forty such odes as Sprat's on the plague at Athens. Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

DIREMPTION.* n. s. [Lat. diremptio.] Separation.

Cockeram.

This match is only capable of a late, but much wished repentance on the offender's part, and a just diremption on the part of the judges.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

DIRENESS. n. s. [from dire.] Dismalness; horror; hideousness.

Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

DIREPTION.* n. s. [direptio, Latin.] The act of plundering.

DIRGE.† n. s. [This is not a contraction of the Latin dirige, in the popish hymn dirige grossus meos, as some pretend; but from the Teutonick dyrke, laudare, to praise and extol. Whence it is possible their dyrke, and our dirge, was a laudatory song to commemorate and applaud the dead. Cowel. Bacon apparently derives it from dirige.

Serenius deduces it from the Goth. dyr, dear. But see DIRIGE.] A mournful ditty; a song of lamentation.

Th' imperial jointress of this warlike state,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife.

Mean while the body of Richard, after many indignities and reproaches, the diriges and obsequies of the common people towards tyrants, was obscurely buried.

You from above shall hear each day,
One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay,
These your own anthems shall become,
Your lasting epicedium.

All due measures of her mourning kept,
Did office at the dirge, and by infection wept.

DIRIGE. * n. s. Whether from the first word of the Latin hymn, "dirige gressus meos," or not; certain it is, that this is our old word; notwithstanding the remark of Cowel, which Dr. Johnson assigns to Verstegan, under DIRGE. It is dyryge in the very old vocabulary, Vulg. Hormanni. Chaucer, Bale, and Bacon, and the compilers of our Homilies, write this funeral expression, dirige.

DIRIGENT. adj. [dirigens, Lat.]

The dirigent line in geometry is that along which the line descript is carried in the generation of any figure.

DIRK. n. s. [an Erse word.] A kind of dagger used in the Highlands of Scotland.

In vain thy hungry mountaineers
Come forth in all their warlike geers,
The shield, the pistol, dirk, and dagger,
In which they daily wont to swagger.

TO DIRKE. † v. a. To spoil; to ruin. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says. In truth, it never was used in this sense; and in the passage, which he cites from Spenser, it means to darken, to obscure; in imitation of Chaucer, who uses dercked for darkened, in his translation of Boethius.

Thy waste bigness but cumberes the ground,
And dirkes the beauties of my blossoms round.

DARK. * adj. The old northern word for dark.

Day that was id' wightly past,
And now at earst the dirke night doe haste.

DIRT. † n. s. [dyrt, Dutch; Icel. drit; Goth. dirt. The Icelandick word means excrement; in which sense our word is used, though unnoticed by Dr. Johnson, long before the application of it in those examples which he has given to mud.]

1. Excrement.

The fat closed upon the blade, so that he could not draw the dagger out of his belly; and the dirt came out, [in the margin, came out at the fundament.]

2. Mud; filth; mire; any thing that sticks to the clothes or body.

They gilding dirt in noble verse
Rustick philosophy rehearse.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, to heap together a little dirt, that shall bury them in the end.

The sea rises as high as ever, though the great heaps of dirt it brings along with it are apt to choke up the shallows.

Mark by what wretched steps their glory grows;
From dirt and sea-weed as proud Venice rose,
In each how guilt and greatness equal ran,
And all that rais'd the hero sunk the man.

Is yellow dirt the passion of thy life?
Look but on Gripus, or on Gripus' wife.

3. Meanness; sordidness.

TO DIRT. v. a. [from the noun.] To foul; to besmirch; to make filthy; to bedaub; to soil; to pollute; to nasty.

All company is like a dog, who dirts those most whom he loves best.

DIRT-PIE. n. s. [dirt and pie.] Forms moulded by children of clay, in imitation of pastry.

Thou set'st thy heart upon that which has newly left off making of dirt-pies, and is but preparing itself for a greensickness.

DIRTILY. † adv. [from dirty.]

1. Nastily; foully; filthily.

Take care not to eat awkwardly or durtily.

2. Meanly; sordidly; shamefully.

Such gold as that wherewithal

Chimiques from each mineral

Are durtily and desperately gull'd.

DIRTINESS. n. s. [from dirty.]

1. Nastiness; filthiness; foulness.

2. Meanness; baseness; sordidness.

DIRTY. adj. [from dirt.]

1. Foul; nasty; filthy.

Thy Dol and Helen of thy noble thoughts

Is in base durance, and contagious prison,

Haul'd thither by mechanic, dirty hands.

2. Sullied; clouded; not elegant.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the sweet taste into an oily one.

3. Mean; base; despicable.

Such employments are the diseases of labour, and the rust of time which it contracts not by lying still, but by dirty employment.

Marriages would be made up upon more natural motives than mere dirty interests, and increase of riches without measure or end.

They come at length to grow sots and epicures, mean in their discourses, and dirty in their practices.

TO DIRTY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To foul; to soil.

The lords strutted dived generously, and never used to dirty their fingers with pen, ink, and counters.

2. To disgrace; to scandalize.

DIRUPTION. n. s. [diruptio, Lat.]

1. The act of bursting or breaking.

2. The state of bursting, or breaking.

DIS. An inseparable particle used in composition, implying commonly a privative or negative signification of the word to which it is joined; as to arm, to disarm; to join, to disjoin. It is borrowed from des, used by the French and Spaniards in the same sense; as desnouer, to untie; desterrar, to banish; from the Latin de; as struo, to build; destruo, to destroy.

DISABILITY. n. s. [from disable.]

1. Want of power to do any thing; weakness; impotence.

Our consideration of creatures, and attention unto scriptures, are not in themselves things of like disability to breed or beget faith.

Many withdrew themselves out of pure faintness, and disability to attend the conclusion.

He that knows most of himself, knows least of his knowledge, and the exercised understanding is conscious of its disability.

The ability of mankind does not lie in the impotency or disabilities of brutes.

2. Want of proper qualifications for any purpose; legal impediment.

A suit is commenced in a temporal court for an inheritance, and the defendant pleads in disability, that the plaintiff is a bastard. Ayliffe's Paragon.

The disadvantage which the dissenters at present lie under, of a disability to receive church preferments, will be easily remedied by the repeal of the test. Swift.

To DISABLE. v. a. [dis and able.]

1. To deprive of force; to weaken; to disqualify for any act.

The invasion and rebellion did not only disable this king to be a conqueror, but deprived him both of his kingdom and life. Davies on Ireland.

Nor so is overcome Satan, whose fall from heav'n, a deadlier bruise Disabled not to give thee thy death's wound. Milton.

A Christian's life is a perpetual exercise, a wrestling and warfare, for which sensual pleasure disables him, by yielding to that enemy with whom he must strive. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

2. To hinder from action: used of things.

I have known a great fleet disabled for two months, and thereby lose great occasions by an indisposition of the admiral. Temple.

3. To impair; to diminish.

I have disabled mine estate, By shewing something a more swelling port Than my faint means would grant continuance. Shakspeare.

4. To deprive of usefulness or efficacy.

Farewel, Monsieur Traveller; look you lisp, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country. Shakspeare.

Your days I will alarm, I'll haunt your nights, And worse than age disable your delights. Dryden.

5. To exclude as wanting proper qualifications.

I will not disable any for proving a scholar, nor yet dissemble that I have seen many happily forced upon the course, to which by nature they seemed much indisposed. Wotton.

DISABLEMENT. n. s. [from To disable.]

1. Legal impediment.

The penalty of the refusal thereof was turned into a disablement to take any promotion, or to exercise any charge. Bacon, Observ. on a Libel in 1592.

2. Weakness.

This is only an interruption of the acts, rather than any disablement of the [intellectual judging] faculty; which, as soon as the present passion is over, comes to debate and judge of all objects presented to it, as perfectly as it did before. South, Sermon v. 182.

To DISABUSE. v. a. [old Fr. desabuser, "to disabuse;" Cotgrave.] To set free from a mistake; to disentangle from a fallacy; to set right; to undeceive.

That last trump when it begins to sound, will have the faculty thus to make all men wise, to disabuse, and inspire the whole world with a new sense. Hammond, Sermon viii.

The imposture and fallacy of our senses impose not only on common heads, but even more refined mercuries, who have the advantages of an improved reason to disabuse you. Glanville, Scepri.

Those teeth fair Lyce must not show, If she would bite her lovers; though Like birds they stoop at seeming grapes, Are disabus'd, when first she gapes. Waller.

If by simplicity you meant a general defect in those that profess angling, I hope to disabuse you. Walton's Angler.

Chaos of thoughts and passion, all confus'd; Still by himself abus'd, or disabus'd. Pope.

To DISACCOMMODATE. v. a. [old Fr. desaccommoder, "to disaccommodate;" Cotgrave.] To put to inconvenience.

I hope this will not disaccommodate you.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 192.

DISACCOMMODATION. n. s. [dis and accommodation.]

The state of being unfit or unprepared.

Devastations have happened in some places more than in others, according to the accommodation or disaccommodation of them to such calamities. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To DISACCORD. v. n. [old Fr. desaccorder.] To refuse consent.

She was daughter to a noble lord Which dwelt thereby, who sought her to affy

To a great peer; but she did disaccord,

Ne could her liking to his love apply. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 7.

To DISACCUSTOM. v. a. [dis and accustom.] To destroy the force of habit by disuse or contrary practice.

To DISACKNOWLEDGE. v. a. [dis and acknowledge.] Not to acknowledge.

The manner of denying Christ's deity here prohibited, was by words and oral expressions verbally to deny and disacknowledge it. South.

To DISACQUAINT. v. a. [old Fr. desaccointer.] To break or dissolve acquaintance.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

DISACQUAINTANCE. n. s. [dis and acquaintance.] Disuse of familiarity.

Conscience, by a long neglect of, and disacquaintance with itself, contracts an inveterate rust or soil. South.

To DISADORN. v. a. [dis and adorn.] To deprive of ornament or beauty.

He saw grey hairs begin to spread, Deform his beard, and disadorn his head.

Congreve, Transl. of Homer's Hymn to Venus.

To DISADVANCE. v. a. [old Fr. desavancer, "to hinder, to cast backward;" Cotgrave. Spenser writes this word also disavance.] To stop; to check.

Which th' other seeing gan his course relent, And vaunted spear oftsoons to disadvantage.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 7.

To DISADVANCE. v. n. To keep back; to halt. In the following example, the modern editor of Fletcher's fine poem has unwarrantably converted disadvantage into "cease t' advance."

For when they saw their Lord's bright cognizance

Shine in his face, soon did they disadvantage,

And some unto him kneel, and some about him dance.

G. Fletcher, Christ's Tramp, P. ii.

DISADVANTAGE. n. s. [old Fr. desavantage.]

1. Loss; injury to interest: as, he sold to disadvantage.

Truth, unseasonably and unmannerly proposed, comes with a disadvantage; and is in danger to miscarry through the unskillfulness of the proposer. South, Sermon vii. 146.

2. Diminution of any thing desirable, as credit, fame, honour.

Chaucer, in many things resembled Ovid, and that with no disadvantage on the side of the modern author. Dryden.

The most shining merit goes down to posterity with disadvantage, when it is not placed by writers in its proper light. Addison, Freeholder.

Those parts already published give reason to think, that the Iliad will appear with no disadvantage to that immortal poem. Addison, Freeholder.

Their testimony will not be of much weight to its disadvantage, since they are liable to the common objection of condemning what they did not understand. Swift.

3. A state not prepared for defence.

No fort can be so strong,

Ne fleshly breast can armed be so sound,

But will at last be won with batt'ry long,

Or unawares at disadvantage found.

Spenser, F. Q.

To DISADVA'NTAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To injure in interest of any kind.

All other violences are so far from advancing Christianity, that they extremely weaken and disadvantage it.

Decay of Piety.

DISADVA'NTAGEABLE. adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to profit; producing loss. A word not used.

In clearing of a man's estate, he may as well hurt himself in being too sudden, as in letting it run on too long; for hasty selling is commonly as disadvantageable as interest.

Bacon, Ess. of Expeience.

DISADVANTA'GEOUS. adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to interest; contrary to convenience; unfavourable.

A multitude of eyes will narrowly inspect every part of an eminent man, consider him nicely in all views, and not be a little pleased when they have taken him in the worst and most disadvantageous light.

Addison, Spectator.

DISADVANTA'GEOUSLY. adv. [from disadvantageous.]

In a manner contrary to interest or profit; in a manner not favourable.

An approving nod or smile serves to drive you on, and make you display yourselves more disadvantageously.

Government of the Tongue.

DISADVANTA'GEOUSNESS. n. s. [from disadvantageous.] Contrariety to profit; inconvenience; mischief; loss.

This disadvantageousness of figure he [Pope] converted, as Lord Bacon expresses it, into a perpetual spur to rescue and deliver himself from scorn, and to watch the weakness of others, that he might have something to repay them.

Tyler, Hist. Rhaps. on Pope, p. 5.

DISADVENTURE.* n. s. [old Fr. desadventure; Cotgrave; Span. desventura; Ital. disavventura. Chaucer and Spenser write this word disaventure.] Misfortune.

Experience hath oft proved, that man in best fortune, and such as esteem themselves most secure, even then fall soonest into disadventure.

Raleigh, Arts of Empire, p. 176.

DISADVENTUROUS.* adj. [old Fr. desaventurous. Spenser writes it disaventurous in the following example; though Dr. Johnson has printed it disadventurous.] Unhappy; prosperous.

Now he hath left you here,

To be the record of his rueful loss,

And of my doleful disadventurous deare.

Spenser, F. Q. b. vi. 48.

To DISAFFE'CT. v. a. [dis and affect.]

1. To fill with discontent; to discontent; to make less faithful or zealous.

They had attempted to disaffect and discontent his majesty's late army.

Clarendon.

2. To dislike; to disdain.

Not that any force is allowed either way, to be used towards the daughter; whether to continue her in a constrained virginity, or to cast her against her mind upon a disaffected match.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

Making plain the truth, which my charity persuades me the most part of them disaffect, only because it hath not been well represented to them.

Chillingworth, Rel. of Prot. Dedie.

3. To disorder.

If the more classical notion of the word take place, it disaffects the bowels, entangles and distorts the entrails.

Hammond, Sermon. xxiii.

DISAFFE'CTED. part. adj. [from disaffect.] Not disposed to zeal or affection. Usually applied to those who are enemies to the government.

By denying civil worship to the emperor's statues, which the custom then was to give, they were proceeded against as disaffected to the emperor.

Stillingfleet.

DISAFFE'CTEDLY. adv. [from disaffected.] After a disaffected manner.

DISAFFE'CTEDNESS. n. s. [from disaffected.] The quality of being disaffected.

DISAFFECTION. n. s. [from disaffect.]

1. Dislike; ill-will.

In making laws, princes must have regard to the public dispositions, to the affections and disaffections of the people, and must not introduce a law with public scandal and displeasure.

Hp. Taylor, Holy Living.

2. Want of zeal for the government; want of ardour for the reigning prince.

In this age, every thing disliked by those who think with the majority, is called disaffection.

Swift.

3. Disorder; bad constitution: in a physical sense.

The disease took its original merely from the disaffection of the part, and not from the prececity of the humours.

Wiseeman.

DISAFFECTIONATE.* adj. [dis and affectionate.] Not disposed to affection or zeal.

They, according to that climate, were found damnably corrupt, and disaffectionate to the Turkish affairs.

Blond, Voyage into the Levant, (1650.) p. 99.

He [Milton] had been tormented by a beautiful but disaffectionate and disobedient wife.

Hayley, Life of Milton.

To DISAFFIRM.* v. a. [dis and affirm.] To contradict.

Neither doth Glanvil or Bracton disaffirm the antiquity of the reports of the law.

Davies, Preface to Reports.

DISAFFIRMANCE. n. s. [dis and affirm.] Confutation; negation.

That kind of reasoning which reduceth the opposite conclusion to something that is apparently absurd, is a demonstration in disaffirmance of any thing that is affirmed.

Hale.

To DISAFFOREST. v. a. [dis and forest.] To throw open to common purposes; to reduce from the privileges of a forest to the state of common ground.

The commissioners of the treasury moved the king to disafforest some forests of his, explaining themselves of such forests as lay out of the way, not near any of the king's houses.

Baron.

How happy's he, which hath due place assign'd
To his beasts; and disafforested his mind?

Donne.

To DISAGREE. v. n. [dis and agree.]

1. To differ; not to be the same.

The mind clearly and infallibly perceives all distinct ideas to disagree; that is, the one not to be the other.

Locke.

2. To differ; not to be of the same opinion.

Why both the bands in worship disagree,

And some adore the flow'r, and some the tree.

Dryden.

3. To be in a state of opposition: followed by from or with, before the opposite.

It containeth many improprieties, disagreeing almost in all things from the true and proper description.

Brown.

Strange it is, that they reject the plainest sense of scripture, because it seems to disagree with what they call reason.

Atterbury.

DISAGREE'ABLE. adj. [from disagree.]

1. Contrary; unsuitable.

Some demon, an enemy to the Greeks, had forced her to a conduct disagreeable to her sincerity.

Broom.

2. Unpleasing; offensive.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, either agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states.

Locke.

DISAGREEABLENESS. n. s. [from disagreeable.]

1. Unsuitableness; contrariety.

2. Unpleasantness; offensiveness.

A father will hug and embrace his beloved son for all the dirt and foulness of his cloaths; the dearness of the person easily apologising for the disagreeableness of the habit. South.

DISAGREEABLY. adv. [from disagreeable.]

1. Unsuitably.

2. Unpleasantly.

It is a frequent complaint that tar water is made of bad tar, being of a reddish colour, sweetish or disagreeably insipid.

Bp. Berkeley.

For me, I passed the end of May and all June in Kent, not disagreeably. Gray, Letters.

DISAGREEMENT. n. s. [from disagree.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; diversity; not identity; not likeness.

These carry such plain and evident notes and characters, either of disagreement or affinity with one another, that the several kinds of them are easily distinguished. Woodward.

2. Difference of opinion; contrariety of sentiments.

They seemed one to cross another as touching their several opinions about the necessity of sacraments, whereas in truth their disagreement is not great. Hooker.

To DISALLIEGE. v. a. [dis and liege.] I have found this expressive word only in Milton, by whom it was probably coined.] To alienate from allegiance.

What greater dividing than, by a pernicious and hostile peace, to disalliege a whole feudary kingdom from the ancient dominion of England?

Milton, Observ. on the Art. of Peace betw. E. of Orm. and the Irish.

To DISALLOW. v. a. [dis and allow.]

1. To deny authority to any.

When, said she,

Were those first councils disallow'd by me?

Or where did I at sure tradition strike,

Provided still it were apostolick. Dryden, Hind and Panther.

2. To consider as unlawful; not to permit.

Their usual kind of disputing sheweth, that they do not disallow only these Romish ceremonies which are unprofitable, but count all unprofitable which are Romish. Hooker.

3. To censure by some posterior act.

It was known that the most eminent of those who professed his own principles, publicly disallow'd his proceedings. Swift.

4. To censure; not to justify.

There is a secret, inward foreboding fear, that some evil or other will follow the doing of that which a man's own conscience disallows him in. South.

To DISALLOW. v. n. To refuse permission; not to grant; not to make or suppose lawful.

God doth in converts, being married, allow continuance with infidels, and yet disallow that the faithful, when they are free, should enter into bonds of wedlock with such. Hooker.

DISALLOWABLE. adj. [from disallow.] Not allowable; not to be suffered.

Neutrality is always a thing dangerous and disallowable, because it offendeth all parties. Raleigh, Acts of Empire, p. 126.

DISALLOWANCE. n. s. [from disallow.] Prohibition.

Nothing is more ordinary, or less obnoxious to disallowance.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

God accepts of a thing suitable for him to receive, and for us to give, where he does not declare his refusal and disallowance of it. South.

To DISALLY. v. a. [dis and ally.] To make an improper alliance.

If any of these, or all the Timnian bride
Had not so soon prefer'd
Thy paramour, worthless to thee compar'd,
Successor in thy bed;
Nor both so loosely disallied
Their nuptials.

Milton, S. A.

To DISANCHOR. v. a. [old Fr. desanerer, "to weigh anchor and be gone," Cotgrave.] To drive a ship from its anchor.

DISANGE'LIC. adj. [dis and angelical.] Not angelical; not suiting the nature or dignity of angels.

You are not then of the opinion of that learned casuist, returned I, who accounts for the shame attending these pleasures of the sixth sense, as he is pleas'd to call them, from their disangelical nature. Copentry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

To DISANIMATE. v. a. [old Fr. desanimer.]

1. To deprive of life.

2. To discourage; to deject: to depress.

The presence of a king engenders love amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends, as it disanimates his enemies.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He was confounded and disanimated at his presence, and added, How can the servant of my lord talk with my lord?

Boyle, Seraphick Love.

DISANIMATION. n. s. [from disanimate.] Privation of life.

They cannot in reason retain that apprehension after death, as being affections which depend on life, and depart upon disanimation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To DISANNU'. v. a. [dis and annul.] This word is formed contrarily to analogy, by those who, not knowing the meaning of the word annul, intended to form a negative sense by the needless use of the negative particle. It ought therefore to be rejected as ungrammatical and barbarous.] To annul; to deprive of authority; to vacate; to make null; to make void; to nullify.

The Jews ordinances for us to resume, were to check our Lord himself, which hath disannu'd them. Hooker.

That gave him power of disannulling of laws, and disposing of men's fortunes and estates, and the like points of absolute power; being in themselves harsh and odious. Bacon.

To be in both worlds full,

Is more than God was, who was hungry here:

Wouldst thou his laws of fasting disannul?

Wilt thou my judgements disannul? Deane.

My equal rule, to clear thyself of blame?

Herbert.

Sandys.

DISANU'LLER. n. s. [from disannul.] One who makes null, or puts down; one who deprives.

Another, to her everlasting fame, erected

Two ale-houses of ease; the quarter-sessions

Running against her roundly; in which business

Two of the disannullers lost their night-caps.

Beaum. and Fl. Tamer tamed.

DISANNU'LLING. n. s. [from disannul.] The act of making void.

There is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof.

Heb. vii. 18.

DISANNU'LEMENT. n. s. [from disannul.] The act of making void.

To DISANO'INT. v. a. [dis and anoint.] To invalidate consecration by unction.

After they have juggled and paltered with the world, bandied and borne arms against their king, divested him, disanointed him, may cursed him all over in their pulpits, and their pamphlets, to the engaging of sincere and real men beyond what is possible or honest to retreat from, not only turn revolvers from those principles, which only could at first move them, but lay the stain of disloyalty, and worse, on those proceedings, which are the necessary consequences of their own former actions. Milton, Ten. of Kings and Magistrates.

To DISAPPA'EL. v. a. [old Fr. desapareiller.] To disrobe.

Drink disappears the soul, and is the betrayer of the mind.

Junius, Sin Stigmatised, (1635), p. 82.

To DISAPPEAR. v. n. [disparoitre. Fr.] To be lost to view; to vanish out of sight; to fly; to go away.

She disappear'd, and left me dark! I walk'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore. Milton, P. L.

When the night and winter disappear,
The purple morning rising with the year,
Salutes the Spring. Dryden.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

Criticks I saw, that others' names deface,
And fix their own with labour in their place;
Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,
Or disappear'd, and left the first behind. Pope.

DISAPPEARANCE. * n. s. [from disappear.] An end of appearance.

If we look into the bulk of our species, they are such as are not likely to be remembered a moment after their disappearance. Addison, Spect. No. 317.

DISAPPEARING. * n. s. Cessation of appearance.

Ninus, we may imagine, thought to provide a remedy against the frequent absences and disappearings of the heavenly bodies, by appointing a medium of adoration to them which might be always at hand. Cowley, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.

To DISAPPOINT. * v. a. [old Fr. disappointer.]

1. To defeat of expectation; to balk; to hinder from something expected.

The superior Being can defeat all his designs, and disappoint all his hopes. Tillotson.

Whilst the champion, with redoubled might,
Strikes home the jav'lin, his retiring foe
Shrinks from the wound, and disappoints the blow. Addison.

There's nothing like surprising the rogues: how will they be disappointed, when they hear that thou has prevented their revenge? Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

We are not only tortured by the reproaches which are offered us, but are disappointed by the silence of men when it is unexpected, and humbled even by their praises. Addison.

2. It has of before the thing lost by disappointment.

The Janitaries, disappointed by the bassas of the spoil, received of the bounty of Solyman a great largess. Knolles.

3. To deprive, or bereave, of any thing. Cotgrave, under the old French verb, gives "to deprive of authority," as one of the explanations. In the following passage, the speaker is deprived of the appointments or preparations for death, as confession, absolution, &c. See the 4th sense of To APPOINT.

Thus was I
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousell'd, disappointed, unanel'd. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

DISAPPOINTMENT. n. s. [from disappoint.] Defeat of hopes; miscarriage of expectations.

It is impossible for us to know what are calamities, and what are blessings: how many accidents have passed for misfortunes, which have turned to the welfare and prosperity of the persons in whose lot they have fallen? How many disappointments have, in their consequences, saved a man from ruin? Spectator.

If we hope for things, of which we have not thoroughly considered the value, our disappointment will be greater than our pleasure in the fruition of them. Addison, Spectator.

DISAPPROBATION. n. s. [dis and approbation.] Censure; condemnation; expression of dislike.

He was obliged to publish his letters, to shew his disapprobation of the publishing of others. Pope.

DISAPPROVAL. * n. s. [from disapprove.] A word, like approval, not common; but which has been used, I think, in modern times, for disapprobation.

To DISAPPROVE. v. a. [disapprove. Fr.]

1. To dislike; to censure.

I reason'd much, alas! but more I lov'd;
Sent and recall'd, ordain'd and disprov'd. Prior.

Without good breeding, truth is disapproved;

That only makes superior sense below'd. Pope.

2. To reject as disliked; not to confirm by concurrence.

A project for a treaty of barrier with the States was transmitted hither from Holland, and was disapproved of by our courts. Swift.

DISARD. * n. s. [byrd, byrig, Sax. a fool, Skinner; diseur, Fr. Junius.] A prattler; a boasting talker.

This word is inserted both by Skinner and Junius; but I do not remember it, Dr. Johnson says. The word, however, is frequent in Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, and occurs in the Homilies of our Church. It is usually written dizard.

Shall I be such an idiot, and dizard, to suffer every man to speak upon me what they list?

Homilies, B. 1. Against Contention.

This progress of melancholy you shall easily observe in them that have been so affected; they go smiling to themselves at first, at length they laugh out; at first solitary; at last they can endure no company; or if they do, they are now dizards, past sense and shame. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 196.

How like a dizard, a fool, an ass, he looks; how like a clown he behaves! Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 608.

To DISARM. v. a. [disarmer, Fr.]

1. To spoil or divest of arms; to deprive of arms,

An order was made by both houses for disarming all the Papists in England. Clarendon.

I am still the same,
By different ways still moving to one fame;
And by disarming you, I now do more
To save the town, than arming you before. Dryden.

2. It has of before the arms taken away.

They would be immediately disarmed of their great magazine of artillery. Locke.

DISARMER. * n. s. [from disarm.] One who deprives another of arms.

It is not imaginable how so much learning and abilities, as this disarmer is believed to have, should admit so great a mixture of rudeness and scurrility. Hammond's Works, ii. 62.

DISARMING. * n. s. [from disarm.] Deprivation of arms.

All the scoffings, and revilings, which were thought necessary by S. W. for the disarming of schism.

Hammond's Works, li. 63.

To DISARRANGE. * v. a. [old Fr. desarranger, "to unrank, disorder, disarray;" Cotgrave.] To unsettle. This word is of no great age in our language; but I conceive it to be of earlier usage than in the example of T. Warton which has been remarked to me.

This circumstance disarranges all our established ideas.

Warton.

DISARRANGEMENT. * n. s. [old Fr. desarrangement.]

Disorder; confusion.

How, I pray, is it possible that the mere disarrangement of the parts of matter should perform this; when it hath been shewn absolutely impossible, that any arrangement of them should perform such an effect?

A. Barter on the Soul, (1737,) li. 137.

Her glittering turrets rise, upbearing high,
(Fantastick disarrangement) on the roof
Large growth of what may seem the sparkling trees. Cowper, Task, B. v.

To DISARRAY. * v. a. [old Fr. desarrayer.]

1. To undress any one; to divest of clothes.

So, as she bad, the witch they disarray'd. Spenser, F. Q.
Now night is come, now soon her disarray,
Aid in her bed her lay. Spenser, Epithal.

2. To discomfit; to rout; to overthrow. [old Fr. desarrayer.]

O'er the necks

Thou drov'st of whining Angels disarray'd. Milton, P. L.DISARRAY. † *n. s.*1. Disorder; confusion; loss of the regular order of battle. [old Fr. desarroy.]He returned towards the river, to prevent such danger as the disarray, occasioned by the narrowness of the bridge, might cast upon them. Hayward.Disarray and shameful rout ensue.

And force is added to the fainting crew. Dryden, Fables.

2. Undress. [from dis and array.]And him behind a wicked hag did stalk,
In ragged robes, and filthily disarray. Spenser, F. Q. ii. iv. 4.DISASSIDU'ITY. † n. s. Absence of care or attention.The Cecilians kept him back; as very well knowing that, upon every little absence of disassiduity, he should be subject to take cold at his back.

Wotton, Parall. E. of Ess. and D. of Buck.

He came in, and went out; and, through disassiduity, drew the curtain between himself and the sight of her grace.

Sir R. Naunton, Fragm. Regalia.

To DISSASSO'CIATE. † v. a. [old Fr. desassocier, "to disassociate, break company, or separate friends;" Cotgrave.] To disunite. See To DISSOCIATE.As if our mind had not other hours enough to do her business, without disassociating herself from the body in that little space which she needeth for her necessity.

Florio's Transl. of Montaigne's Ess. (1613,) p. 630.

DISA'STER. n. s. [desastre, Fr.]

1. The blast or stroke of an unfavourable planet.

Stars shone with trains of fire, dews of blood fall;

Disasters veil'd the sun; and the moist star,
Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse. Shakespeare.

2. Misfortune; grief; mishap; misery; calamity.

This day black omens threat the brightest fair,
That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care,
Some dire disaster, or by force or slight;
But what, or where, the fates have wrap'd in night. Pope.To DISA'STER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To blast by the stroke of an unfavourable star.

Al, chaste bed of mine, said she, which never heretofore couldst accuse me of one defiled thought, how canst thou now receive that *disaster*ed changling? Sidney.

2. To afflict; to mischief.

These are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks. Shakespeare.

In his own fields, the swain

Disaster'd stands. Thomson.DISASTROUS. adj. [from disaster.]

1. Unlucky; not fortunate.

That seemeth a most disastrous day to the Scots, not only in regard of this overthrow, but for that upon the same day they were defeated by the English at Floodenfield. Hayward.

2. Gloomy; threatening misfortune.

The moon,

In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On all the nations. Milton, P. L.

3. Unhappy; calamitous; miserable; struck with affliction.

Then Juno, pitying her disastrous fate, Sends Iris down, her pangs to mitigate. Denham.Immediately after his return from this very expedition, such disastrous calamities befel his family, that he burnt two of his children himself. South.Fly the pursuit of my disastrous love, From my unhappy neighbourhood remove. Dryden.DISASTROUSLY. † adv. [from disastrous.] In a dismal manner.There were never poor Christians perished more lamentably than those 6000 we sent under M. Hamilton for the assistance of the K. of Sweden, who did much, but you knew what became of him at last; how disastrously the Prince Palatinehimself fell, and in what an ill conjuncture of time, being upon the very point of being restored to his country.

Howell, Lett. i. vi. 29.

DISASTROUSNESS. n. s. [from disastrous.] Unluckiness; unfortunateness. Dict.To DISAVOUCHE. v. a. [dis and avouch.] To retract profession; to disown.Thereupon they flatly disavouch,

To yield him more obedience or support. Daniel

To DISAVOW. † v. a. [old Fr. desavouer.] To disown; to deny knowledge of; to deny concurrence in any thing, or with any person.The heirs and posterity of them which yielded the same, are either ignorant thereof, or do wilfully deny, or stedfastly disavow it.

Spenser, State of Ireland.

The English did believe his name was therein abused, which he manifested to be true by disavowing it openly afterwards.

Hayward.

To deal in person is good, when a man's face breedeth regard, and generally when a man will reserve to himself liberty either to disavow or to expound. Bacon.A man that acts below his rank, doth but disavow fortune, and seemeth to be conscious of his own want in worth, and doth but teach others to envy him. Bacon.He only does his conquest disavow,

And thinks too little what they found too much. Dryden.

We are reminded by the ceremony of taking an oath, that it is a part of that obedience which we learn from the gospel, expressly to disavow all evasions and mental reservations whatsoever.

Addison, Freeholder.

DISAVOWAL. n. s. [from disavow.] Denial.An earnest disavowal of fear, often proceeds from fear.

Richardson, Clarissa.

DISAVOWMENT. n. s. [from disavow.] Denial.As touching the Tridentine history, his holiness will not press you to any disavowment thereof. Wotton.To DISAUTHORISE. † v. a. [dis and authorize.] To deprive of credit or authority.The obtrusion of such particular instances as these, are insufficient to disauthorize a note grounded upon the final intention of nature.

Wotton, Survey of Education.

Who ever heard that, to commend the fidelity of a keeper, were to disauthorize the thing committed to his custody?

Char. mant. by Catholics, (in Chillingworth's Rel. of Prot.) ch. 2.

To DISBAND. † v. a. [old Fr. desbander.]

1. To dismiss from military service; to break up an army; to dismiss soldiers from their colours.

They disbanded themselves, and returned every man to his own dwelling. Knollys, History.

Pythagoras bids us in our station stand,

Till God, our general, shall us disband.

Denham.

I am content to lead a private life;

Disband my army to secure the state. Dryden, Aurengzebe.Bid him disband his legions. Addison, Cato.

2. To dismiss from service.

Some imagine that a quantity of water, sufficient to make such a deluge, was created upon that occasion; and when the business was done, all disbanded again, and annihilated.

Woodward.

To DISBAND. † v. n.

1. To retire from military service; to separate; to break up.

Our navy was upon the point of disbanding, and many of our men come ashore. Bacon, War with Spain.

The ranged pow'rs

Disband; and, wandering, each his several way

Pursues. Milton, P. L.

The common soldiers, and inferior officers, should be fully paid upon their disbanding. Clarendon.Were it not for some small remainders of piety and virtue, which are yet left scattered among mankind, human society would in a short space disband and run into confusion, and the earth would grow wild and become a forest. Tillotson.

2. To be dissolved.

When great prelates are living, their authority is depressed by their personal defillances, and the contrary interests of their contemporaries; which disband, when they are dead, and leave their credit entire upon the reputation of those excellent books and monuments of learning and piety, which are left behind them. Bp. Taylor, Lib. of Prophesying.

While rocks stand

And rivers stir, thou canst not shrink or quail;
Yea, when both rocks and all things shall disband,
Then shalt thou be my rock and tower.

Herbert.

To DISBARRE.† v. a. [desbarquer, French.]

1. To land from a ship; to put on shore.

Together sail'd they, fraught with all the things
To service done by land that might belong;
And, when occasion serv'd, disbarred them.

Fairfax.

The ship we moor on these obscure abodes;

Disbar the sheep, an offering to the gods. Pope, Odyssey.

2. To strip the bark from. [dis and bark of a tree.]

Dr. Plot speaks of an elm growing near the bowling-green at Magdalen-college, quite round disbarred almost for a yard near the ground, which yet flourishes exceedingly.

Evelyn, ii. vii. § 7.

DISBELIEF. n. s. [from disbelieve.] Refusal of credit; denial of belief.

Our belief or disbelief of a thing does not alter the nature of the thing. Tillotson.

To DISBELIEVE.† v. a. [dis and believe.] Not to credit; not to hold true.

The thinking it impossible his sins should be forgiven, though he should be truly penitent, is a sin, but rather of infidelity than despair; it being the disbelieving of an eternal truth of God's.

Hammond, Pract. Catech.

Such, who profess to disbelieve a future state, are not always equally satisfied with their own reasonings. Atterburn.

From a fondness to some vices, which the doctrine of futurity rendered uneasy, they brought themselves to doubt of religion; or, out of a vain affectation of seeing farther than other men, pretended to disbelieve it. Rogers.

DISBELIEVER. n. s. [from disbelieve.] One who refuses belief; one who denies any position to be true.

An humble soul is frighted into sentiments, because a man of great name pronounces heresy upon the contrary sentiment, and casts the disbeliever out of the church. Watts.

To DISBENCH.† v. a. [dis and bench.] To drive from a seat.

Sir, I hope

My words disbench'd you not?

— No, sir; yet oft,

When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.

Shakespeare.

To DISBLAME.† v. a. [dis and blame.] To clear from blame or censure.

I pray you meekly

Disblame me if any word be true.

Chaucer, Tr. and Crest, ii. 17.

I was sent to him by his lordship to let him know more particularly the duke's displeasure, and back by the ambassador to the duke with his humble request put of one quarter of an hour's audience for his disblaming.

Sir J. Flett, Obs. on For. Ambassadors, (1656,) p. 240.

DISBODIED.† adj. [dis and body.] Freed from the clogs and impediments of the body.

They conceive that the disbodied souls shall return from their unactive and silent recess, and be joined again to bodies of purified and duly prepared air.

Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 143.

To DISBOWEL.† v. a. [dis and bowel.] To eviscerate; to deprive of contents.

A great oak dry and dead —

Whose foot in ground lay left but feeble hold,
But half disbowell'd lies above the ground.

Spenser, Ruins of Rome, st. 28.

To DISBRANCH.† v. a. [dis and branch.] To separate or break off, as a branch from a tree.

She that herself will sliver and disbranch
From her maternal sap, perforce must wither,
And come to deadly use. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Such as are newly planted, need not be disbranched till the sap begins to stir, that so the wound may be healed without the scar. Evelyn's Kalendar.

To DISBU'D.† v. a. [With gardeners.] To take away the branches or sprigs newly put forth, that are ill placed. Dict.

To DISBURDEN.† v. a. [dis and burden.]

1. To ease of a burden; to unload.

The river, with ten branches or stragles, disburdens himself within the Persian sen. Peacham on Drawing.

2. To disencumber, discharge, or clear.

They removed either by casualty and tempest, or by intention and design, either out of lucre of gold, or for the disburdening of the countries, surcharged with multitudes of inhabitants. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

We shall disburden the piece of those hard shadowings, which are always ungraceful. Dryden, Dyfresnoy.

3. To throw off a burden.

Better yet do I live, that though by my thoughts I be plung'd.

Into my life's bondage, I yet may disburden a passion. Sidney.

Lucia, disburden all thy cares on me,

And let me share thy most retired distress. Addison, Cato.

To DISBURDEN.† v. n. To ease the mind.

Adam —

— in a troubled sea of passion tost,

Thus to disburden sought with sad complaint. Milton, P. L.

To DISBURSE.† v. a. [debourser, French.] To spend or lay out money.

Money is not disbursed at once, but drawn into a long length, by sending over now twenty thousand, and next half year ten thousand pounds. Spencer.

Nor would we deign him burial for his men,

Till he disburs'd to n thousand dollars

Shakespeare.

A Alexander received great sums, he was no less generous and liberal in disbursing them. Arbutnot on Coins.

DISBURSEMENT.† n. s. [deboursement, French.]

1. Act of disbursing or laying out.

The queen's treasure, in so great occasions of disbursements, is not always so ready, nor so plentiful, as it can spare so great a sum together. Spencer on Ireland.

2. Sum spent.

DISBURSER.† n. s. [from disburse.] One that disburses.

To DISCALCEATE.† v. a. [Lat. discalceos.] Dr. Johnson has given discalceated upon his own authority; but the verb is two hundred years old in our lexicography.] To put off the shoes.

Gockeram.

DISCALCEATED.† adj. [discalceatus, Latin.] Stripped of shoes.

DISCALCEATION.† n. s. [from discalceated.] The act of pulling off the shoes.

The custom of discalceation, or putting off their shoes at meals, is conceived to have been done, as by that means keeping their beds clean. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Among the Jews, and other nations, of the Orient especially, that rite of discalceation, or putting off their shoes, is still used and continued amongst them unto this day, when they come into their temples and sacred places.

Mede, Reverence of God's House, (1638,) p. 37.

To DISCANDY.† v. n. [from dis and candy.] To dissolve; to melt.

Hammer.

The hearts,

That spani'd me at heels, to whom I gave

Their wishes, do discandy, melt their sweets

On blossoming Caesar.

Shakespeare.

To DISCARD.† v. a. [dis and card.]

1. To throw out of the hand such cards as are useless.

2. To dismiss or eject from service or employment.

These men being certainly jewels to a wise man, considering what wonders they were able to perform, yet were discarded by that unworthy prince, as not worthy the holding.

Sidney.

Their captains, if they list, discard whom they please, and send away such as will perhaps willingly be rid of that dangerous and hard service.

Spenser on Ireland.

Should we own that we have a very imperfect idea of substance, would it not be hard to charge us with discarding substance out of the world.

Locke.

Justice discards party, friendship, kindred, and is always therefore represented as blind.

Addison, Guardian.

They blame the favourites, and think it nothing extraordinary that the queen should be at an end of her patience, and resolve to discard them.

Swift.

I do not conceive why a sunk discarded party, who neither expect nor desire more than a quiet life, should be charged with endeavouring to introduce popery.

Swift.

DISCARNATE. adj. [dis and caro, flesh; scarnato, Ital.] Stripped of flesh.

'Tis better to own a judgement, though but with a curta suppellex of coherent notions, than a memory, like a sepulchre, furnished with a load of broken and discarnate bones.

Glanville.

To DISCARSE. v. a. [dis and case.] To strip; to undress.

Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell,
I will discase me, and myself present.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

DISCEPTATION.* n. s. [Lat. disceptatio.] Controversy; disputation.

After a long disceptation, the bishop of Lincoln said, that the meaning of S. Augustine might be known by the consent of other the doctors.

For, Acts and Mon. of Bp. Latimer.

And behold among the simple ones, I discerned among the youths a young man void of understanding.

Prov. vii. 7.

2. To judge; to have knowledge of by comparison.

What doth better become wisdom than to discern what is worthy the loving?

Sidney.

You should be rul'd and led
By some discretion that discerns your state
Better than you yourself.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. To distinguish.

To discern such buds as are fit to produce blossoms, from such as will display themselves but in leaves, is no difficult matter.

Boyle.

4. To make the difference between.

They follow virtue for reward to-day;
To-morrow vice, if she give better pay;
We are no good, or bad, just at a price;
For nothing else discerns the virtue or vice.

B. Jonson.

To DISCERN. v. n.

1. To make distinction.

Great part of the country was abandoned to the spoils of the soldiers, who not troubling themselves to discern between a subject and a rebel, whilst their liberty lasted, made indifferently profit of both.

Hayward.

The custom of arguing on any side, even against our persuasions, dims the understanding, and makes it by degrees lose the faculty of discerning between truth and falsehood.

Locke.

2. To have judicial cognizance: not in use.

It discerneth of forces, frauds, crimes various of stellionate, and the inchoations towards crimes capital, not actually perpetrated.

Baron.

DISCERNER. n. s. [from discern.]

L'Estrange.

When they have taken a degree, and are consequently grown a burden to their friends, who now think themselves fully discharged, they get into orders as soon as they can.

Swift.

9. To clear from an accusation or crime; to absolve: with of.

They wanted not reasons to be discharged of all blame, who are confessed to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony; in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been esteemed to be small.

Hooker.

They are imprudent enough to discharge themselves of this blunder, by laying the contradiction at Virgil's door.

Dryden.

10. To perform; to execute.

Had I a hundred tongues, a wit so large,

As could their hundred offices discharge.

Dryden, Fables.

11. To put away; to obliterate; to destroy.

It is done by little and little, and with many essays; but all this dischargeth not the wonder.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Trial would also be made in herbs poisonous and purgative, whose ill quality perhaps may be discharged, or attemper'd, by setting stronger poisons or purgatives by them.

Bacon.

12. To divest of any office or employment; to dismiss from service: as, he discharged his steward; the soldier was discharged.

13. To dismiss; to release; to send away from any business or appointment.

Discharge your pow'rs unto their several counties.

Shakspeare.

*When Cæsar would have discharged the senate in regard of a dream of Calphurnia, this man told him he hoped he would not dismiss the senate till his wife had dreamed a better dream.

Bacon.

14. To emit.

The matter being suppurated, I opened an inflamed tubercle in the great angle of the left eye, and discharged a well-cooked matter.

Wiseman, Surgery.

To DISCHARGE. v. n. To dismiss itself; to break up.

The cloud, if it were oily or fatty, would not discharge.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

DISCHARGE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Vent; explosion; emission.

As the heat of all springs is owing to subterraneous fire, so wherever there are any extraordinary discharges of this fire, there also are the neighbouring springs hotter than ordinary.

Woodward.

2. Matter vented.

The hæmorrhage being stopped, the next occurrence is a thin serous discharge.

Sharp, Surgery.

3. Disruption; evanescence.

Mark the discharge of the little cloud upon glass, or pans, or blades of swords, and you shall see it ever break up first in the skirt, and last in the middle.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Dismission from an office; as, the governour solicited his discharge.

5. Release from an obligation or penalty.

He warns

Us, haply too secure of our discharge

From penalty, because from death releas'd

Some days.

Milton, P. L.

6. Absolution from a crime.

The text expresses the sound estate of the conscience, not barely by its not accusing, but by its not condemning us; which word imports properly an acquittance or discharge of a man upon some precedent accusation, and a full trial and cognizance of his cause.

South.

7. Ransom; price of ransom.

But, all my hopes defeated

To free him hence! But death, who sets all free,

Hath paid his ransom now and full discharge.

Milton, S. A.

8. Performance; execution.

The obligations of hospitality and protection are sacred; nothing can absolve us from the discharge of those duties.

L'Estrange.

9. An acquittance from a debt.

10. Exemption; privilege.

There is no charge in that war, neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it. Ecc. viii. 8.

DISCHARGE. n. s. [from discharge.]

1. He that discharges in any manner.

Love, as it is the greatest treasure of our souls, so it is the only security stands bound to God for all our debts; all the other faculties of man seem to be receivers only, and this the discharger of all their accounts.

W. Montagu, Devout Ess. iv. § 2.

2. He that fires a gun.

To abate the bombilation of gunpowder a way is promised by Potto, by borax and butter, which he says will make it so go off, as scarcely to be heard by the discharger. Brown.

TO DISCHURCH. * v. a. [dis and church.] To deprive of the rank of a church.

This can be no ground to dischurch that differing company of Christians; neither are they other from themselves upon this diversity of opinion. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 402.

TO DISCIDE. * v. a. [Lat. discidium, from discindo.]

To divide; to cut in two.

And as her tongue, so was her heart divided,
That never thought one thing, but doubly still was guided.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 27.

But head, and tongue, and heart, be quite divided.

More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 27.

DISCINCT. adj. [discinctus, Lat.] Ungirded; loosely dressed. Dict.

TO DISCIND. v. a. [discindo, Lat.] To divide; to cut in pieces.

We found several concretions so soft, that we could easily discind them betwixt our fingers. Boyle.

DISCIPLE. † n. s. [Sax. discipul; Fr. disciple; Lat. discipulus.] A scholar; one that professes to receive instructions from another.

He rebuked disciples, who would call for fire from heaven upon whole cities, for the neglect of a few. King Charles.

The commemorating the death of Christ, is the professing ourselves the disciples of the crucified Saviour; and that engaged us to take up his cross and follow him. Hammond.

A young disciple should behave himself so well, as to gain the affection and the ear of his instructor. Watts.

TO DISCIPLE. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To train; to bring up.

He did look far

Into the service of the time, and was

Discipl'd of the bravest.

Shakespeare.

Go, disciple all nations, baptizing them.

Practice of the Orthodox Ch. of Eng. (1709) p. 60.

2. To punish; to discipline. This word is not in use, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites a passage from Spenser in which the word is not disciple, but disple; which was common in older times. See TO DISPLE. Spenser, however, has disciple in this sense; and so has Ben. Jonson. And both place the accent on the first syllable of the word.

Frail youth —

That better were in virtues discipl'd,

Than with vain poems weeds to have their fancies fed.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. Intro. St. 1.

But for your carnal conscience,
Who here is fled for liberty of conscience,
From furious persecution of the marshal,
Her will I discipline.

B. Jonson, Fox.

She, bitter penance, with an iron whip,
Was wont him to discipline every day.

Spenser.

DISCIPLELIKE. * adj. [disciple and like.] Becoming a disciple.

The minister whose calling and end is spiritual, ought to be honoured as a father and physician to the soul, (if he be found to be so,) with a sonlike and discipline reverence, which is indeed the dearest and most affectionate honour, most to be desired by a wise man.

Milton, of Ref. in England, B. 2.

DISCIPLIN. † n. s. [from discipline.] The state or function of a disciple, or follower of a master.

That true and hearty love, which our Saviour would have the lively of our discipline, the badge of our holy profession. . .

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 154.

That to which justification is promised, is the giving up of the whole soul intirely unto Christ, undertaking discipline upon Christ's terms.

Hammond, Pract. Catech.

DISCIPLINABLE. adj. [disciplinabilis, Lat.] Capable of instruction; capable of improvement by discipline and learning.

DISCIPLINABLENESS. n. s. [from disciplinable.] Capacity of instruction; qualification for improvement by education and discipline.

We find in animals, especially some of them, as foxes, dogs, apes, horses, and elephants, not only perception, phantasy, and memory, common to most, if not all animals, but something of sagacity, providence, and disciplinableness.

Hale.

DISCIPLINANT. * n. s. [from discipline.] One of a religious order so called.

Don Quixote stood up, and turned himself towards the place from whence he imagined the noise to proceed; and presently he espied, descending from a certain height, many men apparelled in white like disciplinants. Sheldon, Transl. of D. Quixote.

DISCIPLINARIAN. adj. [from discipline.] Pertaining to discipline.

What eagerness in disciplinarian uncertainties, when the love of God and our neighbour, evangelical unquestionables, are neglected!

Glanville, Scopsis.

DISCIPLINARIAN. † n. s. [disciplina, Lat.]

1. One who rules or teaches with great strictness; one who allows no deviation from stated rules.

He, [king Lewis,] being a strict disciplinarian, would punish their vicious manners.

Fuller, Holy War, iv. 12.

He knows well the Pharisee's constitution's too austere to be caught with an ordinary bait, and therefore puts off his title of Beelzebub prince of flies, as seeing that they are not now for his game; but trolls and baits him with a nobler prey, and comes in the person of a Cato or Aristarchus, a severe disciplinarian, a grave censor.

Hammond, Sermon, xviii.

The bishop affected to incorporate the two most inconsistent characters in all nature, the disciplinarian and the fine gentleman.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 55.

2. A follower of the presbyterian sect, so called from their perpetual clamour about discipline.

They draw those that dissent into dislike with the stults, as puritans, or disciplinarians.

Sanderson, Par. Eccl.

DISCIPLINARY. † adj. [disciplina, Lat.]

1. Pertaining to discipline.

Designing to fame and glory, may make your lordship in the adventure of your person to be valiant as a private soldier rather than as a general; it may make you in your commandments rather to be gracious than disciplinary.

Bacon, Lett. to the E. of Essex.

2. Relating to government.

Those canons in behalf of marriage were only disciplinary, grounded on prudential motives.

Bishop Ferne.

3. Relating to a regular course of education.

These are the studies, wherein our noble and gentle youth ought to bestow their time in a disciplinary way.

Milton on Education.

DISCIPLINE. n. s. [disciplina, Lat.]

1. Education; instruction; the act of cultivating the mind; the act of forming the manners.

He had charge my discipline to frame,

And tutors nouriture to oversee.

Spenser.

The cold of the northern parts is that which, without aid of discipline, doth make the bodies hardest, and the courage was most.

They who want that sense of discipline, hearing, are also by consequence deprived of speech.

Holder.

It is by the assistance of the eye and the ear especially, which are called the senses of discipline, that our minds are furnished with various parts of knowledge. Watts.

2. Rule of government; order; method of government.

They hold, that from the very apostles' time till this present age, wherein yourselves imagine ye have found out a right pattern of sound discipline, there never was any time safe to be followed. Hooker.

As we are to believe for ever the articles of evangelical doctrine, so the precepts of discipline we are, in like sort, bound for ever to observe. Hooker.

While we do admire

This virtue and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stoicks.

Shakespeare.

3. Military regulation.

This opens all your victories in Scotland,
Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace.

Shakespeare.

Let crooked steel invade

The lawless troops which discipline disclaim,
And their superfluous growth with rigour tame.

Dryden.

4. A state of subjection.

The most perfect, who have their passions in the best discipline, are yet obliged to be constantly on their guard. Rogers.

5. Any thing taught; art; science.

Art may be said to overcome and advance nature in these mechanical disciplines, which, in this respect, are much to be preferred. Watkins.

6. Punishment; chastisement; correction.

A lively cobbler kicked and spurred while his wife was carrying him, and had scarce passed a day without giving her the discipline of the strap. Addison, Spectator.

7. External mortification.

The love of God makes a man chaste without the laborious arts of fasting and exterior discipline; he reaches at glory without any other arms but those of love. Bp. Taylor.

To DISCIPLINE. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To educate; to instruct; to bring up.

We are wise enough to begin when they are very young, and discipline by times those other creatures we would make useful and good for somewhat. Locke.

They were with care prepared and disciplined for confirmation, which they could not arrive at, till they were found upon examination to have made a sufficient progress in the knowledge of Christianity. Addison on the Christian Religion.

2. To regulate; to keep in order.

By reducing our appetites to the measures of nature, and moderately disciplining them with fasting and abstinence, we shall by degrees be so stated against hardships and difficulties, that that which makes effeminate minds to finch, and startle, will scarce be able to make any impression upon us. Scott's Works, ii. 26.

They look to us, as we should judge of an army of well-disciplined soldiers at a distance. De Cham, Astr-Theology.

3. To punish; to correct; to chastise.

Has he not disciplin'd Aufidius soundly?

Shakespeare, Coriol.

4. To advance by instruction

The law appears imperfect, and but giv'n
With purpose to resign them in full time
Up to a better covenant, disciplin'd
From shadowy types to truth, from flesh to spirit.

Milton, P. L.

To DISCLAIM. v. a. [dis and claim.] To disown; to deny any knowledge of: to retract any union with; to abrogate; to renounce.

You cowardly rascal! nature disclaims all share in thee: a taylor made thee. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

He calls the gods to witness their offence;

Disclaims the war, asserts his innocence. Dryden, Æneid.

We find our Lord, on all occasions, disclaiming all pretensions to a temporal kingdom. Rogers.

Very few, among those who profess themselves Christians, disclaim all concern for their souls, disown the authority, or renounce the expectations of the gospel. Rogers.

DISCLAIMER. n. s. [from disclaim.]

1. One that disclaims, disowns, or renounces.

2. [In law.] A plea containing an express denial or refusal. Corwel.

To DISCLOSE. v. a. [discludo, Lat. dis and close.]

1. To uncover; to produce from a state of latitancy to open view.

In this deep quiet, from what source unknown,
Those seeds of fire their fatal birth disclose;

And first few scatt'ring sparks about were blown,

Big with the flames that to our ruin rose.

Then earth and ocean various forms disclose.

The shells being broken, struck off, and gone, the stone included in them is thereby disclosed and set at liberty. Dryden.

Woodward.

2. To hatch; to open.

It is reported by the ancients, that the ostrich layeth her eggs under sand, where the heat of the sun discloseth them. Bacon.

3. To reveal; to tell; to impart what is secret.

There may be a reconciliation, except for upbraiding; or pride, or disclosing of secrets, or a treacherous wound; for from these things every friend will depart. Ecclus.

If I disclose my passion,
Our friendship's at an end; if I conceal it,
The world will call me false.

Addison, Cato.

DISCLOSE. * n. s. [from the verb.] Discovery. This is probably peculiar to Young; and he will hardly be followed.

Glasses, that revelation to the sight,
Have they not led us deep in the disclosur
Of fine-spun nature, exquisitely small,
And, though demonstrated, still ill-conceiv'd?

Young, Night Th. 9.

DISCLOSE. n. s. [from disclose.] * One that reveals or discovers.

DISCLOSE. n. s. [from disclose.]

1. Discovery; production into view.

The producing of cold is a thing very worthy the inquisition, both for the use and disclosure of causes. Bacon.

2. Act of revealing any thing secret.

After so happy a marriage between the king and her daughter, she was, upon a sudden mutability and disclosure of the king's mind, severely handled. Bacon.

DISCLOSURE. n. s. [disculus, Lat.] Emission.

Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous eruptions and disclosures of light, to prevent the art of the lantern-maker. More.

To DISCOAST. * v. n. [dis and coast.] * To wander: to depart from; to quit the coast. I find this word used only by the excellent and learned Barrow.

If it be lawful, in using rhetorical schemes, poetical strains, involutions of sense in allegories, fables, parables, and riddles, to discoast from the plain and simple way of speech, why may not facetiousness, issuing from the same principles, directed to the same ends, serving to like purposes, be likewise used blamelessly. Barrow, Sermon, vol. i. S. 14. Against foolish talking.

They would not be singular and uncouth in discoasting from the common road or fashion of men. Barrow, Works, iii. 344.

DISCOLORATION. † n. s. [from discolour.]

1. The act of changing the colour; the act of staining.

2. Change of colour; stain; die.

Pure light without discolouration.

More, Song of the Soul, iii. ii. 36.

In a depravation of the humours from a sound state to what the physicians call by a general name of a cacochymy, spots and discolorations of the skin are signs of weak fibres. Arbuthnot.

To DISCOLOUR. † v. a. [old Fr. descoulourer, from decoloro, Lat.] To change from the natural hue; to stain.

DIS

Many a widow's husband groveling lies,
Coldly embracing the discoloured earth. Shakspeare, K. John.
Drink water, either pure, or but discoloured with malt. Temple.

Suspicious and fantastical surmise,
And jealousy, with jaundice in her eyes,
Discoloring all she view'd. Dryden.

He who looks upon the soul through its outward actions, sees it through a deceitful medium, which is apt to discolour and pervert the object. Addison, Spectator.

Have a care lest some beloved notion, or some darling science, so prevail over your mind as to discolour all your ideas. Watts.

DISCOLOURED.* adj. [Lat. discoloratus.] Having various colours.

Upon his coward brest
A bloody cross, and on his craven crest
A bunch of hairs discoloured diversly. Spenser, F. Q. i. ii. 11.
And deck thy statues in discolour'd flowers. B. Jonson, Cynth. Revels.

To DISCOMFIT. v. a. [desconfire, Fr. sconfiggere, Ital. as if from disconfigere, Lat.] To defeat: to conquer; to vanquish; to overpower; to subdue;
to beat; to overthrow.

Fight against that monstrous rebel, Cade,
Whom, since, I heard to be discomfited. Shakspeare.
Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword. Exodus, xvii. 13.

He, fugitive, declined superior strength;
Discomfited, pursued, in the sad chace
Ten thousand ignominious fall. Phillips.

While my gallant countrymen are employed in pursuing rebels, half discomfited through the consciousness of their guilt,
I shall improve those victories to the good of my fellow subjects.
Addison.

DISCOMFIT. n. s. [from the verb.] Defeat: rout; overthrow.

Fly you must: incurable discomfit
Reigns in the hearts of all our present party. Shakspeare.
Dagon must stoop, and shall ere long receive
Such a discomfit, as shall quite despoil him
Of all these boasted trophies. Milton, S. A.

DISCOMFITURE. f. n. s. [Fr. desconfiture.] Defeat;
loss of battle; rout; ruin; overthrow.

Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture. Shakspeare.
Behold, every man's sword was against his fellow, and there was a very great discomfiture. 1 Sam.

What a defeat and discomfiture is it to a man, when he comes to use this wealth, to find it all false metal?

Go, Tongue.
He sent his angels to fight for his people; and the discomfiture and slaughter of great hosts, is attributed to their assistance.
Atterbury.

DISCOMFORT. f. n. s. [old Fr. déconfort.] This is one of our oldest substantives. Wicliffe uses it for desolation. "When ye see the abominacion of discomfort," St. Matt. xxiv. [Chaucer, for displeasure.] Grief; sorrow; melancholy; gloom.

This himself did foresee, and therefore willed his church, to the end they might sustain it without discomfort. Hooker.

Discomfort guides my tongue,
And bids me speak of nothing but despair. Shakspeare.

In an humble submission to God's good pleasure, strive against all the discomforts of thy sufferings.

In solitude there is not only discomfort, but weakness also.
South.

To DISCOMFORT. f. v. a. [old Fr. déconforter.] To grieve; to sadden; to deject.

Her champion was awfully discomfited as much as discomfited.
Sidney.

His funeral shall not be in our camp,
Lest it discomfort us. Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

DIS

Make this good of thyself, and thou shalt not be too much discomforted with the absence of thy bodily eyes.

Ep. Hall, The Comforter.

DISCOMFORTABLE. f. adj. [from discomfort.]

1. Melancholy, and refusing comfort.

Discomfortable cousin, know'st thou not,
That when the searching eye of Heav'n is hid Behind the globe, it lights the lower world. Shakspeare.

2. Causing sadness.

What! did that help poor Doris, whose eyes could carry into him no other news but discomfortable? Sidney.

What a discomfortable thing it is for me to be unsettled still.

Bacon, Lett. Supplement to Cabela, p. 71.

To DISCOMMEND. v. a. [dis and commend.]

To blame; to censure; to mention with disapprobation.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve, either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hooker.

Now you will all be wits; and he, I pray,
And you, that discommend it, mend the play. Denham.

Neither do I discommend the lofty style in tragedy, which is naturally pompous and magnificent. Dryden.

DISCOMMENDABLE. f. adj. [from discommend.] Blamable; censurable; deserving blame.

The natives are generally strong, active, and courageous;
the male sort from their infancy practise the rude postures of Mars, covering their naked bodies with massy targets, their right hand brandishing a long but small azagway or lance of ebony barbed with iron, kept bright, and which by exercise they know how to jactate as well as any people in the universe; discommendable only in their being poisoned.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 22.

Puillanimity is, according to Aristotle's morality, a vice very discommendable. Ayliffe's Paragon.

DISCOMMENDABLENESS. n. s. [from discommendable.]

Blamableness; liableness to censure. Dict.

DISCOMMENDATION. f. n. s. [from discommend.] Blame;
reproach; censure.

If men having latched men of latter ages with those of the former in regard of age, strength, and wit, they should not likewise prove matchable in regard of virtue, it were a blemish rather than an ornament, a discommendation than a praise.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 289.

Tully assigns three motions, whereby, without any discommendation, a man might be drawn to become an accuser of others.

Ayliffe's Paragon.

DISCOMMENDER. n. s. [from discommend.] One that discommends: a dispraiser.

To DISCOMMEDIATE.* v. a. [Lat. discommodo.]

This is our old word: the place of which, in modern times, has been usurped by the finical discommode; though Warburton has adopted disaccommodate.
We have to accommodate, and to incommode; and Dr. Johnson has admitted both into his dictionary. It is to be wondered, that he should have overpassed this. *To molest.

That none electors, princes, alliants, states, of either party, in what manner soever, or under whatsoever pretence, neither by themselves nor any other, shall with arms pertaining to either party, offend or cut off the treaty of peace, nor discommode, pillage, spoil, attain, or trouble one another.

Sir H. Wotton, Rom. p. 533.

These wars did drain and discommode the king of Spain.

Howell, Lett. i. iii. 15.

To DISCOMMODOE. v. a. [dis and commode, Fr.] To put to inconvenience; to molest; to incommode.

DISCOMMODOUS. f. adj. [from discommode.] Inconvenient;
troublesome; unpleasing.

So many thousand soldiers, unfit for any labour or other trade, must either seek service and employment abroad, which may be dangerous, or else employ themselves here at home, which may be discommodious. Spenser, State of Ireland.

The king replied, that he intended to give one [a table] five times bigger than that was there, provided that it might not be discommodious to the sacrificers. Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 46.

A marriage happening totally discommodious, distasteful, dishonest, and pernicious to him, without the appearance of his fault. Milton, Petrarchordon.

DISCOMMODITY. † n. s. [from discommod.] Inconvenience; disadvantage; hurt; mischief.

These discommodities do happen by implecable wrath, whereof there be examples innumerable. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 101.

We speak now of usury, how the discommodities of it may be best avoided, and the commodities retained: or how in the balance of commodities and discommodities, the qualities of usury, are to be reconciled. Bacon, Ess. of Usury.

So shall he shun the inconvenience of contempt and the discommodity of travel. Raleigh, Arts of Empire, p. 164.

This seems an unseasonable foresight, and out of order to defer and put off the most needful constitution of one right discipline, while we stand balancing the discommodities of two corrupt ones. Milton, of Ref. in Eng.

It is better that a ship should be preserved with some discommodity to the sailors, than that, the sailors being in health, the ship should perish. Hayward.

To DISCOMMON.* v. a. [dis and common.]

1. To deprive of the right of common.

I see thy pitched stakes do stand
On thy incroached piece of common land,
Whiles thou discomonest thy neighbour's leine,
And warn'st that none feed on thy field save thine.

Bp. Hall, Sat. v. 4.

2. To deprive of the privileges of a place; a word frequently found in the accounts of proceedings of the university of Oxford.

'Tis hoped the university will not now faile of that protection and favour, we have had from our superiors in former times, so as to vindicate us and our privileges from these great incroachments; or at least, permitt us to make use of our owne lawes and power to restrain them; which, if your grace thinke fit, would be no hard matter to do, by discommoning, or otherwise implending, the author of them.

Letter in Warton's Life of Bathurst, p. 111.

To DISCOMPLEXION.* v. a. [dis and complexion.]

To change the hue or colour.

Cau

A sorrow enter but upon thy garment,
Or discomplexion thy attire, whilst I
Enjoy a life for thee?

Beaum. and Fl. Coronation.

His rich clothes be discomplexioned
With blood.

Beaum. and Fl. Coronation.

To DISCOMPOSE. v. a. [decomposer, Fr.]

1. To disorder; to unsettle.

The debate upon the denying ordinance had raised many jealousies, and discomposed the confidence that had formerly been between many of them. Clarendon.

2. To ruffle; to disorder.

Now Betty from her master's bed had flown,
And softly stole to discompose her own.

Swift.

3. To disturb the temper; to agitate by perturbation.

No more, dear mother: ill fit death it shows,
Your peace of mind by rage to discompose.

Dryden.

4. To offend; to fret; to vex.

Men, who possess all the advantages of life, are in a state where there are many accidents to disorder and discompose, but few to please them. Swift.

5. To displace; to discard: not in use.

Though he was a dark prince, and infinitely suspicious, he never put down or discomposed a counsellor or near servant.

Bacon.

DISCOMPOSITION.* n. s. [from discompose.] Inconsistency; disagreement.

O perplexed discomposition. O riddling distemper, O miserable condition of man!

Donne, Devot. p. 8.

DISCOMPOSURE. † n. s. [from discompose.]

1. Disorder; perturbation.

Sins which were only evil by inordination, and discomposure of the order of man's end of living happily.

Bp. Taylor, Life of Christ, Pref. § 18.

He threw himself upon his bed, lamenting with much passion, and with abundance of tears; and continued in this melancholick discomposure of mind many days. Clarendon.

2. Disagreement of parts.

How exquisite a symmetry, though as yet undiscerned by me, Omniscience doth, and after-ages probably will, discover in the Scripture's method, in spite of those seeming discomposures that now puzzle me. Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 73.

To DISCOMPT.* v. a. [Fr. descompter.] To pay back again. See To DISCOUNT.

Whacum had neither cross nor jule,

His plunder was not worth the while;

All which the conqueror did discompt,

To pay for curing of his rump.

Hudibras, ii. iii.

To DISCONCERT. v. a. [dis and concert.]

1. To unsettle the mind; to discompose.

You need not provoke their spirits by outrages: a careless gesture, a word, or a look, is enough to disconcert them.

Collier.

2. To break a scheme; to defeat a machination.

DISCONFORMITY. † n. s. [dis and conformity.] Want of agreement: inconsistency.

Lies — arise from error and mistake, or malice and forgery; — they consist in the disagreement and disconformity betwixt the speech and the conception of the mind, or the conceptions of the mind and the things themselves, or the speech and the things. Hakewill on Providence, p. 16.

He there exhorts us to hear with patience and humility those, however they be mis-called, that desire to dive purely, in such an use of God's ordinances, as the best guidance of their conscience gives them, and to tolerate them, though in some disconformity to ourselves. Milton, Arcopagitica.

DISCONGRUITY. n. s. [dis and congruity.] Disagreement; inconsistency.

There is want of capacity in the thing, to sustain such a duration from the intrinsic discongruity of the one to the other. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To DISCONNECT.* v. a. [dis and connect.] To break the ties of any thing.

It is not easy to foresee, what effect would be, of disconnecting with parliament the greatest part of those who hold civil employments, and of such mighty and important bodies as the military and naval establishments.

Burke on the Cause of the Present Discontents.

DISCONNECTION.* n. s. [from disconnect.] Disunion.

Nothing was to be left in all the subordinate members, but weakness, disconnection, and confusion.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

To DISCONSENT.* v. n. [dis and consent.] To disagree; to differ.

If therefore the tradition of the church were now grown so ridiculous, and disconsenting from the doctrine of the apostles, even in those points which were of least moment to men's particular ends, how well may we be assured it was much more degenerated in points of episcopacy and precedence.

Milton, of Prelat. Episcopacy.

DISCONSOLATE. † adj. [Fr. desconsolé.] Void of comfort; hopeless; sorrowful; melancholy.

See Cassius all disconsolate,

With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill.

Shakespeare.

If patiently thy bidding they obey,

Dismiss them not disconsolate.

Milton, P. L.

The ladies and the knights, no shelter sought,

Were dropping wet, disconsolate and wan,

And through their thin array receiv'd the rain.

Dryden.

The moon reflects the sunbeams to us, and so, by illuminating the air, takes away in some measure the disconsolate darkness of our winter-nights.

Ray.

DISCONSOLATELY. adv. [from disconsolate.] In a disconsolate manner; comfortlessly.

DISCONSOLATENESS. n. s. [from disconsolate.] The state of being disconsolate.

In his presence there is life and blessedness; in his absence, nothing but dolor, disconsolateness, despair.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 98.

Though Thou have suffered some dimness, some clouds of sadness and disconsolateness to shed themselves upon my soul, I humbly bless and thankfully glorify thy holy name.

Donne, Devot. p. 361.

DISCONSOLATION. n. s. [dis and consolation.] Want of comfort.

The greater a man's delight hath been in worldly prosperity, the greater will his grief or disconsolation be, when the opposite branch of adversity falls upon him.

Jackson's Works, (1673,) p. 525.

DISCONTENT. n. s. [dis and content.]

1. Want of content; uneasiness at the present state.

I see your brows full of discontent,

Your hearts of sorrows, and your eyes of tears. Shakspeare.

To prove the happiness of a mean estate, and the discontents of a rich man. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 116.

Not that their pleasures caus'd her discontent,

She sigh'd, not that they stay'd, but that she went. Pope.

2. One who is discontented.

Fickle changelings, and poor discontents.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. 1.

DISCONTENT. adj. [dis and content.] Uneasy at the present state; dissatisfied.

They were of their own nature circumspect and slow, discontented and discontent, and those the earl singled as fittest for his purpose. Hayward.

To DISCONTENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dissatisfy; to make uneasy at the present state.

I know a discontented gentleman,

Whose humble means match not his haughty spirit.

Shakspeare.

The discontented now are only they

Whose crimes before did your just cause betray. Dryden.

DISCONTENTED. participial adj. [from discontent.]

Uneasy; cheerless; malevolent.

Let us know

What will tie up your discontented sword? Shakspeare.

These are, beyond comparison, the two greatest evils in this world, a diseased body and a discontented mind. Tillotson.

The goddess, with a discontented air,

Seems to reject him, though she grants his pray'r. Pope.

DISCONTENTEDLY. adv. [from discontented.] In a discontented humour.

Turn not thy back to him discontentedly: but forbear and submit. Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655,) p. 326.

DISCONTENTEDNESS. n. s. [from discontented.] Uneasiness; want of ease; dissatisfaction.

A beautiful list of Alexander the Great, cast up his face to heaven with a noble air of grief, or discontentedness in his looks. Addison's Travels.

DISCONTENTING. adv. Giving no satisfaction; disgusting.

How unpleasant and discontenting the society of body must needs be between those whose minds cannot be sociable.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

DISCONTENTMENT. n. s. [from discontent.] The state of being discontented; uneasiness.

These are the vices that fill them with general discontentment, as though the bottom of that famous church, wherein they live, were more noisome than any dungeon. Hooker.

The politick and artificial nourishing and entertaining of hopes, and carrying men from hopes to hopes, is one of the best antidotes against the poison of discontentment. Bacon.

DISCONTINUANCE. n. s. [from discontinue.]

1. Want of cohesion of parts; want of union of one part with another; disruption.

The stillicides of water, if there be enough to follow, will draw themselves into a small thread, because they will not discontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they cast themselves into round drops, which is the figure that saveth the body most from discontinuance. Baron, Nat. Hist.

2. Cessation; intermission.

Let us consider, whether our approaches to him are sweet and refreshing, and if we are uneasy under any long discontinuance of our conversation with him. Atterbury.

3. [In the common law.] An interruption or breaking off; as discontinuance of possession, or discontinuance of process. The effect of discontinuance of possession is, that a man may not enter upon his own land or tenement alienated, whatsoever his right be unto it, or by his own authority; but must seek to recover possession by law. The effect of discontinuance of plea is, that the instance may not be taken up again, but by a new writ to begin the suit afresh. Corael.

DISCONTINUATION. n. s. [from discontinue.] Disruption of continuity; breach of union of parts; disruption; separation.

Upon any discontinuation of pays, made either by bubbles or by shaking the glass, the whole mercury falls. Newton.

To DISCONTINUE. v. n. [discontinuer, Fr.]

1. To lose the cohesion of parts; to suffer separation or disruption of substance.

All bodies ductile and tensile, as metals that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn, or thread, have in them the appetite of not discontinuing strong, which maketh them follow the force that pulleth them out; and yet so as not to discontinue or forsake their own body. Bacon.

2. To lose an established or prescriptive custom or right.

Thyself shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee; and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies. Jer.

To DISCONTINUE. v. a.

1. To leave off; to cease any practice or habit.

Twenty puny lies I'll tell

That men shall swear I've discontinued school

Above a twelvemonth. Shakspeare.

Examine thy customs of diet, sleep, exercise, apparel, and the like, and try, in any thou shall judge hurtful, to discontinue it by little and little; but so, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon.

2. To break off; to interrupt.

There is that property, in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice, without appearing to discontinue it. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

DISCONTINUER. n. s. [from discontinue.] One who discontinues a rule or custom.

Hearing that the new statutes at Oxford permit none but those who totally reside and study there to take degrees, and admit no computation of terms more than those wherein they were commorant there, so that many discontinuers cannot in so short time proceed as formerly, &c.

Commun. to Abp. Laud, (1639,) Rem. ii. 174.

DISCONTINUITY. n. s. [dis and continuity.] Disunity of parts; want of cohesion.

That discontinuity of parts is the principal cause of the opacity of bodies, will appear by considering that opaque substances become transparent by filling their pores with any substance of equal or almost equal density with their parts. Newton.

DISCONTINUOUS. adj. [A word formed by Milton, having the force of the Lat. diverse and continous.] Wide; extended; gaping.

Then Satan first knew pain,
And writh'd him to and fro convolv'd; so sore
The griding sword with discontinuous wound
A horrid chasm, disclos'd with orifice Wide, discontinuous. Philips, Splendid Shilling.

DISCONVENIENCE.† n. s. [old Fr. desconvennience.] Incongruity; disagreement; opposition of nature.

Fear arises many times out of natural antipathies of nature, but in these disconveniences of nature deliberation hath no place at all. Bp. Bramhall, Answ. to Hobbes.

A necessary disconvenience, where any thing is allowed to be cause of itself. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 213.

DISCONVENIENT.† adj. [dis and convenient.] Opposite; incongruous.

Continual drinking is most convenient to the distemper of an hypochondrick body, though most disconvenient to its present welfare. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 40.

DISCORD.† n. s. [discord, old French, discordia, Latin.]

1. Disagreement; opposition; mutual anger; reciprocal oppugnancy.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love!
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
He is a false witness that speaketh lies, and that soweth dis- cord among brethren. Proverbs.

2. Difference, or contrariety of qualities; particularly of sounds.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows; each thing meets
In meer oppugnancy. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Discord, like that of music's various parts,
Discord that makes the harmony of hearts;
Discord that only this dispute shall bring,
Who best shall love the duke and serve the king. Dryden.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

3. [In musick.] Sounds not of themselves pleasing, but necessary to be mixed with others, Dr. Johnson says. A discord, whether necessary or not, is a combination of disagreeing sounds; not always displeasing; on the contrary, it often increases, by proper interposition, the effect of harmony.

It is sound alone that both immediately and incorporeally affect most; this is most manifest in musick, and concords and discords in musick: for all sounds, whether they be sharp or flat, if they be sweet, have a roundness and equality; and if they be harsh, are unequal, for a discord itself is but a harshness of divers sounds meeting. Bacon.

It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and displeasing sharps. Shakespeare.
How doth musick amaze us, when of discords she maketh
the sweetest harmony. Pemham.

TO DISCORD.† v. n. [desaccorder, old Fr. discordo,
Lat.] To disagree; not to suit with.

Sounds do disturb and alter the one the other; sometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; sometimes the one jarring and discording with the other, and making a confusion. Bacon.

But yet, even in this change of their tune, they kept still a good harmony; an harmony concurring with God's severity, though somewhat discording with his mercy. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 330.

A musical ear accustomed to melodious consorts, will be more displeased with jarring or discording sounds, than he which hath the same sense of hearing unpolished by art, or accustomed to ruder noises.

Dr. Jackson's Works, (1673.) iii. 401.

DISCORDANCE.† n. s. [from discord.] Disagreement; opposition; inconsistency.

The intractable genius of the feudal policy, held forth those irregularities of conduct, discordances of interest, and dissimilarities of situation, that framed rich materials for the minstrel-muse. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, li. 462.

DISCORDANT. adj. [discordans, Lat.]

1. Inconsistent; at variance with itself.

Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear,
But clogg'd with guilt, the joy was unsincere;
So various, so discordant is the mind,
That in our will a different will we find. Dryden.

2. Opposite; contrarious.

The discordant attraction of some wandering comets would certainly disorder the revolutions of the planets if they approached too near them. Cheyne.

3. Incongruous; not conformable.

Hither conscience is to be referred, if by a comparison of things done with the rule there be a consonancy, then follows the sentence of approbation; if discordant from it, the sentence of condemnation. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

DISCORDANTLY. adv. [from discordant.]

1. Inconsistently; in disagreement with itself.

2. In disagreement with another.

Two strings of a musical instrument being struck together, making two noises that arrive at the ear at the same time as to sense, yield a sound differing from either of them, and as it were compounded of both; inasmuch, that if they be dis- cordantly tuned, though each of them struck apart would yield a pleasing sound, yet being struck together they make a harsh and troublesome noise. Boylean Colours.

3. Peevishly; in a contradictions manner.

DISCORDFUL.† adj. [discord and full.] Quarrelsome;
not peaceable.

But Blandamour, full of vain-glorious spright,
And rather stirred by his discordful dame,
Upon them gladly would have prov'd his might.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 3.

TO DISCOVER.† v. a. [decoverir, French; dis and cover.]

1. To shew; to disclose; to bring to light; to make visible.

2. To expose to view.

The cover of the coach was made with such joints, that,
as they might, to avoid the weather, pull it up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open-sighted as on horseback. Sidney.

Go draw aside the curtains, and discover

The several caskets to this noble prince. Shakespeare.
He discovereth deep things out of darkness, and bringeth out to light the shadow of death. Job, xii. 22.

3. To shew; not to shelter; to expose.

And now will I discover her frowardness. Hosea.
Law can discover sin, but not remove. Milton.

4. To make known; not to disguise; to reveal.

We will pass over unto these men, and we will discover ourselves unto them. Isaiah, xiv. 8.

Eyes who unseen

Yet all had heard, with audible lament

5. To ken; to spy.

When we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand. Acts.

6. To find out; to obtain information.

He shall never, by any alteration in me, discover my knowledge of his mistake. Pope, Letters.

7. To detect; to find though concealed.

Up he starts,
Discover'd and surpris'd

Man with strength and free will arm'd
Complete, to have discover'd and repuls'd
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton, P. L.

8. To find things or places not known before.

Some to discover islands far away. Shakespeare.

Another part in squadrons — bend their march —

On bold adventure, to discover wide

That dismal world.

Milton, P. L.

So of things. The Germans discovered printing and gunpowder.

9. To exhibit to the view.

Some high climbing hill,

Which to his eye discovers unaware

The goodly prospect of some foreign land,

First seen, or some renown'd metropolis

With glistening spires and battlements adorn'd. Milton, P. L.

Not light, but rather darkness visible

10. To make any thing cease to be a covering.

The voice of the Lord maketh the hinds to calve, and discovereth the forests. Psalms xxix. 9.

For the greatness of thy iniquity are thy skirts discovered, and thy heels made bare. Jerem. xiii. 22.

DISCOVERABLE. adj. [from discover.]

1. That which may be found out.

That mineral matter which is so intermixed with the common and terrestrial matter, as not to be discoverable by human industry; or if discoverable, diffused and scattered amongst the crasser matter, can never be separated. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Revelation may assert two things to be joined, whose connection or agreement is not discoverable by reason. Watts.

2. Apparent; exposed to view.

They were deceived by Satan, and that not in an invisible situation, but in an open and discoverable apparition, that is, in the form of a serpent. Brown, Vulg. Err.

It is concluded by astronomers, that the atmosphere of the moon hath no clouds nor rains, but a perpetual and uniform serenity; because nothing discoverable in the lunar surface is ever covered and absconded by the interposition of any clouds or mists. Bentley.

DISCOVERER. n. s. [from discover.]

1. One that finds any thing not known before; a finder out.

If more be found out, they will not recompence the discoverer's pains, but will be fitter to be cast out. Holder.

Places receive appellations according to the language of the discoverer, from observations made upon the people. Broome.

The Cape of Good Hope was doubled in those early times; and the Portuguese were not the first discoverers of that navigation. Arbutnot on Coins.

An old maiden gentlewoman is the greatest discoverer of judgements; she can tell you what sin it was that set such a man's house on fire. Addison, Spectator.

2. A scout; one who is put to descry the posture or number of an enemy; speculator.

Here stand, my lords, and send discoverers forth, To know the numbers of our enemies. Shakespeare.

A field of thistles seemed, since a battle of pikes unto some discoverers of the duke of Burgundy.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 320.

DISCOVERY. n. s. [from discover.]

1. The act of finding any thing hidden.

Of all who since have us'd the open sea,

Than the bold English none more fame have won;

Beyond the year, and out of heav'n's high way,

They make discoveries where they see no sun. Dryden.

2. The act of revealing or disclosing any secret.

What must I hold a candle to my shame?

They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light.

Why 'tis an office of discovery, love,

And I should be obscur'd. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

Things that appeared amiable by the light of this world, appear of a different odious hue in the clear discoveries of the next. South.

It would be necessary to say something of the state to which the war hath reduced us; such a discovery ought to be made as late as possible. Swift.

To DISCOUNSEL. v. a. [desconseiller, Fr.] To dissuade; to give contrary advice.

But him that Palmer from that vanity,

With temperate advice discountell'd.

Speaner, P. Q.

Holy Scripture dissuadeth and discountnellath from doing that filthy sin. Homilies, B. i. Against Adultery.

DISCOUNT. n. s. [dis and count.]

1. The sum refunded in a bargain.

His whole intention was, to buy a certain quantity of copper money from Wood at a large discount, and sell them as well as he could. Swift.

2. A deduction according to the rate of interest, for money advanced beforehand; an allowance made on a bill of exchange, or any other debt, not yet due, in order to receive money for the same.

To DISCOUNT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To count back; to pay back again.

My father's, mother's, brother's death I pardon:

My prayers and penance shall discount for these,

And beg of Heav'n to charge th' bill on me. Dryden.

The farmers spitefully combin'd,

Force him to take his tithes in kind;

And Parvisol discounts arrears,

By bills for taxes and repairs. Swift.

2. To pay beforehand; deducting, according to the custom of commerce and the law of interest, an equivalent for so doing.

To DISCOURTENANCE. v. a. [dis and countenance.]

1. To discourage by cold treatment.

Unwilling they were to discountenance any man who was willing to serve them. Clarendon.

The truly upright judge will always countenance right, and discountenance wrong. Aberbury.

2. To abash; to put to shame.

Wisdom in discourse with her,

Loses discountenanced, and like folly shews. Milton, P. L.

He came, and with him Eve, more loth, though first

To offend; discountenanc'd both, and compos'd.

Milton, P. L.

How would one look from his majestick brow,

Seated as on the top of virtue's hill,

DISCOURTENANCE. n. s. [dis and countenance.] Cold treatment; unfavourable aspect; unfriendly regard.

He thought a little discountenance upon those persons would suppress that spirit. Clarendon.

All accidental misfortunes, how inevitable soever, were still attended with very apparent discountenance. Clarendon.

In expectation of the hour of judgement, he patiently bears all the difficulties of duty, and the discountenance he meets with from a wicked and prophane world. Rogers.

DISCOURTENANCER. n. s. [from discountenance.] One that discourages by cold treatment; one that depresses by unfriendly regard.

Rumours of scandal and murmurs against the king and his government, taxed him for a great taxer of his people, and discountenancer of his nobility. Bacon.

DISCOUNTER. n. s. [from discount.] One who advances money upon discount.

Usurers, pedlars, and Jew discounters, at the corners of the streets. Burke, Lett. to a Memb. of the National Assembly.

To DISCOURAGE. v. a. [decourager, Fr. dis and ourage.]

1. To depress; to deprive of confidence; to deject; to dastardize.

I might neither encourage the rebels insolence, nor discourage the protestants loyalty and patience. A. Charles.

The apostle with great zeal discourages too unreasonable a presumption. Rogers.

2. To deter; to fright from any attempt: with, from before the thing.

Wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel, from going over into the land? Numbers.

3. It is irregularly used by Temple, with to before the following word.

You may keep your beauty and your health unless you destroy them yourself, or discourage them to stay with you by using them ill. Temple.

DISCOURAGE.* n. s. [dis and courage.] Want of courage, and resolution.

When the negligent ministers or inferiour governours have not only equal thank or reward, but perchance much more than they which be diligent, or would be, if they might have assistance; there undoubtedly is grievous discourage, and perit of conscience; forasmuch as they omit oftentimes their duties and offices. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 209.

DISCOURAGER, n. s. [from discourage.] One that impresses diffidence and terrour.

Most men in years, as they are generally discouragers of youth, are like old trees, which being past bearing themselves, will suffer no young plants to flourish beneath them. Pope.

DISCOURAGEMENT. n. s. [from discourage.]

1. The act of deterring or depressing hope.
2. Determent; that which deters from any thing: with from.

Amongst other impediments of any inventions, it is none of the meanest discouragements, that they are so generally derided by common opinion. Wilkins.

The books read at schools and colleges, are full of incitements to virtue, and discouragements from vice. Swift.

3. The cause of depression or fear: with to, less properly.

To things we would have them learn, the great and only discouragement is, that they are called to them. Locke.

DISCOURSE.† n. s. [discours, Fr. discursus, Latin, from discurrere, to run hither and thither; applying, as in the case of desultory, a bodily action to what passes in the mind, and to what is communicated by conversation. Spenser has once used discourse in its literal acceptation of running about, F. Q. vi. viii. 14. But he has not been, and probably never will be followed. Glanville has thus explained the word: "The act of the mind which connects propositions, and deduceth conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscall it if we name it reason."

1. The act of the understanding, by which it passes from premises to consequences.

By reason of that original weakness in the instruments, without which the understanding part is not able in this world by discourse to work, the very conceit of painfulness is a bridle to stay us. Hooker.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To rust in us unused. Shakespeare.

2. Conversation; mutual intercourse of language; talk.

He waxeth wiser than himself, more by an hour's discourse, than by a day's meditation. Bacon.

In thy discourse, if thou desire to please,
All such is courteous, useful, new, or witty;
Usefulness comes by labour, wit by ease,
Courtesy grows in court, news in the city. Herbert.

The vanquish'd party with the victors join'd,
Nor wanted sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind. Dryden.

3. Effusion of language; speech.

Topical and superficial arguments, of which there is store to be found on both sides, filling the head with variety of thoughts, and the mouth with copious discourse, serve only to amuse the understanding and entertain company. Locke.

4. A treatise; a dissertation either written or uttered.

The discourse here is about ideas, which, he says, are real things, and seen in God. Locke.

Plutarch, in his discourse upon garrulity, commends the fidelity of the companions of Ulysses. Pope, Odyssey.

TO DISCOURSE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To converse; to talk; to relate.

How wert thou handled, being prisoner?
Discourse, I prythee, on this turret's top. Shakespeare.

Of various things discoursing as he pass'd,
Ancilles hither bends. Dryden.

2. To treat upon in a solemn or set manner.

The general maxims we are discoursing of are not known to children, ideots, and a great part of mankind. Locke.

3. To reason; to pass from premises to consequences.

And yet the pow'rs of her discouring thoughts,
From the collection is a diverse thing. Davies.
Brutes do want that quick discoursing pow'r. Davies.

TO DISCOURSE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To treat of; to talk over; to discuss.

Go with us into the abbey here,
And let us there at large discourse all our fortunes. Shakespeare.

Good Pylades, discourse a robbery or two, to satisfy these gentlemen of thy worth. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

Hard are the ways of truth, and rough to walk,
Smooth on the tongue discours'd, pleasing to the ear. Milton, P. R.

2. To utter.

Give it [the pipe] breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most excellent musick. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

DISCOURSE. n. s. [from discourse.]

1. A speaker; an haranguer.

The tract of every thing,
Would by a good discourser lose some life,
Which action's self was tongue to. Shakespeare.

2. A writer on any subject; a dissertator.

Philologers and critical discourers, who look beyond the obvious exteriors of things, will not be angry at our narrower explorations. Brown.

But it seems to me, that such discourers do reason upon short views, and a very moderate compass of thought. Swift.

DISCOURSING.* n. s. [from discourse.] Mutual intercourse of language.

That change meets so with our fears and weak discoursings, that they, who six hours ago tended upon us either with charitable or ambitious services, cannot stay in the room alone where the body lies stripped of its life and honour. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, i. § 2.

DISCOURSE.† adj. [from discourse.]

1. Passing by intermediate steps from premises to consequences.

The soul
Reason receives, and reason is her being,
Discursive, or intuitive; discourse
Is ofttest yours, the latter is most ours. Milton, P. L.

2. Containing dialogue; interlocutory.

The epick is every where interlaced with dialogue or discursive scenes. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

3. Conversable; communicative.

He found him a complaisant man, very free and discursive. Life of A. Wood, p. 225.

DISCOURTEOUS.† (adj. [dis and courteous.]) Uncivil; uncomplaisant; defective in good manners.

Such base discourteous dog-whelps.

A people so discourteous, that our misery nothing afflicted them. Beaumont and Fl. Wit without Money.

He resolved to unhorse the first discourteous knight he should meet. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 209.

DISCOURTEOUSLY. adv. [from discourteous.] Uncivilly; rudely.

DISCOURTESY. n. s. [dis and courtesy.] Incivility; rudeness; act of disrespect.

DISCREPANCY.* n. s. [Lat. discrepantia.] Difference.

There is diversity of judgements, discrepancy of opinion among divines both old and new.

Mountagu, App. to Cas. p. 127.

What the one is, the other is not; and in such a visible discrepancy, that if one were fetched from the remotest parts of the earth the sun displayeth his beames upon, yea from the very Antipodes, he would agree with either better than they do one with another. Howell, Instruct. For. Travel, p. 75.

DISCREPANT. adj. [discrepans, Lat.] Different; disagreeing; contrary.

To that intent was speech specially given, wherein he is most discrepant from brute beasts.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 77.

Master Justice, doth not your worship know this gentleman who is your neighbour's son, and hath absented himself from his father's house, in an habit so undecent and discrepant from his calling, as you may perceive?

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. iv. 17.

TO DISCRETE. v. a. [discretus, Lat.] To separate; to discontinue.

As for its diaphaneity, it enjoyeth that most eminently; as having its earthly and salinous parts so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous, and not discreted by atomical terminations. Brown.

DISCRETE. adj. [discretus, Lat.]

1. Distinct; disjoined; not continuous.

Discrete quantity, or different individuals, are measured by number, without any breaking continuity, that is, in things that have continuity, as continued quantity and motion.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Disjunctive; as, I resign my life, but not my honour, is a discrete proposition.

The parts are not discrete, or dissentany, for both conclude not putting away, and consequently in such a form the proposition is ridiculous. Milton, Tetrachordon.

3. Discrete Proportion is when the ratio between two pairs of numbers or quantities is the same; but there is not the same proportion between all the four: thus, 6 : 8 :: 3 : 4. Harris.

DISCRETION. n. s. [from discretio, Lat. Dr. Johnson says. I must add Sir T. Elyot's remark on discretion. "Modesty seemeth to be much like that which men commonly call discretion. Albeit discretio in Latin signifieth separation; wherein it is more like to election. But as it is commonly used, it is not only like to modesty, but is the selfe modesty. For he that forbearth to speak, although he can do it both wisely and eloquently, because neither in the time, nor in the hearers, he findeth opportunity so, that no fruit may succede of his speech; he therefore is vulgarly called a discreet person." Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 78.]

1. Prudence; knowledge to govern or direct one's self; skill; wise management.

Nothing then was further thought upon for the manner of governing; but all permitted unto their wisdom and discretion which were to rule.

Hooker.

A knife may be taken away from a child, without depriving them of the benefits thereof, which have years and discretion to use it.

Hooker.

It is not good that children should know any wickedness: old folks have discretion, and know the world.

Shakspeare.

All this was order'd by the good discretion Of the right reverend cardinal of York.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The pleasure of commanding our passions is to be preferred before any sensual pleasure; because it is the pleasure of wisdom and discretion.

Tillotson.

But cave in poetry must still be had, It asks discretion, ev'n in running mad.

Pope.

There is no talent so useful towards rising in the world, or which puts men more out of the reach of fortune, than discretion, a species of lower prudence.

Swift.

2. Liberty of acting at pleasure; uncontrolled, and unconditional power; as, he surrenders at discretion; that is, without stipulation.

3. Disjunction; separation. Not now in use.

It is very probable, that to shew their despicency of the poor Gentiles, and to pride themselves in their prerogative and discretion from them, they [the Jews] affected to have such acts there done.

Mede, Diatr. p. 191.

DISCRETIONAL.* adj. [from discretion.] Unlimited.

This is the modern word for discretionary.

All this amounts not to any thing of a discretionary authority placed in the hands of tutelar angels.

Bp. Horsley, Sermon ii. 416.

DISCRETIONALLY.* adv. [from discretionary.] At pleasure; at choice.

Hour is a rhyme to power; and though it has often been thought necessary to write the latter word with an apostrophe when it is used as a monosyllable, yet if hour may be used discretionally as one or two syllables, power may surely be allowed the same latitude, without any change in its form.

Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, p. 80.

DISCRETIONARY.* adj. [from discretion.] Left at large; unlimited; unrestrained.

A deacon may have a dispensation for entering into orders before he is twenty-three years of age, and it is discretionary in the bishop to admit him to that order at what time he thinks fit.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

The major being a person of consummate experience, was invested with discretionary power.

Tuttler.

DISCRETIVE.* adj. [discretus, Lat.]

1. [In logic.] Discretive propositions are such wherein various, and seemingly opposite judgments are made, whose variety or distinction is noted by the particles but, though, yet, &c. as, travellers may change their climate, but not their temper: Job was patient, though his grief was great. Watts.

2. [In grammar.] Discretive distinctions are such as imply opposition; as, not a man, but a beast.

Because the conjunction here is discretive, "BUT of the tree," one concludeth from thence, that therefore it must needs be in the middle of the garden; though the Hebrew be not and, but and, &c.

Gregory, Notes on Script. p. 80.

3. Separate; distinct.

Bullockar.

DISCRETIVELY.* adv. [from discretive.] In a manner grammatically distinguishing.

Discriminative Providence knew before the nature and course of all things.

More, Anti-against Atheism.

DISCRIMINATIVELY.* adv. [from discriminative.] In an observance of due distinction.

But if the name of God be pronounced by the discreet and misusage of the things it is called upon, then rarely it is sanclified when the same are worthily and discriminatively used, that is, as becometh the relation they have to him.

Mede, Diatr. p. 62.

DISCRIMINOUS. adj. [from discrimen, Latin.] Dangerous; hazardous. Not usual.

Any kind of spitting of blood imports a very discriminous state, unless it happens upon the gaping of a vein opened by a plethory.

Harvey on Consumptions.

DISCRUCIATING.* adj. [Lat. discrucio.] Painful.

To single hearts doubling is discruciating.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 20.

DISCUBITORY. adj. [discubitorius, Lat.] Fitted to the posture of leaning.

After bathing they retired to bed, and refreshed themselves with a repast; and so that custom, by degrees, changed their cubicular beds into discubitory.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To DISCULPATE.* v. a. [dis and culpo, Lat.] To exculpate; to clear from the imputation of a fault.

If a young wench, to disculpate herself, should tell me in a whimpering tone, that the man who deceived her had eyes irradiated with affection, that their language expressed an unalterable constancy in the most tender accents; I would tell her flatly, that she does not know how to read; that through the mist of her own passion, she might imagine to see fine things; but they were no realities.

Letters on Physiognomy, (1753,) p. 425.

My disculpating him from the charge of fear would awaken, in some of you, a suspicion of a less defensible motive for that retreat.

Ashton, Fast Sermon. (1758,) Sermon. p. 144.

DISCUMBENCY. n. s. [discumbens, Lat.] The act of leaning at meat, after the ancient manner.

The Greeks and Romans used the custom of discumbency at meals, which was upon their left side; for so their right hand was free and ready for all service.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To DISCUMBER. v. a. [dis and cumber.] To disengage from any troublesome weight; to disengage from impediment.

His limbs discumber'd of the clinging vest,

To ease you of that ill.

Spenser, F. Q.

DISCURRENT.* adj. [dis and current.] Not current; deprived of circulation.

For any other new [editions] to be set out by their [the papists'] adversaries there is no great fear; whose books being discurrent in all catholicks' countries, their want of means requisite to utter an impression would dishearten them from the charge.

Sir E. Saundys, State of Religion.

DISCURSIST.* n. s. [Lat. discursus.] An arguer; a disputer. See DISCOURSE.

Great discursists were apt to intrigue affairs, dispute the prince's resolution, and stir up the people.

L. Addison's West Barbury, (1671,) Pref.

DISCURSIVE. adj. [discursif, Fr. from discurvo, Lat.]

1. Moving here and there; roving; desultory.

Some noises help sleep; as the blowing of the wind, and the trickling of water: they move a gentle attention, and whatsoever moveth attention, without too much labour, stilleth the natural and discursive motion of the spirits.

Bacon.

2. Proceeding by regular gradation from premises to consequences; argumentative. This is sometimes, perhaps not improperly, written discursive.

There is a unity of soul and body, of more efficacy for the receiving of divine truths, than the greatest pretences to discursive demonstration.

More, Divine Dialogues.

There hath been much dispute touching the knowledge of brutes, whether they have a kind of discursive faculty, which some call reason.

Hale, Orig. of Manhood.

DISCURSIVELY. adv. [from discursive.] By due gradation of argument.

We have a principle within, whereby we think, and we know we think; whereby we do discursively, and by way of ratiocination, deduce one thing from another.

Hale.

DISCURSIVENESS.* n. s. [from discursive.] Due gradation of arguments.

The exercise of our minds in rational discursiveness about things in quest of truth — how greatly doth it better us!

Barrow, Sermon. iii. 22.

Two potent thrones, that to be less than gods

2. To grow impatient or angry.

Ajax, deprived of Achilles's armour, which he hoped from the suffrage of the Greeks, disdains; and, growing impatient of the injury, rageth and runs mad. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

DISDAIN. n. s. [sdegno, Ital.] Contempt; scorn; contemptuous anger; indignation.

Children being haughty, through disdain and want of nurture, do stain the nobility of their kindred. Eccles.

But against you, ye Greeks, ye coward train, Gods! how my soul is mov'd with just disdain! Pope, Odys.

DISDAINFUL. adj. [disdain and full.] Contemptuous; haughtily scornful; indignant.

There will come a time when three words, uttered with charity and meekness, shall receive a far more blessed reward than three thousand volumes, written with disdainful sharpness of wit. Hooker.

The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt t' accuse it,
Disdainful to be tried by't. Shakespeare.

Seek through this grove;
A sweet Athenian lady is in love
With a disdainful youth: anoint his eyes;
But do it when the next thing he espies
Shall be the lady. Shakespeare.

But those I can accuse, I can forgive:
By my disdainful silence let them live. Dryden.
The disdainful soul came rushing through the wound. Dryden.

DISDAINFULLY. adv. [from disdainful.] Contemptuously; with haughty scorn; with indignation.

Either greet him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more. Shakespeare.

DISDAINFULNESS. n. s. [from disdainful.] Contempt; contemptuousness; haughty scorn.

Can I forget, when they in prison placing her,
With swelling heart, in spite and due disdainfulness,
She lay for dead, till I help'd with unlacing her. Sidney.
A proud disdainfulness of other men. Ascham.

DISDAINING. * n. s. Scorn; contempt.

Say her disdaining justly must be grac'd
With name of chast;
And that she frowns lest longing should exceed,
And raging breed:
So her disdains can ne'er offend,
Unless self-love take private end. Donne, Dialogue with Sir H. Wotton.

DISEASE. * n. s. [old Fr. desaise; dis and ease.]

1. Distemper; malady; sickness; morbid state.

What's the disease he means?
— 'Tis call'd the evil. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet, and his disease was exceeding great; and in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians. 2 Chron. xvi. 12.

It is idle to propose remedies before we are assured of the disease, or to be in pain till we are convinced of the danger. Swift, Proj. for the Advan. of Religion.

Intemperance
In meats and drinks, which in the earth shall bring Diseases dire. Milton, P. L.

Then wasteful forth
Walks the dire power of pestilent disease. Thomson, Summer.

DIS

2. Uneasiness. Not now in use. But see the second sense of To DISEASE.

Shepherds they weren of the best,
And liv'd in lowly leas;
And, sith their souls be now at rest,
Why done we them disease? Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.
That night they past in great disease.
Till that the morning, bringing early light
To guide men's labours, brought them also ease. Spenser, F. Q. vi. v. 40.

TO DISEASE. * v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To afflict with disease; to torment with pain or sickness; to make morbid; to infect.

We are all diseased,
And with our surfeiting and wanton hours
Have brought ourselves into a burning fever. Shakespeare.

Flat'ers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft,
Hug their diseas'd perfumes, and have forgot
That ever Timon was. Shakespeare.

Let her alone, lady: as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth. Shakespeare.

He was diseased in his feet. 1 Kings, xv. 23.

A leazar-house it seem'd, wherein were laid
Numbers of all diseas'd, all maladies
Of ghastly spasm, or racking torture. Milton, P. L.

2. To put to pain; to pain; to make uneasy; to disturb. Dr. Johnson cites only Locke as affording an example of the word thus used: but it is also supported by old and good authority.

What art thou that thus diseases the king, which is now at his rest? Sir T. Elgot, Gov. fol. 157.

That I should disease myself, or my reader, with a perpetual examination of it, may seem superfluous.

Chillingworth, Rel. of Prot. iv. § 19.
Though great light be insufferable to our eyes, yet the highest degree of darkness does not at all disease them. Locke.

DISEASEDNESS. n. s. [from diseased.] Sickness; morbidness: the state of being diseased.

This is a restoration to some former state; not that state of indigency and diseasedness. Burnet's Theory.

DISEASEFUL. * adj. [disease and full.]

1. Abounding with disease; producing disease.

This great hospital, this sick, this diseaseful world.

Addison, Freeholder.

DISEMBODIED. † adj. [dis and embodied.] Divested of the body. See DISBODIED.

To DISEMBODY. * v. a. To discharge from military incorporation.

If the same [corps] shall be embodied, then, within two months after, it shall be disembodied, and returned to the respective counties.

Militia Act, 2 Geo. III. ch. 20.

To DISEMBOUE. † v. a. [desemboucher, old Fr. Skinner.]

1. To pour out at the mouth of a river; to vent.

There is no river so small, but disembogues itself into the sea.

Hewyl, Serm. (1658), p. 86.

Rivers

In ample oceans disembogued, or lost.

Dryden, Ovid.

Rolling down, the steep Timavus raves,

And through nine channels disembogues his waves.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To eject; to cast forth.

If I get in adoors, not the power o' th' country,

Nor all my Aunt's curses shall disembogue me.

Beaum. and Fl. Little Thief.

By these and the like performances, they were grown sufficiently replete, they would immediately depart, and disembogue, for the publick good, a plentiful share of their acquirements into their disciples' chaps.

Swift, Tale of a Tub.

To DISEMBOUE. † v. n. To gain a vent; to flow.

My ships ride in the bay,

Ready to disembogue, tackled, and mann'd,

Even to my wishes.

Beaum. and Fl. Knight of Malta.

By eminences placed up and down the globe, the rivers make innumerable turnings and windings, and at last disembogue in several mouths into the sea.

Cheyne.

O'erwhelming turrets threaten ere they fall;

Volcanoes bellow ere they disembogue.

Young, Night Th. 3.

DISEMBOSOMED. * part. adj. [dis and embosom.] Separated from the bosom.

Uninjur'd from our praise can He escape,

Who, disembosom'd from the Father, bows

The heaven of heavens, to kiss the distant earth?

Young, Night Th. 9.

DISEMBOWELLED. participial adj. [dis and embowel.] Taken from out the bowels.

So her disembowell'd web,

Arachne in a hall or kitchen spreads,

Obvious to vagrant flies.

Philips.

To DISEMBRANGLE. * v. a. [from dis and brangle, to wrangle. See To BRANGLE.] To free from squabble, litigation, or impediment.

For God's sake disembrangle these matters, that I may once be at ease to mind my other affairs of the college, which are enough to employ me persons.

Bp. Berkeley's Letters, p. 109.

To DISEMBROIL. * v. a. [debroiler, French.] To disentangle; to free from perplexity; to reduce from confusion.

Then earth from air, and seas from earth were driv'n,
And grosser air sunk from etherial heav'n;

Thus disembroll'd, they take their proper place.

Dryden.

The system of his politics is disembroided, and cleared of all those incoherences and independent matters that are woven into this motley piece.

Addison, Whig Examiner.

To DISENA'BLE. † v. a. [dis and enable.] To deprive of power; to disable; to sink into weakness; to weaken.

Nor have they done any thing of late with more diligence, than to hinder or break the happy assembling of parliaments, however needful to repair the shattered and disjointed frame of the commonwealth; or if they cannot do this, to cross, to disenable, and traduce all parliamentary proceedings.

Milton, Reason of Ch. Government.

Now age has overtaken me; and want, a more insupportable evil, through the change of the times, has wholly disenabled me.

Dryden.

To DISENCHANT. v. a. [dis and enchant.] To free from the force of an enchantment; to deliver from the power of charms or spells.

Alas! let your own brain disenchant you.

Sidney.

Muse, stoop thy disenchanted wing to truth.

Denham.

Haste to thy work; a noble stroke or two

Ends all the charms, and disenchants the grove.

Dryden.

To DISENCUMBER. v. a. [dis and encumber.]

1. To discharge from incumbrances; to free from clogs and impediments: to disburthen; to exonerate.

It will need the actual intention, the particular stress and application of the whole soul, to disencumber and set it free, to scour off its rust, and remove those hindrances which would otherwise clog and check the freedom of its operations.

Sprat.

The disencumber'd soul

Flew off, and left behind the clouds and starry pole.

Dryden.

Dreams look like the amusements of the soul, when she is disencumber'd of her machine; her sports and recreations, when she has laid her charge asleep.

Spectator.

2. To free from obstruction of any kind.

Dim night had disencumber'd heav'n.

Milton, P. L.

The church of St. Justina, designed by Palladio, is the most handsome, luminous, disencumbered building, in the inside that I have ever seen.

Addison on Italy.

DISENCUMBRANCE. n. s. [from the verb.] Freedom from encumbrance and obstruction.

There are many who make a figure below what their fortune or merit entitles them to, out of mere choice, and an elegant desire of ease and disencumbrance.

Spectator.

To DISENGAGE. v. a. [dis and engage.]

1. To separate from any thing with which it is in union.

Some others, being very light, would float up and down a good while, before they could wholly disengage themselves and descend.

Burnet's Theory.

2. To disentangle; to clear from impediments or difficulties.

From civil broils he did us disengage;

Found nobler objects for our martial rage.

Waller.

In the next paragraph, I found my author pretty well disengaged from quotations.

Atterbury.

3. To withdraw, applied to the affection: to wean; to abstract the mind.

It is requisite that we should acquaint ourselves with God, that we should frequently disengage our hearts from earthly pursuits.

Atterbury.

The consideration that should disengage our fondness from worldly things, is, that they are uncertain in their foundation, fading, transient, and corruptible in their nature.

Rogers.

4. To free from any powerful detention.

When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,

They clearer, farther, and distinctly see.

Denham.

5. To release from an obligation.

To DISENGAGE. v. n. To set one's self free from; to withdraw one's affections from.

Providence gives us notice, by sensible declensions, that we may disengage from the world by degrees. Collier on Thought.

DISENGAGED. † participial adj. [from disengage.]

1. Disjoined; disentangled.

2. Vacant; at leisure; not fixed down to any particular object of attention.

Every thing, he says, must be in a free and disengaged manner. Spectator, No. 618.

3. Released from obligation.

DISENGAGEDNESS. n. s. [from disengage.] The quality of being disengaged; vacuity of attention; freedom from any pressing business; disjunction.

DISENGAGEMENT. † n. s. [from disengage.]

1. Release from any engagement, or obligation.

Those who — apply themselves to God by earnest prayer, feel a disengagement from [evil] impressions, and themselves endued with a power to resist them.

Burnet, Life of Lord Rochester, p. 47.

2. Freedom of attention; vacancy.

To DISENNOBLE. * v. a. [dis and ennoble.] Buck, in his history of Richard the third, uses the verb disnoble. To deprive of that which ennobles a person.

An unworthy behaviour degrades and disennobles a man in the eye of the world, as much as birth and family aggrandize and exalt him. Guardian, No. 137.

To DISENROLL. * v. a. [dis and enroll.] To erase or remove out of a roll or list.

He will not disenroll

Your name. Donne, Poems, p. 164.

To DISENSLAVE. * v. a. [dis and enslave.] To redeem from slavery; to set free.

By so doing, he shall disenslave and redeem his soul from a captivity to the things he enjoys.

South, Sermon, vol. 2. S. 2.

To DISENTANGLE. v. a. [dis and entangle.]

1. To unfold or loose the parts of any thing interwoven with one another.

Though in concretions particles so entangle one another, that they cannot in a short time clear themselves, yet they do incessantly strive to disentangle themselves, and get away.

Boule.

2. To set free from impediments; to disembroil; to clear from perplexity or difficulty.

Till they could find some expedient to explicate and disentangle themselves out of this labyrinth, they made no advance towards supplying their armies. Clarendon.

The welfare of their souls requires a better judgement than their own, either to guide them in their duty, or to disentangle them from a temptation. South.

3. To disengage; to separate.

Neither can God himself be otherwise understood by us than as a mind free, and disentangled from all corporeal mixtures. Stillfleet.

DISENTANGLEMENT. * n. s. [from disentangle.] The act of clearing from perplexity or difficulty.

In the disentanglement of this distressful tale, we are happy to find, that all his cruelty was tenderness, and his inconsistency the most invariable truth. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 160.

To DISENTERRE. v. a. [dis and enterrer, French.]

To unbury; to take out of the grave.

Though the blindness of some fanatics have savaged on the bodies of the dead, and have been so injurious unto worms as to disenterre the bodies of the deceased, yet had they therein no design upon the soul. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To DISENTHRAL. v. a. [dis and enthrall.] To set free; to restore to liberty; to rescue from slavery.

But God my soul shall disenthrall;

For I upon his name will call,

Sandys.

If religion were false, bad men would set the utmost force of their reason on work to discover that falsity, and thereby disenthrall themselves. South.

To DISENTHRONE. † v. a. [dis and enthroned.] To depose from sovereignty; to dethrone.

The poets feign that the angry Earth, to be revenged of the gods, brought forth the Titans, as after the giants; who, by throwing mountains upon mountains, attempted to scale the heavens, and disenthroned Jupiter.

Sandys, Notes on Christ's Passion, (1640.)

Either to disenthroned the king of heav'n

We war, if war be best; or to regain

Our own right lost.

Milton, P. L.

To DISENTITLE. * v. a. [dis and entitle.] To deprive of claim or title.

The reason that every ordinary offence does not disentitle a son to the love of his father, as it does the creature to the protection and favour of his Creator, is not from the obliging nature of that relation beyond the other, but from the law and command of God. South, Sermon, viii. 137.

To DISENTRANCE. v. a. [dis and entrance.] To awaken from a trance, or deep sleep.

Ralpho, by this time disentranc'd,

Upon his bum himself advanc'd.

Hudibras.

To DISESPOUSE. v. a. [dis and espouse.] To separate after faith plighted.

Such was the rage

Of Turnus for Lavinia disposu'd.

Milton, P. L.

DISESTEEM. † n. s. [dis and esteem.] Slight regard; a disregard more moderate than contempt.

Though outward things can add nothing to our essential worth; yet, when we are judged of by the help of others' outward senses, they much conduce to value or disesteem.

Feltham, Res. i. 18.

As it is a particular disesteem of every knowing person alive, and most injurious to the written labours and monuments of the dead, so to me it seems an undervaluing and vilifying of the whole nation. Milton, Arcopagitica.

This amongst us, is so little cared for, finds such disesteem and slight observance when it appears; meets with such resolute hardened stubborn hearts, that it is a miracle, if it ever be brought to submit itself to such coarse entertainment.

Hammond, Sermon, xvii.

When any one, by miscarriage, falls into disesteem, he will fall under neglect and contempt. Locke.

To DISESTEEM. † v. a. [from the noun.] To regard slightly; to consider with a slight degree of contempt.

Common people do sometimes also disesteem the prince for external and light causes, as deformity of person, sickness, or such like. Raleigh, Arts of Empire, p. 67.

Should Mars see't,

That horrid hurrier of men, or she that betters him,
Minerva, never so incens'd; they could not disesteem.

Chapman.

It were an injury to gratitude,

To disesteem her favours. Beaumont, and Fl. Laws of Candy.

But if this sacred gift you disesteem,

Then cruel plagues shall fall on Priam's state. Denham.

I would not be thought to disesteem or dissuade the study of nature. Locke.

DISESTIMATION. † n. s. [dis and astimatio, Lat.] Disrespect; disesteem. Dict.

Three kinds of contempt; disestimation, disappointment, calumny. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 30.

To DISEXERCISE. * v. a. [dis and exercise.] To deprive of exercise.

It will be primely to the discouragement of all learning, and the stop of truth, not only by disexercising and blunting our abilities, in what we know already, but by hindering and cropping the discovery that might be yet further made, both in religious and civil wisdom. Milton, Arcopagitica.

To DISFANCY. * v. a. [dis and fancy.] To dislike.

Those are titles, that every man will apply as he lists, the one to himself and his adherents, the other to all others that he dislikes.
Hammond, Serm. xi.

DISFAVOUR.† n. s. [dis and favour.]

1. Discountenance; unpropitious regard; unfavourable aspect; unfavourable circumstance.

By the grace of God, I will oppose, to my poor utmost, every the least thing which shall be offered in disfavour to the Established Church. Abp. Daves to Bp. Nicholson, (1718.)

A constant course of disfavour from men in authority, would prove a more effectual check to all such miscreants.

Bp. Berkeley, Add. to Magistrates.

2. A state of ungraciousness or unacceptableness; a state in which one is not favoured.

While free from sacrifice, he was at peace, at it were, with God and man; but after his sacrifice, he was in disfavour with both. Spelman.

3. Want of beauty. Dict.

To DISFAVOUR.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To discountenance; to withhold or withdraw kindness.

Appius Claudius having lived long an enemy to the multitude, hoping by their aid to continue his authority of the Decemviri in Rome, became their friend, and disfavoured the factions of great men. Raleigh, Arts of Empire, p. 98.

Might not those of higher rank, and nearer access to her majesty, receive her own commands, and be countenanced or disfavoured according as they obey? Swift.

2. To deform.

Rub these hands

With what may cause an eating leprosy,
E'en to my bones and marrow; any thing,
That may disfavour me, save in my honour. B. Jonson, For.

DISFAVOURER. n. s. [from disfavour.] Discountenancer; not a favourer.

It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavours of that voyage, the enterprize had succeeded. Bacon.

DISFIGURATION. n. s. [from disfigure.]

1. The act of disfiguring.
2. The state of being disfigured.
3. Deformity.

To DISFIGURE. v. a. [dis and figure.] To change any thing to a worse form; to deform; to mangle.

You are but as a form in wax
By him imprinted, and within his power
To leave the figure, or disfigure it. Shakespeare.

In this the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigured. Shakespeare.

Object is their punishment,
Disfiguring not God's likeness, but their own,
Or, if his likeness, by themselves defac'd. Milton, P. L.

Uriel, on the Assyrian mount,
Saw him disfigur'd more than could befall Spirit of happy sort. Milton, P. L.

A nose flatter, or a mouth wider, could have consisted, as well as the rest of his figure, with such soul and such parts as made him, disfigured as he was, capable to be a dignitary in the church. Locke.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia. Addison, Cato.

His long absence, and travels, which had disfigured him, made him altogether unknown. Broome on Epick Poetry.

DISFIGUREMENT. n. s. [from disfigure.] Defacement of beauty; change of a better form to a worse.

The disfigurement that travel and sickness has bestowed upon him, is not thought great by the lady of the tale. Suckling.

And they, so perfect is their misery,
Not once perceive their foul disfigurement. Milton, Comus.

To DISFOREST. v. a. [dis and forest.] To reduce land from the privileges of a forest to the state of common land.To DISFRANCHISE.† v. a. [dis and franchise.] To deprive of privileges or immunities.

Bullock, and Cockeram.

They went further; they disfranchis'd them.

Burke, vindication of Natural Society.

Any particular member may be disfranchis'd, or lose his place in the corporation, by acting contrary to the laws of his society, or laws of the land. Blackstone.

DISFRANCHISEMENT. n. s. [from disfranchise.] The act of depriving of privileges. *Dict.*To DISFURNISH.† v. a. [dis and furnish.] To deprive; to unfurnish; to strip.

This report was made by one of the conspirators, and therewith divers other things agreed: the old hostile between the houses of Pompey and Cæsar, the wild and seditious wit of Cinna, with the place and time, where and when, the emperor should be disfurnished of servants. Sir T. Elgot, Gov. fol. 104.

My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfurnish me,
You take the sum and substance that I have. Shakespeare.

He durst not disfurnish that country either of so great a commander, or of the wonted garrisons. Knolles, History.

To DISFRIAR.* v. a. [dis and friar.] To abandon the state of a friar.

That over-great severity would cause a great number to disfriar themselves, and fly to Geneva.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

Many did quickly un-nun and disfriar themselves, whose sides formerly used to go loose. Fuller, Holy War, p. 238.

To DISGARNISH. v. a. [dis and garnish.]

1. To strip of ornaments. Dict.
2. To take guns from a fortress.

To DISGARRISON.* v. a. [dis and garrison.] To deprive of a garrison.

Be thou our king; set up thy throne in our hearts; dismantle, and disgarrison, all the strong holds and fortifications of sin. Dr. Hewyt, Prayer before Sermon, (temp. K. Ch. I.)

To DISGLORIFY. v. a. [dis and glorify.] To deprive of glory; to treat with indignity.

So Dagon shall be magnify'd, and God,
Besides whom is no god, compar'd with idols,
Disglorify'd, blasphem'd, and had in scorn. Milton, S. A.

To DISGALLANT.* v. a. [dis and gallant.] To deprive of gallantry.

Sir, let not this discountenance or disgallant you a whit, you must not sink under the first disaster.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

To DISGORGE.† v. a. [degorge, Fr. from gorge, the throat.]

1. To discharge by the mouth; to spew out; to vomit.

So, so, thou common dog, did'st thou disgorge
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard?

And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up. Shakespeare.

God knows how many such fools there be in the world, that solemnly resolve themselves to his service, come to the Font to make, to the Table of the Lord to repeat, these vows; and all their lives after do but busy themselves to wipe off the water of one, vomit up, disgorge the other. Hammond, Serm. v.

Hence come all the jars between learned men, the invectives and bitter books, the wars of critics, and the controversies of the schools; all managed with such keenness and virulence, throwing dirt, and disgorging daggers at one another's reputation. South, Serm. ix. 277.

From the distant shore they loudly laugh,
To see his heaving breast disgorge the briny draught. Dryden.

2. To pour out with violence.

All the embossed sores and headed evils,
That thou with licence of free foot hast caught,
Would'st thou disgorge into the general world? Shakespeare.

The deep-drawing barks do there disgorge
Their warlike fraughtage.

Shakespeare.

They move along the banks

Of four infernal rivers, that disgorge

Into the burning lake their baleful streams.

Milton, P. L.

Countries, much annoyed with earthquakes, have volcanoes; and these are constantly all in flames, whenever any earthquake happens; they disgorging that fire which was the cause of the disaster.

Derham.

DISGORGE. * n. s. [from disgorge.] A vomit.

Neither have these prodigious wretches smothered their damnable conceits in their impure breasts, but have boldly vented them to the world, so as the very presses are openly defiled with the most loathsome disgorgements of their wicked blasphemies.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 162.

To DISGOSPEL. * v. n. [dis and To gospel; which Dr. Johnson, under that verb, says he never met with but in Shakespeare. But see To GOSPEL.] To differ from the precepts of the gospel.

They possess huge benefices for lazy performances, great promotions only for the execution of a cruel disgosselling jurisdiction.

Milton, Apology for Smeectymnus.

DISGRACE. n. s. [disgrace, Fr.]

1. State of being out of favour.

2. State of ignominy; dishonour; state of shame.

Like a dull actor now,

I have forgot my part, and I am out

Even to a full disgrace.

Shakespeare.

Poetry, howsoever censured, is not fallen from the highest stage of honour to the lowest stair of disgrace.

Peacham.

3. Act of unkindness. Obsolete.

To such bondage he was for so many courses tied by her whose disgraces to him were graced by her excellence.

Sidney.

4. Cause of shame.

And is it not a foul disgrace,

To lose the boltsprit of thy face?

Baynard.

And he whose affluence disdain'd a plate,

Brill'd by a title, makes it a disgrace.

Brown.

To DISGRACE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bring a reproach upon; to dishonour, as an agent.

We may not so in any one special kind admire her, that we disgrace her in any other; but let all her ways be according unto their place and degree adored.

Hooker.

Men's passions will carry them far in misrepresenting an opinion which they have a mind to disgrace.

Burnet.

2. To bring to shame, as a cause: as, His ignorance disgraced him.

3. To put out of favour; as, the minister was disgraced.

DISGRACEFUL. adj. [Disgrace and full.] Shameful; ignominious; reproachful; procuring shame.

Masters must correct their servants with gentleness, prudence, and mercy: not with upbraiding and disgraceful language, but with such only as may express and reprove the fault, and amend the person. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

To retire behind their chariots was a little disgraceful then, as it is now to alight from one's horse in a battle.

Pope.

DISGRACEFULLY. adv. [from disgraceful.] In disgrace; with indignity; ignominiously.

The senate have cast you forth

Disgracefully, to be the common tale

Of the whole city.

B. Jonson, Cataline.

DISGRACEFULNESS. n. s. [from disgraceful.] Ignominy.

DISGRACER. † n. s. [from disgrace.] One that exposes to shame; one that causes ignominy.

The Jesuits—affected of superiority, and disgracers of all that refuse to depend upon them.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

I have given good advice to those infamous disgracers of the sex and calling.

Swift.

DISGRACIOUS. adj. [dis and gracious.] Unpleasing.

I do suspect I have done some offence,
That seems disgracious in the city's eye.

Shakespeare.

To DISGRADE. * v. a. Our old word for degrade.

See To DEGRADE. To disgrade a clerk, a knight, a lord, was, formerly, to deprive them of their state and privileges. V. Cowel in V. DISGRADING.

To DISGREGATE. * v. a. [dis and greg, gregis, Lat.]

A serviceable word, as the opposite to congregate, and is indeed in our old lexicography, though unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.] To separate; to disperse.

But truth doth clear, unweave, and simplify,

Search, sever, pierce, open, and disregulate

All asceticious cloggings. More, Song of the Soul, ii. iii. 25.

Black doth congregate, unite, and fortify the sight; the other [white] disregate, scatter, and enfeeble it, when it fixeth upon any object.

Howell, Lett. i. vi. 35.

To DISGUISE. v. a. [deguiser, Fr. dis and guise.]

1. To conceal by an unusual dress.

How might we disguise him?

—Alas, I know not: there is no woman's gown big enough for him.

Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

Disguis'd he came; but those his children dear

Their parent soon discern'd, through his disguise.

Milton, P. L.

2. To hide by a counterfeit appearance; to cloak by a false shew: as, he disguis'd his anger.

3. To disfigure; to change the form.

They saw the faces, which too well they knew,

Though then disguis'd in death, and smear'd all o'er

With filth obscene, and dropping putrid gore. Dryden, JEn.

More duteous at her call,

Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd.

Milton, P. L.

Ulysses wakes, not knowing the place where he was; because Minerva made all things appear in a disguis'd view.

Pope.

4. To deform by liquor: a low term.

I have just left the right worshipful and his myrmidons, about a snaker of five gallons: the whole magistracy was pretty well disguis'd before I gave them the slip.

Spectator.

DISGUISE. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A dress contrived to conceal the person that wears it.

They generally act in a disguise themselves, and therefore mistake all outward show and appearances for hypocrisy in others.

Addison.

Since I in Arcite cannot Arcite find,

The world may search in vain with all their eyes,

But never penetrate through this disguise.

Dryden, Fables.

2. A false appearance; counterfeit show.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, surmises,

False oaths, false tears, deceits, disguises.

Pope.

3. Disorder by drink.

You see we've burnt our cheeks; and mine own tongue

Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost Antickt us.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

4. A mask, or interlude. See DISGUISEING.

[He] that made disguises

For the king's sons, and writ in ballad royal

Daintily well.

B. Jonson, Fortun. Isles.

O what a mask was there, what a disguise!

Milton, Ode on The Passion.

DISGUISEMENT. n. s. [from disguise.] Dress of concealment.

Under that disguisement I should find opportunity to reveal myself to the owner of my heart.

Sidney.

The marquis thought best to disarm his beard, and told him, that he was going covertly to take a secret view of the forwardness of his majesty's fleet: this did somewhat handsomely heal the disguisement.

Wotton.

DISGUISE. n. s. [from disguise.]

1. One that puts on a disguise.

I hope he is grown more disengaged from his interestness on his own affairs, which is quite the reverse to you, unless you are a very dexterous disguiser. Swift.

2. One that conceals another by a disguise; one that disfigures.

Death's a great disguiser.

Shakespeare.

DISGUI'SING. * n. s. [from disguise.]

1. Theatrical pastime; frolick in masks; mummerly.

This christmas [1489] I saw no disguisings, and but right few plays. Leland's Coll. iii. Append. p. 256.

At such a time

As Christmas, when disguising is o' foot,
To ask of the inventions, and the men,
The wits and the engines that move those orbs!

B. Jonson, Marquis.

There were fine and subtle disguisings, masks, and mummeries.

Stow, Hist. of Lond. i. 304.

They not only committed to writing the process of the lists, but it was also their business, at magnificent feasts, to describe the number and parade of the dishes, the quality of the guests, the brilliant dresses of the ladies, the courtesy of the knights, the revels, disguisings, banquets, and every other occurrence most observable in the course of the solemnity.

Warburton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 333.

2. The act of giving an appearance of truth to falsehood.

Maugre their calumnies, lies, dreams, and disguisings.

Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 211.

DISGU'ST. * n. s. [degout, Fr.]

1. Aversion of the palate from any thing.
2. Ill-humour; malevolence; offence conceived.

The manner of doing is of more consequence than the thing done, and upon that depends the satisfaction or disgust wherewith it is received. Locke.

Thence dark disgust and hatred, winding wiles,
Coward deceit, and ruffian violence.

Thomson.

To DISGU'ST. † n. a. [degouter, Fr. degusto, Lat.]

1. To raise aversion in the stomach; to distaste.

Our sunshine is but yet declining; it may come to set, if we now begin to disgust this greatest blessing of religion, which God hath bestowed upon us.

Dr. Holdsworth, Sermon at Cambridge, (1642,) p. 37.

There are no such enemies to prince or people, as they who, by any evils, make a breach upon a prince's righteousness. — Seldom do such counsellors go to their graves in peace: sometimes they are given up by princes as a sacrifice to popular fury, to expiate their own guilt; sometimes he disgusts them himself.

Spencer, Righteous Ruler, (1660,) p. 27.

By our own fickleness, and inconstancy, disgusting the deliverance now it is come, which we so earnestly desired before it came. Tillotson, Sermon. xxxii.

2. To strike with dislike; to offend. It is variously constructed with at or with.

If a man were disgusted at marriage, he would never recommend it to his friend. Alterbury.

Those unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders which the microscope has discovered. Watts.

3. To produce aversion: with from.

What disgusts me from having to do with answer-jobbers is, that they have no conscience. Swift.

DISGU'STIFUL. † adj. [disgust and full.] Nauseous; that which causes aversion.

We must observe them [silence and solitude] diligently, discreetly, and devoutly; not out of a sullen or melancholy humour, or in a disdainful or disgustful manner.

Spiritual Conquest, (1651,) v. 95.

I have finished the most disgustful task that ever I undertook. Swift.

DISGU'STINGLY. * adv. [from the participle disgusting.] In a manner to disgust.

The road grew mountainous, and more disgustingly bare, except for a mile or two. Swinburne, Spain, Let. 19.

DISH. * n. s. [Dipe, Sax. dysc, Live; digus, Lat.]

1. A broad wide vessel, in which food is served up at the table.

Of these he murders one; he boils the flesh,
And lays the mangled morsels in a dish.

Dryden.

I saw among the ruins an old heathen altar, with this particularity in it, that it is hollowed like a dish at one end; but it was not this end on which the sacrifice was laid. Addison.

2. A deep hollow vessel for liquid food.

Who would rob a hermit of his weeds,

His few books, or his beads, or maple dish;

Or do his grey hairs any violence?

Milton, Comus.

A ladle for our silver dish

Is what I want, is what I wish.

Prior.

3. The meat served in a dish: any particular kind of food.

I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;

Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,

Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds. Shakespeare, J. Cæs.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,

One bred of alms and foster'd with cold dishes,

With scraps o' th' court; it is no contract, none. Shakespeare.

'Tis not the meat, but 'tis the appetite

Makes eating a delight;

And if I like one dish

More than another, that a pheasant is.

Suckling.

The earth would have been deprived of a most excellent and wholesome fare, and very many delicious dishes that we have the use and benefit of. Woodward.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.

4. A kind of measure among the tinnerns.

They measure block-tin by the dish, which containeth a gallon.

Carew.

To DISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To serve in a dish; to send up to table.

For conspiracy,

I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd

For me to try.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

DISH-CLOUT. * n. s. [dish and clout.] The cloth with which the maids rub their dishes.

A dish-clout of Jaquenetta's, he wears next his heart for a favour. Shakespeare, L. Lab. Lost.

Send them up to their masters with a dish-clout pinned at their tails. Swift, Direct. to the Cook.

DISH-WASHER. * n. s. [dish and washer.] The name of a bird. Mergus.

DISH-WATER. * n. s. [dish and water.] The water in which dishes are washed.

All my lady's linen sprinkled with suds and dish-water!

Beaumont and Fl. Wit without Money.

DISHABILLÉ. adj. [deshabillé, Fr.] Undressed; loosely or negligently dressed,

Queens are not to be too negligently dressed or dishabillé.

Dryden, Despreaux.

DISHABILLÉ. † n. s. [We are not indebted to Richardson for the introduction of this substantive, as the solitary example from Clarissa, given by Dr. Johnson, might lead the reader to suppose. In the Guardian it is more fully explained; and when that paper was written, [in 1713,] the substantive was probably just coming into use.] Undress; loose dress.

We have a kind of sketch of dress, if I may so call it, among us, which, as the invention was foreign, is called a dishabillé; every thing is thrown on with a loose and careless air; yet a genius discovers itself even through this negligence of dress, just as you may see the masterly hand of a painter in three or four swift strokes of the pencil. Guardian, No. 149.

A woman who would preserve a lover's respect to her person, will be careful of her appearance before him when in dishabillé. Richardson, Clarissa.

The wife at last made her appearance, at once a slattern and a coquette. — She made twenty apologies for being seen in such an odious dishabillé. Goldsmith, Est. 11.

D I S

To DISHA'BIT. † v. a. [This word I have found only in Shakspeare, Dr. Johnson says. It is also used by Carew. And, in modern times, we sometimes use disinhabit for it.] To throw out of place; to drive from their habitation.

But for our approach those sleeping stones,
By the compulsion of their ordinance,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been dishabited, and wide havock made.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

We must also spare a room in this survey to the poor, of whom few shires can shew more, or own fewer than Cornwall. Ireland prescribeth to be the nursery, which sendeth over yearly, yea and daily, whole ship-loads of these crooked slips; and the dishabited towns afford them rooting. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

DISHARMONIOUS. * adj. [from disharmony.] Incongruous.

For though it is true that the animal faculties in angels and men, together with their respective objects, be a part of God's creation; yet their sin proceeded from themselves through an undue and disharmonious connection of those principles, and consists in the abuse of his fatherly indulgence by a wilful immoderation and excess.

Hallywell, Melampyr. p. 10.

DISHARMONY. n. s. [dis and harmony.] Contrariety to harmony.

To DISHEARTEN. v. a. [dis and hearten.] To discourage; to deject; to terrify; to depress.

To dishearten with fearful sentences, as though salvation could hardly be hoped for, is not so consonant with christian charity.

Hooker.

Be not disheartened then, nor cloud those looks,
That wont to be more cheerful and serene.

Milton, P. L.

Yet neither thus dishearten'd nor dismay'd,
The time prepar'd I waited.

Milton, P. L.

It is a consideration that might dishearten those who are engaged against the common adversaries, that they promise themselves as much from the folly of enemies, as from the power of their friends.

Stillingfleet.

Men cannot say, that the greatness of an evil and danger is an encouragement to men to run upon it; and that the greatness of any good and happiness ought in reason to dishearten men from the pursuit of it.

Tillotson.

A true christian fervour is more than the alliances of our potent friends, or even the fears of our disheartened enemies.

Atterbury.

To DISHEIR. * v. a. [dis and heir.] To debar from inheritance.

Design'd to hew the imperial cedar down,
Defraud succession, and disheir the crown.

Dryden, Hind and Panther, P. iii.

DISHERISON. † n. s. The act of debarring from inheritance. An old word for disheriting. Cowel.

Many a one here a born to a fair estate, and is stripped of it, whether by the just disherison of his offended father, or else by the power or circumvention of an adversary, or by his own misgovernment and unthriftiness.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 143.

Many mischiefs had in times past happened, and more might happen in times to come, to the disherison of the crown, and great prejudice of the kingdom. Louth, Life of Wykeham, p. 52.

To DISHERIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from hereditary succession; to debar from an inheritance.

He tries to restore to their rightful heritage such good old English words as have been long time out of use, almost disherited.

Spenser.

Nor how the Dryads and the woodland train,
Disherited, ran howling o'er the plain.

Dryden, Fables.

DISHERITANCE. * n. s. [from disheriti.] The state of being cut off from inheritance.

Having chid me almost to the ruin

Of a disheritance, for violating

So continued and so sacred a friendship.

Bowen, and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.

D I S

To DISHEVEL. v. a. [decheveler, French.] To spread the hair disorderly; to throw the hair of a woman negligently about her head. It is not often used but in the passive participle.

A gentle lady all alone,
With garments rent and hair dishevelled,
Wringing her hands, and making piteous moan.

Spenser.

After followed great numbers of women weeping, with dishevelled hair, scratching their faces and tearing themselves, after the manner of the country.

Knolles.

A troop of Trojans mix'd with these appear,
And mourning matrons with dishevel'd hair.

Dryden, Æn.

The flames involv'd in smoke
Of incense, from the sacred altar broke,
Caught her dishevel'd hair and rich attire.

Dryden, Æn.

You this morn beheld his ardent eyes,
Saw his arm lock'd in her dishevel'd hair.

Smith.

DISHING. adj. [from dish.] Concave: a cant term among artificers.

For the form of the wheels, some make them more dishing, as they call it, than others; that is, more concave, by setting off the spokes and felloes more outwards.

Mortimer.

DISHONEST. adj. [dis and honest.]

1. Void of probity; void of faith; faithless; wicked; fraudulent.

Justice then was neither blind to discern, nor lame to execute. It was not subject to be imposed upon by a deluded fancy, nor yet to be bribed for a glossing appetite, for an utile or jucundum to turn the balance to a false or dishonest sentence.

South.

He lays it down as a principle, that right or wrong, honest and dishonest, are defined only by laws and not by nature.

Locke.

2. Unchaste; lewd.

To morrow will we be married — I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

3. Disgraced; dishonoured.

Dishonest with lopp'd arms the youth appears,
Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears.

Dryden.

4. Disgraceful; ignominious. These two senses are scarcely English, being borrowed from the Latin idiom.

She saw her sons with purple death expire,
Her sacred domes involv'd in rolling fire,
A dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs and dishonest scars,

Pope.

DISHONESTLY. † adv. [from dishonest.]

1. Without faith; without probity; faithlessly; wickedly.

I protest he had the chain of me,
Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.

Shakspeare.

2. Lewdly; wantonly; unchastely.

A wise daughter shall bring an inheritance to her husband;
but she that liveth dishonestly is her father's heaviness.

Ecc. xxii. 4.

3. In a dishonoured manner.

Marius with no less rancour inflamed, beside a terrible slaughter that he made of noble men leaping to Sylla, also caused Caius Cæsar (who had been both consul and censor, two of the most honourable dignities in the city of Rome,) to be violently drawn to the sepulture of one Varius, a simple and seditious person, and there to be dishonestly slayne.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 100. b.

DISHONESTY. n. s. [from dishonest.]

1. Want of probity; faithlessness; violation of trust.

Their fortune depends upon their credit, and a stain of open public dishonesty must be to their disadvantage.

Swift.

2. Unchastity; incontinence; lewdness.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that bath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I? Hear a be my witness you do, if you suspect me of any dishonesty. Shakespeare.

DIS

DISHONOUR. n. s. [from dis and honour.]

1. Reproach; disgrace; ignominy.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He was pleased to own Lazarus even in the dishonours of the grave, and vouchsafed him, in that despicable condition, the glorious title of his friend. Boyle, Seraph, Love.

Take him for your husband and your lord,

'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace

On one descended from a royal race. Dryden, Fables.

2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.

Good, that no tongue could ever

Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life

She never knew harm-doing. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

To DISHONOUR. † v. a. [from dis and honour.]

1. To disgrace; to bring shame upon; to blast with infamy.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,

No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,

That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour. Shakespeare.

This no more dishonours you at all,

Than to wake in a town with gentle words,

Which else would put you to your fortune. Shakespeare, Coriol.

A woman that honoureth her husband shall be judged wise of all; but she that dishonoureth him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all. Eccles. xxvi. 26.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which we really have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.

One glimpse of glory to my issue give,

Grac'd for the little time he has to live:

Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands;

His rightful prize is ravish'd from his hands. Dryden, Iliad.

4. To deprive of ornament.

Last, Winter creeps along with tardy pace,

Sour is his front, and furrow'd is his face,

His scalp, if not dishonour'd quite of hair,

The ragged fleece is thin, and thin is worse than bare.

Dryden, Tr. of Ovid, Met. 15.

DISHONOURABLE. adj. [from dishonour.]

1. Shameful; reproachful; ignominious.

He did dishonourable find

Those articles which did our state decrease. Daniel.

2. Being in a state of neglect or disesteem.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches?
and he that is dishonourable in riches, how much more in poverty? Eccles. x. 31.

DISHONOURABLY.  adv.* [from dishonourable.] Ignominiously; neglectedly.

DISHONOURER. n. s. [from dishonour.]

1. One that treats another with indignity.

Preaching how meritorious with the gods

It would be, to ensnare an irreligious

Dishonourer of Dagon. Milton, S. A.

2. A violator of chastity.

To DISHONOUR. † v. a. [from dis and honour.] To strip of horns.

We'll dishonour the spirit,

And mock him home to Windsor. Shakespeare.

DISHUMOUR. n. s. [from dis and humour.] Peevishness; ill humour; uneasy state of mind

Speaking impatiently to servants, or any thing that betrays inattention or dishonour, are also criminal. Spectator.

DISIMPROVEMENT. n. s. [from dis and improvement.] Reduction from a better to a worse state; the contrary to melioration; the contrary to improvement.

The final issue of the matter would be, an utter neglect and disimprovement of the earth. Norris.

DIS

I cannot see how this kingdom is at any height of improvement, while four parts in five of the plantations for thirty years past, have been real disimprovements. Swift.

To DISINCARCERATE. v. a. [from dis and incarcerate.] To set at liberty; to free from prison.

The arsenical bodies being now coagulated, and kindled into flaming atoms, require dry and warm air, to open the earth for to disincarcerate the same venene bodies. Harvey.

DISINCLINATION. † n. s. [from disincline.] Want of affection; slight; dislike; ill-will not heightened to aversion.

A gentleman — having a pretty good estate, and a disinclination to books or business. Guardian, No. 131.

Disappointment gave him a disinclination to the fair sex, for whom he does not express all the respect possible. Arbuthnot and Pope.

To DISINCLINE. v. a. [from dis and incline.] To produce dislike to; to make disaffected; to alienate affection from.

They were careful to keep up the fears and apprehensions in the people of dangers and designs, and to disincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen, whom they began every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to disoblige. Clarendon.

DISINCLINED.  adj.* Not averse; not unfavourably disposed.

He valued ancient nobility, and he was not disinclined to augment it with new honours. Burke, Lett. to a Noble Lord.

DISINCORPORATION.  n. s.* [from dis and incorporation.]

Deprivation of the rights and privileges of a corporate body.

The bishop of Chichester, in opening the disputation of Henry the Eighth with Lambert, in Westminster Hall, ranked the king's disincorporation of the monks with his rejection of the see of Rome, his abolition of idolatrous adoration, and the introduction of the English Bible, as a matter of an external nature, and in no respect interfering with the essentials of the catholic communion. Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 41.

DISINGENUITY. † n. s. [from disingenuous.] Meanness of artifice; unfairness.

They contract a habit of ill-nature and disingenuity necessary to their affairs, and the temper of those upon whom they are to work. Clarendon.

The remarker citing my words, with extreme disingenuity, leaves out one half of the sentence.

Clarke, Evid. of Nat. and Rev. Religion, Pref.

DISINGENUOUS. adj. [from dis and ingenuous.] Unfair; meanly artful; viciously subtle; sly; cunning; illiberal; unbecoming a gentleman; crafty.

'Tis disingenuous to accuse our age

Of idleness, who all our powers engage

In the same studies, the same course to hold,

Nor think our reason for new arts too slow. Denham.

It was a disingenuous way of proceeding to oppose a judgement of charity concerning their church, to a judgement of reason concerning the nature of actions. Shillingfleet.

There cannot be any thing so disingenuous and misbecoming any rational creature, as not to yield to plain reason and the conviction of clear arguments. Locke.

DISINGENUOUSLY. † adv. [from disingenuous.] In a disingenuous manner.

Milton who had a controversy with [bishop] Hall, in a remonstrance called an Apology for Smeectymnus, published in 1641, rather unsuitably and disingenuously goes out of his way to attack these Satires, a juvenile effort of his dignified adversary, and under every consideration alien to the dispute.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iv. 50.

DISINGENUOUSNESS. n. s. [from disingenuous.] Mean subtlety; unfairness; low craft.

I might press them with the unreasonableness, the disingenuousness of embracing a profession to which their own hearts have an inward reluctance. Government of the Tongue.

DISINHABITED.  adj.* Deprived of inhabitants. See To DISHABIT.

D I S

DISINHERISON, n. s. [from dis and inherit.]

1. The act of cutting off from any hereditary succession; the act of disinheriting.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, inherent in his person, he knew it was a title condemned by parliament, and generally prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, that it tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

The chief minister of the revenue was obliged to prevent and even oppose such disinherison.

Clarendon.

2. The state of being cut off from an hereditary right.

In respect of the effects and evil consequences, the adultery of the woman is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family, and disinherisons or great injuries to the lawful children.

Hp. Taylor.

To DISINHERIT, v. a. [from dis and inherit.] To cut off from an hereditary right; to deprive of an inheritance.

Is it then just with us to disinherit?

The unborn nephews, for the father's fault?

Davies.

Unmuffle, ye faint stars, and thou fair moon, —

Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,

And disinherit chaos that reigns here

In double night of darkness, and of shades.

Milton, Comm.

Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony,

That I must leave ye, sons! O were I able

To waste it all myself, and leave ye none;

So disinherited, how would ye bless

Me, now your curse!

Milton, P. L.

Of how fair a portion Adam disinherited his whole posterity by one single prevarication!

South.

To DISINTER, v. a. [from dis and inter.] To unbury; to take as out of the grave.

The philosopher, the saint, or the hero, the wise, the good, or the great man, very often lie hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred.

Addison.

DISINTERESTED, adj. [from dis and interesse, French.] It is written disinterested by those who derive it immediately from interest, and I think more properly.] Void of regard to private advantage; not biassed by particular views; impartial.

Not that tradition's parts are useless here,

When general, old, disinterest'd, and clear.

Dryden.

DISINTERESTMENT, n. s. [from dis and interessement, Fr.]

Disregard to private advantage; disinterest; disinterestedness. This word like charges in the same sentence, is merely Gallick.

He has managed some of the charges of the kingdom, with known ability, and laid them down with entire disinterestment.

Prior's Postscript.

DISINTEREST, n. s. [from dis and interest.]

1. What is contrary to one's wish or prosperity; that which any one is concerned to prevent.

That ye indulge this liberty to yourselves or others, is to cast a stumbling-block before the Children of Israel, and to occasion and encourage many to adhere to the Roman Communion, when they ought to separate from her, that there be no prejudice done to my true Church, nor disinterest to my Kingdom.

Margr. Expos. of the Seven Churches, p. 73.

They judge it the greatest disinterest to Rome.

Glanville.

Indifference to profit; superiority to regards of private advantage.

2 DISINTEREST, v. a. [from the noun.] To render superiour to private advantage.

A noble courtesy, falling like rain in due season, enslaves a man more than a market-sale among Moors; for it conquers the uncompellable mind, and disinterests man of himself.

Fellham, Sermon on St. Luke, xiv, 20.

To DISINTHRO'NE, * See To DISENTHRONE.

D I S

DISINTERESTED, adj. [from disinterest.]

1. Superiour to regard of private advantage; not influenced by private profit.

As disinterested as you appear to the world, no man is more in the power of that prevailing favourite passion than yourself.

Swift.

2. Without any concern in an affair; without fear or hope.

DISINTERESTEDLY, adv. [from disinterested.] In a disinterested manner.

DISINTERESTEDNESS, n. s. [from disinterested.] Contempt of private interest; neglect of personal profit.

These expressions of selfishness and disinterestedness have been used in a very loose and indeterminate manner.

Brown.

DISINTERESTING, * adj. [from disinterest.] Wanting interest or the power of affecting.

There is such a dull, heavy, succession of long quotations of disinteresting passages, that it makes their method quite nauseous.

Warburton, Lett. to Birch.

DISINTERMENT, * n. s. [from disinter.] The act of unburying, or removing out of the grave. A narrative of the disinterment of a coffin, hastily supposed to contain the corpse of Milton, was published in 1790.

To DISINTRICATE, v. a. [from dis and intricate.] To disentangle.

Dict.

DISINVAL'DITY, * n. s. [from dis and invalidity.] Want of validity.

I do call those some men's doctrines in this point, private opinions; and so well may I do, in respect of the disinvalidity and disproportion of them.

Mountagu, App. to Cass, p. 136.

To DISINVI'VE, † v. a. [from dis and invite.] To retract an invitation.

Dict.

The shank was to be put off—I was upon his highness's intimation sent to disinvite them; all which I performed with the French personally, and with the rest by letter.

Sir J. Finett, Observ. on For. Ambass. (1656), p. 142.

To DISINVOLVE, * v. a. [from dis and involve.] To uncover; to disentangle.

And for that second, it is indeed disinvolved of those former difficulties.

More, Antid. against Idolatry.

And for Thee,

Creation universal calls aloud,

To disinvolve the moral world, and give

To nature's renovation brighter charms.

Young, Night Th. 9.

To DISINURE, * v. a. [from dis and inure.] To deprive of practice, habit, or custom.

Thus much we are hindered and disinured by this course of licensing towards the true knowledge of what we seem to know.

Milton, Arcopagilia.

To DISJOIN, v. a. [from dejoindre, Fr. dis and join.] To separate; to part from each other; to disunite; to sunder.

Never shall my harp thy praise

Forget, nor from thy father's praise disjoin.

Milton, P. L.

Lest different degree

Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce

Deity for thee, when fate will not permit.

Milton, P. L.

Happier for me, that all our hours assign'd

Together we had ev'd; ev'n not in death disjoin'd.

Dryden.

Never let us lay down our arms against France till we have utterly disjoined her from the Spanish monarchy.

Addison.

To DISJOINT, † v. a. [from dis and joint.]

To put out of joint.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound,

And their disjointed bones to powder ground.

Sandys, Job, p. 45.

Yet what could swords or poison, racks or flame,
But mangle and disjoint the brittle frame?
Memo fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's fame. Prior.

These dispositions, both of prince and people, had not alone induced him [Robert] to engage in so bold a resolution, with such a breach of his duty and trust, without the practices and instigations of the King of France, who grown jealous of King William's greatness, and envious of his felicity, found no better way of lessening both, than to kindle this fire in his own house, and thereby the most sensibly to disquiet his mind as well as to disjoint his state, and divide his power.

Temple, Introd. Hist. of Eng. p. 275.

2. To break at junctures; to separate at the part where there is a consent. The word is old in this sense of it.

And as for his coach, seeing it so villainously used and so ill handled as it was, he would not only have it to be unharnessed as I said before, but also unpinned, disjointed, and pulled asunder. Harmar, Trans. of Beza's Sermon. (1587,) p. 384.

Mouldering arches, and disjointed columns. Irene.

3. To break in pieces; to dilaniate.

Rotation must disperse in air,
All things which on the rapid orb appear;
And if no power that motion should controul,
It must disjoint and dissipate the whole. Blackmore.

Should a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a palace or a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, he would be able to form but a very lame and dark idea of either of those excellent and useful inventions. Watts.

4. To carve a fowl.

5. To make incoherent; to break the relation between the parts.

The constancy of your wit, was not wont to bring forth such disjointed speeches. Sidney.

But now her grief has wrought her into frenzy,
The images her troubled fancy forms
Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed. Smith.

- To DISJOINT. v. n. To fall in pieces.

Let both worlds disjoint, and all things suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

- DISJOINT. participle. [from the verb.] Separated; divided. We now write disjointed.

Young Fortinbras,
Holding a weak supposal of our worth;
Thinks, by our late dear brother's death,
Our state to be disjoint and out of frame. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

- DISJOINTLY. adv. [from disjoint.] In a divided state.

No one virtue can be without another: St. Ambrose saith, when they are perfect, then are they joined; but, disjointly, no way can they be perfect. Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634,) p. 6.

- DISJUDICATION. n. s. [dijudicatio, Lat.] Judgement; determination: perhaps only mistaken for dijudication.

The disposition of the organ is of great importance in the dijudication we make of colours. Boyle on Colours.

- DISJUNCT. adj. [disjunctus, Lat.] Disjoined; separate.

- DISJUNCTION. n. s. [from disjunctio, Lat.] Disunion; separation; parting.

You may
Enjoy your mistress now, from whom you see,
There's no disjunction to be made, but by Your ruin. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

There is a great analogy between the body natural and political, in which the ecclesiastical, or spiritual part, justly supplies the part of the soul; and the violent separation of this from the other, does as certainly infer death and dissolution, as the disjunction of the body and the soul in the natural. South.

- DISJUNCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Lat.]

1. Incapable of union.

Such principles, whose atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a sufficient number to make a viable mass. Grew.

2. That which marks separation or opposition; as I love him, or fear him.

There are such words as disjunctive conjunctions. Watts.

3. [In logic.] A disjunctive proposition is when the parts are opposed to one another by disjunctive particles; as, It is either day or night; The weather is either shiny or rainy; Quantity is either length, breadth, or depth. The truth of disjunctives depends on the necessary and immediate opposition of the parts, therefore only the last of these examples is true; but the two first are not strictly true, because twilight is a medium between day and night; and dry cloudy weather is a medium between shining and raining. Watts, Logick.

A disjunctive syllogism is when the major proposition is disjunctive; as, The earth moves in a circle, or an ellipsis; but it does not move in a circle, therefore it moves in an ellipsis. Watts, Logick.

- DISJUNCTIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.] A disjunctive conjunction.

Of these disjunctives some are simple, some adverbative; simple, as when we say, Either it is day, or it is night; adverbative, as when we say, It is not day, but it is night.

Harris, Hermes, ii. 2.

- DISJUNCTIVELY. adv. [from disjunctive.] Distinctly; separately.

What he observes of the numbers disjunctively and apart, reason suggests to be applicable to the whole body united.

Cause of the Decay of Poetry.

- DISK. n. s. [discus, Lat.]

1. The face of the sun, or any planet, as it appears to the eye.

The disk of Phæbus, when he climbs on high,
Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye. Dryden.

It is to be considered, that the rays, which are equally refrangible, do fall upon a circle answering to the sun's disk.

Newton.

Mercury's disk

Can scarce be caught by philosophic eye,
Lost in the near effulgence. Thomson.

2. A broad piece of iron thrown in the ancient sports; a quoit.

The crystal of the eye, which in a fish is a ball, in any land animal is a disk or bowl; being hereby fitted for the clearer sight of the object. Grew.

In areas vary'd with mosaic art,
Some whirl the disk, and some the jav'lin dart. Pope.

- DISKINDNESS. n. s. [dis and kindness.]

1. Want of kindness; want of affection; want of benevolence.

2. Ill turn; injury; act of malignity; detriment.

This discourse is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause, that it does it a real service. Wottonward

- DISLIKE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Disinclination; absence of affection; the contrary to fondness.

He then them took, and tempering goodly well
Their contrary dislikes with loved means,
Did place them all in order, and compel
To keep themselves within their sundry reigns,
Together link'd with adamant chains. Spenser.

Your dislikes to whom I would be pleasing,
Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow. Shakespeare.

God's grace, that principle of his new birth, gives him continual dislike to sin. Hammond, Pract. Catechism.

Our likings or dislikes are founded rather upon humour and fancy than upon reason. T. Barrow.

Sorrow would have been as silent as thoughts, as severe as philosophy. It would have rested in inward senses, tacit dislikes. South.

The jealous man is not angry if you dislike another; but if you find those faults which are in his own character, you discover not only your dislike of another, but of himself. Addison.

2. Discord; dissension; disagreement. This sense is not now in use.

This said Aletes, and a murmur rose

That shew'd dislike among the Christian peers. Fairfax.

TO DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and like.] To disapprove; to regard without affection; to regard with ill-will or disgust.

What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him;

What like, offensive. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Ye dislike, and so undo

The players, and disgrace the poet too. Denham.

Whosoever dislikes the digressions, or grows weary of them, may throw them away. Temple.

DISLIKEFUL. adj. [dislike and full.] Disaffected; malign: not in use.

I think it best, by an union of manners, and conformity of minds, to bring them to be one people, and to put away the dislikeful contest of the one and the other. Spenser on Ireland.

TO DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and like.] To make unlike. Unusual.

Muffle your face,

Dismantle you; and, as you can, dislike

The truth of your own seeming. Shakespeare, Wint. Tac.

DISLIKELESS. n. s. [dis and likeness.] Dissimilitude; not resemblance; unlikeness.

There is much difference: there is a great dislikeless between these things. Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gramm. (1623,) p. 492.

That which is not designed to represent any thing but itself, can never be capable of a wrong representation, nor mislead us from the true apprehension of any thing by its dislikeless to it; and such, excepting those of substances, are all our own complex ideas. Locke.

DISLIKER. n. s. [from dislike.] A disapprover; one that is not pleased.

But whom in wrath she then wounds, she pities, as being an affectionate lover of universal mankind, though an unconcillable disliker of their vices. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 244.

There is a point, which whoever can touch, will never fail of pleasing a majority, so great that the dislikers will be forced to fall in with the herd. Swift.

TO DISLIMB. v. a. [dis and limb.] To dilaniate; to tear limb from limb. Dict.

TO DISLIMN. v. a. [dis and limn.] To unpaint; to strike out of a picture.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought

The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct

As water is in water. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

TO DISLOCATE. v. a. [dis and locus, Lat.]

1. To put out of the proper place.

After some time the strata on all sides of the globe were dislocated, and their situation varied, being elevated in some places, and depressed in others. Woodward.

2. To put out of joint: to disjoint.

Were't my fitness

To let these hands obey my boiling blood,

They're apt enough to dislocate and tear

Thy flesh and bones. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

DISLOCATION. n. s. [from dislocate.]

1. The act of shifting the places of things.

Either causing a harsh superfluity of like terminations, or else forcing a dislocation of the words too much poetical, and obscure. Instructions of Oratory, (Ox. 1682,) p. 52.

2. The state of being displaced.

The posture of rocks, often leaning or prostrate, shews that they had some dislocation from their natural site. Burnet.

3. A luxation; a violent pressure of a bone out of the socket, or correspondent part; a joint put out.

It might go awry either within or without the upper, as often as it is forcibly pulled to it, and so cause a dislocation, or a strain. Grew, Microsc.

TO DISLODGE. v. a. [dis and lodge.]

1. To remove from a place.

You may see — rivers changed, seas dislodged, earth opening, towns swallowed up, and many other such hideous events. Sp. Hall, Rom. p. 71.

The shell-fish which are resident in the depths live and die there, and are never dislodged or removed by storms, nor cast upon the shores; which the littorales usually are. Woodward.

2. To remove from an habitation.

Saint Paul also knoweth not which of the two he should choose, namely, either to be dislodged out of this body, which he especially desired; or to remain in it.

Harmar, Transl. of Bede's Sermon. (1586,) p. 239.

These senses lost, behold a new defeat,

The soul dislodging from another seat. Dryden, Juv.

3. To drive an enemy from a station.

My sword can perfect what it has begun,

And from your walls dislodge that haughty son. Dryden.

4. To remove an army to other quarters.

The ladies have prevail'd,

The Volscians are dislodg'd, and Marcus gone. Shakespeare.

TO DISLODGE. v. n. To go away to another place.

All this being done while two armies in the field stood gazing on, the one in reverence of such nobleness quietly gave back and dislodged; the other, spite of the unruliness, and doubted fidelity in some regiments, was either persuaded or compelled to disband and retire home.

Milton, Apology for Smeectymnus.

Though there is no violence used to drive out an inhabitant, yet bad accommodations will make him dislodge.

South, Sermon ix. 157.

Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour,

Friendliest to sleep, and silence, he resolv'd

With all his legions to dislodge.

Milton, P. I.

DISLOYAL. adj. [desloyal, Fr.; dis and loyal.]

1. Not true to allegiance; faithless; false to a sovereign; disobedient.

Foul distrust, and breach

Disloyal on the part of man; revolt

And disobedience.

Milton, P. I.

2. Dishonest; perfidious. Obsolete.

Such things, in a false disloyal knave,
Are tricks of custom; but, in a man that's just,
They're cold delations working from the heart.

That passion cannot rule.

Shakespeare, Othello

3. Not true to the marriage-bed.

The lady is disloyal.

— Disloyal! The word is too good to paint out her wickedness. Shakespeare.

Disloyal town!

Speak, didst not thou

Forsake thy faith, and break the nuptial vow?

Dryden.

4. False in love; not constant. The three latter senses are now obsolete.

DISLOYALLY. adv. [from disloyal.] Not faithfully; treacherously; disobediently.

DISLOYALTY. n. s. [from disloyal.]

1. Want of fidelity to the sovereign.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to judgement, not in the disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, and disloyalty.

King Charles.

2. Want of fidelity in love. A sense now obsolete.

There shall appear such seeming truths of Hero's disloyalty, that jealousy shall be called assurance.

Shakespeare.

DISMAL. adj. [dies malus, Latin, an evil day.

Or, according to Semonius, from the Goth. Dys, a revengeful goddess; and mal or mel, a set time; whence dismal, q. d. dysas mal, a day of vengeance.]

Sorrowful; dire; horrid; melancholy; uncomfortable; unhappy; dark.

The thane of Cawdor gan a dismal conflict.

He hears

Shakespeare.

On all sides from innumerable tongues

A dismal universal hiss.

Milton, P. L.

Nor yet in horrid shade or dismal den,

Nor noonday yet; but on the grassy herb,

Fearless, unstart'd he slept.

Milton, P. L.

The dismal situation waste and wild,

A dungeon horrible!

Milton, P. L.

Such a variety of dismal accidents must have broken the spirits of any man.

Cherndon

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other view the dismal effects of it.

Decay of Piety.

Dreadful gleams

Dismal screams.

Pope.

DISMALLY. adv. [from dismal.] Horribly; sorrowfully; uncomfortably.

DISMALNESS. n. s. [from dismal.] Horror; sorrow.

TO DISMANTLE.† v. a. [dis and mantle.]

1. To deprive of a dress; to strip; to denude.

He that makes his prince despised and undervalued, and casts him out of his subjects' hearts, may easily strip him of his other garb, having already dispossessed him of his strongest, by dismantling him of his honour, and seizing his reputation.

South.

2. To loose; to throw off a dress; to throw open.

This is most strange!

That she, who ev'n but now was your best object,

Dearest and best, should in this trice of time

Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle

So many folds of favour.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. To strip a town of its outworks.

In the fulness of time a conspicuous and most remarkable providence appeared for the rescue of mankind; and the meek Lamb of God came down to break in pieces the kingdom of darkness, to dismantle all the strong holds, to reduce revolted man to his former fealty and allegiance, and to take into his hands the government of the whole world.

Hallwell, Melanpro. p. 34.

4. To break down any thing external.

His eyeballs, rooted out, are thrown to ground;

His nose dismantled, in his mouth is found;

His jaws, cheeks, front, one undistinguish'd wound.

Dryden.

DISMANTLING. * n. s. [from dismantle.] The act of stripping a town of its bulwarks.

It is not sufficient to possess our own fort, without the dismantling and demolishing of our enemy's.

Hakewill.

TO DISMASK.† v. a. [dis and mask.] To divest of a mask; to uncover from concealment.

Fair ladies mask'd, are roses in the bud;

Or angels veil'd in clouds: are roses blown,

Dismask'd, their damask sweet commixture shewn.

Shakespeare.

Counterfeiting at length will be dismasked; and hypocrisy appear in the true comportment.

Mountagu, App. to Cas. p. 308.

The marquess thought best to dismask his beard; and told him, that he was going covertly.

Wotton.

TO DISMAY.† v. a. [dismay, Spanish; esmayer, old Fr. dasmadur, Su. Goth. astonished.] To terrify; to discourage; to affright; to depress; to deject.

Their mighty strokes their habergeons dismay'd.

Spenser.

Enemies would not be so troublesome to the western coasts, nor that country itself would be so often dismayed with alarms as they have of late years been.

Raleigh, Essay.

He will not fail thee; fear not, neither be dismayed.

Deut. xxxi. 8.

Nothing can make him retious in the practice of his duty, no prospect of interest can allure him, no fear of danger dismay him.

Afterbury.

DISMAY. n. s. [dismay, Spanish.] Fall of courage; terror felt; desertion of mind; fear impressed.

All sate mute,

Pondering the danger with deep thoughts; and each

In other's countenance read his own dismay.

Milton, P. L.

This thou not minded in dismay, yet now

Assures me that the bitterness of death

Is past.

Milton, P. L.

DISMAYEDNESS. n. s. [from dismay.] Dejection of courage; dispiritedness.

The valiantest feels inward *dismay*edness, and yet the fear fullest is ashamed fully to shew it.

Sidney.

DISME.† n. s. [French.] A tenth; the tenth part; tithe.

And thus the wars they beganne,

Whereof the holy church is taxed,

That in the point, as it is axed,

The disme go'th to the battaile.

Gower, Conf. Ant. Prol.

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Ev'ry tithe soul 'mongst many thousand dismes,

Hath been as dear as Helen.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

The pope began to exercise his new rapines by a compliance with king Edward, in granting him two years' disme from the clergy.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

TO DISMEMBER. v. a. [dis and member.] To divide member from member; to dilacerate; to cut in pieces.

I am with both, each army hath a hand;

And in their rage, I having hold of both,

They whirl asunder, and dismember me.

Shakespeare.

O, that we then could come by Caesar's spirit,

And not dismember Caesar! But, alas!

Caesar must bleed for it.

Shakespeare.

A state can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable crisis, than when some prince lies hovering, like a vulture, to devour, or dismember its dying carcass.

Swift.

Fowls obscene dismember'd his remains,

And dogs had torn him on the naked plains.

Pope, Odyssey.

Those who contemplate only the fragments or pieces of science, dispersed in short unconnected discourses, can never survey an entire body of truth, but must always view it as deformed and dismembered.

Watts.

DISMEMBERMENT. * n. s. [from dismember.] Division.

Without entering into speculations about her dismemberment whilst she is adding great nations to her empire, is it then quite so certain, that the dissipation of France into such a cluster of petty republics would be so very favourable to the true balance of power in Europe, as this author imagines it would be?

Burke on a Regicide Peace

DISMETTLED. * adj. [dis and mettled.] A good word, as the opposite to mettled; but hitherto wholly unnoticed.] Without spirit or fire; without exertion.

Thy vigorous brain relieves from lazy rust,

Disguis'd in characters, but more in rust,

Gray customs, which our dead dismettle sloth

Gave up, to surfeit the undaring moth.

Llewellyn, Verse, pref. to Gregory's Posthum. 1650.

TO DISMISS. v. a. [dismissus, Lat.]

1. To send away.

We commit thee thither,

Until his army be dissmisd from him.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He dismissed the assembly.

Acts, xix. 41.

2. To give leave of departure.

If our young Iulus be no more,

Dissmis our navy from your friendly shore.

Dryden, Virg.

3. To discard; to divest of an office.

DISMISS. * n. s. [from the verb.] Discharge from any office. Not now in use.

His majesty's servants — with great expressions of grief for their dissmis, poured forth their prayers for his majesty's freedom and preservation, and so departed.

Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I. p. 14.

DISMISSAL. * n. s. [from dismiss.] A word of recent usage for dismissal.

DISMISSAL. n. s. [from demissio, Lat.]

1. Dispatch; act of sending away.

So pois'd, so gently she descends from high,
It seems a soft dismissal from the sky. Dryden.

2. An honourable discharge from any office or place.

Not only thou degrad'st them, or remit'st
To life obscure, which were a fair dismissal;
But throw'st them lower than thou didst exalt them high. Milton, S. A.

3. Deprivation; obligation to leave any post or place.

You must not stay here longer; your dismissal
Is come from Caesar. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

DISMISSIVE. * adj. [from dismiss.] Proclaiming dismissal, or leave to depart.

The old dismissive "Ilicet" is cried
By the town voice, and all to feast's return. Davenant, Gondibert, ii. 5.

To DISMORTGAGE. v. a. [dis and mortgage.] To redeem from mortgage.

He dismortgaged the crown demesnes, and left behind a mass of gold. Howell, Vocal Forest.

To DISMOUNT. † v. a. [demonter, Fr.]

1. To throw off an horse.

From this flying scald murein'd, as once
Bellerophon, though from a lower clime,
Dismounted, on th' Alcian field I fall. Milton, P. L.

2. To throw from any elevation or place of honour.

Xerxes the Persian king yet saw I there,
With his huge host that drank the rivers dry,
Dismounted hills, and made the vales appear;
His host and all yet saw I slain perdie. Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Magistrates.

But come we to the second, and that is the positive detractor, that presently dismounts the most merited reputation with some, but, often malicious, most commonly impertinent. Whitlock, Manners of the English.

3. To throw cannon from its carriage.

The Turks' artillery, planted against that tower, was, by the Christian cannoners, dismounted with shot from the tower, and many of the gunners slain. Knolles.

To DISMOUNT. † v. n.

1. To alight from an horse.

When he came within sight of that prodigious army at Agincourt, he ordered all his cavalry to dismount, and implore upon their knees a blessing. Addison, Frecholdr.

2. To descend from any elevation.

Of their falshode more could I recount,
But now the bright sunne gymeth to dismount. Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

To DISNATURALIZE. v. a. [dis and naturalize.] To alienate; to make alien; to deprive of the privileges of birth.

DISNATURED. † adj. [old Fr. desnaturé.] Unnatural; wanting natural tenderness; devoid of natural affection. Unusual.

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live,
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

DISOBEDIENCE. † n. s. [dis and obedience.] This word is rarely used in the plural number. No example of the word, given by Dr. Johnson, shews it in that number. Bishop Hall has employed it: "Oppressions, sacrileges, disobediencies." Rem. p. 78.]

1. Violation of lawful command or prohibition; breach of duty due to superiors.

Th' offence is holy that she hath committed,
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or unduteous title. Shakspeare.

Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, sing heav'nly muse. Milton, P. L.
Murder, adultery, or disobedience to parents, have a general motion antecedently to laws. Stillington.
This is not disobedience, but rebellion; 'tis disclaiming the sovereignty of Christ, and renouncing all allegiance to his authority. Rogers.

2. Incompliance.

If planetary orbs the sun obey,
Why should the moon disown his sovereign sway;
Why in a whirling eddy of her own
Around the globe terrestrial should she run?
This disobedience of the moon will prove
The sun's bright orb does not the planets move. Blackmore.

DISOBEDIENT. adj. [dis and obedient.] Not observant of lawful authority; guilty of the breach of lawful commands or prohibition.

The man of God was disobedient unto the word of the Lord. Kings, xiii. 26.

To DISOBEY. v. a. [dis and obey.] To break commands or transgress prohibitions.

She absolutely bade him, and he durst not know how to disobey. Sidney.

He's loth to disobey the god's command,
Nor willing to forsake this pleasant land. Denham.

DISOBLIGATION. n. s. [dis and obligation.] Offence; cause of disgust.

If he receded from what he had promised, it would be such a disobligation to the prince that he would never forget it. Clarendon.

There can be no malice, and consequently no crime or disobligation. L'Estrange.

DISOBLIGATORY. * adj. [dis and obligatory.] Releasing obligation.

You much mistake in alleging, that the two houses of parliament, especially as they are now constituted, can have this disobligatory power. K. Charles, Lett. to Henderson, p. 20.

To DISOBLIGE. † v. a. [dis and oblige.]

1. To offend; to disgust; to give offence to. A term by which offence is tenderly expressed.

Ashley had been removed from that charge, and was thereby so much disobliged that he quitted the king's party. Clarendon.

Those, though in highest place, who slight and disoblige their friends, shall infallibly come to know the value of them, by having none, when they shall most need them. South.

It is in the power of more particular persons in this kingdom, than in any other, to distress the government, when they are disobliged. Addison, Frecholder.

My plan has given offence to some gentlemen, whom it would not be very safe to disoblige. Addison, Guardian.

We love and esteem our clergy, and are apt to lay some weight upon their opinion, and would not willingly disoblige them. Swift on the Sacramental Test.

If a woman suffers her lover to see she is loth to disoblige him, let her beware of an encroacher. Richardson, Clarissa.

2. To release from an obligation. See DISOBLIGATION. Dr. Johnson has overpassed this meaning, which appears to have been very common.

And if even infidelity have not power to disoblige the wife or husband, much less, heresy. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.
No unkindness of a brother can wholly rescind that relation, or disoblige us from the duties annexed thereto. Barrow, Sermon vol. i. 8. 30.

His majesty was graciously pleased to sign me some papers, to disoblige me in a promise I had made to Sir Guy Palmes. Sir J. Bowring's Secret Transactions of K. Ch. I. in Lord Halifax's Miscell. (1703) p. 123.

DISOBLIGER. * n. s. [from disoblige.] One who offends another.

There is no precept of Christianity, wherein the speculation and practice are more distant from one another, than this of loving our enemies, and benefiting our disobligers. W. Montagu, Dev. Ess. xv. § 5.

DIS

DISOBL'GING. participial adj. [from disoblige.] Disgusting; unpleasing; offensive.

Preemptoriness can best be in form of understanding; it renders wise men disoblige and troublesome, and fools ridiculous and contemptible. Government of the Tongue.

DISOBL'GINGLY. adv. [from disoblige.] In a disgusting or offensive manner; without attention to please.

DISOBL'GINGNESS. n. s. [from disoblige.] Offensiveness; readiness to disgust.

DISOBN'ION. n. s. [dis and opinion.] Difference of opinion.

There are thoughts belonging to the understanding, assenting and dissenting thoughts, belief and disopinion. Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 4.

DISO'RBED. adj. [dis and orb.] Thrown out of the proper orbit.

Fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,
Or like a star disorb'd. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

DISO'RDER. n. s. [dis and order; desordre, Fr.]

1. Want of regular disposition; irregularity; confusion; immethodical distribution.

When I read an author of genius without method, I fancy myself in a wood that abounds with many noble objects, rising among one another in the greatest confusion and disorder. Spectator.

2. Tumult; disturbance; bustle.

A greater favour this disorder brought Unto her servants, than their awful thought
Durst entertain, when thus compell'd they prest
The yielding marble of her snowy breast. Waller.

3. Neglect of rule; irregularity.

From vulgar bounds with brave disorder part,
And snatch a grace beyond the reach of art. Pope.

4. Breach of laws; violation of standing institution.

There reigned in all men blood, manslaughter, disquieting of good men, forgetfulness of good turns, and disorder in marriages. Wind. xiv. 26.

5. Breach of that regularity in the animal economy which causes health; sickness; distemper. It is used commonly for a slight disease.

Pleasure and pain are only different constitutions of the mind, sometimes occasioned by disorder in the body, or sometimes by thoughts in the mind. Locke.

6. Discomposure of mind; turbulence of passions.

To DISO'RDER.† v. a. [dis and order.]

1. To throw into confusion; to confound; to put out of method; to disturb; to ruffle; to confuse.

Eve
Not so repuls'd, with tears that ceas'd not flowing,
And tresses all disorder'd, at his feet
Fell humble. Milton, P. 1.

Yon disorder'd heap of ruin lies,
Stones rent from stones, where clouds of dust arise. Dryden.

The incursions of the Goths, and other barbarous nations, disordered the affairs of the Roman empire. Arbuthnot.

2. To make sick; to disturb the body: as, my dinner disorders me.

3. To discompose; to disturb the mind.

Wherefore we should never suffer them to be dissolved into levity, or disordered into a wanton frame, indisposing us for religious thoughts and actions.

Barrow, Sermon on Ephes. v. 4.

4. To turn out of holy orders; to depose; to strip of ecclesiastical vestments.

Let him be stript, and disordered, I could fain see him walk in querpo, that the world may behold the inside of a friar. Dryden, Span. Friar.

DISO'RDERED. adj. [from disorder.] Disorderly; irregular; vicious; loose; unrestrained in behaviour; debauched.

DIS

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

DISO'RDEREDNESS. n. s. [from disordered.] Irregularity; want of order; confusion.

By that disorderedness of the soldiers a great advantage was offered unto the enemy. Kneller.

DISO'RDERLY. adj. [from disorder.]

1. Confused; immethodical; without proper distribution.

Those obsolete laws of Henry I. were but disorderly, confused, and general things; rather cases and shells of administration than institutions. Hale.

2. Irregular; tumultuous.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and disorderly people. Bucan.

His thoughts, which are the pictures and results of passions, are generally such as naturally arise from those disorderly notions of our spirits. Dryden.

A disorderly multitude, contending with the body of the legislature, is like a man in a fit, under the conduct of one in the fulness of his health and strength. Addison.

3. Lawless; contrary to law; inordinate; contrary to the rules of life; vicious.

He reproved them for their disorderly assemblies, against the peaceable people of the realm. Hayward.

DISO'RDERLY. adv. [from disorder.]

1. Without rule; without method; irregularly; confusedly.

Naked savages fighting disorderly with stones, by appointment of their commanders, may truly and absolutely be said to war. Rafegh.

2. Without law; inordinately.

We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you.

DISO'RDISATE.† adj. [dis and ordinate.] Not living by the rules of virtue; inordinate.

These two unruly and wild powers—are the spring and fountain-head of all disordinate affections.

Briskett, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606), p. 114.
I have been many times tempted to wonder, notwithstanding the value of these authors, how so disordinate a passion seated in the heart, and boiling in the blood, could betoken a good constitution of the brain, which above any other, is, or should be, the coldest part. Watson, Of Education.

These not disordinate, yet causeless suffer
The punishment of dissolute days. Milton, S. A.

DISO'RDISATELY. adv. [from disordinate.] Inordinately; viciously.

DISO'RIENTATED. adj. [dis and orient.] Turned from the East; turned from the right direction; thrown out of the proper place. Harris.

DISORGANIZA'TION.† n. s. [dis and organization.] Destruction of system; subversion of order. A very modern word. See To DISORGANIZE.

Whatever may be considered as national disaster, or calamity, in this country; within the period of our good king's reign, when almost the whole world has been, and continues to be, in tumultuous commotion; is, in its parts, or on the whole, trivial; trivial, when contrasted with the disorganizations, the oppressions, the woful miseries, universally experienced in every other country of Europe.

Dr. Gaskin, Sermon on the King's Accession, 1899.

To DISORGANIZE.† v. a. [Fr. desorganiser; dis and organize.] In both languages modern.] To break in pieces; to destroy the order of.

This spirit [a disdain of the wisdom and experience of ages] originating in the evil passions of the disaffected, and working on the credulity of the many, has convulsed and disorganized the world, and produced a deluge of misery and vice.

Bp. Bristol, (Mansel), Sermon at St. Paul's, 1813.

DIS

To DISOWN. v. a. [dis and own.]

1. To deny; not to allow.

Then they, who brother's better claim disown,
Expel their parents, and usurp the throne. Dryden, Æn.

2. To abnegate; to renounce.

When an author has publicly disowned a spurious piece, they have disputed his name with him. Swift.

To DISPACE. * v. n. [Lat. dis and spatior.] To range about.

He spied the joyous butterfly
In this faire plot disparing to and fro. Spenser, Muirpotmbs.

Thus wise long time he did himself dispace
There round about. Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

To DISPAIR. * v. a. [dis and pair.] To part a couple.

Forgive me, lady;
I have destroy'd Gerrard, and thee; rebell'd
Against heav'n's ordinances; dispair'd two doves; *
Made 'em sit mourning; slaughter'd love; and cleft
The heart of all integrity. Braun, and Pl. Four Plays in One.

To DISPAND. v. a. [disparando, Latin.] To display; to spread abroad. Dict.

DISPANSION. n. s. [from dispansum, Lat.] The act of displaying; the act of spreading; diffusion; dilatation.

DISPARADIZED. * adj. [dis and paradise.] Fallen from happiness to misery. Such is the word, with its definition, in the old vocabulary of Cockeram. I notice it, because an opposite to imparadise; and have been disappointed in not meeting with it in our old poetry.

To DISPARAGE. † v. a. [old French, deparager, desparager; Lat. disparare, from dispar.]

1. To marry any one to another of inferior condition.

2. To match unequally; to injure by union with something inferior in excellence. Cockeram.

3. To injure by a comparison with something of less value.

4. To treat with contempt; to mock; to flout; to reproach.

Ahaz, his sottish conqueror he drew,
God's altar to disparage and displace,
For one of Syrian mode. Milton, P. I.
Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms,
Which greatest heroes have in battle worn,
Their ornament and safety. Milton, S. I.

They will defy
That which they love most tenderly;
Quarrel with minc'd pies, and disparage
Their best and dearest friend, plum-porridge. Indubras.

5. To bring reproach upon; to be the cause of disgrace.

How shall frail pen, with fear disparaged,
Conceive such sovereign glory and great bountied! Spenser.

His religion sat easily, naturally, and gracefully upon him, without any of those forbidding appearances which sometimes disparage the actions of men sincerely pious. Atterbury.

DISPARAGEMENT. n. s. [from disparage.]

1. Injurious union or comparison with something of inferior excellence.

They take it for a disparagement to sort themselves with any other than the enemies of the publick peace. L'Estrange.

2. [In law.] Matching an heir in marriage under his or her degree, or against decency. Cowel.

You wrongfully do require Mopsa to so great a disparagement, as to wed her father's servant. Sidney.

She was much affectionate to her own kindred, which did stir great envy in the lords of the king's side, who counted her blood a disparagement to be mingled with the king's. Bacon.

3. Reproach; disgrace; indignity.

DIS

Gentle knight,

That doth against the dead his hand uprear,
His honour stains with rancour and despoil,
And great disparagement makes to his former might. Spenser.
In a commonwealth much disparagement is occasioned, when able spirits, attracted by a familiarity, are inflamed with faction. Wotton.

'Tis no disparagement to philosophy, that it cannot deify us. Glanville.

Reason is a weak, diminutive light, compared to revelation; but it ought to be no disparagement to a star that it is not a sun. South.

Rely upon your beauty: 'twere a disparagement of that to talk of conditions, when you are certain of making your own terms. Southern, Innocent Adultery.

4. It has to before the person or thing disparaged.

Then to our age, when not to pleasure bent,
This seems an honour, not disparagement. Denham.

The play was never intended for the stage; nor, without disparagement to the author, could have succeeded. Dryden.

DISPARAGER. † n. s. [from disparago.] One that disgraces; one that treats with indignity, and that contrives an unequal match.

Among these despisers and disparagers of the ancient fathers, are those bold, and I will add ignorant, men to be found, who, as this great divine speaks, fasten this charge upon them. Hicks, Letter to Nelson, Life of Bp. Bull, p. 518.

DISPARAGINGLY. * adv. [from the participle disparaging.] Contemptuously.

Why should he speak so disparagingly of many books and much reading? Peters on Job, 2d ed. p. 428.

DISPARATE. * adj. [Lat. disparatus.] Separate; dissimilar.

Here they are opposed, or at least declared to be things several and disparate. Bp. Taylor on Ecamp. Prayer.

There are no two things in nature more perfectly disparate than sound and sentiment. A. Smith, Of the Imitative Art.

DISPARATES. † n. s. [disparata, Latin.] Things so unlike that they cannot be compared with each other.

This had been a predication of disparates, as they call it.

Abp. Usher, Answer to the Jeauit Malone, p. 39.

DISPARITY. n. s. [from dispar, Latin.]

1. Inequality; difference in degree either of rank or excellence.

Between Elihu and the rest of Job's familiars, the greatest disparity was but in years. Hooker.

Among unequals, what society

Can sort, what harmony or true delight?

Which must be mutual, in proportion due,

Given and receiv'd; but in disparity,

The one intense, the other still remiss,

Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton, P. I.

There was as great a disparity between the practical dictates of the understanding then and now, as there is between empire and advice, counsel and command. South.

Men ought not to associate and join themselves together in the same office, under a disparity of condition. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Some members must preside, and others obey; and a disparity in the outward condition, is necessary to keep several orders in mutual dependence on each other. Rogers.

2. Dissimilitude; unlikeness.

To DISPA'RK. † v. a. [old Fr. deparquer; dis and park.]

1. To throw open a park.

You have fed upon my signories,
Dispark'd my parks, and fell'd my forest woods. Shakspeare.

2. To set at large; to release from enclosure.

Hercupon he dispar'd his seraglio, and flies thence to Potan with dispar-chaw's lovely daughter only in his company. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 87.

They were suppos'd
By narrow wits to be inclos'd,

Till his free muse threw down the pale,
And did at once dispart them all. Walker.
To DISPART. v. a. [dis and part; départir, French;
dispartitio, Latin.] To divide in two; to separate;
to break; to burst; to rive.

The gate nor wood, nor of enduring brass,
But of more worthy substance framed was;
Doubly disparted, it did lock and close,
That when it locked, nought might through it pass. Spenser.

On either side
Disparted Chaos overbuilt exclaim'd,
And with rebounding surges the bars assail'd,
That scorn'd his indignation. Milton, P. L.

The rest to several places
Disparted Britain mourn'd their doubtful sway,
And dreaded both, when neither would obey. Prior.

The pilgrim oft,
At dead of night, 'mid his orison, hears
Aghast, the voice of ting disparting tow'rs. Dyer.

DISPASSION. n. s. [dis and passion.] Freedom from mental perturbation; exemption from passion.
What is called by the Stoicks apathy, or dispassion, is called by the Scepticks indisturbance, by the Molonists quietism, by common men peace of conscience. Temple.

DISPASSIONATE. adj. [from dis and passionate.]
Cool; calm; impartial; moderate; temperate; it was sometimes written dispassionated.

You have, as all dispassionated men may judge, fulfilled the poet's definition of madness. Dr. Maine.
Wise and dispassionate men thought he had been proceeded with very justly. Clarendon.

DISPASSIONATED.* adj. [from dispassionate.] Cool;
free from passion. This is not so proper as dis- passioned; which see.

You have given me very justifiable cause to apply to you, who, as all dispassionated men may judge, have fulfilled the poet's definition of madness upon yourself.

Dr. Maine, Ans. to Cheynet, (1647), p. 27.

DISPASSIONATELY.* adv. [from dispassionate.] In a calm and temperate manner.

As if she [the wife of Job] had only dispassionately reasoned the case with him, what good his piety had done him.

Killingbeck's Sermon, p. 191.

They are here delivered dispassionately, and not thrown out in the heat of controversy and calumination.

Watson, Notes on Milton.

DISPASSIONED.* adj. [from dispassion.] Free from passion. A proper word, as the opposite to im- passioned.

I comfort myself because I see dispassioned men are subject to the like ignorances. Donne, Letters, p. 288.

He had so dispassioned a consideration, such a candour in his nature. Life of Lord Clarendon, i. 43.

To DISPATCH.* See To DESPATCH.

DISPATCHER.* See DESPATCHER.

To DISPEL. v. a. [dispello, Latin.] To drive by scattering; to dissipate.

If the night
Have gathered aught of evil, or conceal'd,
Disperse it, as how light dispels the dark. Milton, P. L.

When the spirit brings light into our minds, it dispels darkness: we see it, as we do that of the sun at noon, and need not the twilight of reason to shew it. Locke.

DISPENCE.* n. s. [despence, Fr.] Expence; cost;
charge; profusion.

It was a vault ybuilt for great dispence,
With many ranges rear'd along the way,
And one great chimney, whose long funnel thence
The smoke forth threw. Spenser, F. Q.

Whatever in this worldly state
Is sweet and pleasing unto living sense,
Was poured forth with plentiful dispence. Spenser, F. Q.

At Court, and in his general deportment, of an able respect and tractable clearness; in his dispence of a magnificent liberal hand. Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III.

To DISPEND.* v. a. [old French, despendre; Lat.
dispendo.] To spend; to consume; to expend.

Every parson, vicar, clerk, or beneficed man within this deanery, having yearly to dispend, in benefices and other promotions of the church, an hundred pound; shall give competent exhibition to one scholar.

Injunctions by K. Edw. VI. 1547.

Of their commodities they were now scarce able to dispend
the third part. Spenser, State of Ireland.

Or some hold baron able to dispend
His fifty pounds a year. Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Gent.

This second profit of laying them out, to make them eternally profitable unto us, by charitable dispensing them;
this we owe alone to godliness. Hales, Rem. p. 210.

DISPENDER.* n. s. [from dispend.] Our old word for dispenser.] One that distributes. Obsolete.

So a man guess us as mynysters of Christ, and dispenderis of the mynysteries of God. Wicliffe, 1 Cor. iv. 1.

DISPENSABLE.* adj. [from dispense.] Capable of being dispensed with.

I conceive that [as to] speculative and dispensable truths a man not [only] may, but ought rather to propound them sceptically to the world. More, Conj. Cabb. Pref. sign. A. 7.

In dispensable and speculative notions, it is not tanti, nor always so advisable, to engage so far as to disquiet men, or to excite their passion. Worthington to Hartlib. (1661), Ep. 21.

He that can remit nothing, nor recede, nor sacrifice the prosecution of a small dispensable right to the preservation of peace, understands not the full dimension and latitude of this great duty. South, Sermon, vi. 171.

The question then is, whether the church's benefit may not in some cases make the canons against non residence as dis- pensable, as those against translations.

Stillingfleet, Charge to the Clergy, 1690.

DISPENSABLENESS.* n. s. [from dispensable.] Capability of being dispensed with.

The examination of the Romish doctrines. 1. of Penances, medicines are dispensed.

To thee the lov'd dispensary I resign. Garth.

DISPENSATION. n. s. [from dispensatio, Latin.]

1. Distribution; the act of dealing out any thing.

This perpetual circulation is constantly promoted, by a dis- pensation of water promiscuously and indifferently to all parts of the earth. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. The dealing of God with his creatures; method of providence; distribution of good and evil.

God delights in the ministries of his own choice, and the methods of grace, in the economy of heav'n, and the dis- pensations of eternal happiness.

Ep. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

Neither are God's methods or intentions different in his dispensations to each private man. Rogers.

Do thou, my soul, the destin'd period wait,
When God shall solve the dark decrees of fate;
His now unequal dispensations clear,
And make all wise and beautiful appear. Tillot.

3. An exemption from some law; a permission to do something forbidden; an allowance to omit something commanded.

A dispensation was obtained to enable Dr. Barrow to marry.
Ward.

DISPENSATIVE.* adj. [from dispensation.] Granting dispensation.

Let the kingdom of Scotland witness for the space of so many years before his coming father, whether either flattery or fear, (no not upon that enterprise of the 17th of November, which would have put the patience of any prince in Europe to his proof,) could draw from the king the least inclination to this dispensative indifference, that was only believed because it was eagerly desired.

Proceedings against Garnet, &c. (1606,) sign. M. 2. b.

DISPENSATIVELY. * adv. [from dispensative.] By dispensation.

I can now hold my place canonically, which I held, before but dispensatively. Sir H. Wotton, Lett. to the King.

DISPENSATOR. n. s. [Latin.] One employed in dealing out any thing; a distributor.

As her majesty hath made them dispensators of her favour towards her people, so it behoveth them to shew themselves equal distributors of the same. Bacon.

DISPENSATORY. n. s. [from dispense.] A book in which the composition of medicines is described and directed; in the Greek a Pharmacopeia.

The description of the ointment is found in the chymical dispensatory. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A whole dispensatory was little enough to meet with, and suffice to all their wants. Hammond.

Our materia medica is large enough; and to look into our dispensatories, one would think no disease incurable. Baker.

DISPENSATORY. * adj. [from dispensation.] Having the power of granting dispensation.

The dispenser [is] the Son of man; the author of his dispensatory power, God the Father.

Bp. Rainbow, Sermon (1635,) p. 8.

TO DISPENSE. v. a. [dispenser, Fr.]

1. To deal out; to distribute.

Those now, that were dispens'd,

The burden of many ages, on sue light

At once, by my foreknowledge. Milton.

Decay of Piety.

At length the muses stand restor'd again,

While you dispense the laws and guide the state. Dryden.

To them but earth-born life they did dispense.

To us, for mutual aid, celestial sense. Tate's Juvenal.

2. To make up a medicine.

3. TO DISPENSE with. To excuse; to grant dispensation for; to allow: before things.

To save a brother's life,

Nature dispenses with the deed. Shakespeare.

How few kingdoms are there, wherein, by dispensing with oaths, absolving subjects from allegiance, and cursing, or threatening to curse, as long as their curses were regarded, the popes have not wrought innumerable mischiefs? Raleigh.

Rules of words may be dispensed with. Watts.

4. TO DISPENSE with: before persons. To set free from an obligation. This construction seems ungrammatical.

I could not dispense with myself from making a voyage to Caprea. Addison on Italy.

5. TO DISPENSE with. To obtain a dispensation from; to come to agreement with. This structure is irregular, unless it be here supposed to mean, as it may, to discount; to pay an equivalent.

Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?

Canst thou dispense with heav'n for such an oath? Shakespeare.

DISPENSE. † n. s. [from the verb.] Dispensation; exemption: not in use, Dr. Johnson says; citing the example from Paradise Lost. This is a word, it may be added, which Milton repeatedly uses in his prose-writings.

Then reliques, beads,

Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,

The sport of winds. Milton, P. L.

DISPENSER. † n. s. [from dispense.]

1. One that dispenses; one that deals out any thing; a distributor.

They are not Peter's commissaries, but Christ's ambassadors, ministers, and dispensers. Fulke against Allen, (1580,) p. 112.

The ministers of that household are the dispensers of that faith. Sprat.

Those who stand before earthly princes, who are the dispensers of their favours, and conveyors of their will to others, challenge high honours. Atterbury.

2. One that frames excuses.

Under pain of those censures which are appointed for the reformation of such dalliers and dispensers with their own consciences and oaths. Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical.

TO DISPEOPLE. v. a. [dis and people.] To depopulate; to empty of people.

The Irish, banished into the mountains, where they lived only upon white meats, seeing their lands so dispeopled and weakened, came down into the plains. Spenser.

Conflagrations, and great droughts, do not merely dispeople, but destroy. Bacon.

Let his heart exalt him in the harm

Already done, to have dispeopled heav'n.

Milton, P. L.

Kings, furious and severe,

Who claim'd the skies, dispeopled air and floods,

The lonely lords of empty wilds and woods. Pope.

DISPEOPLER. n. s. [from dispeople.] A depopulator; a waster.

Nor drain I ponds, the golden carp to take;

Nor trowle for pikes, dispeoplers of the lake. Gay.

TO DISPERGE. v. a. [dispergo, Lat.] To sprinkle, to scatter. Shakespeare.

TO DISPERSE. v. a. [dispersus, Lat.]

1. To scatter; to drive to different parts.

And I scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries. Ezek. xxxvi. 19.

2. To dissipate.

Soldiers, disperse yourselves.

Shakespeare.

If the night

Have gather'd aught of evil, or conceal'd,

Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark. Milton, P. L.

3. To deal about; to distribute.

Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gate vein which disperseth that blood. Bacon.

DISPERSEDLY. adv. [from dispersed.] In a dispersed manner; separately.

The exquisite wits of some few, peradventure, are able, dispersedly here and there, to find now a word, and then a sentence, which may be more probably suspected, than easily cleared of error. Hooker.

Those minerals are either found in grains, dispersedly intermixed with the corpuscles of earth or sand, or else amassed into balls or nodules. Woodward.

DISPERSEDNESS. n. s. [from disperse.] The state of being dispersed; dispersion.

DISPERSENESS. n. s. [from disperse.] Thinness; scantiness.

The torrid parts of Africk are by Piso resembled to a library's disperseness, the distance of whose spots represent the disperseness of habitations or towns in Africk. Brerewood on Languages.

DISPERSER. † n. s. [from disperse.] A scatterer; a spreader.

I will mortify my outward senses, the windows by which death steals into my soul, the hinderers of my heart's tranquility, the destroyers of true devotion, the dispersers of inward recollection. Spiritual Conquest, (1651,) P. ii. p. 59.

Those who are pleased with defamatory libels, so far as to approve the authors and dispersers of them, are as guilty as if they had composed them. Spectator.

DISPERSION. † n. s. [from dispersio, Lat.]

1. The act of scattering or spreading.

The tragedy of Ahyrtus, and the dispersion of his members by Medea. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. The state of being scattered.

Noah began from thence his dispersion.

Raleigh.

After so many dispersions, and so many divisions, two or three of us may yet be gathered together. Pope.

DISPERSIVE. * adj. [from disperse.] Having the power to disperse.

Dispensio of Norwegian tar, renown'd
By virtuous Berkeley.

Dyer.

To DISPIRIT. v. a. [dis and spirit.]

1. To discourage; to deject; to depress; to damp; to terrify; to intimidate; to fright; to strike with fear. Certain it is, that the poor man appeared so dispirited, that he spoke but few words after he came upon the scaffold.

Clarendon.

The providence of God strikes not in with them, but dashes, and even dispirits, all their endeavours, and makes their designs heartless and ineffectual.

South.

Steady to my principles, and not dispirited with my afflictions, I have overcome all difficulties.

Dryden.

Amidst all the honours that are paid him, he feels nothing in himself but a poor, weak, dispirited mortal, yielding to the laws of corruption.

Rogers.

2. To exhaust the spirits; to oppress the constitution of the body.

He has dispirited himself by a debauch, and drank away his good humour.

Collier.

DISPIRITEDNESS. † n. s. [from dispirit.] Want of vigour; want of vivacity.

Dict.

It is supposed that matter is from their stupefaction or dispiritedness.

Cabalistical Dialogue, (1682), p. 7.

DISPITEOUS.  adj.* Malicious; furious. See DESPITEOUS.

Spurring so hot with rage dispiteous.

Spenser, F. Q.

DISPITEOUSLY.  adv.* Maliciously; without pity. See DESPITEOUSLY.

Lord Hastings when he feared least,

Dispiteously was murder'd and oppress. Mir. for Mag. p. 438.

To DISPLACE. † v. a. [dis and place.]

1. To put out of place; to place in another situation: as, the chessmen are displaced.

A late writer of our own, in his microcosm, hath made bold to displace it, [Nineveh,] affirming that it was built upon Euphrates.

Gregory's Postuma, (1650), p. 191.

Hereby no part is any way distorted or displaced, out of his true and natural situation, upon his meridian.

Ibid. p. 304.

2. To put out of any state, condition, office, trust, or dignity.

To displace any who are in, upon displeasure, is by all means to be avoided, unless there be a manifest cause for it.

Bacon.

Abdal, who commands

The city, is the prince's friend, and therefore

Must be displac'd, and thou shalt strait succeed him. Denham.

A religion established by God himself, should not be displaced by any thing, under a demonstration of that divine power that first introduced it.

South.

One then may be displac'd, and one may reign;

and want of merit render birthright vain.

Dryden.

3. To disorder.

You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting, With most admir'd disorder.

Shakespeare.

DISPLACENCY. † n. s. [displacencia, Lat.]

1. Incivility; disobligation.
2. Disgust; any thing displeasing.

A displacency at the good of others because they enjoy it, though not unworthy of it, is an absurd depravity, striking fast unto corrupted nature, and often too hard for humility and charity, the great suppressors of envy.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 13.

Vice is often at civil wars with itself; and the vehement inclination to one, ingenders a displacency to another.

Decay of Christian Piety.

The displacencies that he receives, by the consequences of his excess, far outweigh all that is grateful in it.

Decay of Christian Piety.

To DISPLANT. † v. a. [old Fr desplanter; dis and plant.]

DISPLEASANT. † adj. [from displease.] Unpleasing; offensive; unpleasant.

Nothing may be to him more *displeas*ant or painful, than to be neglected in his pain-taking. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 171. b.

To some I know this method will seem *displeas*ant, which had rather have good discipline delivered plainly in way of precepts. Spenser, Letter to Raleigh.

Thus the projector here is overthrown;

But I have now a project of mine own,

If it may pass, that no man would invite

The poet from us, to sup forth, to night,

If the play please. If it *displeas*ant be,

We do presume that no man will, nor we. B. Jonson, Epilogue.

What to one is a most grateful odour, to another is noxious and *displeas*ant; and it were a misery to some to lie stretched on a bed of roses. Glanville, Scepis.

DISPLEASANTLY. * adv. [from *displeas*ant.] In an unpleasing manner.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

DISPROPORTION. n. s. [dis and proportion.] Unsuitableness in form or quantity of one thing, or one part of the same thing, to another; want of symmetry; disparity.

Not to affect many proposed matches

Of her own clime, complexion, and degree,

Whereto we see in all things nature tends:

Foh! one may smell, in such, a will most rank,

Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Reasoning, I oft admire,

How nature, wise and frugal, could commit

Such disproportions; with superfluous hand

So many nobler bodies to create,

Greater, so many fold to this one use.

Milton, P. L.

Perhaps from greatness, state, and pride,

Thus surprized, she may fall:

Sleep does disproportion hide,

And, death resembling, equals all.

Waller.

For their strength,

The disproportion is so great, we cannot but Expect a fatal consequence.

Denham, Sophy.

What, did the liquid to th' assembly call,

To give their aid to form the pondrous ball?

First, tell us, why did any come? next, why

In such a disproportion to the dry.

Blackmore, Creation.

That we are designed for a more exalted happiness, than can be derived from the things of this life, we may infer from their vast disproportion to the desires and capacities of our soul.

Rogers.

To DISPROPORTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To mismatch; to join things unsuitable in quantity or form; to join unfitly.

There sits deformity to mock my body,

To shape my legs of an unequal size,

To disproportion me in every part.

Shakespeare.

Distance and mens fears have so enlarged the truth, and so disproportion'd every thing, that we have made the little troop of discontents a gallant army, and already measured by the evening shadow.

Swifling.

Musick craveth your acquaintance: many are of such disproportioned spirits, that they avoid her company. Peacham.

We on earth with undiscordant voice,
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, till disproportion'd sin
Jurr'd against nature's chime.

Milton, Ode.

DISPROPORTIONABLE. adj. [from disproportion.] Unsuitable in form or quantity; not duly regulated in regard to something else.

Doubts and fears are the sharpest passions: through these false optics all that you see is like the evening shadows, disproportionable to the truth, and strangely longer than the true substance. Huckling.

Had the obliquity been greater, the earth had not been able to endure the disproportionable differences of season. Brown.

We are apt to set too great a value on temporal blessings, and have too low and disproportionable esteem of spiritual. Bp. Smalridge.

There is no wine of so strong a body as to bear such a disproportionable quantity of water as sixty parts. Broom.

DISPROPORTIONABLENESS. n. s. [from disproportionable.] Unsuitableness to something else.

DISPROPORTIONABLY. adv. [from disproportion.] Unsuitably; not symmetrically.

This Westmorland maintains,
And Warwick shall disprove it. Shakespeare.

The traitor's odious name
I first return, and then disprove thy claim. Dryden, Fables.
It is easier to affirm than to disprove. Holder.

That false supposition I advanced in order to disprove it, and by that means to prove the truth of my doctrine.

We see the same assertions produced again, without notice of what hath been said to disprove them. Atterbury. Swift.

2. To convict a practice of error.

They behold those things disproved, disannulled, and rejected, which we had made in a manner eternal. Hooker.

If God did not forbid all indifferent ceremonies, then our conformity with the church of Rome in some such is not hitherto as yet disproved, although papists were unto us as heathens were unto Israel. Hooker.

3. To disapprove; to disallow.

Some things are good; yet in so mean a degree of goodness, that men are only not disproved, nor disallowed of God for them. Hooker.

DISPROVER. n. s. [from disprove.]

1. One that disproves or confutes.

2. One that blames; a censurer, if the following passage be not ill printed for disapprover.

The single example that our annals have yielded — of two extremes, within so short a time, by most of the same commenders and disprovers, would require no slight memorial. Wotton, Rem. p. 224.

To DISPU'NGE.* v. a.

1. To expunge; to rase out. [Lat. dispungo.]

Thou then that hast dispung'd my score,
And dying wast the death of Death,
Be to me now, on Thee I call,
My life, my strength, my joy, my all!

Sir H. Wotton, Hymn in Time of Sickness.

2. To discharge, as a saturated sponge, when squeezed. [dis and sponge.] The later editors of Shakspeare correctly print it disponge.

Consider what the learning of disputation is, and how they are employed for the advantage of themselves or others, whose business is only the vain ostentation of sounds. Locke.

2. Controversy; argumental contest.

Well do I find, by the wise knitting together of your answer, that any disputation I can use is as much too weak as I unworthy. Sidney.

Till some admirable or unusual accident happens, as it hath in some, to work the beginning of a better alteration in the mind, disputation about the knowledge of God commonly prevaileth little. Hooker.

DISPUTA'TIOUS. adj. [from dispute.] Inclined to dispute; cavilling.

A man must be of a very disputatious temper, that enters into state controversies with any of the fair sex. Addison.

DISPUTATIVE.† adj. [from dispute.] Disposed to debate; argumentative.

Their disputative and scrupulous zeal.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 59.

I have always looked upon this disputative religiousness as no better than a new-fashioned knight-errantry, which puts men continually upon quest of adventures, and makes monsters of every wind-mill that comes in their way.

Goodman, Winter's Ev. Conf. P. i.

Perhaps this practice might not so easily be perverted as to raise a cavilling, disputative, and sceptical temper in the minds of youth. Watts, Improvem. of the Mind.

To DISPUTE. v. n. [disputo, Lat.] To contend by argument; to altercate; to debate; to argue; to controvert.

If attempts of the pen have often proved unfit, those of the sword are more so, and fighting is a worse expedient than disputing. Decay of Picty.

The atheist can pretend no obligation of conscience, why he should dispute against religion. Tillotson.

Did not Paul and Barnabas dispute with vehemence about a very little point of conveniency? Atterbury.

To DISPUTE.* v. a.

1. To contend for, whether by words or action.

Things were disputed before they came to be determined: men afterwards were not to dispute any longer, but to obey. Hooker.

So dispute the prize,

As if you fought before Cydaria's eyes. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

One says the kingdom is his own: a saxon drinks the quart, and swears he'll dispute that with him. Tatler.

the touching whereof is so distasteful and disquietous to a number of men. Milton, Reason of Ch. Govern.

DISQUIETUDE. n. s. [from disquiet.] Uncasiness; anxiety; disturbance; want of tranquillity.

Little happiness attends a great character, and to a multitude of disquietudes the desire of it subjects an ambitious mind.

Addison, Spectator.

'Tis the best preservative from all those temporal fears and disquietudes, which corrupt the enjoyment, and embitter the lives of men. Rogers.

DISQUISITION. n. s. [disquisitio, Latin.] Examination; disputative enquiry.

God hath reserved many things to his own resolution, whose determinations we cannot hope from flesh; but with reverence must suspend unto that great day, whose justice shall either condemn our curiosity, or resolve our disquisitions. Brown.

'Tis indeed the proper place for this disquisition concerning the antediluvian earth. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The royal society had a good effect, as it turned many of the greatest geniuses of that age to the disquisitions of natural knowledge. Addison, Spectator.

The nature of animal diet may be discovered by taste, and other sensible qualities, and some general rules, without particular disquisition upon every kind. Arbuthnot.

1. To degrade from his rank. Dict.
2. To put out of the rank; to throw into confusion.

This sense is not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

Out of thy part already; foil'd the scene;

Disrank'd the lines; disarm'd the action!

Decker, Satiro-Mastix.

So cranes, in winter, Strymon's cold forsake,
To drink warm Nile; and in their first flight make,
As chance directs, of letters various forms;
When their spread wings are by the violent storms
Of strong South-winds assail'd, by and by
In a confused globe all mingled fly;
The letter's lost in their disranked wings. May's Lucan, B. 5.

DISREGARD.† n. s. [dis and regard.] Slight notice; neglect; contempt.

The disregard of melodious air was a necessary consequence of this affectation of harmonical science.

Mason on Church Music, p. 99.

TO DISREGARD.† v. a. [from the noun.] To slight;
to neglect; to contemn.

Since we are to do good to the poor, to strangers, to enemies, those whom nature is too apt to make us dispise, disre- gard, or hate, then undoubtedly we are to do good to all.

Sprat.

Those fasts which God hath disregarded hitherto, he may regard for the time to come. Smalridge.

Studious of good, man disregarded fame;
And useful knowledge was his eldest aim. Blackmore.

DISREGARDED.* n. s. [from disregard.] One who slights or contemns a thing.

It [Scripture] has, among the wits, as well celebrators and admirers, as *disregarded*s. Boyle, Style of Hiscript. p. 174.

Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefulest disrelish, with'd their jaws
With soot and cinders fill'd. Milton, P. L.

2. Dislike of the palate; squeamishness.

We may not hope to partake of Christ without sensible disrelishes of nature, without outward afflictions, without a true contrition of spirit. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 188.

Bread or tobacco may be neglected, where they are shewn not to be useful to health, because of an indifferency or dis- relish to them. Locke.

The satiety and disrelish attending sensual enjoyments, the relish for things of a more pure and spiritual kind, the restless motion of the mind from one terrene object or pursuit to another, and often a slight or endeavour above them all towards something unknown and perfective of its nature, are so many signs and tokens of this better state, which in the stile of the Gospel is termed Life Eternal.

Bp. Berkeley, Sermon before the Soc. for Prop. Gospel.

TO DISRE'LISH.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make nauseous; to infect with an unpleasant taste.

Fruits of taste to please
True appetite, and not disrelish thirst
Of numerous draughts between, from milky stream.

Milton, P. L.

The same anxiety and solicitude that embittered the pursuit, disrelishes the fruition itself. Rogers.

2. To want a taste of; to dislike.

I ask again, as before in the animadversions, how long is it since he hath disrelished libels?

Milton, Apology for Snectym.

The world is become too busy for me: every body is so concerned for the publick, that all private enjoyments are lost, or disrelished. Pope.

DISREPUTABLE.* adj. [from disrepute.] Not creditable.

DISREPUTATION. n. s. [dis and reputation.]

To DISROBE. v. a. [dis and robe.] To undress; to uncover; to strip.

Thus when they had the witch disrobed quite, And all her filthy feature open shown, They let her go at will, and wander ways unknown. Spenser, F. Q.

Kill the villain strait,

Disrobe him of the matchless monument, Thy father's triumph o'er the savages. Shakspeare, K. John.

These two great peers were disrobed of their glory, the one by judgement, the other by violence. Wotton.

Who will be prevailed with to disrobe himself at once of all his old opinions, and pretences to knowledge and learning, and turn himself out stark naked in quest afresh of new notions? Locke.

DISROBER.* n. s. [from disrobe.] One who strips off a garment.

Disrobers of gypsies. Gayton, Notes on D. Quixote.

DISRUPTION. n. s. [disruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking asunder.

These iron chains are no sooner fast than broken; there was more than an human power in this disruption.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 3.

This secures them from disruption, which they would be in danger of, upon a sudden stretch or contortion. Ray.

2. Breach; rent; dilaceration.

The agent which effected this disruption, and dislocation of the strata, was seated within the earth. Woodward.

If raging winds invade the atmosphere, Their force its curious texture cannot tear, Nor make disruption in the threads of air. Blackmore.

DISSATISFACTION. n. s. [dis and satisfaction.] The state of being dissatisfied; discontent; want of something to complete the wish.

He that changes his condition, out of impatience and dissatisfaction, when he has tried a new one, wishes for his old again. L'Estrange.

The ambitious man has little happiness, but is subject to much uneasiness and dissatisfaction. Addison, Spect.

In vain we try to remedy the defects of our acquisition, by varying the object: the same dissatisfaction pursues us through the circle of created goods. Rogeri.

DISSATISFACTION. n. s. [from dissatisfactory.] Inability to give content.

DISSATISFACTORY. adj. [from dissatisfy.] Unable to give content.

To DISSATISFY. v. a. [dis and satisfy.]

1. To discontent; to displease.

The advantages of life will not hold out to the length of desire; and, since they are not big enough to satisfy, they should not be big enough to dissatisfy. Collier.

2. To fail to please; to offend by the want of something requisite.

I still retain some of my notions, after your lordship's having appeared dissatisfied with them. Locke.

To DISSEAT.* v. a. [dis and seat.] To put out of a seat.

This push

Will cheer me ever, or disseat me now. Shakspeare, Macb.

[He] seeks all foul means

Of boisterous and rough jadery, to disseat

His lord, that kept it bravely.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

To DISSECT. v. a. [disseco, Lat.]

1. To cut in pieces. It is used chiefly of anatomical enquiries, made by separation of the parts of animal bodies.

No mask, no trick, no favour, no reserve;

Dissect your mind, examine every nerve. Roscommon.

Following life in creatures we dissect,

We lose it in the moment we detect. Pope.

2. To divide and examine minutely.

This paragraph, that has not one ingenuous word throughout, I have dissected for a sample. Atterbury.

DISSECTION. n. s. [dissectio, Lat.]

1. The act of separating the parts of animal bodies; anatomy.

She cut her up; but, upon the dissection, found her just like other hens. L'Estrange.

I shall enter upon the dissection of a coquet's heart, and communicate that curious piece of anatomy. Addison.

2. Nice examination.

Such strict enquiries into nature, so true and so perfect a dissection of human kind, is the work of extraordinary diligence. Granville.

DISSECTOR.* n. s. [from dissect. Sometimes written dissector.] One who dissects or cuts asunder; an anatomist.

They had these several persons belonging to and employed in embalming, each performing a distinct and separate office, viz. a designer or painter, a dissector or anatomist, a pollinator or apothecary, an embalmer or surgeon, and a physician or priest. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 177.

To DISSEIZE. v. a. [dissaisir, French.] To dispossess; to deprive. It is commonly used of a legal act.

He so disseized of his gripping gross,

The knight his thrillant spear again assayed,

In his brass-plated body to emboss. Spenser, F. Q.

If a prince should give a man, besides his ancient patrimony, which his family had been disseized of, an additional estate, never before in the possession of his ancestors, he could not be said to re-establish lineal succession. Locke.

DISSEIZIN. n. s. [from disseisir, French.] An unlawful dispossessing a man of his land, tenement, or other immoveable or incorporeal right. Cowell.

In case of dissein, the law hath been, that the disseisor could not re-enter without action, unless he had, as it were, made a present and continual claim.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. s. 17.
He [was] fined before the justices itinerant at Dunstable a 100*l.* apiece for thirty forcible entries and disseins made by him upon divers men.

Stephens, Add. to Spelman's Hist. of Sacrilege.

DISSEIZOR.† n. s. [from disseize.] He that dispossesses another.

In case of dissein, the law hath been, that the disseisor could not re-enter without action, unless he had, as it were, made a present and continual claim.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. s. 17.
To consider themselves as novel disseizers, usurpers, and intruders.

DISSEMBLANCE.* n. s. [old Fr. dissemblance.] Want of resemblance; dissimilitude.

Nor can there be a greater dissemblance between one wise man and another.

Osborne, Adv. to a Son, 1658.

To DISSEMBLE.† v. a. [dissimulo, Latin; semlance, dissemblance, and dissembler, old Fr.]

1. To hide under false appearance; to conceal; to pretend that not to be which really is.

She answered, that her soul was God's; and touching her face, as she could not change, so she would not dissemble it.

Hayward.

2. To pretend that to be which is not. This is not the true signification.

Your son Lucentio

Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him,
Or both dissemble deeply their affections.

Shakspeare.

He soon dissembled a sleep; and she, pleased that his thoughts were composed, fell into a real one. Tatler, No. 172.

In vain, on the dissembled mother's tongue,
Had cunning art and sly persuasion hung;
And real care in vain, and native love
In the true parent's panting breast had strove.

Prior.

To DISSEMBLE.† v. n.

1. To play the hypocrite; to use false professions; to wheedle.

Ye dissembled in your hearts when ye sent me unto the Lord your God, saying, Pray for us.

Jer. xlii. 20.

I would dissemble with my nature, where
My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, requir'd
I should do so in honour.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

2. Shakspeare uses it for fraudulent, unperforming, Dr. Johnson says. But it rather means, in the passage which he has cited, to make unlike others; the opposite to the verb resemble, and not allied to the Latin dissimulare; as Mr. Donce also has noticed. So dissemblable, old Fr. unlike, Cotgrave. See also DISSEMBLANCE. If this be admitted, the verb in the example must be transferred to the active.

I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

DISSEMBLER.† n. s. [from dissemble.]

1. An hypocrite; a man who conceals his true disposition.

Thou dost wrong me, thou dissembler, thou.

Shakspeare.

The French king, in the business of peace, was the greater dissembler of the two.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Such an one, whose virtue forbiddeth him to be base and a dissembler, shall evermore hang under the wheel.

Raleigh.

The queen, with rage inflam'd,

Thus greets him, Thou dissembler, wouldst thou fly
Out of my arms by stealth?

Denham.

Men will trust no farther than they judge a person for sincerity fit to be trusted: a discovered dissembler can achieve nothing great and considerable.

South.

2. One who pretends that not to be, which really is.

For ought I know, all husbands are like me;

And every one I talk with of his wife,

Is but a well dissembler of his woes

As I am.

Beaumont and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

3. One who feigns what he does not feel or think.

A deep dissembler, not of his affections only, but of religion.

Milton, Eikonoclastes.

DISSEMBLING.* n. s. [from dissemble.] Dissimulation; fallacious appearance.

They are not upright, or sincere, as to their very being; but by such disguises, and dissembling, make themselves a real and visible (though a silent) lie.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 149.

Thy function too will varnish o'er our arts,
And sanctify dissembling.

Rome, Ambitious Stepmother.

DISSEMBLINGLY.† adv. [from dissemble.] With dissimulation; hypocritically.

St. Peter was dissemblingly divided between scandal and conscience from off the Jews and his judgement, in point of eating meats and conversing with the Gentiles, till God better informed him.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 113.

They might all have been either dissemblingly spoken, or falsely reported of the equity of the barbarous king.

Knolles.

To DISSEMINATE. v. a. [dissemino, Lat.] To scatter as seed; to sow; to spread every way.

All uses are made of it many times in stirring up seditions, rebellions, in disseminating of heresies, and infusing of prejudices.

Hammond, Fundamentals.

There is a nearly uniform and constant fire or heat disseminated throughout the body of the earth.

Woodward.

The Jews are indeed disseminated through all the trading parts of the world.

Addison, Spect.

By firmness of mind, and freedom of speech, the gospel was disseminated at first, and must still be maintained.

Atterbury.

DISSEMINATION.† n. s. [disseminatio, Lat.] The act of scattering like seed; the act of sowing or spreading.

Though now at the greatest distance from the beginning of error, yet we are almost lost in its dissemination, whose ways are boundless, and confess no circumscription.

Brown.

The Gospel is of universal dissemination.

Bp. Taylor, Life of Christ, i. § 4.

Those eight persons saved in the Ark, descending from the Gordian mountains, and multiplying to a large collection in the Plain of Sinaar, made their first division at that place: and that dispersion, or rather dissemination, hath peopled all other parts of the world, either never before inhabited, or dispeopled by the Flood.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

DISSEMINATOR. n. s. [disseminator, Lat.] He that scatters; a scatterer; a sower; a spreader.

Men, vehemently thirsting after a name in the world, hope to acquire it by being the disseminators of novel doctrines.

Decay of Piety.

DISSENSION† n. s. [dissensio, Lat.] Disagreement; strife; discord; contention; difference; quarrel; breach of union.

Friend now, fast sworn,

Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, whose exercise,

Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love,

Unseparable, shall within this hour,

On a dissension of a doil, break out

To bitterest enmity.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts,

That no dissension hinder government.

Shakspeare.

He appeased the dissension then arising about religion.

Knolles.

Grown

In wealth and multitude, factious they grow;

But first among the priests dissension springs.

Milton, P. L.

Debates, dissensions, uproars are thy joy;

Provok'd without offence, and practis'd to destroy.

Dryden.

DISSENSIOUS. adj. [from dissension.] Disposed to discord; quarrelsome; factious; contentious.

Either in religion they have a dissension head, or in the commonwealth a factious head. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Who are they that complain unto the king That I am stern? They love his grace but lightly, That fill his ears with such dissension rumours. Shakespeare.

You dissension rogues, That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion, Make yourselves scabs? Shakespeare, Coriol.

TO DISSENT. v. n. [dissentio, Lat.]

1. To disagree in opinion; to think in a contrary manner.

What cruelty of heathens has not been matched by the inhumanity of dissenting Christians? Decay of Piety.

There are many opinions in which multitudes of men dissent from us, who are as good and wise as ourselves. Addison.

2. To differ; to be of a contrary nature.

We see a general agreement in the secret opinion of men, that every man ought to embrace the religion which is true, and to shun, as hurtful, whatever dissenteth from it, but that most which doth furthest dissent. Hooker.

3. To differ from the established church.

How will dissenting brethren relish? What will malignants say? Hudibras.

DISSENT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Disagreement; difference of opinion; declaration of difference of opinion.

In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are grounds to suspect that there is proof as considerable to be produced on the contrary side; there dissent or dissent are voluntary dissent. Locke.

What could be the reason of this general dissent from the notion of the resurrection, seeing that almost all of them did believe the immortality of the soul? Bentley, Sermon.

2. Contrariety of nature; opposite quality. Not in use.

The dissents of the menstrual or strong waters may hinder the incorporation, as well as the dissent of the metals. Therefore where the menstrua are the same, and yet the incorporation followeth not, the dissent is in the metals. Bacon.

DISSENTANEOUS. adj. [from dissent.] Disagreeable; inconsistent; contrary.

They do not only disapprove it as dissentaneous to the Christian religion, but likewise as a matter unbecoming, and savouring too much of the flesh and sensuality of concupiscence.

Ritaul, State of the Greek Church, p. 306.

The capacities of the Jews were very low and gross, — being dissentaneous and repugnant to the common humour and genius of mankind. Barrow, Sermon, vol. ii. S. 15.

DISSENTANY. adj. [from dissent.] Dissentaneous; inconsistent.

The parts are not discrete, or dissentany, for both conclude not putting away, and consequently in such a form the proposition is ridiculous. Milton, Tetrachordon.

DISSENTER. n. s. [from dissent.]

1. One that disagrees, or declares his disagreement from an opinion.

'Twill be needless for me to treat as a casuist, to convince the dissenters from this doctrine.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654), p. 104.

They will admit of matter of fact, and agree with dissenters in that; but differ only in assigning of reasons. Locke.

2. One who, for whatever reasons, refuses the communion of the English church. The word is supposed to have been assumed by the Presbyterians soon after the Restoration.

They had been used but as tools to prevent the dissenters from uniting with the Church of England, whenever the common danger should come to threaten both.

Welwood's Memoirs, p. 196.

The independents gradually, after the Restoration, mingled with the mass of Presbyterians, and now lie undistinguished in the herd of dissenters. Swift on the Presbyt. Plea of Merit.

DISSENTING. n. s. [from dissent.] Declaration of difference of opinion.

I shall never think myself conscientiously tied to go as oft against my conscience as I should consent to such new proposals, which my reason, in justice, honour, and religion, bids me deny. — And if my dissentings at any time were, as some have suspected and uncharitably avowed, out of error, opinion, activeness, weakness, or wilfulness; — yet can no man think it other than the badge and method of slavery, by savage rudeness, and importunate obtrusions of violence, to have the mist of his error and passion dispelled.

K. Charles, Ficon Basil, ch. 6.

DISSENTIOUS. See DISSENSIOUS.

TO DISSERT. v. n. [Lat. disserto.] To discourse; to dispute on matters. Cockram.

Could I however repeat you the words of venerable sage, (for I can call him no other,) whom once I heard disserting on the topic of religion, and whom still I hear, whenever I think on him; you might accept perhaps my religious theories as candidly, as you have my moral.

Dialogue on the Happiness.

DISSERTATION. n. s. [dissertatio, Lat.] A discourse; a disquisition; a treatise.

Plutarch, in his dissertation upon the poets, quotes an instance of Homer's judgement in closing a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction. Broome on the Odyssey.

DISSERTATOR. n. s. [Lat. disserto.] One who discourses or debates upon a subject.

Our dissertator learnedly argues, if these books lay untouched and unstirred, they must have mouldered away.

Boyle on Bentley's Phalaris, p. 114.

TO DISSERVE. v. a. [old Fr. desservir.] To do injury to; to mischief; to damage; to hurt; to harm.

Having never done the king the least service, he took the first opportunity to disserve him, and engaged against him from the beginning of the rebellion.

Desires of things of this world, by their tendency, promote or disserve our interests in another. Rogers.

DISSERVICE. n. s. [old Fr. desservice.] Injury; mischief; ill turn.

We shall rather perform good offices unto truth, than any disservice unto relations who have well deserved. Brown.

Great sicknesses make a sensible alteration, but smaller indispositions do a proportionable disservice. Collier.

DISSERVICEABLE. adj. [from disservice.] Injurious; mischievous; hurtful.

DISSERVICEABLENESS. n. s. [from disserviceable.] Injury; harm; hurt; mischief; damage.

All action being for some end, and not the end itself, its aptness to be commanded or forbidden must be founded upon its serviceableness or disserviceableness to some end. Norris.

TO DISSETTLE. v. a. [dis and settle.] To unsettle; to unfix.

Under whose government [that of a carnal mind] he was resolved to be, and not be dissettled by the inlets of any higher light.

More, Expos. of St. Chrysostr. Pref.

TO DISSEVER. v. a. [dis and sever.] In this word the particle dis makes no change in the signification, and therefore the word, though supported by great authorities, ought to be ejected from our language, Dr. Johnson says. Our word, in fact, is the old French desseverer. To part in two; to break; to divide; to sunder; to separate; to disunite.

Shortly had the storm so dissevered the company, which the day before had tarried together, that most of them never met again, but were swallowed up.

All downright rains dissever the violence of outrageous winds, and level the mountainous billows. Keble.

Discover your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once again.
The meeting points the sacred hair discover
From the fair head, for ever and for ever. Shakespeare.
Pope.

DISSEVERANCE.* n. s. [old Fr. desseverance.] Separation. Used by Hoocheve and G. Douglas. Obsolete.

DISSEVERING.* n. s. [from dissever.] Separation. The dissevering of fleets hath been the overthrow of many actions. Raleigh.

DISSIDENCE. n. s. [dissidco, Lat.] Discord; disagreement. Dict.

DISSIDENT.* adj. [Lat. dissideo, dissidens.] Varying; not agreeing.

But in that new-found part of the world, which is scarcely so far from us beyond the line equinoctial, as our life and manners be dissident from theirs, no trust nor confidence is in leagues. Robinson, Tr. of More's Utopia, (1551,) ch. 9.

DISSIDENTS.* n. s. [from the adjective.] A name applied to those of the Lutheran, Calvinistick, and Greek profession in Poland.

The diet appeared to treat the complaints of the dissidents with great moderation, as to the free exercise of their worship, which gave some flattering expectations that the affair would be happily terminated. Guthrie, Poland.

DISSILIENCE. n. s. [dissilio, Lat.] The act of starting asunder.

DISSILIENT. adj. [dissiliens, Lat.] Starting asunder; bursting in two.

DISSILIATION. n. s. [dissilio, Lat.] The act of bursting in two; the act of starting different ways.

The air having much room to receive motion, the dissilation of that air was great. Boyle, Spring of the Air.

DISSIMILAR. adj. [dis and similar.] Unlike; heterogeneous.

Simple oil is reduced into dissimilar parts, and yields a sweet oil, very differing from sullet-oil. Boyle.

The light whose rays are all alike refrangible I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar. Newton.

If the fluid be supposed to consist of heterogeneous particles, we cannot conceive how those dissimilar parts can have a like situation. Bentley.

DISSIMILARITY. n. s. [from dissimilar.] Unlikeness; dissimilitude.

If the principle of reunion has not its energy in this life, whenever the attractions of sense cease, the acquired principles of dissimilarity must repel these beings from their centre; so that the principle of reunion, being set free by death, must drive these beings towards God their centre, and the principle of dissimilarity forcing him to repel them with infinite violence from him, must make them infinitely miserable. Chene.

DISSIMILE.* n. s. [Lat. dissimile.] A dissimilitude; a comparison with, and illustration by, contraries. "Contraria juxta se posita magis elucescunt." Such is the definition of a dissimile, following that of a simile, in the Instructions for Oratory, Oxf. 1682, p. 63. In the parts of rhetoric, dissimiles and contraries are there placed among "the ornaments of speech," sign. A. 3.

DISSIMILITUDE.† n. s. [dissimilitudo, Lat.]

1. Unlikeness; want of resemblance.

Thereupon grew marvellous dissimilitudes, and by reason thereof jealousies, new turnings, jar, and discords. Hooker.

We doubt whether the Lord, in different circumstances, did frame his people unto any other dissimilitude, either with Egyptians, or any other nation. Hooker.

The dissimilitude between the Divinity and images, shews that images are not a suitable means whereby to worship God. Stillington.

As humane society is founded in the similitude of some things, so it is promoted by some certain dissimilitudes. Grew. Women are curious observers of the likeness of children to parents, that they may, upon finding dissimilitude, have the pleasure of hinting unchastity. Pope, Odyssey, Notes.

2. Comparison by contraries. See DISSIMILE.

Dissimilitudes are expressed either by disjunction, or by commutation and conversion, and several ways of comparing together and reflecting upon them.

Instruct. for Oratory, p. 63.

DISSIMULATION.† n. s. [dissimulatio, Latin.]

"The learned make a difference between simulation and dissimulation. Simulation is a pretence of what is not; and dissimulation is a concealment of what is." Tatler, No. 213. The act of dissembling; hypocrisy; fallacious appearance; false pretensions.

Dissimulation is but a faint kind of policy; for it asketh a strong wit, and a strong heart, to know when to tell truth, and to do it. Bacon.

He added not; and Satan, bowing low

His grey dissimulation, disappear'd
Into thin air diffus'd.

Milton, P. R.

Dissimulation may be taken for a bare concealment of one's mind, in which sense we commonly say, that it is prudence to dissemble injuries. South.

To DISSIMULE.* v. a. [old Fr. dissimuler; Lat. dissimulo.] To dissemble. Not now in use. Chaucer presents us both with this verb, and with the substantive dissimuling.

To the intent he would not discomfort his friend Titus, [he] dissimuled his heaviness. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 124.

In the church some errors may be dissimuled with less inconvenience, than they can be discovered.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

DISSIPABLE. adj. [from dissipate.] Easily scattered; liable to dispersion.

The heat of those plants is very dissipable, which under the earth is contained and held in; but when it cometh to the air it exhalath. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The parts of plants are very tender, as consisting of corpuscles which are extremely small and light, and therefore the more easily dissipable. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To DISSIPATE.† v. a. [dissipatus, Lat.]

1. To scatter every way; to disperse.

Martin, the legate of Pope Innocent the VIII., revoked and dissipated all former grants.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ii. § 4.

The heat at length grows so great, that it again dissipates and tears off those corpuscles which it brought.

Woodward.

It is covered with skin and hair to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retard the edge of any weapon. Ray.

The circling mountains eddy in,
From the bare wild, the dissipated storm.

Thomson.

2. To scatter the attention.

This slavery to his passions produced a life irregular and dissipated.

Savage's Life.

3. To spend a fortune.

The wherry that contains
Of dissipated wealth the poor remains.

London.

DISSIPATION. n. s. [dissipatio, Latin.]

1. The act of dispersion.

The effects of heat are most advanced when it worketh upon a body without loss or dissipation of the matter. Bacon.

Abraham was contemporary with Paleg, in whose time the famous dissipation of mankind and distinction of languages happened. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. The state of being dispersed.

Now

Foul dissipation follow'd, and forc'd rout.

Milton, P. L.

• Where the earth contains nitre within it, if that heat which is continually straining out of the earth be preserved, its dissi- passion prevented, and the cold kept off by some building; this alone is ordinarily sufficient to raise up the nitre. Woodward.

3. Scattered attention.

I have begun two or three letters to you by snatches, and been prevented from finishing them by a thousand avocations and dissipations. Swift.

DISSOCIABLE.* adj. [Lat. dissociabilis.] Not to be brought to good fellowship. Cockeram.

A company of scribbling parasites, fiery spiritual friars, zealous anchorites, hypocritical confessors, and those Pectorian soldiers, his janitory jesuits, that dissociable society, as Languis terms it. Barlow, Anat. of Mel. p. 650.

To DISSOCIATE.† v. a. [dissocio, Latin.] To separate; to disunite; to part. Cockeram.

In the dissociating action, even of the gentlest fire, upon a concrete, there perhaps vanish some active and fugitive particles, whose presence was requisite to contain the concrete under such a determinate form. Boyle.

By this dissociating every state from every other, like deer separated from the herd, each power is treated with, on the merit of his being a deserter from the common cause. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

DISSOCIATION.* n. s. [from dissociate.] Separation; division.

Before the dissociation of the seventeen provinces, this town [Antwerp] was one of the greatest marts of Europe. Howell, Lett. i. ii. 15.

DISSOLVABLE.† adj. [from dissolve.] Capable of dissolution; liable to be melted.

The body is dissolvable and mortal.

Mare, Song of the Soul, To the Reader.

Such things as are not dissolvable by the moisture of the tongue, act not upon the taste. Newton.

DISSOLUBLE.† adj. [dissolubilis, Latin.] Capable of separation; having one part separable from another by heat or moisture.

That which is commonly known among us being properly a gummous body and dissoluble also in water. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 12.

Nodules, reposed in cliffs amongst the earth, being hard and not so dissoluble, are left behind. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

DISSOLUBILITY. n. s. [from dissoluble.] Liableness to suffer a disunion of parts by heat or moisture; capacity of being dissolved.

Bodies seem to have an intrinsic principle of alteration, or corruption, from the dissolubility of their parts, and the collision of several particles endued with contrary and destructive qualities each to other. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To DISSOLVE. v. a. [dissolvo, Latin.]

1. To destroy the form of any thing by disuniting the parts with heat or moisture; to melt; to liquify.

I have heard of anchovies dissolved in sauce. Dryden.

The whole terrestrial globe was riven all to pieces, and dissolved at the deluge. Woodward.

2. To break; to disunite in any manner.

Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be? 2 Pet. iii. 11.

3. To loose; to break the ties of anything.

Down fell the duke, his joints dissolv'd asunder.

Blind with the light, and stricken dead with wonder. Fairfax.

Witness these ancient empires of the earth,

In height of all their flowing wealth dissolv'd. Milton, P. R.

The commons live, by no divisions rent;

But the great monarch's death dissolves the government. Dryden.

4. To separate persons united; as, to dissolve a league.

She and I long since contracted,
Are now so sure that nothing can dissolve us. Shakespeare.

5. To break up assemblies.

By the king's authority alone, and by his writs, parliaments are assembled; and by him alone they are prorogued and dissolved, but each house may adjourn itself. Bacon to Villiers.

6. To solve; to clear.

And I have heard of thee, that thou can'st make interpretations and dissolve doubts. Dan. v. 16.

7. To break an enchantment.

Highly it concerns his glory now
To frustrate and dissolve these magick spells. Milton, S. A.

8. To be relaxed by pleasure.

Angels dissolv'd in hallelujahs sic. Dryden.

To DISSOLVE. v. n.

1. To be melted; to be liquefied.

All putrefaction, if it dissolve not in rarefaction, will in the end issue into plants or living creatures bred of putrefaction. Bacon.

As wax dissolves, as ice begins to run

And trickle into drops before the sun,

So melts the youth, and languishes away. Addison, Ovid.

2. To sink away; to fall to nothing.

If there be more, more woeful, hold it in;
For I am almost ready to dissolve, Hearing of this. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. To melt away in pleasures.

DISSOLVENT. adj. [from dissolve.] Having the power of dissolving or melting.

In man and vivaporous quadrupeds, the food moistened with the spittle, is first chewed, then swallowed into the stomach, where, being mingled with dissolvent juices, it is concocted, macerated, and reduced into a chyle. Ray.

DISSOLVENT. n. s. [from the adjective.] That which has the power of disuniting the parts of any thing.

ish from a country.

They commonly call it the second Italy, which made the Moors, whereof many thousands were disterr'd and banished hence to Barbary, to think that paradise was in that part of the heavens which hung over this city. Howell, Lett. i. 1. 24.

They [the Jews] were all suddenly disterr'd and exterminated. Id. i. iii. 32.

TO DISTHRO'NIZE. † v. a. [destroner, old Fr.] To dethrone; to depose from sovereignty. Not used.

By his death he it recovered;

But Peridure and Vigent him dathroniz'd. Spenser, F. Q.

DISTICH. n. s. [distichon, Latin.] A couplet; a couple of lines; an epigram consisting only of two verses.

The French compare anagrams, by themselves, to gems; but when they are cast into a distich, or epigram, to gems encased in enamelled gold. Camden, Rem.

The bard, whose distich all commend,

In power, a servant; out of power, a friend. Pope.

TO DISTILL. † v. n. [distillo, Lat. distiller, Fr.]

1. To drop; to fall by drops.

My doctrine shall drop as the rain; my speech shall distil as the dew. Deut. xxxii. 2.

How vain kind seasons swell'd the teeming grain;

Soft showers distill'd, and suns grey warm in vain.

Crystal drops from min'ral roofs distil. Pope.

2. To flow gently and silently.

The Euphrates distilleth out of the mountains of Armenia, and falleth into the gulph of Persia. Raleigh, Hist.

3. To use a still; to practise the act of distillation.

Vol. II.

Have I not been

To pupil long? Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes, distil, preserve? Shakespeare, Cymb.

To DISTILL. v. a.

1. To let fall in drops; to drop any thing down.
They pour down rain according to the vapour thereof, which the clouds do drop and distil upon man abundantly. Job, xxxvi. 28.

The dew, which on the tender grass

The evening had distill'd,

To pure rose water turned was,

The shades with sweets that fill'd.

From his fair head

Perfumes distil their sweets.

The roof is vaulted, and distils fresh water from every part of it, which fell upon us as fast as the first droppings of a shower. Addison on Italy.

2. To force by fire through the vessels of distillation; to exalt, separate, or purify by fire; as, distilled spirits.

There hangs a vaporous drop profound;

I'll catch it ere it come to ground;

And that, distill'd by magic slights,

Shall raise such artificial sprights.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. To draw by distillation; to extract by the force of fire.

The liquid, distilled from benzoin, is subject to frequent vicissitudes of fluidity and firmness. Boyle.

4. To dissolve or melt.

Swords by the lightning's subtle force distill'd,

And the cold sheath with running metal fill'd.

Addison.

DISTILLABLE. * adj. [Fr. distillable.] Fit to be distilled. Sherwood.

DISTILLATION. n. s. [distillatio, Lat.]

1. The act of dropping, or falling in drops.
2. The act of pouring out in drops.
3. That which falls in drops.
4. The act of distilling by fire.

Water by frequent distillations changes into fixed earth. Newton.

The serum of the blood, by a strong distillation, affords a spirit, or volatile alkaline salt, and two kinds of oil, and an earth. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

5. The substance drawn by the still.

I suffered the pangs of an egregious death, to be stopt in like a strong distillation, with cloaths. Shakespeare.

DISTILLATORY. adj. [from distil.] Belonging to distillation; used in distillation.

Besides those grosser elements of bodies, salt, sulphur, and mercury, ingredients of a more subtile nature, extremely little, and not visible, may escape at the junctures of the distillatory vessels. Boyle.

DISTILLER. n. s. [from distil.]

1. One who practises the art or trade of distilling.
I sent for spirit of salt to a very eminent distiller of it. Boyle.
2. One who makes and sells pernicious and inflammatory spirits.

DISTILLERY. * n. s. [from distil.]

1. The art of distilling spirits.
2. The place, where the distiller exposes his spirits for sale.

DISTILMENT. n. s. [from distil.] That which is drawn by distillation; that which drops. A word formerly used, but now obsolete.

Upon my secure hour thy nuptial stole,

And in the porches of mine ear did pour

The leperous distilment.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

DISTINCT. adj. [distinctus, Lat.]

1. Different; not the same in number or in kind.
Bellarmine saith, it is idolatry to give the same worship to an image which is due to God: Vasquez saith, it is idolatry to give distinct worship: therefore, if a man would avoid idolatry, he must give none at all. Stillingfleet.

Fatherhood and property are distinct titles, and began presently, upon Adam's death, to be in distinct persons. Locke.

2. Different; separate; being apart, not conjunct.

The intention was, that the two armies, which marched out together, should afterwards be distinct. Clarendon.

Men have immortal spirits, capable of a pleasure and happiness distinct from that of our bodies. Tillotson.

3. Clear; unconfused.

Heav'n is high,

High and remote, to see from thence distinct

Each thing on earth.

Milton, P. L.

4. Spotted; variegated.

Tempestuous fell

His arrows from the four-fold-visag'd four,

Distinct with eyes; and from the living wheels

Distinct alike with multitude of eyes.

Milton, P. L.

5. Marked out; specified.

Dominion hold

Over all living things that move on th' earth,

Wherever thus created; for no place

Is yet distinct by name.

Milton, P. L.

To DISTINCT. * v. a. [Lat. distinguo, distinctum.]

To distinguish. One of our oldest verbs; but not now in use.

• There can no right distinct it so,

That he dare saie a word thereto.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 6199.

Distincted with points, pauses, or rests.

Barret.

DISTINCTION. † n. s. [distinguo, Lat.]

1. The act of discerning one as preferable to the other.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,

Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,

Puffing at all, winnows the light away.

Shakespeare.

2. Note of difference.

Nice distinctions in phraseology, and minute differences in words, should be observed by accurate translators.

Abb. Newcome, View of Bib. Translations.

3. Honourable note of superiority.

The subject turned upon the nature of societies, ranks, orders, and distinctions amongst men. Shenstone.

4. That by which one differs from another.

This faculty of perception puts the distinction betwixt the animal kingdom and the inferior parts of matter. Locke.

5. Difference regarded; preference or neglect in comparison with something else.

Maids, women, wives, without distinction fall;

The sweeping deluge, love, comes on, and covers all. Dryden.

6. Separation of complex notions.

This fierce abridgement

Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

7. Division into different parts.

The distinction of tragedy into acts was not known; or, if it were, it is yet so darkly delivered to us, that we cannot make it out. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

8. Notation of difference between things seemingly the same; discrimination.

The mixture of those things by speech, which by nature are divided, is the mother of all error: to take away therefore that error, which confusion breedeth, distinction is requisite.

Hooker.

Lawfulness cannot be handled without limitations and distinctions. Bacon, Holy War.

This will puzzle all your logick

And distinctions to answer it.

Denham, Sophy.

From this distinction of real and apparent good, some distinguish happiness into two sorts, real and imaginary. Norris.

9. Discernment; judgement.

Was it not ever one of Nature's glories,

Nay, her great piece of wonder, that amongst

So many million millions of her works

She left the eye distinction, to call out
The one from th' other? Beaumont and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

DISTINCTIVE. adj. [from distinct.]

1. That which marks distinction or difference.

For from the natal hour, distinctive names.

One common right the great and lowly claims. Pope, Odyssey.

2. Having the power to distinguish and discern; judicious.

Credulous and vulgar auditors readily believe it, and the more judicious and distinctive heads do not reject it. Brown.

DISTINCTIVELY. adv. [from distinctive.] Particularly; not confusedly. Dr. Johnson cites a passage from Shakspeare, in which the true word is intensively, not distinctively.

In learning's better part her skill was such,
That her sweet tongue could speak distinctively
Greek, Latin, Tuscan, Spanish, French, and Dutch.

Misc. for Mag. p. 855.

DISTINCTLY. adv. [from distinct.]

1. Not confusedly; without the confusion of one part with another.

To make an echo that will report three, or four, or five words distinctly, it is requisite that the body percussing be a good distance off. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

On its sides it was bounded pretty distinctly, but on its ends very confusedly and indistinctly. Newton, Opticks.

2. Plainly; clearly.

The object I could first distinctly view,
Was tall straight trees, which on the waters flew. Dryden.
After the light of the sun was a little worn off my eyes, I could see all the parts of it distinctly, by a glimmering reflection that played upon them from the surface of the water. Addison.

DISTINCTNESS. n. s. [from distinct.]

1. Nice observation of the difference between different things.

The membranes and humours of the eye are perfectly pellucid, and void of colour, for the clearness, and for the distinctness of vision. Ray on the Creation.

The better to serve distinctness of apprehension in this subject, I shall consider all the wonderful impressions of the airy region, apart from the apparitions of spirits.

Spencer on Prodiges, p. 183.

2. Such separation of things as makes them easy to be separately observed.

He seems justly to wonder, that artists have so seldom had recourse to this great storehouse of beautiful and noble images, so proper for the employment of their pencils, and delivered with so much force and distinctness, that the painter has nothing to do but to substitute his colours for the words of Homer.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

The effects of the rising sun on a vernal landscape, with its accompaniments, are thus delineated in the manner of Lydgate, yet with more strength, distinctness, and exuberance of ornament. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 264.

TO DISTINGUISH. v. a. [distinguo, Lat.]

1. To note the diversity of things.

Rightly to distinguish, is, by conceit of the mind, to sever things different in nature, and to discern wherein they differ. Hooker.

2. To separate from others by some mark of honour or preference.

They distinguish my poems from those of other men, and have made me their peculiar care. Dryden.

Let us resolve that roll with strictest eye,
Where, safe from time, distinguish'd actions lie. Prior.

3. To divide by proper notes of diversity.

Moses distinguishes the causes of the flood into those that belong to the heavens, and those that belong to the earth, the rains, and the abyss. Burnet, Theory.

4. To know one from another by any mark or note of difference.

So long

As he could make me, with his eye or ear,

Distinguish him from others, he did keep

The dock. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

We have not yet been seen in any house,

Nor can we be distinguish'd by our faces,
For man or master. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

By our reason we are enabled to distinguish good from evil, as well as truth from falsehood. Watts, Logick.

5. To discern critically; to judge.

Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your years

Hath not yet divid into the world's deceit;

Nor more can you distinguish of a man,
Than of his outward shew! Shakspeare, Rich. III.

6. To constitute difference; to specificate; to make different from another.

St Paul's Epistles contain nothing but points of christian instruction, amongst which he seldom fails to enlarge on the great and distinguishing doctrines of our holy religion. Locke.

7. To make known or eminent.

TO DISTINGUISH. v. n. To make distinction; to find or shew the difference.

He would warily distinguish between the profit of the merchant and the gain of the kingdom. Child, Disc. on Trade.

The readers must learn by all means to distinguish between proverbs and those polite speeches which beautify conversation. Swift.

DISTINGUISHABLE. adj. [from distinguish.]

1. Capable of being distinguished; capable of being known or made known by notes of diversity.

[They] left a race behind

Like to themselves, distinguishable scarce
From Gentiles, but by circumcision vain. Milton, P. R.

The acting of the soul, as it relates to perception and decision, to choice and pursuit, or aversion, is distinguishable to us. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

I shall distribute duty into its principal and eminent parts, distinguishable as they relate to God, our neighbour, and ourselves. Gov. of the Tongue.

Being dissolved in aqueous juices, it is by the eye distinguishable from the solvent body. Boyle.

A simple idea, being in itself uncompounded, contains nothing but one uniform appearance, or conception in the mind, and is not distinguishable into different ideas. Locke.

2. Worthy of note; worthy of regard.

I would endeavour that my betters should seek me by the merit of something distinguishable, instead of my seeking them. Swift.

DISTINGUISHED. participial adj. [from distinguish.]

Eminent; transcendent; extraordinary.

For sins committed, with many aggravations of guilt, the furnace of wrath will be seven times hotter, and burn with a distinguished fury. Rogers.

Never on man did heav'nly favour shine
With rays so strong, distinguish'd and divine. Pope, Odys.

DISTINGUISHER. n. s. [from distinguish.]

1. A judicious observer; one that accurately discerns one thing from another.

If writers be just to the memory of Charles II. they cannot deny him to have been an exact knower of mankind, and a perfect distinguisher of their talents. Dryden.

2. He that separates one thing from another by proper marks of diversity.

Let us admire the wisdom of God in this distinguisher of times, and visible deity, the sun. Brown, Vulg. Prr.

DISTINGUISHINGLY. adv. [from distinguishing.]

With distinction; with some mark of eminent preference.

If we observe distinguishtly, and exactly apply and proportion the arguments to the imperfect christian state, you shall find that promises are the most proper, congruous, agreeable argument, most apt and hopeful to do the deed, to have the impression upon the heart. Hammond, Serm. vi.

Some call me a Tory, because the heads of that party have been distinguishtly favourable to me. Pope.

DISTINGUISHMENT. n. s. [from distinguish.] Distinction; observation of difference.

And mannerly distinguishment leave out
Betwixt the prince and beggar. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.
In all parts of the world where wealth and traffick is, are such distinguishments, Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 45.
To make corrections upon the searchers reports, I considered whether any credit at all were to be given to their distinguishments. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

To DISTILLE.* v. a. [dis and tille.] To deprive of right.

That were the next way to distille myself of honour.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

To DISTORT. v. a. [distortus, Lat.] *

1. To writhe; to twist; to deform by irregular motions.

I see her taste each nauseous draught,
And so obligingly am caught,
I bless the hand from whence they came,
Nor dare distort my face for shame. Swift.
Now mortal pangs distort his lovely form. Smith.

2. To put out of the true direction or posture.

Distorted all my nether shape thus grew

Wrath and malice, envy and revenge, do darken and dis- tort the understandings of men Tillotson.

3. To wrest from the true meaning.

Something must be distorted, beside the intent of the divine inditer. Peacham on Poetry.

DISTORT.* adj. Distorted; writhed.

Her face was ugly, and her mouth distort.
Spenser, F. Q. v. xii. 36.

DISTORTION.† n. s. [distortio, Lat.]

1. Irregular motion by which the face is writhed, or the parts disordered.

By his distortions he reveals his pains;
He by his tears, and by his sighs complains. Prior.
In England we see people lulled asleep with solid and elaborate discourses of piety, who would be warmed and transported out of themselves by the bewillings and distortions of enthusiasm. Addison, Spect.

2. A wresting from the true meaning.

Those absurdities are all framed by himself, either by a willing mistake of my meaning, or by a childish distortion of my words. Bp. Wren, Monarchy Asserted, (1659.) p. 147.

To DISTRACT.† v. a. part. pass. distracted; anciently distracted, distracted, and distract.
[distractus, Lat.]

1. To pull different ways at once.

The needle endeavours to conform unto the meridian, but being distracted, driveth that way where the greater and power-fuller part of the earth is plac'd. Brown, Vulg. Err

2. To separate; to divide.

By sea, by war
—Most worthy sir, youerein throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land;
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-musk'd footmen. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
Once it was well compacted, and built as a city that is at unity in itself; but now distracted from itself.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 275.

3. To turn from a single direction towards various points.

If he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it by a multiplicity of the object. South.

4. To fill the mind with contrary considerations; to perplex; to confound; to harass.

Vouchsafe then, O Thou most Almighty Spright
From whom all gifts of wit and knowledge flow,
To shed into my breast some sparkling light
Of Thine eternal truth, that I may show
Some little beams to mortal eyes below
Of that immortal beauty, there with Thee,
Which in my weak distracted mind I see.
Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Beauty.

While I suffer thy terrors I am distracted.

Psaln lxxxviii. 15.

Come, cousin, can'st thou quake, and change thy colour,
Murder thy breath in middle of a word,
And then again begin and stop again?
As if thou wert distracted and mad with terror?

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

It would burst forth; but I recover breath,
And sense distract to know well what I utter. Milton, S. A.

He possesses a quiet and cheerful mind, not afflicted with violent passions, or distracted with immoderate cares. Ray.

If our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, how would a perpetual noise distract us? We should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep or meditate than in the middle of a sea-fight. Locke.

5. To make mad: properly, by an unsettled and vagrant fancy; but popularly, to make mad in whatever mode.

Wherefore throng you hither?

— To fetch my poor distracted husband hence:

Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,

And bear him home for his recovery.

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

Better I were distract.

So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs,

And woes, by wrong imagination, lose

The knowledge of themselves.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

She was unable, in strength of mind, to bear the grief of his decease, and fell distracted of her wits. Bacon.

You shall find a distracted man fancy himself a king, and with a right inference require suitable attendance, respect, and obedience. Locke.

DISTRACT.* part. adj. [Lat. distractus. See To DISTRACT.] Mad.

Alone she being left, the spoil of love and death,

In labour of her grief outrageously distract.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 6.

DISTRACTEDLY.† adv. [from distract.] Madly; frantically.

Methought her eyes had cross'd her tongue;

For she did speak in starts distractedly.

Shakspeare, Tim. Night.

It is fine sport to see in our authors, how the devil with his famous oracles and prophets foreseeing by his skill in the Scripture that Christ was near his birth, did droop upon it and hang the wing; did sensibly decay in his courage; began to breathe quick, and speak imperfectly; and sometimes as men in the extremity of a fever, distractedly, wildly, without any coherence, and scarce sense. Hammond, Sermon. xvi.

DISTRACTEDNESS.† n. s. [from distract.] The state of being distracted; madness.

Lo, thou, to whom the greatest throng was a solitude in respect of the fruition of thy Father, thou, who wert un-capable of distraction from him with whom thou wert one, wouldst yet so much act man as to retire for the opportunity of prayer; to teach us, who are nothing but wild thoughts and giddy distractedness, to go aside when we would speak with God. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

DISTRACTED.* n. s. [from distract.] That which draws aside, or which perplexes and confounds.

Such inspiration as this, is no distracter from, but an accomplisher and enlarger of, human faculties.

More, Genj. Cabb. Preface.

DISTRACTION.† n. s. [distractio, Lat.]

1. Tendency to different parts; separation.

While he was yet in Rome,

His power went out in such distractions as Beau'd all spies.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Thou, to whom the greatest throng was a solitude in respect of the fruition of thy Father, thou who wert incapable of distractio from him with whom thou wert one, wouldst yet so much act man as to retire for the opportunity of prayer.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

2. Confusion; state in which the attention is called different ways.

That ye may attend upon the Lord without *distract*ion.

1 Cor. vii. 35.

Never was known a night of such *distract*ion;
Noise so confus'd and dreadful; jostling crowds,
That run, and knew not whither. Dryden, Span. Friar.

What may we not hope from him in a time of quiet and tranquillity, since, during the late *distract*ions, he has done so much for the advantage of our trade? Addison, Freeholder.

3. Perturbation of mind; violence of some painful passion.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, the conspicuous *distract*ions, the crisis of the liver. Brown.

The *distract*ion of the children, who saw both their parents expiring together, would have melted the hardest heart. Tatler.

4. Madness; frantickness; loss of the wits; vagrancy of the mind.

Madam, this is a mere *distract*ion:
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shakspeare.

So to mad Pentheus double Thebes appears,
And furies howl in his distemper'd ears:
Orestes so, with like *distract*ion tost,
Is made to fly his mother's angry ghost. Waller.

Commiserate all those who labour under a settled *distract*ion, and who are shut out from all the pleasures and advantages of human commerce. Atterbury.

5. Disturbance; discord; difference of sentiments.

The two armies lay quiet near each other, without improving the confusion and *distract*ion which the king's forces were too much inclined to. Clarendon.

DISTRACTIVE. † adj. [from distract.] Causing perplexity.

In these perilous and distractive times.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 104.

Who is not too thick-sighted, may see how hurtful and distractive it is to the house, the church, and commonwealth.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

Of grown unmindful through distractive cares
I've stretched my arms and touch'd him unawares. Dryden.

To DISTRAIN. † v. a. [Fr. destraindre.]

1. To seize; to lay hold on as an indemnification for a debt.

Here's Beaufort, that regards not God nor king,
Hath here distrain'd the Tower to his use. Shakspeare.

2. To rend; to tear. Spenser. Not in use.

To DISTRAIN. v. n. To make seizure.

The earl answer'd, I will not lend money to my superior, upon whom I cannot distrain for the debt. Camden, Remains.

Blood, his rent to have regain'd,
Upon the British diadem distrain'd. Marrel.

DISTRAINER. n. s. [from distrain.] He that seizes.

DISTRAINT. n. s. [from distrain.] Seizure. Dict.

DISTRAUGHT. † part. adj. [from distract.] Distracted. See To DISTRACT.

He had been a good military man in his days, but was then distracted of his wits. Camden, Remains.

At length I wisdom ponder'd in my thought,
And madness weigh'd: for folly is distracted. Sandys, Eccles. p. 3.

DISTRAUGHTED. * See the 4th sense of To DISTRACT.

To DISTREAM. * v. n. [from stream, with the unmeaning addition of dis.] A poetical word of modern times. To flow.

Still as the village caught the waving sound,
A swelling tear distream'd from every eye. Shenstone, Elegy.

DISTRESS. n. s. [destrasse, Fr.]

1. The act of making a legal seizure.

He would first demand his debt; and, if he were not paid, he would straight go and take a distress of goods and cattle, where he could find them, to the value. Spenser on Ireland.

Quoth she, some say, the soul's secure Against distress and forfeiture. Hudibras.

2. A compulsion in real actions, by which a man is assured to appear in court, or to pay a debt or duty which he refused. Cowel.

3. The thing seized by law.

4. Calamity; misery; misfortune.

There can I sit alone, unseen of any,
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses, and record my woes. Shakspeare.

There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring. Luke, xxi. 25.

People in affliction or distress cannot be hated by generous minds. Richardson, Clarissa.

To DISTRESS. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prosecute by law to a seizure.

2. To harass; to make miserable; to crash with calamity.

Distress not the Mosquitoes, neither contend with them in battle. Deut. ii. 9.

I am distressed for thee, Jonathan. 1 Sam. xiv. 26.

DISTRESSEDNESS. * n. s. [from the part. distressed.]

The state of being distressed. Scott.

DISTRESSFUL. adj. [distress and full.]

1. Miserable; full of trouble; full of misery.

I often did beguile her of her tears,
When I did speak of some distressful stroke
That my youth suffered. Shakspeare, Othello.

The ewes still folded, with disended thighs,
Unmilk'd, lay bleating in distressful cries. Pope, Odyssey.

Distressful and desolating events, which have attended the mistakes of politicians, should be present in their minds. Watts.

2. Attended with poverty.

He, with a body fill'd and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread. Shakspeare.

DISTRESSFULLY. * adv. [from distressful.] In a miserable manner.

I am distressfully dead. Johnson.

DISTRESSING. * adj. [from distress.] Harassing;

afflicting; tormenting; painful. Ash.

To DISTRIBUTE. v. a. [distribuo, Lat.] To divide amongst more than two; to deal out; to dispense.

The king sent over a great store of gentlemen and warlike people, amongst whom he distributed the land. Spenser on Ireland.

The spoil got on the Antiates
Was not distributed. Shakspeare, Coriol.

She did distribute her goods to all them that were nearest of kindred. Judith, xvi. 24.

DISTRIBUTER. † n. s. [from distribute.] One who deals out any thing; a dispenser.

He is a distributor of the church goods.

A Fruitful Sermon on Rom. xii. 3, &c. (1584), p. 65.

We might cast in also the consideration of that divine Nemesis, which God has placed in the frame and nature of the universal creation, as he is a distributor to every one according to his works. More, Cong. Cabb. p. 153.

There were judges and distributors of justice appointed for the several parts of his dominions. Addison on Italy.

Of that peculiar matter out of which the bodies of vegetables and of animals are formed, water is the common vehicle and distributor to the parts of those bodies. Woodward.

DISTRIBUTION. n. s. [distributio, Lat.]

1. The act of distributing or dealing out to others; dispensation.

Of great riches there is no real use, except it be in the distribution. Bacon, Essays.

Providence has made an equal distribution of natural gifts, whereof each creature severally has a share. L'Estrange.

Every man in a great station would imitate the queen in the distribution of offices in his disposal. Swift.

2. Act of giving in charity.

Let us govern our charitable distributions by this pattern of nature, and maintain a mutual circulation of benefits and returns.

Atterbury.

3. [In logick.] As an integral whole is distinguished into its several parts by division; so the word distribution is most properly used, when we distinguish an universal whole into its several kinds of species.

Watts.

DISTRIBUTIVE.† adj. [from distribut.]

1. That which is employed in assigning to others their portions; as, distributive justice, that which allots to each his sentence or claim.

Justice, although it be but one entire virtue, yet is described in two kinds: the one is named Justice distributive, which is in distribution of honour, money, benefice, or other thing scemable: the other is called commutative or by exchange.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 142.

If justice will take all, and nothing give,

Justice methinks is not distributive.

Dryden.

The distributive justice of the authors, which is constantly applied to the punishment of virtue, and the reward of vice, directly opposite to the rules of their best critics.

Swift.

2. That which assigns the various species of a general term.

The Hebrews want those numbers which the grammarians call distributive or divisive, terni, quaterni, quini, seni, septeni, &c. which they somewhat supply by repetition.

Meds on Dan. p. 12.

DISTRIBUTIVELY. adv. [from distributive.]

1. By distribution.
2. Singly; particularly.

Although we cannot be free from all sin collectively, in such sort that no part thereof shall be found inherent in us; yet, distributively at the least, all great and grievous actual offences, as they offer themselves one by one, both may, and ought to be, by all means avoided.

Hooker.

3. In a manner that expresses singly all the particulars included in a general term; not collectively.

An universal term is sometimes taken collectively for all its particular ideas united together, and sometimes distributively, meaning each of them single and alone.

Watts, Logick.

DISTRIBUTIVENESS.* n. s. [from distributive.] Desire of distributing.

The carving at the table he always made his province, which he said he did as a diversion to keep him from eating overmuch: but certainly that practice had another more immediate cause, a natural distributiveness of humour, and a desire to be employed in the relief of every kind of want of every person.

Fell, Life of Hammond, 2.

DISTRICT. n. s. [districtus, Lat.]

1. The circuit or territory within which a man may be compelled to appearance.

Cowell.

2. Circuit of authority; province.

His governors, who formed themselves upon the example of their grand monarch, practised all the arts of despotick government in their respective districts.

Addison.

With stern distaste avow'd,

To their own districts drive the suitor crowd.

Pope, Odyssey.

3. Region; country; territory.

Those districts which between the tropicks lie,

The scorching beams, directly darted, fry.

Blackmore.

DISTRICTION. n. s. [districtus, Lat.] Sudden display. A word little used.

A smile plays with a surprizing agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distriction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance.

Collier on the Aspect.

TO DISTRUST.† v. a. [dis and trust.] To regard with diffidence; to diffide in; not to trust.

He sheweth himself unto such as do not distrust him.

1. Discredit; loss of credit; loss of confidence.

To me reproach

Rather belongs, distrust, and all dispraise.

Milton, P. L.

2. Suspicion; want of faith; want of confidence in another.

You doubt not me; nor have I spent my blood,

To have my faith no better understood:

Your soul's above the baseness of distrust;

Nothing but love could make you so unjust.

Dryden.

DISTRUSTFUL.† adj. [distrust and full.]

1. Apt to distrust; suspicious.

Go boldly home, and let thy mind

No distrustful crosses find.

Beaum. and Fl. Wom. Pleased.

Let other men—rail then, and scoff at women.—These men are too distrustful, and much to blame to use such speeches.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 589.

Generals often harbour distrustful thoughts in their breasts.

Boyle, Scraphick Love.

2. Not confident; diffident.

Notwithstanding he must not shew himself diffident or distrustful utterly.

Raleigh, Arts of Empire, p. 68.

The great corrupters of discourse have not been so distrustful of themselves.

Gov. of the Tongue.

3. Diffident of himself; modest; timorous.

Distrustful sense with modest caution speaks;

But rattling nonsense in full vollics breaks.

Pope

DISTRUSTFULLY.† adv. [from distrustful.] In a distrustful manner.

They so labour, as neither to labour anxiously, nor distrustfully, nor profanely.

Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 14.

Many are they,

That of my life distrustfully thus say,

No help for him in God there lies.

Milton, Ps. iii.

DISTRUSTFULNESS.† n. s. [from distrustful.] The state of being distrustful; want of confidence.

It is behooful for christian brethren to be firmly joined in the bands of concord and unity, without being acquainted with distrustfulness of God's Word; and that no man, having built his faith upon God's Word and truly depending on Christ, should need to doubt of a perfect peace.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 14.

Overwhelmed with distrustfulness and grievous doubtings of his salvation.

Professor Benefield, Sermon. (1615.) p. 21.

DISTRUSTING.* n. s. [from distrust.] Want of confidence.

God hath created the physician for thy help; therefore use him temperately, without violent confidences; and sweetly, without uncivil distrustings, or refusing his prescriptions upon humour or impotent fear.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. 4. § 2.

DISTRUSTLESS.* adj. [distrust and less.] Without suspicion or distrust.

Poets, ever void

Of guile, distrustless, scorn the treasur'd gold,

And spurn the miser, spurn his deity.

Shenstone, Economy.

TO DISTUNE.* v. a. [dis and tune.] To disorder; to untune.

Untimely Fever, rude insulting guest,

How didst thou with such unharmonious heat

Dare to distune his well-composed rest;

Whose heart so just and noble strokes did beat?

Sir H. Wotton to a Friend in Sickness.

But is he gone? and live I rhyming here,

As if some muse would listen to my lay,

When all distun'd sit waiting for their dear,

And bathe the banks where he was wont to play?

Sir H. Wotton, Tears at the Grave of Sir A. Morton.

TO DISTURB.† v. a. [disturber, old Fr. disturbo, low Lat.]

1. To perplex; to disquiet; to deprive of tranquillity.

DIS

2. To confound; to put into irregular motions.
3. To interrupt; to hinder: as, care disturbs study.
4. To turn off from any direction: with from. This is not usual.

It oft-times may succeed, so as perhaps Shall grieve him, if I fail not; and disturb
His inmost counsels from their destin'd aim. Milton, P. L.

DISTURB. n. s. [from the verb.] Confusion; tumultuary emotion.

Instant without disturb they took alarm,
And onward move embattel'd. Milton, P. L.

DISTURBANCE. n. s. [from disturb.]

1. Perplexity; interruption of a settled state.
The denomination of money concerns trade, and the alteration of that necessarily brings disturbance to it. Locke.
2. Confusion; disorder of thoughts.

They can survey a variety of complicated ideas without fatigue or disturbance. Watts on the Mind.

3. Tumult; violation of peace.

This mischief had not then befall'n,
And more that shall befall: innumerable Disturbances on earth through female snares. Milton, P. L.

DISTURBER. n. s. [from disturb.]

1. A violator of peace; he that causes tumults and publick disorders.

He stands in the sight both of God and men most justly blamable, as a needless disturber of the peace of God's church, and an author of dissension. Hooker.

Men that make an insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the publick tranquillity. Addison.

Ye great disturbers, who in endless noise,
In blood and horror, seek unnatural joys;
For what is all this bustle, but to shun
Those thoughts with which you dare not be alone! Granville.

2. He that injures tranquillity; he that causes perturbation of mind.

Two deep enemies

Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers. Shakspeare.

TO DISTURN. v. a. [dis and turn.] To turn off; to turn aside. Not now in use.

He glad was to disturn that furious stream
Of war on us, that else had swallow'd them. Daniel.

For thee vain foolish things thy prophets sought;
Thee thing iniquities they have not taught,
Which might disturn thy bondage: but for thee
False burthens, and false causes, they would see.

Donne, Poems, p. 357.

DISVALUATION. n. s. [dis and valuation.] Disgrace; diminution of reputation.

What can be more to the disvaluation of the power of the Spaniard, than that eleven thousand English should have marched into the heart of his countries? Bacon.

TO DISVALUE. v. a. [dis and value.] To under-value; to set a low price upon.

Her reputation was disvalu'd

In levity. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

The very same pride which prompts a man to vaunt and overvalue what he is, does as forcibly incline him to contemn and disvalue what he has. Gon. of the Tongue.

DISVALUE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Disregard; disgrace.

The whole man, yea, Caesar's self [is] Brought in disvalue. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

Two generals — are to play the bullies and buffoon, to shew their legerdmain, their activity of face, and divarication of muscles. Rymer on Tragedy, p. 155.

To DIVE. v. n. [bippan, Sax.]

1. To sink voluntarily under water.

I am not yet informed, whether when a diver diveth, having his eyes open, and swimmeth upon his back, he sees things in the air greater or less. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Around our pole the spiry Dragon glides,
And, like a winding stream, the Bears divides,
The less and greater; who, by fate's decree,
Abhor to dive beneath the Southern sea. Dryden, Virgil.

That the air in the blood-vessels of live bodies has a communication with the outward air, I think, seems plain, from the experiments of human creatures being able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually. Arbutnot.

2. To go under water in search of any thing.

Crocodiles defend those pearls which lie in the lakes, the poor Indians are eaten up by them, when they dive for the pearl. Raleigh, Hist.

The knave deserves it, when he tempts the main,
Where folly fights for kings, or dives for gain. Pope.

3. To go deep into any question; doctrine; or science.

The wits that div'd most deep, and soar'd most high,
Seeking man's powers, have found his weakness such. Davies.
He performs all this out of his own mind, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

Whosoever we would proceed beyond those simple ideas, and dive farther into the nature of things, we fall presently into darkness and obscurity. Locke.

You swim a-top, and on the surface strive;
But to the depths of nature never dive. Blackmore.

You should have div'd into my inmost thoughts. Philips.

1. One that sinks voluntarily under water.

Perseverance gains the diver's prize. Pope, Dunc.

2. One that goes under water in search of treasure.

It is evident, from the relation of divers and fishers for pearls, that there are many kinds of shell-fish which lie perpetually concealed in the deep, screened from our sight. Woodward.

3. He that enters deep into knowledge or study.

He would have him, as I conceive it, to be no superficial and floating artificer; but a diver into causes, and into the mysteries of proportion. Wotton, Architecture.

★ A water fowl; a didapper.

The word colymbus is by later naturalists appropriated to this kind, [the didapper or dabchick,] and mergis used for another sort of divers more like to ducks. Ray, Dict. Tril. p. 21.

DIVERB. † n. s. [Lat. diverbium, a by-word.] A proverb.

England is a paradise for women, a hell for horses; Italy a paradise for horses, a hell for women; as the diverb goes.

He that marries a wife out of a suspected inn at an house, buys a horse in Smithfield, and hires a servant in Pauls, as the diverb is, shall likely have a jade to his horse, a knave for his man, and an arrant honest woman to his wife. Barton, Anat. of Mel. p. 631.

To DIVERGE. v. n. [diverge, Latin.] To tend various ways from one point.

Homogenceal rays, which flow from several points of any object, and fall perpendicularly on any reflecting surface, shall afterwards diverge from so many points. Newton.

DIVERGENCE. † n. s. [from diverge.] Tendency to various parts from one point.

Perhaps you mean thus, The angle being once made by the divergence of straight lines, remains an angle, though one or both of those lines be afterwards made crooked. Very good! But doth it remain the same angle? the same quantity of divergence? Wallis, Correction of Hobbes, sect. 9.

DIVERGENT. adj. [from divergens, Lat.] Tending to various parts from one point.

DIVERS. adj. [diversus, Latin.] Several; sundry; more than one.

We have divers examples in the church of such as, by fear, being compelled to sacrifice to strange gods, repented, and kept still the office of preaching the Gospel. Whitgift.

The teeth breed when the child is a year and a half old; then they cast them, and new ones come about seven years; but divers have backward teeth come at twenty, some at thirty and forty. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Divers letters were shot into the city with arrows, wherein Solymans councils were revealed. Knolles.

Divers friends thought it strange, that a white dry body should acquire a rich colour upon the affusion of spring-water. Boyle, Microchymia.

DIVERS-COLOURED. † adj. [divers and coloured.] Having various colours.

Smiling cupids;
With divers-colour'd fans. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
By which the beauty of the earth appears;
The divers-colour'd mantle which she wears. Sandys, Job, p. 51.

DIVERSE. adj. [diversus Latin.]

1. Different from another.

Four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another. Dan. vii. 3.

2. Different from itself; various; multiform; diversified.

Eloquence is a great and diverse thing, nor did she yet ever favour any man so much as to be wholly his. B. Jonson.

3. In different directions. It is little used but in the last sense.

The gourd
And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive
Th' approaching olive, with resentment fly

D I V

Her fatty fibres, and with tendrils creep
Diverse, detesting contact.

Philips.

To seize his papers, Curl, was next thy care:

His papers light, fly diverse tost in air. Pope, Dunc.

The red-cross knight divers'd; but forth rode Britomart.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 63.

DIVERSIFICATION. † n. s. [from diversify.]

1. The act of changing forms or qualities.

If you consider how variously several things may be compounded, you will wonder that such fruitful principles or manners of diversification, should generate differing colours.

Boyle on Colours.

2. Variation; variegation.

If accents and diversification of voice be wholly rejected, the prayers will seem cold and lifeless, the attention will languish, and the devotion lose its spirit and fervour.

Abp. Horl's Charge.

3. Variety of forms; multiformity.

4. ~~Change~~ alteration.

This which is here called a change of will, is not a change of his will, but a change in the object, which seems to make a diversification of the will, but indeed is the same will diversified.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

TO DIVERSIFY. v. a. [diversifier, French.]

1. To make different from another; to distinguish; to discriminate.

There may be many species of spirits, as much separated and diversified one from another as the species of sensible things are distinguished one from another.

Locke.

Male souls are diversified with so many characters, that the world has not variety of materials sufficient to furnish out their different inclinations.

Addison, Spect.

It was easier for Homer to find proper sentiments for Grecian generals, than for Milton to diversify his infernal council with proper characters.

Addison, Spect.

2. To make different from itself; to vary; to variegate.

The country being diversified between hills and dales, woods, and plains, one place more clear, another more darksome, it is a pleasant picture.

Sidney.

There is, in the producing of some species, a composition of matter which may be much diversified.

Bacon.

DIVERSION. n. s. [from divert.]

1. The act of turning any thing off from its course.

Cutting off the tops, and pulling off the buds, work retention of the sap for a time, and diversion of it to the sprouts that were not forward.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I have ranked this diversion of Christian practice among the effects of our contentions.

Decay of Piety.

2. The cause by which any thing is turned from its proper course or tendency.

Fortunes, honour, friends,
Are mere diversions from love's proper object,
Which only is itself.

Denham, Sophy.

3. Sport; something that unbends the mind by turning it off from care. Diversion seems to be something lighter than amusement, and less forcible than pleasure.

You for those ends whole days in council sit,

And the diversions of your youth forget.

Waller.

In the book of games and diversions, the reader's mind may be supposed to be relaxed.

Addison, Spect.

Such productions of wit and humour as expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversion to readers.

Addison, Freec.

4. [In war.] The act or purpose of drawing the enemy off from some design by threatening or attacking a distant part.

DIVERSITY. n. s. [diversité, Fr. from diversitas, Latin.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; unlikeness.

Then is there in this diversity no contrariety.

Hooker.

D I V

They cannot be divided, but they will prove opposite; and not resting in a bare diversity, rise into a contrariety.

South.

The most common diversity of human constitutions arises from the solid parts, as to their different degrees of strength and tension.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Variety.

The diversity of ceremonies in this kind ought not to cause dissension in churches.

Hooker.

Society cannot subsist without a diversity of stations; and if God should grant every one a middle station, he would defeat the very scheme of happiness proposed in it.

Rogers.

3. Distinct being; not identity.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity.

Locke.

4. Variegation.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day.

Pope.

DIVERSLY. adv. [from diverse.]

1. In different ways; differently; variously.

The lack we all have as well of ghosts, as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known; but the gifts of God are so diversly bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive: what all stand in need of seldom lieth hid.

Hooker.

Both of them do diversly work, as they have their medium diversly disposed.

Baron, Nat. Hist.

Whether the king did permit it to save his purse, or to communicate the envy of a business, displeasing to his people, was diversly interpreted.

Bacon.

Leicester bewrayed a desire to plant him in the queen's favour, which was diversly interpreted by such as thought that great artizan of courts to do nothing by chance, nor much by affection.

Wotton.

The universal matter, which Moses comprehendeth under the names of heaven and earth, is by divers diversly understood.

Raleigh, Hist.

William's arm

Could nought avail, however fam'd in war;
Nor armies leagu'd, that diversly assay'd
To curb his power.

Philips.

2. In different directions; to different points.

On life's vast ocean diversly we sail;
Reason the card, but passion is the gale.

Pope.

TO DIVERT. v. a. [diverto, Latin.]

1. To turn off from any direction or course.

I rather will subject me to the malice

Of a diverted blood and bloody brother.

Shakespeare.

Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,

Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain,

Tortive and errant from his course of growth.

Shakespeare.

He finds no reason to have his rent abated, because a greater part of it is diverted from his landlord.

Locke.

They diverted raillery from improper objects, and gave a new turn to ridicule.

Addison, Frecholder.

Nothing more is requisite for producing all the variety of colours and degrees of refrangibility, than that the rays of light be bodies of different sizes; the least of which may make violet the weakest and darkest of the colours, and be more easily diverted by refracting surfaces from the right course; and the rest, as they are bigger and bigger, make the stronger and more lucid colours, blue, green, yellow and red, and be more and more difficultly diverted.

Newton.

2. To draw to from a different part.

The kings of England would have had an absolute conquest of Ireland, if their whole power had been employed; but still there arose sundry occasions, which divided and diverted their power some other way.

Davies on Ireland.

3. To withdraw the mind.

Alas, how simple, to these eates compar'd,
Was that crude apple that diverted Eve!

Milton, P. R.

They avoid pleasure, lest they should have their affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort.

Addison on Italy.

Maro's muse, not wholly bent
On what is diverting, sometimes she diverts
From solid counsel.

Philips.

D I V

4. To please; to exhilarate. See DIVERSION.

An ingenious gentleman did divert or instruct the kingdom by his papers. Swift.

5. To subvert; to destroy; in Shakspeare, unless it belong to the first sense.

Frights, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states.

Shakspeare.

DIVERTER. n. s. [from the verb.] Any thing that diverts or alleviates.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, and a divertier of sadness. Walton.

DIVERTICLE.* n. s. [Lat. diverticulum.] A turning; a by-way.

The diverticles and blind by-paths which sophistry and deceit are wont to tread. Hales, Rem. p. 12.

I suspect there was a diverticle of the Akeman shooting from Whichwood towards Idbury, through Fyfield.

Walton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 52.

To DIVERTISE. v. a. [divertiser, French; diverto, Lat.] To please; to exhilarate; to divert. A word now little used.

Let orators instruct, let them divertise, and let them move us, this is what is properly meant by the word salt. Dryden.

DIVERTISEMENT.† n. s. [divertissement, Fr.] Diversion; delight; pleasure. A word now not much in use, Dr. Johnson says. It is frequent in our old writers; and, in later times, Bishop Hurd has used it. It is also now a term for a musical composition.

How fond soever men are of bad divertisement, it will prove mirth which ends in heaviness. Gov. of the Tongue.

When there is no recreation abroad, I have a company of honest old fellows in leathern coats, which find me divertisement at home. Goodman, Winter's Ev. Conf. P. i.

DIVERTIVE.† adj. [from divert.] Recreative; amusive; exhilarating. A word not fully authorized, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the modern authority of Dr. Rogers. But it seems to be well authorized by the examples which I add.

His [Æsop's] ingenious and divertive fables — entertain and please us extremely. Boyle on Bentley's Phalaris, p. 271.

There are some exercises and recreations both of body and mind, which are very ingenious as well as divertive.

Goodman, Winter's Ev. Conf. P. i.

I would not exclude the common accidents of life, nor even things of a pleasant and divertive nature, so they are innocent, from conversation. Rogers.

To DIVEST. v. a. [devestir, French. The English word is therefore more properly written devest. See To DEVEST.] To strip; to make naked; to denude.

Then of his arms Androgeus he divests;
His sword, his shield he takes, and plumed crests. Denham.

Let us divest the gay phantom of temporal happiness, of all that false lustre and ornament in which the pride, the passions, and the folly of men have dressed it up. Rogers.

DIVESTURE. n. s. [from divest.] The act of putting off.

The divestiture of mortality dispenses them from those labours and availing duties which are here requisite to be performed. Boyle, Seraphick Love.

DIVIDABLE.† adj. [from divide.] Shakspeare places the accent on the first syllable. But the word is perhaps peculiar to him.] Separate; different; parted. A word not used.

How could communities maintain Peaceful commerce from dividable shores? Shakspeare.

DIVIDANT. adj. [from divide.] Different; separate. A word not in use.

Twinn'd brothers of one womb,
Whose procreation, residence, and birth
Scarce is dividant, touch with several fortunes. Shakspeare.

D I V

To DIVIDE.† v. a. [divido, Lat.]

1. To part one whole into different pieces.

Divide the living child in two, and give half to the one, and half to the other. 1 Kings, iii. 25.

Heb. iv. 12.

D I V

DIVIDUAL† adj. [dividuus, Lat.] Divided; shared or participated in common with others.

So that a man may say his religion is now no more within himself, but is become a dividual movable, and goes and comes near him, according as that good man frequents the house.

Milton, Arcopagitica.

She shines,

Revolv'd on heav'n's great axle, and her reign
With thousand lesser lights dividual holds,
With thousand thousand stars!

Milton, P. L.

DIVINATION. n. s. [divinatio, Lat.]

1. Divination is a prediction or foretelling of future things, which are of a secret and hidden nature, and cannot be known by any human means.

Ayliffe, Parverson.

Certain tokens they noted in birds, or in the entrails of beasts, or by other the like frivolous divinations.

Hooker.

Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel.

Numbers.

His count'nance did imprint an awe;

And naturally all souls to his did bow,

As waters of divination downward draw,

And point to beds where sov'reign gold doth grow.

Dryden.

The excellency of the soul is seen by its power of divining in dreams: that several such divinations have been made, none can question who believes the holy writings.

Addison.

2. Conjectural presage or prediction.

Tell thou thy earl his divination lies,

And I will take it as a sweet disgrace.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

DIVINATOR* n. s. [Lat., divinator.] One that professes divination.

Matthew Riccius, the Jesuit, informeth us, in his commentaries of those countries, of all nations they are most superstitious, and much tormented in this kind, attributing so much to their divinators.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 166.

Of this number are all superstitious idolaters, Ethnicks, Mahometans, Jews, hereticks, enthusiasts, divinators, prophets, sectaries, and schismatics.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 641.

DIVINATORY* adj. [Lat. divinatus.] Professing divination.

There is no necessity of supposing this a divining sacrifice. — However, the apostate Julian, according to his usual modesty, roundly affirms, that this intercourse was properly divinatory.

Biblioth. Bibl. (Ox. 1720.) on Gen. xv. 9.

DIVINE. adj. [divinus, Lat.]

1. Partaking of the nature of God.

Her line

Was hero-make, half human, half divine.

Dryden.

2. Proceeding from God: not natural; not human.

The benefit of nature's light is not thought excluded as unnecessary, because the necessity of a divine light is magnified.

Hooker.

Instructed, you'd explore

Divine contrivance, and a God adore.

Blackmore.

3. Excellent in a supreme degree. In this sense it may admit of comparison.

The divinest and richest mind,

Doth by art's purchase and by nature's dower,

That ever was from heav'n to earth confin'd.

Davies.

4. Presagelike; divining; prescient.

Yet oft his heart, divine of something ill,

Misgave him; he the fault-ring measure felt.

Milton, P. L.

DIVINE. n. s.

1. A minister of the gospel; a priest; a clergyman.

Claudio must die to-morrow: let him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation.

Shakspeare.

If secret powers

Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,

This pretty lad will prove our country's bliss.

Shakspeare.

3. To conjecture; to guess.

The best of commentators can't but guess at his meaning;

none can be certain he has divined rightly.

He took it with a bow, and soon divin'd

The seeming toy was not for nought design'd.

Dryden.

In chafage of torment would be ease,

Could you divine what lovers bear;

Even you, Promethens, would confess

There is no vulture like despair.

Granville.

DIVINELY. adv. [from divine.]

1. By the agency or influence of God.

Faith, as we use the word, called commonly divine faith, has to do with no propositions but those which are supposed to be divinely inspired.

Locke.

This topick was very fitly and divinely made use of by our apostle, in his conference with philosophers, and the inquisitive people of Athens.

Bentley.

2. Excellently in the supreme degree.

3. In a manner noting a deity.

His golden horns appear'd,

That on the forehead shone divinely bright,

And o'er the banks diffus'd a yellow light.

Addison.

DIVINENESS† n. s. [from divine.]

1. Divinity; participation of the divine nature.

Every comet or burning meteor strikes more wonder into the beholder, than those glorious leaps of nature, with their admirable motions and order, in which the heathen have acknowledged a divineness.

Bp. Reynolds on the Pass. ch. 1.

Is it then impossible to distinguish the divineness of this book from that which is human?

Grew.

2. Excellence in the supreme degree.

By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not,

An earthly paragon: behold divineness

No elder than a boy.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

DIVINER. n. s. [from To divine.]

1. One that professes divination, or the art of revealing occult things by supernatural means.

This drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me, called me Dronio, and swore I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me.

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

Expelled his oracles, and common temples of delusion, the devil runs into corners, exercising meaner trumperies, and acting his deceits in witches, magicians, diviners, and such inferior seducers.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Conjecturer; guesser.

If he himself be conscious of nothing he then thought on, he must be a notable diviner of thoughts that can assure him that he was thinking.

Locke.

DIVINERESS† n. s. [old Fr. divineresse.] A prophetess: a woman professing divination.

D I V

The mad divineress had plainly writ,
A time should come, but many ages yet,
In which sinister destinies ordain,
A dame should drown with all her feather'd train. Dryden.

DIVINIFIED.* adj. [Lat. divinus and fo.] Participating of the divine nature.

In the Canticles the Virgin saith, "My beloved is white and red, and chosen of a thousand;" white, for his blessed and divinified soul; red, for his precious flesh embued with his blood. Parthenia Sacra, (1633.) p. 204.

DIVINITY. n. s. [divinité, French; from divinitas, Latin.]

1. Participation of the nature and excellence of God; deity; godhead.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel
Divinity within their breathing wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton, P. L.
When he attributes divinity to other things than God, it is only a divinity by way of participation. Stillingfleet.

2. God; the Deity; the Supreme Being; the Cause of causes.

'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us,
'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison.

3. False god.

Vain idols, deities that ne'er before
In Israel's lands had fix'd their dire abodes, Beastly divinities, and droves of gods. Prior.

4. Celestial being.

God doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy method, than employing these subservient divinities. Cheyne.

5. The science of divine things; theology.

Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all admiring with an inward wish,
You would desire the king were made a prelate. Shakspeare.
Trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting error. Shakspeare.
Among hard words I number those which are peculiar to divinity, as it is a science. Swift.

6. Something supernatural.

They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shakspeare.

DIVISIBLE. adj. [divisibilis, Lat.] Capable of being divided into parts; disceptible; separable.

When we frame in our minds any notion of matter, we conceive nothing else but extension and bulk, which is impenetrable, or divisible and passive. Bentley, Serm.

DIVISIBILITY. n. s. [divisibilité, Fr.] The quality of admitting division or separation of parts.

The most palpable absurdities will press the as-erters of infinite divisibility. Glanville; Serpiss.

This will easily appear to any one, who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expansion of space, or divisibility of matter. Locke.

DIVISIBleness. n. s. [from divisible.] Divisibility.

My having is not much;
I'll make division of my present with you. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

2. The state of being divided.

Thou madest the spirit of the firmament, and commanded it to part asunder, and to make a division betwixt the waters. 2 Esdr. vi. 41.

3. That by which any thing is kept apart; partition.

D I V

4. The part which is separated from the rest by dividing.

If we look into communities and divisions of men, we observe that the discreet man, not the witty, guides the conversation. Addison, Spect.

5. Disunion; discord; difference.

There was a division among the people, because of him. John, vii. 42.

As to our divisions with the Romanists, were our differences the product of heat, they would, like small clefts in the ground, want but a cool season to cement them. Decay of Piety.

6. Parts into which a discourse is distributed.

In the divisions I have made, I have endeavoured, the best I could, to govern myself by the diversity of matter. Locke.
Express the heads of your divisions in as few and clear words as you can, otherwise I never can be able to retain them. Swift.

7. Space between the notes of musick, or parts of a musical composure; just time. This is Dr. Johnson's definition. But a division in musick is a variation of melody upon some given fundamental harmony. To run a division is the technical expression.

Thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a fair queen, in a Summer's bower,
With ravishing division to her lute. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Our tongue will run divisions in a tune, not missing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere. Glanville.

Abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting in many ways. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

DIVISIONER.* n. s. [from division.] One who divides. Obsolete.

Division was made, and I not minded. The divisioner, which was Freeman the Ignatian, and the other priests, thought that I knew nothing of the grand present; but afterwards, understanding that I knew both of the money and of the circumstances wherewith it was to be divided, they, fearing lest I would make the partiality known to the state, gave me a part. Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, 1639, p. 281.

DIVISIVE.* adj. [Lat. divisus.] Forming division or distribution.

The Hebrews want those numbers which the grammarians call distributive or divisive, terni, quaterni, quini, seni, septeni, &c. which they mustwht supply by repetition. Mede on Dan. p. 12.

DIVISOR. n. s. [divisor, Lat.] The number given, by which the dividend is divided; the number which sheweth how many parts the dividend is to be divided into.

DIVORCE. n. s. [divorce, Fr. from divortium, Lat.]

1. The legal separation of husband and wife.

Divorce is a lawful separation of husband and wife, made before a competent judge, on due cognizance had of the cause, and sufficient proof made thereof. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To restore the king,
He counsels a divorce, a loss of her;

D I V

That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

He had in his eye the divorce which had passed betwixt the emperor and Scribonia.

Dryden, Dedie. to the En.

2. Separation; disunion.

Such motions may occasion a farther alienation of mind, and divorce of affections in her, from my religion. K. Charles.

These things, to be a bastard, and to be born out of lawful wedlock, are convertible the one with the other; and 'tis hard to make divorce between those things that are so near in nature to each other, as being convertible terms.

Ayliffe's Paragon.

3. The sentence by which a marriage is dissolved.

4. The cause of any penal separation.

Go with me, like good angels, to my cell;
And as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heav'n.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

To DIVORCE. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To separate a husband or wife from the other.

Whosoever shall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery. St. Matt. v. 32.

Dear I love you, and would be lov'd fain,
But am beghroth'd unto your enemy;
Divorce me, untie, or break that knot again,
Take me to you, imprison me; for I,
Except you enthal me, never shall be free.

Donne, Poems, p. 323.

2. To force asunder; to separate by violence.

Were it consonant unto reason to divorce these two sentences, the former of which doth shew how the latter is restrained, and not marking the former, to conclude by the latter of them? Hooker.

The continent and the island were continued together, within men's remembrance, by a draw-bridge; but is now divorced by the downfallen cliffs. (Wren, Surv. of Cornwall.)

So seem'd her youthful soul not easily forc'd,
Or from so fair, so sweet a seat divorc'd. Waller.

3. To separate from another.

If thou wou'dst not shal,
I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb,
Sepulch'ring on adultery. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

If so be it were possible, that all other ornaments of mind might be had in their full perfection, nevertheless the mind, that should possess them divorced from piety, could be but a spectacle of commiseration. Hooker.

4. To take away; to put away.

I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Aerial pasture the larks with gentle force
Constant embrace by turns, by turns divorce. Blackmore.

DIVORCEMENT. † n. s. [from divorce.] Divorce; separation of marriage.

He that is once married, cannot but with the mutual consent of his wife abstain, nor may give a libel of divorce to her that hath not trespassed.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1555) sign. X. b.

Write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house. Deut. xxiv. 1.

Since her divorcement, and his decay of estate, it is known they have met. Beaumont and Fl. Honest Man's fortune.

DIVORCER. † n. s. [from divorce.]

1. The person or cause which produces divorce or separation.

Death is the violent estranger of acquaintance, the eternal divorcer of marriage. Drummond, Cyp. Grove.

If she consent, wherein has the law to right her? or consent not, then is it either just, and so deserved? or if unjust, such in all likelihood was the divorcer.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

2. One of a sect, called divorcers; of which Milton was deemed the father.

D I U

Those I term divorcers, that would be quit of their wives for slight occasions; and, to maintain this opinion, one hath published a tractate of Divorce.

Pagitt's Homoeography, (1654.) p. 129.

DIVORCIVE. † adj. [from divorce.] Having power to divorce.

To that a little patience; until this first part have amply discoursed the grave and pious reasons of this divorcive law.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

DIURETICK. † adj. [diureticus.] Having the power to provoke urine.

Graceful as John, she moderates the reins,
And whistles sweet her diuretick strains.

Young.

DIURETICK. † n. s. Diureticks are decoctions, emulsions, and oils of emollient vegetables, that relax the urinary passages: such as relax ought to be tried before such as force and stimulate. Those emollients ought to be taken in open air, to hinder them from perspiring, and on empty stomachs.

Arbuthnot.

DIURNAL. † adj. [diurnus, Lat.]

1. Relating to the day.

We observe in a day, which is a short year, the greatest heat about two in the afternoon, when the sun is past the meridian, which is the diurnal solstice, and the same is evident from the thermometer. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Think, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams
Reflected, may with matter sere foment.

Milton, P. I.

2. Constituting the day.

Why does he order the diurnal hours
To leave earth's other part, and rise in ours? Prior.

3. Performed in a day; daily; quotidian.

The prime orb,
Incredible how swift, had thither roll'd

Diurnal: Milton, P. L.

The diurnal and annual revolution of the sun have been,
from the beginning of nature, constant, regular, and universally observable by all mankind. Locke.

DIURNAL. † n. s. [diurnal, Fr.] A journal; a day- book.

We writers of diurnals are nearer in our style to that of common talk, than any other writers; by which means we use words of respect sometimes very unfortunately.

Tatler, No. 204.

DIURNALIST. † n. s. [from diurnal.] A journalist.

Let me add hereto the late experiments of some odiously incestuous marriages, which (even) by the relation of our diurnals have by this means found a damnable passage, to the great dishonour of God, and shame of this church.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

DIURNALLY. † adv. [from diurnal.] Daily; every day.

As we make the enquiry, we shall diurnally communicate them to the publick. Tatler.

DIUTURNAL. † adj. [Lat. diuturnus.] Lasting; of long continuance.

We thought it conducing to the common good of both republicks, to send George Downing, a person of eminent quality, and long in our knowledge and esteem for his undoubted fidelity, probity, and diligence, in many and various negotiations, dignified with the character of our agent, to reside with your lordships, and chiefly to take care of those things, by which the peace between us may be preserved entire and diuturnal.

Milton, Letters of State.

DIUTURNITY. † n. s. [diuturnitas, Lat.] Length of duration.

Such a coming, as it might be said, that that generation should not pass till it was fulfilled, they needed not suppose of such diuturnity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To DIVULGATE. † v. a. [Lat. divulgare.] To pub- lish that which is secret.

Which [thing] is divulged or spread abroad. Hulot.

DIVULGATE.* adj. [Lat. divulgatus.] Published; made known.

The pope so lately put down, the Gospel so clearly divulgate.
Hale. Yet a Course, &c. (1543.) fol. 34. b.

DIVULGATION.* n. s. [Lat. divulgatio.] A publishing or reporting abroad.

Secrecy hath no less use than divulgation.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

To DIVULGE. v. a. [divulgo, Lat.]

1. To publish; to make publick; to reveal to the world.

Men are better contented to have their commendations suppressed than the contrary much divulged. Hooker.

I will pluck the veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress Page, and divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acteon. Shakespeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.

These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dryden, Rn.

You are deprived of the right over your own sentiments, of the privilege of every human creature, to divulge or conceal them. Pope.

The cabinets of the sick, and the closets of the dead, have been ransacked to publish private letters, and divulge to all mankind the most secret sentiments of friendship. Pope.

2. To proclaim; to declare by a publick act.

This is true glory and renown, when God
Looking on th' earth, with approbation, marks
The just man, and divulges him through heav'n
To all his angels, who with true applause Recount his praises. Milton, P. R.

DIVULGER. n. s. [from divulge.] A publisher; one that exposes to publick view.

It is true that, by confessions, we find that false priest Watson, and arch-traitor Percy, to have been the first divulgers and divulgers of this scandalous report.

Proceedings against Garnet, &c. (1606.) sign. M. 4. b.

I think not any thing in my letters could tend so much to my reproach, as the odious divulging of them did to the infamy of the divulgers. King Charles.

DIVULSION.* n. s. [divulsio, Lat.] The act of plucking away; laceration.

Many an unpleasing potion, many tormenting incisions and divulsions did she endure from their hands: the remedy was equal in trouble to the disease. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Aristotle, in his Ethicks, takes up the conceit of the beaver, and the divulsion of his testicles. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DIVULSIVE.* adj. [Lat. divulsus.] Having power to tear away.

Away, therefore, with all the distractive, yea divulsive, thoughts of the world. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 49.

To DIZEN.* v. a. [This word seems corrupted from dight.] To dress; to deck; to rig out. A low word, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the ludicrous application of it by Swift. It is of much higher date than the time of Swift; and it is yet in use in the north of England.

I put my clothes of, and I dizen'd him.

Beaumont, and Fl. The Pilgrim.

Go saddle my fore-horse, put his feather on too,
He'll prance it bravely, friend, he fears no colours;
And take the armour down, and see him dizen'd.

Beaumont, and Fl. Women pleas'd.

Your ladyship lifts up the sash to be seen,
For sure I had dizen'd you out like a queen. Sey.

To DIZZ.* v. a. [Sax. dyzz.] To astonish; to puzzle; to make giddy or dizzy in the head. Sherwood has this forgotten verb in his dictionary.

Now he [Rozinante] is dizzed with the continual circles of the stables, which are ever approached, but never entered; beside the unsupportable torment of feeding horses, the noise of grinding the beloved corn, the smell of hay and litter.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quixote.

DIZZARD. n. s. [from dizzy.] A blockhead; a fool. See DISARD. Dict.

DIZZINESS.* n. s. [from dizzy.] Giddiness; whirl in the head.

As we see children turn round so long in sport, that they fall down at last, when they would stand; so there are many, who, playing in the mazes of little faults, bring their minds to such a dizziness, as throws them down when they mean to stand and intermit that amusement.

W. Mountague, Der. Ess. P. ii. (1634.)

Fixed seriousness heats the brain in some to distraction, and causeth an aching and dizziness in sounder heads. Glanville.

DIZZY.* adj. [Sax. dyzz, Saxon.]

1. Giddy; vertiginous; having in the head the sensation of turning round.

All on a sudden miserable pain

Surpriz'd thee, dum thine eyes, and dizzy swam
In darkness. Milton, P. L.

2. Causing giddiness.

How fearful

And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low! Shakespeare, A. Lear.

Did not the distemper of their own stomachs affect them
With a dizzy megrim, they would soon tie up their tongues, and discern themselves like that Assyrian blasphemer, all this while reproaching not man, but the Almighty, the Holy
One of Israel. Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

3. Giddy; thoughtless.

What followers, what retinue can'st thou gain?

Or at the heels the dizzy multitude.

Longer than thou can'st feed them on thy cost? Milton, P. L.

4. Rotatory; whirling.

The reeling clouds

Stagger with dizzy poise, as doubting yet

Which master to obey.

Thomson, Winter.

To DIZZY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To whirl round; to make giddy.

Not the dreadful spout,

Which shipmen do the hurricano call,

Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear

In his descent, than shall my prompted sword

Falling on Diomedes.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

To divide him inventorially would dizzy the arithmetick of memory. Shakespeare.

To DO.* v. a. Thou dost, he doth or does; preter. did; part. pass. done. [Don, Sax. doen, Dutch. The word is traced, by Junius, to the Goth. tanjan; whence, by dropping the j, the Theotis. or Alam. tuon, duon, tun, duon, as well as the Sax. don. Some have fancied the Gr. τελλω, to prepare, to build, as the origin of do. This verb is often called the auxiliary verb; but the exact power which it now has in our language, as an auxiliary, is not easy, Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, to be defined, and still less to be accounted for by analogy. It is derived from the gamic root, and is pronounced by Mr. Tooke to be the same word, as to; and therefore for the same reason that to is put before the infinitive, do used formerly to be put before such other parts of the verb which likewise were not distinguished from the noun by termination: as we still say, I do love, instead of, I love; I did love, instead of, I loved; but if a distinguishing termination is used, then the distinguishing do or did must be omitted, the termination fulfilling its office: and therefore we never find "I did loved," or "he doth loveth." See Tyrwhitt's Ess. on Chaucer, and Tooke's Div. of Purley. See also the verb DOUTER.]

1. To practise or act any thing good or bad.

Thou hast done evil above all that were before thee. 1 Kings.

Flee evil, and do good.

Psalms.

2. To perform; to achieve.

They help, who hurt so small;
And he hath nothing done, that doth not all. Daniel.
Learn to live well, that thou may'st die so too;
To live and die is all we have to do. Denham.
What is the reason a man's arm won't smile and frown, and do all the intellectual postures of the countenance? Collier.

3. To execute; to discharge.

May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly cars? Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Pindarus is come

To do you salutation from his master. Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.
The jury prayed of the senate a guard, that they might do their consciences. Bacon.

4. To cause. This structure is obsolete.

A fatal plague which many did to dye. Spenser, F. Q.
Nought can quench mine inly flaming side,
Nor sea of liquor cold, nor lake of mire,
Nothing but death can do me to respire. Spenser, F. Q.
We do you to wit. 2 Cor. viii. 1.

5. To transact.

The thing was not done in a corner. Acts, xxvi. 26.

6. To produce any effect to another.

If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waved indifferently, twixt doing them neither good nor harm. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,
Speak to me. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

'Tis true, I did so; nor was it in vain:
She did me right, and satisfy'd my vengeance. Rowe.
You do her too much honour: she hath neither sense nor taste, if she dares to refuse you. Swift.

7. To have recourse to; to practise as the last effort, commonly in the form of a passionate interrogation.

What will ye do in the end thereof? Jer. v. 81.

8. To perform for the benefit or hurt of another.

I know what God will do for me. Sam. xxii. 3.
Acts of mercy done to the poor, shall be accepted and rewarded, as done to our Saviour himself. Milnerbury.

9. To exert; to put forth.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. 2 Tim. iv. 9.

10. To manage by way of intercourse or dealing; to have business; to deal.

I have been deterred by an indisposition from having much to do with steams of so dangerous a nature. Boyle.
What had I to do with kings and courts?
My humble lot had cast me far beneath them. Rice.

11. To gain; to effect by influence.

It is much, that a jest with a sad brow, will do with a fellow that never had the gale in his shoulders. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
His queen, notwithstanding she had presented him with divers children, and with a crown also, though he would not acknowledge it, could do nothing with him. Bacon.

12. To make any thing what it is not.

Off with the crown, and with the crown his head;
And while we breathe take him to do him dead. Shakspeare.

13. To finish; to end.

As for this mercy,
Which he intends for Lear and for Cordelia,
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon. Shakspeare.
Go to the reading of some part of the New Testament, not carelessly, or in haste, as if you had a mind to have done, but attentively, as to be able to give some account of what you have read. Duppa.

Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,
To their huge pots of boiling pulse would rin. Dryden.

14. To conclude; to settle.

They did their work and din'd. Prior.
When all is done, there is no man can serve his own interest better than by serving God. Tillotson.

15. To put.

Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death? Shakspeare.

The lord Aubrey Vere,

Was done to death? Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

16. The phrase, what to do with, signifies how to bestow; what use to make of; what course to take; how to employ; which way to get rid of.

Men are many times brought to that extremity, that if it were not for God, they would not know what to do with themselves, or how to enjoy themselves for one hour. Tillotson.

To Do. † v. n.

1. To act or behave in any manner well or ill.

Unto this day they do after the former manners: they fear not the Lord, neither do they after the law and commandment which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob. 2 Kings.

As every prince should govern as he would desire to be governed, so every subject ought to obey as he would desire to be obeyed, according to the maxim of doing as we would be done by. Temple.

2. To make an end; to conclude. This is only in the compound preterite.

You may ramble a whole day, and every moment discover something new; but when you have done, you will have but a confused notion of the place. Spectator.

3. To cease to be concerned with; to cease to care about; to desist from notice or practice: only in the compound preterite.

No men would make use of disunited parties to destroy one body, unless they were sure to master them when they had done with them. Stillingfleet.

I have done with Chaucer, when I have answered some objections. Dryden.

We have not yet done with assenting to propositions at first hearing, and understanding their terms. Locke.

Having done with such amusements, we give up what we cannot disown. Pope.

4. To fare; to be with regard to sickness or health.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him how Joab did, and how the people did. 2 Sam. xi. 7.
Good woman, how do'st thou?

— The better that it pleases your good worship to ask.

Shakspeare.

5. To succeed; to fulfil a purpose.

They say yet in the north, when a thing has lost his force or virtue, that it does not. Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

Come, 'tis no matter; we shall do without him. Addison.
You would do well to prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and, if that won't do, challenge the crown. Collier on Duckling.

6. To deal with.

No man who hath to do with the king, will think himself safe, unless you be his good angel, and guide him. Bacon.

7. To Do is used for any verb to save the repetition of the word; as, I shall come, but if I do not, go away; that is, if I come not.

Thus painters Cupids paint, thus poets do
A naked god, blind, young, with arrows two. Sidney.

If any thing in the world deserve our serious study and consideration, those principles of religion do.

Take all things which relax the veins; for what does so, prevents too vigorous a motion through the arteries. Arbutnot.

8. Do is a word of vehement command, or earnest request; as, help me, do; make haste, do.

If thou hast lost thy land, do not also lose thy constancy;
and if thou must die a little sooner, yet do not die impatiently.

Rp. Taylor, Rule of being holy.

— Loose me. — I will free thee.

— Do, and I'll be thy slave. Dryden, A. Arthur.

9. To Do is put before verbs sometimes expletively; as, I do love, or, I love; I did love, or, I loved.

The Turks do acknowledge God the Father, creator of heaven and earth, being the first person in the Trinity, though they deny the rest. Bacon, Holy War.

This just reproach their virtue does excite. Dryden, Æn.
Expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope

10. Sometimes emphatically; as, I do hate him, but will not wrong him.

Pardition catch my soul
But I do love thee; and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. Shakspeare, Othello.

11. Sometimes by way of opposition; as, I did love him, but scorn him now.

12. Sometimes emphatically, by way of strong negation; as, I do not know the man.

13. Sometimes, for the purpose of interrogation; as, Do you not remember me?

DO. [In musick.] Adopted by us from the Italians for the syllable ut; the first note of the gamut, or scale of musick.

Do, n. s.* See DOE, and ADO.

DO-LITTLE. n. s.* [do and little.] A term of contempt for him who professes much, and performs little. Great talkers are commonly do-littles.

Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655) p. 281.

To DOAT. v. n. See To DOTE.

DOCIBLE. adj.* [docilis, Lat.] Tractable; docile: easy to be taught.

The asinine feast of sow-thistles and brambles—is commonly set before them, as all the food and entertainment of their tenderest and most docible age. Milton, of Education.

They shall be able to speak little to the purpose, so as to satisfy sober, humble, docible persons, who have not passionately espoused an error. Rp. Bull, Sermon vi.

DOCIBILITY. n. s.* [from docible.] Readiness to learn. Bullockar.

DO'CIBLENESS. n. s. [from docible.] Teachableness: docility; readiness to learn.

I might enlarge in commendation of the noble hound, as also of the docibleness of dogs in general. Waltail, Angler.

DO'CILE. adj.* [docile, Fr. docilis, Lat.]

1. Teachable; easily instructed; tractable.

Dogs soon grow accustomed to whatever they are taught, and being docile and tractable, are very useful. Ellis's Voyage.

2. With to before the thing taught.

Soon docile to the secret acts of ill,
With smiles I could betray, with temper kill. Prior.

DOCILITY. n. s.* [docilité, Fr. from docilitas, Lat.] Aptness to be taught; readiness to learn. Hudnot.

God both teacheth men, and giveth them the capacity to learn. He giveth docility, together with his doctrine. Fotherby, Alchemaster, (1622.) p. 359.

All the perfection they allowed his understanding was aptness and docility, and all that they attributed to his will was a possibility to be virtuous. South.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for use? The docility of an elephant, and the insatiety of a camel for travelling in deserts? Grew.

DOCK. n. s. [boece, Saxon.] A plant; a weed.

The species are seventeen, ten of which grow wild, several of them being used in medicine; and the sort called the oriental burdock, is said to be the true rhubarb. Miller.

Nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

My love for gentle Dermot faster grows
Than upon tall dock that rises to thy nose:
Cut down the dock, 'twill sprout again; but know
Love rooted out again will never grow. Swift.

DOCK. n. s.* [As some imagine of δοξα, Dr. Johnson says; and some from δοξα, capacity of receiving or containing. But the Goth. do, a deep or gully place, may probably be the parent of our word.] A place where water is let in or out at pleasure, where ships are built or laid up.

The boatswain and mariner may bring religion to what dock they please. Howel.

There are docks for their galleys and men of war, as well as work-houses for all land and naval preparations. Addison.

DOCK-YARD. n. s.* A place or yard, where ships are built, and naval stores reposed; as, at Plymouth, Portsmouth, Woolwich, &c.

I suggested that he might go to a dock-yard, and work, as Peter the Great did. Boswell's Tour to the Heb. p. 304.

DOCK. n. s.

1. The stump of the tail, which remains after docking.

2. The solid part of the tail.

The tail of a great rhinoceros is not well described by Bon-tius. The dock is about half an inch thick, and two inches broad, like an apothecary's spatula. Grew, Museum.

To DOCK. v. a. [from dock, a tail.]

1. To cut off a tail.

2. To cut any thing short.

One or two stood constant century, who docked all centuries handed down; and spread a huge invisible net between the prince and subject, through which nothing of value could pass. Swift, Examiner.

3. To cut off a reckoning; to cut off an entail.

4. To lay the ship in a dock.

DOCKET. n. s. A direction tied upon goods; a summary of a larger writing. Diet.

To DOCKET. v. a.* [from the noun.] To mark the contents or titles of papers on the back of them; to distinguish, as by a docket.

Whatever letters and papers you keep, docket and tie them up in their respective classes. Ld. Chesterfield.

DOCTOR. n. s. [doctor, Lat.]

1. One that has taken the highest degree in the faculties of divinity, law, or physick. In some universities they have doctors of musick. In its original import it means a man so well versed in his faculty, as to be qualified to teach it.

No woman had it but a civil doctor,
Who did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg'd the ring. Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.
Then stood there up one in the council, a pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of laws. Acts, v. 34.

2. A man skilled in any profession.

Then subtle doctors scriptures made their pride,
Casuists, like cocks, struck out each other's eyes. Denham.
Each proselyte would vote his doctor best,
With absolute exclusion to the rest. Dryden.

3. A physician; one who undertakes the cure of diseases.

By medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too. Shakspeare, Cymb.
How does your patient, doctor?
—Not so sick, my lord,
As she is troubl'd with thick coming fancies. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Children will not take those medicines from the doctor's hand, which they will from a nurse or mother. Government of the Tongue.

To 'pothecaries let the learn'd prescribe,
That men may die without a double bribe:
Let them, but under their superiors, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

He that can cure by recreation, and make pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earnest. Collier.

In truth, nine parts in ten of those who recovered, owed their lives to the strength of nature and a good constitution, while such a one happened to be the doctor. Swift.

4. Any able or learned man.

The simplest person, that can but apprehend and speak sense, is as much judge of it as the greatest doctor in the school. Digby of Bodies.

To Do'CTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To physick; to cure; to treat with medicines. A low word.

Do'CTORAL.† adj. [doctoralis, Lat.] Relating to the degree of a doctor.

The bed of a sick man is a school; a doctoral chair of learning and discipline. Bp. King, Thanksg. Sermon, (1619.) p. 44.

But why do I anticipate the more acceptable and prevailing voice of learned Bucer himself, the pastor of nations? And O that I could set him living before ye in that doctoral chair, where once the learnedest of England thought it no disparagement to sit at his feet!

Milton, Judgement of Martin Bucer concerning Divorce.

If church and state were made the theme, then the doctoral degree of wit was to be taken at Billingsgate.

Dryden, Relig. Laici, Pref.

Do'CTORALY.† adv. [from doctoral] In manner of a doctor.

The physicians resorted to him to touch his pulse, and consider of his disease doctorally at their departure. Hakewill.

I told you he sinned in Cathedral, Ps. i. 1. that is also doctorally and magisterially. Hammond, Sermon, xii.

Do'CTORATE. * n. s. [from doctor.] The degree of a doctor.

I thank you, my dear lord, for your congratulations on my advancement to the doctorate.

Hard to Warburton, Letters, L. 206.

An English or Irish doctorate cannot be obtained by a very young man. Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands.

To Do'CTORATE. * v. a. [from the noun.] To make a doctor.

The person was master of arts; but whether doctorated by degree or courtesy, because of his profession, I know not.

Lilly, Life, &c. p. 77.

«[He was] an advocate to the council for the marches of Wales, but afterwards doctorated in medicine at Oxford.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 395.

Do'CTRESS. * n. s. [from doctor.] She who professes the skill of doctor.

Glorious in nothing more than to be called the doctress of all nations. Ty. of Borelino, (1626.) p. 77.

Should you say an ague were a fever, the doctress would have a shaming fit of laughter! Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 47.

Do'CTORLY. * adj. [from doctor.] Like a learned man.

For instance, his not unlearned and bold Maldonate (as we shall see afterwards) upon a text of this very question, confessing the current of the stream of antiquity, can come in, at last, with a doctorly wile of "Ad lucem non possum ut sequar!" I cannot go with them. Bp. Hall, Hom. of Marr. Clergy, &c.

DOCTORS-COMMONS. * n. s. The college of civilians, residing in the city of London; so called, perhaps, from their collegial manner of living. See the 3d sense of COMMON.

You told me that a dignitary of our church, (whose name you acquainted me not with,) in friendship to the gentleman's father had been at Doctors-Commons; and there see'd one of the doctors, who is a judge of one of those courts where matrimonial causes are discussable. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 365.

I caused an inquiry to be made at Doctors-Commons, concerning the number of divorces. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

Do'CTORSHIP. n. s. [from doctor.] The rank of a doctor.

From a scholar he became a fellow, and then the president of the college, after he had received all the grace and degrees, the proctorship and the doctorship. Clarendon.

Do'CTRINAL. * adj. [doctrina, Lat.]

1. Containing doctrine, or something formally taught. The verse naturally affords us the doctrinal proposition, which shall be our subject. South.

2. Pertaining to the act or means of teaching. To this end the word of God no otherwise serveth, than only in the nature of a doctrinal instrument. Hooker.

What special property or quality is that, which, being no where found but in sermons, maketh them effectual to save souls, and leaveth all other doctrinal means besides destitute of vital efficacy. Hooker.

Whether those dramatick consultations, wherein Sophocles and Euripides reign, shall be found more doctrinal and exemplary to a nation. Milton, Reason of Ch. Government.

In a doctrinal way, saying to the contemner, Alas, why do you thus? You hurt yourself, not me; he that throws a stone at another, hits himself. Harbert, Country Parson, ch. 18.

Do'CTRINAL.† n. s. Something that is part of doctrine; "a book to instruct the unlearned."

Isholot.

Comedies, which they suppose to be a doctrinal of ribaudry, be undoubtedly a picture, or as it were a myrrour, of man's life; wherein evil is not taught, but discovered.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 42. b.

Not such as assent to every word in Scripture, can be said in doctrinals to deny Christ. South.

Do'CTRINALLY.† adv. [from doctrine.] In the form of doctrine; positively; as necessary to be held.

Nor is it easily credible, that he who can preach well, should be unable to pray well; whereas it is indeed the same ability to speak affirmatively, or doctrinally, and only by changing the mood, to speak prayingly.

Milton, Apology for Smectymnus.

Scripture accommodates itself to common opinions, and employs the usual forms of speech, without delivering any thing doctrinally concerning these points. Ray.

Do'CTRINE. n. s. [doctrina, Lat.]

1. The principles or positions of any sect or master; that which is taught.

To make new articles of faith and doctrine, no man thinketh it lawful: new laws of government, what church or commonwealth is there which maketh not either at one time or other?

Hooker.

Ye are the sons of clergy, who bring all their doctrines fairly to the light, and invite men with freedom to examine them.

Atterbury.

That great principle in natural philosophy is the doctrine of gravitation, or mutual tendency of all bodies toward each other.

Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

2. The act of teaching.

He said unto them in his doctrine. Mark, iv. 2.

DOCUMENT.† n. s. [documentum, Lat.]

1. Precept; instruction; direction.

It is a most necessary instruction and document for them, that as her majesty made them dispensators of her favour, so it behoveth them to shew themselves equal distributors.

Bacon.

Teachers should not be too much crowded with a heap or multitude of documents or ideas at one time. Watts.

2. Precept in an ill sense; a precept insolently authoritative, magisterially dogmatical, solemnly trifling.

Gentle insinuations pierce, as oil is the most penetrating of all liquors; but in magisterial documents men think themselves attacked, and stand upon their guard.

Gov. of the Tongue.

It is not unnecessary to digest the documents of cracking authors into several classes. Harvey on Consumptions.

3. [In law.] A written evidence produced in proof of what is asserted; a record.

To Do'CUMENT. * v. a. [from the noun.] To teach; to direct; to instruct.

I am finely documented by my own daughter.

Dryden, Ros. Sebast.

DocuME'NTAL. * adj. [from document.] Belonging to instruction. Ash.

DocuME'NTARY. * adj. [from document.] Pertaining to written evidence in law.

DODDER. † n. s. [louteren, to shoot up, Dutch. Skinner.]

Dodder is a singular plant: when it first shoots from the seed it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants; but the capillaments of which it is formed, soon after clinging about these plants, the roots wither away. From this time it propagates itself along the stalks of the plant, entangling itself about them. It has no leaves, but consists of capillaments or stalks, brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have tubercles, which fix them fast down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment.

Hill.

There are two cells in each berry, and two seeds in each cell. Veget. Syst. ix. 18.

DODDERED. adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder; covered with supererect plants.

Near the hearth a laurel grew,
Dodder'd with age, whose boughs encompass round
The household gods, and shade the holy ground.

Dryden, Rn.

The peasants were enjoin'd

Sere-wood, and firs; and dodder'd oaks to find.

Dryden, Fables.

DODECAGON. n. s. [δωδεκα and γωνία.] A figure of twelve sides.

DODECAHEDRON. * n. s. [Gr. δωδεκα and ἑδρα.] In geometry, one of the regular bodies, comprehended under twelve equal sides, each whereof is a pentagon. Chambers.

DODECATEMORION. n. s. [δωδεκατημόριον.] The twelfth part.

'Tis dodecatemorion thus describ'd:

Thrice ten degrees, which every sign contains,
Let twelve exhaust, that not one part remains;
It follows straight, that every twelfth confines
Two whole, and one half portion of the signs.

Creech.

DODECATEMORY. * n. s. A denomination sometimes applied to each of the twelve signs of the zodiac. See DODECATEMORION.

The dodecatemories, or constellations; the moon's mansion, &c. Barton, Astr. of Mel. p. 248.

TO DODGE. v. n. [probably corrupted from dog; to shift and play sly tricks like a dog.]

1. To use craft; to deal with tergiversation; to play mean tricks; to use low shifts.

If in good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly, it argues an earthly and ignoble mind, where we have apparently wronged, to higgie and dodge in the amends. Hale, Contemplations.

The consideration should make men grow weary of dodging and shewing tricks with God. South, Sermon. i. 352.

2. To shift place as another approaches.

For he had, any time this ten years full,
Dodg'd with him betwixt Cambridge and the Bull.

Milton, on Hobson the Carrier.

3. To play fast and loose; to raise expectations and disappoint them.

You know my passion for Martha, and what a dance she has led me; she dodged with me above thirty years. Addison.
The chattering with discontents, and dodging about this or other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them ajar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. The word in all its senses is low and vulgar.

DO'DGER. * n. s. [from dodge.] One who is guilty of mean tricks; "a scurvy hagler, a lousy dodger, or a cruel extortioner." Cotgrave in V. Cagueraffe.

DO'DKIN. † n. s. [duytken, Dutch.] A doitkin or little doir; a contemptuous name for a low coin.

I would not buy them for a dodkin. Lily's Gram. construed.
For so, you must understand that she's not worth a dodkin for a queen. Shelton, Don Quixote.

DO'DMAN. † n. s.

1. The name of a fish.

Fish that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. Bacon.

2. A shell-snail, called also hodmandod, in several parts of England.

DO'DO. * n. s. A bird somewhat larger than a swan, but wholly different from it in shape; though by some esteemed a kind of that bird. Chambers.

The dodo [is] a bird the Dutch call walghvogel or dod Eersen; her body is round and fat, which occasions her slow pace; or that, her complacency.

Sir T. Herbert, Travels. p. 382.

DOE. n. s. [da, Saxon; daa, Danish; dama, Lat.] A she-deer; the female of a buck.

Then but forbear your food a little while,

While, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,

And give it food.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

Bucks have horns, does none.

Buron, Nat. Hist.

The fearful doe

And flying stag amidst the greyhounds go. Dryden, Virgil.

DOE. n. s. [from To do.] A feat; what one has to do; what one can perform.

No sooner he does peep into

The world, but he has done his doe.

Hudibras.

DO'ER. n. s. [from To do.] One that does any thing good or bad.

So foul a thing, O! thou Injustice art,

That tort'rest both the doer and distressed.

Daniel.

It may be indeed a publick crime, or a national mischief; yet it is but a private act, and the doer of it may chance to pay his head for his presumption. South.

2. Actor; agent.

Still thus far we open the things that have been done, let not the principal doers themselves be forgotten. Hooker.

3. Performer.

One judgeth the prize to the best doers, of which they are no less glad than great princes are of triumphs. Sidney.

4. An active, or busy, or valiant person.

Fear not, my lord, we will not stand to prate;

Talkers are no good doers: be assur'd,

We go to use our hands, and not our tongues. Shakespeare.

They are great speakers; but small doers; greater in shew than in deed. Malcolm, Hist.

5. One that habitually performs or practises.

Be doers of the word, and not hearers only. Common Prayer.

In this we shew ourselves weak, and unapt to be doers of his will, in that we take upon us to be controllers of his wisdom. Hooker.

DOES. The third person from do for doth.

Though lending to foreigners, upon use, doth not at all alter the balance of trade between those countries, yet it does alter the exchange between those countries. Locke.

TO DOFF. v. n. [from do off.]

1. To put put off dress.

You have deceiv'd our trust,

And made us doff our easy robes of peace,

To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Doff those links.

Milton, S. A.

Nature, in awe to him,

Had doff'd her gaudy trim,

With her great master so to sympathize.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

That judge is hot, and doff's his gown.

Dryden, Jun.

DOG

Alcides *doff*s the lion's tawny hide.

2. To strip; to divest of any thing.

Why art thou troubled, Herod? What vain fear
Thy blood-revolving breast doth move?
Heaven's king, who *doff*s himself our flesh to wear,
Comes not to rule in wrath, but serve in love.

Rowe.

3. To put away; to get rid off.

Your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, and make women fight,
To doff their dire distresses.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

4. To shift off; to delay; to refer to another time; to put off.

Every day thou doff'st me with some device, Iago; and rather keep'st from me all conveniency, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope.

Shakspeare, Othello.

Away, I will not have to do with you.

— Can'st thou so doff me? Shakspeare, Much Ado.

5. This word is in all its senses obsolete, and scarcely used except by rusticks; yet it is a pure and commodious word.

DOG.† n. s. [dogghe, Dutch; doggw, Icel. dogue, old dog.]

1. A domestick animal remarkably various in his species; comprising the mastiff, the spaniel, the bulldog, the greyhound, the hound, the terrier, the cur, with many others. The larger sort are used as a guard; the less for sports.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion:
Revenge, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gule and vary of their masters,
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Why should we not think a watch and pistol as distinct species one from another, as a horse and a dog.

Locke.

The clamour roars of men and boys, and dogs.

Thomson.

2. A constellation called Sirius, or Canicula, rising and setting with the sun during the canicular days, or dog days.

Among the southern constellations, two there are who bear the name of the dog; the one in sixteen degrees latitude, containing on the left thigh a star of the first magnitude, usually called Procyon, or Anticanus.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

It parts the twins and crab, the dog divides,
And Argo's keel that broke the frothy tides.

Creech.

3. A reproachful name for a man.

I never heard a passion so confus'd,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets.

Shakspeare.

Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers.

Phil. iii. 2.

4. Not always a reproachful name, but sometimes applied in sport, to a back or blood, a gay young man; as by Johnson himself.

I love the young dogs of this age: they have more wit and humour and knowledge of life than we had; but then the dogs are not so good sense as we.

Boswell, Life of Dr. Johnson.

5. To give or send to the Dogs, to throw away. To go to the Dogs; to be ruined, destroyed, or devoured.

Had whole Colepeper's wealth been hops and hogs,
Could he himself have sent it to the dogs!

Pope.

6. It is used as the term for the male of several species; as, the dog fox, the dog otter.

I ever thank any man, I'll thank you; but that they call compliments is like the encounter of two dog apes

Shakspeare.

That one ill taste of sense will serve to join
Dog love in the yoke, and sheer the swine.

Dryden.

7. Dog is a particle added to any thing to mark mean-ness, or degeneracy, or worthlessness; as dog rose.

See DOGSICK.

DOG-IRON. Machines of iron for burning wrecks. Uncertain etymology.

DOG

To Doc. v. a. [from the noun.] To hunt as a dog, insidiously and indefatigably.

I have dogg'd him like his murderer.

Shakspeare.

I, his despicable Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends, with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth.

Shakspeare.

Sorrow *dogg*ing sin,

Herbert.

Afflictions sort'd.

I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unowned sister.

Milton, Comus.

These spiritual joys are *dogg*ed by no sad sequels.

Glanville.

I have been pursued, *dogg*ed, and way-laid through several nations, and even now scarce think myself secure

Popc.

Hate dogs their flight, and insult mocks their end.

Vanity of Human Wishes.

DOG-FIGHT.* n. s. [dog and fight.] A battle between two dogs.

Alas men are more ready to clap their hands, as boys are wont to do in dog-fights.

By. Hall, Remains, p. 61.

DOG-FISHER. n. s. [dog and fisher.] A kind of fish.

The dog-fisher is good against the falling sickness.

Walton.

DOG-KEEPER.* n. s. [dog and keeper.] One who has the management of dogs.

I have had it by me some time, it was written by a dog-keeper of my grandfather's.

Swift, Tale of a Tub.

DOG-LATIN.* n. s. A word usually denoting barbarous Latin, which is also called apothecary's Latin; and sometimes, that species of burlesque Latin poetry, called the macaronick. See MACARONICK.

DOG-MAD.* adj. [dog and mad.] Mad, as a dog sometimes is.

He was troubled with a disease, reverse to that called the stinging of the tarantula; and would run dog-mad, at the noise of music, especially a pair of bag-pipes.

Sayl, Tale of a Tub.

DOG-TEETH. n. s. [dog and teeth.] The teeth in the human head next to the grinders; the eye-teeth.

The best instruments for dividing of herbs or incisor-teeth;
for cracking of hard substances, as bones and nuts, grinders, or mill-teeth; for dividing of flesh, sharp-pointed or dog-teeth.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DOG-TRICK.† n. s. [dog and trick.] An ill turn; surly or brutal treatment.

To kill men scurvily, 'tis such a dog-trick,
Such a rat-catcher's occupation.

Beaum. and Fl. Island Princess.

Nor those,

With their court dog-tricks, that can fawn and fleece,
Make their revenue out of legs and faces,

Echo my lord, and lick away a moth.

B. Jonson, For.

Learn better manners, or I shall serve you a dog-trick; I'll make you know your rider.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

DOGBANE. n. s. [dog and banc.] A plant. Miller.

DOGBERRY-TREE. A kind of cherry.

DOGBOLT.† n. s. [dog and bolt.] Of this word I know not the meaning, unless it be, that when meal or flour is sifted or bolted to a certain degree, the coarser part is called dogbolt, or flower for dogs. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement respecting this word; and he cites a passage from Hudibras in proof of it. It appears, however, to have been a word of contempt applied to persons; but why, I am yet to learn.

For to say truth, the lawyer is a dogbolt,
An arrant worm; and though I call him worshipful,
I wish him a canoniz'd cuckold, Diego.

Beaum. and Fl. Spanish Curate.

His only solace was, that now
His dogbolt fortune was so low,
That either it must quickly end,
Or turn about again, and mend.

Hudibras.

D O G

Do'GBRIAR. † n. s. [dog and briar.] The briar that bears the hip; the cynosbaton.

The hip-briar is also named cynosbaton, or the dogbriar or bramble. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 9.

Do'GCHEAP. adj. [dog and cheap.] Cheap as dogs' meat; cheap as the offal bought for dogs.

Good store of harlots, say you, and dogcheap? Dryden.

Do'GDAYS. † n. s. [dog and days.] The days in which the dogstar rises and sets with the sun, vulgarly reputed unwholesome.

They are a company of giddy, afternoon men; it is Midsummer-moon still; and the dogdays last all the year long; they are all mad. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 74.

Not was it more in his power to be without promotion, and titles, than for a healthy man to sit in the sun, in the brightest dogdays, and remain without warmth. Clarendon.

Do'GDRAW. n. s. [dog and draw.] A manifest apprehension of an offender against venison in the forest, when he is found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound which he leads in his hand.

Cowel.

DOGE. n. s. [doge, Italian.] The title of the chief magistrate of Venice and Genoa.

Doria has a statue at the entrance of the doge's palace, with the title of deliverer of the commonwealth. Addison.

Do'GFISH. n. s. [from dog and fish.] Another name for a shark.

It is part of the jaw of a shark, or dogfish. Woodward.

Do'GFLY. n. s. [dog and fly.] A voracious biting fly.

Thump-buckler Mars began,

And at Minerva with a lance of brass he headlong ran;
These vile words ushering his blows, Thou dogfly, what's the cause

Thou mak'st gods fight thus? Chapman, Iliad.

Do'GGER. † adj. [from dog.] Sullen; sour; morose; ill-humoured; gloomy.

Your uncle must not know but you are dead:

I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.

Shakespeare, K. John.

Now, for the hare-pick'd bone of majesty,

Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest.

And snarlth in the gentle eyes of peace. Shakespeare, K. John.

Dogged York, that reaches at the moon,

Whose over-weening arm I have pluck'd back,

By false accuse doth level at my life. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

So churlish, proud, insolent, so dogged, of so bad a disposition.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 109.

A dogged man, or a cynick; And so the Syriack and Arabick.

Rp. Patrick, on the first B. of Samuel.

Few miles on horseback had they jogged,

But fortune unto them turn'd dogged. Hudibras.

Do'GGEDLY. † adv. [from dogged.]

1. Sullenly; gloomily; sourly; morosely; "curiously." Sherwood.

He pincheth most doggedly. Overbury, Charact. sign. P. 7.

2. With an obstinate resolution, as Mr. Boswell supposes.

Dr. Johnson wrote a long letter to Mrs. Thrale: I wondered to see him write so much so easily. He verified his own doctrine, that "a man may always write when he will set himself doggedly to it." Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

Do'GGEDNESS. † n. s. [from dogged.] Gloom of mind; sullenness; moroseness.

Now you are friendly,

Your doggedness and niggardize flung from you.

Beaumont and Fl. Spanish Curate.

Do'GGER. † n. s. [from dog, for its meanness. Skinner.] From the Icel. dugga, a fishing vessel; duggowar, sailors. Screamus.] A small ship with one mast.

D O G

Do'GGEREL. † adj. [from dog.] What might be called in French, "rime de chien." See Cotgrave in V. CHEN. "Chose de chien, a paltry thing, a trifle." Tyrwhitt on Chaucer's expression of "rime doggerel." Another old poet mentions "bastard rime" after the dog'rell gyse." Skelton in his Interlude of Magnificence.] Loosed from the measures or rules of regular poetry; vile; despicable; mean: used of verses.

Then hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse:

Who by my muse to all succeeding times,

Shall live in spite of their own dog'rell rhymes. Dryden.

Your wit burlesque may one step higher climb,

And in his sphere may judge all dog'rell rhyme. Dryden.

It is a dispute among the critics, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroic verse, like that of the Dispensary; or in doggerel, like that of Hudibras. Addison, Spect.

Do'GGEREL. n. s. Mean, despicable, worthless verses.

The hand and head were never lost of those

Who dealt in dog'rell, or who pin'd in prose. Dryden, Juv.

The vilest dog'rell Crabstreet sends,

Will pass for your's with foes and friends. Swift.

Do'GGISH. † adj. [from dog.] Churlish; brutal.

At Rome, in the time of Nero, there was a philosopher called Demetrius, which was of that sect, that foras much as they abandoned all shamefacedness in their words and acts they were called cynics, in English doggish. Sir T. Elgot, Gov. fol. 67.

He was taken, beside, with a doggish appetite, which called for meat almost every moment. Fotherby, Athcom. p. 156.

Do'GHEARTED. adj. [dog and heart.] Cruel; pitiless; malicious.

His unkindness,

That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her

To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights

To his doghearted daughters. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Do'GHOLE. n. s. [dog and hole.] A vile hole; a mean habitation.

France is a doghole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot: to the wars. Shakespeare.

But, could you be content to bid adieu

To the dear playhouse, and the players too,

Sweet country seats are purchas'd ev'ry where,

With lands and gardens, at less price than here

You hire a darksome doghole by the year. Dryden, Juv.

Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all

On some patch'd doghole, ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.

DOGKE'NNEL. n. s. [dog and kennel.] A little hut or house for dogs.

A certain nobleman, beginning with a dogkennel, never lived to finish the palace he had contrived. Dryden, Pab. Pref.

I am desired to recommend a dogkennel to any that want a pack. Tatler.

Do'GLEECH.* n. s. [dog and leech.] See LEECH.] A dog-doctor; a word of contempt.

Am I grown,

Because I have been a little peevish to you,

(Only to try your temper,) such a dogleech,

I could not be admitted to your presence?

Beaumont and Fl. Tamcr. Signet.

Do'GLOUSE. n. s. [dog and louse.] An insect that harbours on dogs.

Do'GLY.* adv. [from dog.] In manner like a dog. Hudoc.

Do'GMA. † n. s. [Latin. The Latin plural, dogmata, is sometimes used. "Those unworthy dogmata which have clogged and encumbered it, [the Christian Religion.]" Worthington to Hardib. 1660, Epist. 2.]

1. Established principle; doctrinal notion.

Our poet was a stoick philosopher, and all his moral sentences are drawn from the dogmas of that sect. Dryden.

2. [In canon law.] Dogma is that determination which consists in, and has a relation to, some casuistical point of doctrine, or some doctrinal part of the Christian faith. Ayliffe, Parkeron.

DOGMA'TICAL. } adj. [from dogma.] Authoritative;
DOGMA'TICK. } magisterial; positive; in the manner of a philosopher laying down the first principles of a sect.

The dim and bounded intellect of man seldom prosperously adventures to be dogmatical about things that approach to infinite, whether in vastness or littleness. Boyle.

I bid by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatical way, which is so much his character. Dryden.

Learning gives us a discovery of our ignorance, and keeps us from being peremptory and dogmatical in our determinations. Collier on Pride.

Criticks write in a positive dogmatick way, without either language, genius, or imagination. Spectator.

One of these authors is indeed so grave, sententious, dogmatical a rogue, that there is no enduring him. Swift.

DOGMA'TICALLY. adv. [from dogmatical.] Magisterially; positively.

I shall not presume to interpose dogmatically, in a controversy, which I look never to see decided. South.

DOGMA'TICALNESS.† n. s. [from dogmatical.] The quality of being dogmatical; magisterialness; mock authority.

This induced Socrates and all of them to confess their ignorance, and believe that nothing could be known, comprehended, or understood: not out of obstinacy or dogmaticalness, but from the narrowness of their senses, the weakness of their minds, the shortness of life, and truth being hid as it were in a deep well. Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 20.

The right state and disposition of the mind to make proper improvements—in this will be considered the notions of scepticism, dogmaticalness, enthusiasm, superstition.

Warburton to Hurd, Letters, L. 24.

DOGMATICK.* n. s. One of a sect of physicians, called also Dogmatists, in contradistinction to Empiricks and Methodists. They brought physick into a form and arrangement.

Galen mentions in his time but three sects of physicians, Empiricks, Methodists, and Dogmatists: we have now a fourth, that go under the name of Chymicks, Hermeticks, or Paracelsians. Hakewill on Providence, p. 244.

DOGMATISM.* n. s. [from dogma.] Positiveness in opinion, or in disputation.

The presbyterian clergy, more eminent for zeal than for policy, often contradicted James's opinions, with a freedom equally offensive to his dogmatism as a theologian, and to his pride as a king. Robertson, Hist. of Scotland, ii. 177.

DOGMATIST. n. s. [from dogmatiste, Fr.] A magisterial teacher; a positive assertor; a bold advancer of principles.

I could describe the vanity of bold opinion, which the dogmatists themselves demonstrate in all the controversies they are engaged in. Glanville, Scepas.

A dogmatist in religion is not a great way off from a bigot, and is in high danger of growing up to be a bloody persecutor. Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

To DOGMATIZE.† v. n. [from dogma.] To assert positively; to advance without distrust; to teach magisterially.

Not to conclude or dogmatize upon this or that peremptorily. Translators of the Bible to the Reader.

These, with the pride of dogmatizing schools, Impos'd on nature arbitrary rules; Forc'd her their vain inventions to obey, And move as learned frenzy trac'd the way. Blackmore.

This father, violating all these laws, had accused me as a dogmatizing heretick. II. Wharton, Inquil. of God, ch. 6.

DOGMATIZER.† n. s. [from dogmatize.] An assertor; a magisterial teacher; a bold advancer of opinions.

We must condemn him [Amadis de Gaul] to the fire, without all remission, as the dogmatizer and head of a bad sect. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quir.

Such opinions, being not entered into the confessions of our church, are not properly chargeable either on Papists or Protestants, but on particular dogmatizers of both parties. Hammond.

DO'GROSE. n. s. [dog and rose.] The flower of the hip.

Of the rough or hairy excrecence, those on the briar, or dogrose, are a good instance. Darham, Physico-Theol.

DO'GSEARS.* n. s. An expression for the creases made on the leaves of books by their being folded down at particular places.

With the sweat of my own hands, I did make plain and smooth the dogsears throughout our great Bible. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mem. of P. P.

Under a tea-cup he might lie,
Or creas'd like dogsears in a folio. Gray, Long Story.

DO'GSICK.* adj. [dog and sick.] Sick as a dog.

He that saith, he is dog-sicke, or sick as a dog, meaneth, doubtlesse, a sick dog. Dyer's Dry Dinner, 1599.

DO'GSKIN.* adj. [dog and skin.] Made of the skin of a dog.

Also a small cabinet, with six drawers inlaid with tortoiseshell, and brass-gilt ornaments at the four corners, in which were two leather forehead-cloths, three pair of oiled dog-skin gloves, seven cakes of superfine Spanish wool, half a dozen of Portugal dishes, and a quire of paper from thence. Tatler, No. 245.

DO'GSLEEP. n. s. [dog and sleep.] Pretended sleep.

Juvenal indeed mentions a drowsy husband, who raised an estate by snoring; but then he is represented to have slept what the common people call dogsleep. Addison.

DO'GSMEAT. n. s. [dog and meat.] Refuse; vile stuff; offal like the flesh sold to feed dogs.

His reverence bought of me the flower of all the market; these are but dogsmeat to 'em. Dryden.

DO'GSTAR. n. s. [dog and star; canicula, Lat.] The star which gives the name to the dogdays.

All shun the raging dogstar's sultry heat,
And from the half-unpeopled town retreat. Addison.

DO'GSTOOTH. n. s. [from dog and tooth.] A plant. Miller.

DO'GTROT. n. s. [dog and trot.] A gentle trot like that of a dog.

This said, they both advanc'd, and rode,
A dogtrot through the bawling crowd. Hudibras.

DO'GWEARY. adj. [dog and weary.] Tired as a dog; excessively weary.

Oh, master, master, I have watch'd so long,
That I'm dogweary. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

DO'GWOOD. n. s. A species of cornelian cherry.

DO'ILX.† n. s.

1. A species of woollen stuff so called, I suppose, from the name of the first maker.

We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine: a fool, and a daily stuff, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety. Congreve, Way of the World.

2. It is now the name of a small napkin, coloured, or plain, placed on our tables after dinner with the wine and dessert.

DO'INGS. n. s. [from To do.] This word has hardly any singular.]

1. Things done; events; transactions.

D O L

- I have but kill'd a fly,
— But ! how if that fly had a father and mother ?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buz lamented doings in the air ? Shakespeare.
2. Feats; actions, good or bad.
The next degree was to mark all Zelma's doings, speeches and fashions, and to take them unto herself, as a pattern of worthy proceeding. Sidney.
If I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing; let me say
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
At length a reverend fire among them came,
And of their doings great dislike declar'd,
And testified against their ways. Milton, P. L.
3. Behaviour; conduct.
Never the earth on his round shoulders bare,
A maid train'd up from high or low degree,
That in her doings better could compare
Mirth with respect, few words with courtesy. Sidney.
4. Conduct; dispensation.
Dangerous it were for the feeble brains of man to wade far into the doings of the Most High. Hooker.
5. Stir; bustle; tumult.
Shall there be then, in the mean while, no doings ? Hooker.
6. Festivity; merriment: as, jolly doings.
7. This word is now only used in a ludicrous sense, or in low, mean language.
After such miraculous doings, we are not yet in a condition of bringing France to our terms. Swift.
- DOIT. † n. s. [duyt, Dutch; dayght, Erse. The Dutch duyt is the eighth part of a penny; Fr. d'uit.] A small piece of money.
When they will not give a dot to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Shakespeare, Tempest.
In Anna's wars a soldier, poor and old,
Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold;
Tir'd with a tedious march, one luckless night,
He slept, poor dog ! and lost it to a dot. Pope.
- DOLE. † n. s. [from deal; saetan, Sax. dauljan, Goth.]
1. The act of distribution or dealing.
The Holy Ghost maketh his dole in otherwise than other people; for they dole as lyketh them, &c. Liber Fest. fol. 42. b.
It was your presumise,
That in the dole of blows your son might drop. Shakespeare.
The personal fruition in any man cannot reach to feel great riches: there is a custody of them, or a power of them, and donative of them, or a fame of them, but no solid use to the owner. Bacon, Ess. of Riches.
At her general dole
Each receives his ancient soul. Cleaveland.
2. Any thing dealt out or distributed.
Now, my masters, happy man be his dole say I; every man to his business. Shakespeare.
Let every man beg his own way, and happy man be his dole.
Beaum. and Fl. W'd at Sev. Weapons.
But lest some may haply think, or thus expostulate with me after this debatement, who made you the busy almoner to deal about this dole of laughter and reprehension, which no man thanks your bounty for. Milton, Apol. for Smeagolymus.
Let us, that are unhurt and whole,
Fall on, and happy man be's dole. Hudibras.
3. Provisions or money distributed in charity, at any time; formerly at funerals more especially.
I know you were one could keep
The buttery-hatch still lock'd, and save the chippings, Sell the dole beer to aquavite men. B. Jonson, Alchemist.
Our doles and funeral mells, if they be our own early provisions, will then spend the better. Hp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 9. ch. 4.
They had such firm dependence on the day,
That Need grew pamp'rd, and forgot to pray;
So sure the dole, so ready at their call,
They stood prepar'd to see the manna fall. Dryden.

D O L

- Clients of old were feasted; now a poor
Divided dole is dealt at th' outward door,
Which by the hungry rout is soon dispatch'd. Dryden, Juv.
4. Blows dealt out.
I have seen him —
— In the head of a troop stand as if he had been rooted, Dealing large doles of death. Beaum. and Fl. Ist. Princess.
What if his eye-sight, for to Israel's God
Nothing is hard, by miracle restor'd,
He now be dealing dole among his foes,
And over heaps of slaughter'd walk his way? Milton, S. A.
5. [from dolor, Lat. Dr. Johnson says; it is rather from the old Fr. dole.] Grief; sorrow; misery. Obsolete.
Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all beholders take his part with weeping. Shakespeare, As you like it.
Our sometime sister, now our queen,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
They might hope to change
Torment with ease, and soonest recompense
Dole with delight. Milton, P. L.
6. Bound or division of land. [Sax. saetan, to divide, to mark out. However, "les dols de forest," are the bounds of the forest, in old French. Kelham, Norm. Dict.] This sense is yet used in some parts of England; a dole-stone in Norfolk is a land- mark.
Curs'd be he which translateth the bounds and doles of his neighbour. Injunctions of Q. Eliz. 1559, sign. B. iii.
Accurs'd be he, saith Almighty, God by Moses, who re-moveth his neighbour's doles and marks.
Homilies, B. ii. Exhort. for Rog. Week.
- TO DOLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To deal; to distribute. Dict.
- DOLE. n. s. Void space left in tillage. Dict.
- DOLEFUL. adj. [dole and full.]
1. Sorrowful; dismal; expressing grief; querulous.
She earnestly intreated to know the cause thereof, that either she might comfort or accompany her doleful humour. Sidney.
For none but you, or who of you it learns,
Can rightfully aread so doleful lay. Spenser, F. Q.
With screwed face and doleful whine, they only ply with senseless harangues of conscience against carnal ordinances.
South.
Just then the hero cast a doleful cry,
And in those ardent flames began to fry:
The blind contagion rag'd within his veins. Dryden.
2. Melancholy; afflicted; feeling grief; sorrowful.
How oft my doleful sire cry'd to me, tarry,
When first he spied my love. Sidney.
3. Dismal; impressing sorrow; dolorifick.
It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents, which befall men in this present life. Hooker.
No light, but rather darkness visible
Serv'd only to discover sights of woe,
Regions of sorrow, doleful shades! where peace
And rest can never dwell! Milton, P. L.
Happy the mortal man! who now at last
Has through this doleful vale of misery past;
Who to his destin'd stage has carry'd on
The tedious load, and laid his burden down. Prior.
- DOLEFULLY. † adv. [from doleful.] In a doleful manner; sorrowfully; dismally; querulously.
These and such other things she said so dolefully, as no one could hear her that would not deem her to be one of the most esteemed and loyal damsels of the world. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quix. iv. 7.
They tragically exaggerate the matters they take to be ill, and dolefully forebode worse, to cast a damp on their own spirits, and exasperate or deject all whom they can influence.

B. Jenks, Sermon, 5 Nov. 1689, p. 26.

DO'LEFULNESS. n. s. [from doleful.]

1. Sorrow; melancholy.

2. Querulousness.

3. Dismalness.

DO'LENT.* adj. [old Fr. dolent; Lat. dolens.] Sorrowful. Old English. Chalmers.

DO'LESOME. adj. [from dole.] Melancholy; gloomy; dismal; sorrowful; doleful.

Hellward bending o'er the beach, descry

The dolesome passage to th' infernal sky. Pope, Odyssey.

DO'LESOMELY. adv. [from dolesome.] In a dolesome manner.

DO'LESOMENESS. n. s. [from dolesome.] Gloom; melancholy; dismalness.

DOLL.† n. s.

1. A contraction of Dorothy.

Jack Fairchild.

Shakespeare.

2. A little girl's puppet or baby. Of this word Dr. Johnson gives no derivation. It may have been adopted from the old French dol, trumpery, a trick; or it may be an abbreviation of idol. Cooper, in his old Latin Dictionary, (1578,) renders capitulum lepidissimum, "O pleasant companion, O little pretie doll polle!"

DO'LLAR.† n. s. [daler, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says. Mr. Horne Tooke strangely thinks that Skinner's opinion respecting this word is reasonable, viz. that it belongs to the Sax. dal, a portion, because it is half a ducat! This word, which is the Teutonic thaler, is rather from thale or dale, a valley; this coin having first been coined in the valley of St. Joachim. See Shaw's Travels, 4to. p. 252. See also Du Cange in V. DALERUS.] A Dutch and German coin of different value, from about two shillings and sixpence to four and sixpence.

He disburs'd

Ten thousand dollars for our gen'ral use. Shakespeare, Macb.

DO'LOU.* See DOLOUR.

DOLORIFEROUS.* adj. [dolor and fero, Lat.] Producing pain.

Whether or not wine may be granted in such doloriferous affects in the joints. Whitaker, Blood of the Grape, p. 74.

DOLORIFICAL.* adj. [Lat. dolorificus.] Causing sorrow. See DOLORIFICK.

Cochran.

DOLORIFICK. adj. [dolorificus, Latin.] Causing grief or pain.

The pain returned, dissipating that vapour which obstructed the nerves, and giving the dolorifick motion free passage again.

Ray.

This, by the softness and rarity of the fluid, is insensible, and not dolorifick. Arbutnot on Air.

DO'LOUS. adj. [doloureux, doloros, old Fr. from dolor, Latin.]

1. Sorrowful; doleful; dismal; gloomy; impressing sorrow.

We are taught by his example, that the presence of dolorous and dreadful objects, even in minds most perfect, may, as clouds, overcast all seasonable joy. Hooker.

You take me in too dolorous a sense:

I spake t'you for your comfort. Shakespeare.

Through many a dark and dreary vale

They pass'd, and many a region dolorous,

O'er many a frozen, many a fiery alp,

Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death.

Milton, P. L.

Talk not of ruling in this dol'rous gloom,
Nor think vain words, he cry'd, can ease my doom.

Pope.

2. Painful.

How doth thine own weight torment thee, whilles thy whole body rests upon this forced and dolorous hold, till thy nailed feet bear their part in a no less afflictive supportation!

Ep. Hall, Contemp. The Crucifixion.

Their dispatch is quick, and less dolorous than the paw of the bear, or teeth of the lion. More, Antid. against Atheism.

DO'LOUSLY.* adv. [from dolorous. Old Fr. doloreusement.] Sorrowfully; mournfully.

It provoketh us also — with Christ and his apostles dolorously to lament the sore decay of the wicked.

Bale on the Revel. (1550) P. i. sign. L. 3. b.

The widow and children for some days exclude themselves; and, when abroad, go dolorously habited.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 378.

DO'LOUR. n. s. [dolor, Latin.]

1. Grief; sorrow.

I've words too few to take my leave of you,

When the tongue's office should be prodigal,

To breathe th' abundant dolour of the heart. Shakespeare.

2. Lamentation; complaint.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy; but rather sitting to his dolour dolorous discourses of their own and other folks misfortune.

Sidney.

3. Pain; pang.

A mind fixed and bent upon somewhat that is good, doth avert the dolours of death. Bacon.

DO'LPHIN. n. s. [delphin, Latin; though the dolphin is supposed to be not the same fish.] The name of a fish.

His delights

Were dolphin like; they shew'd his back above

The element they liv'd in.

Shakespeare.

Draw boys riding upon goats, eagles, and dolphins. Peucham.

DOLT.† n. s. [dol, Teutonic; dolheid, Teut. madness; dal, Su. stupid; Sax. dol, and Goth. dwalla, the same; whence the Sax. verb spolian, to stupify, to make dull. Dolt is dilled, as Mr. H. Tooke has observed. The French word for our dolt is badault, or lourdault.] A heavy stupid fellow; a blockhead; a thickskull; a logger-head.

Let dolts in haste some altar fair erect

To those high powers, which idly sit above.

Sidney.

Thou hast not half that power to do me harm,

As I have to be hurt: oh, gull; oh, dolt!

As ignorant as dirt!

Shakespeare, Othello.

Like men condemn'd to thunder-bolts,

Who, ere the blow, become mere dolts;

They neither have the hearts to stay,

Nor wit enough to run away.

Hudibras.

Wood's adul'trate copper,

Which, as he scatter'd, we, like dolts,

Mistook at first for thunder-bolts.

Swift.

To DOLT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To make dull. I have heard the word so spoken, but know no instance of it in books.

To DOLT.* v. n. To behave foolishly; to consume time like a dolt.

Than in these trifles to have dolted so much. New Custom.

DO'LTISH.† adj. [from dolt.] Stupid; mean; dull; blockish.

Your argument is, as you are; unlearned, fantastical, and doltish.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543) fol. 6a. b.

Dametas, the most arrant doltish clown, that ever was without the privilege of a bauble.

Sidney.

Their neglect of all sound literature, and their liking of all doltish and monastical schoolmen daily increased.

Milton, Animad. Rem. Def. i. 193.

DO'LTISHNESS.* n. s. [from doltish.] Folly; stupidity.

We have nothing but scurrility, unworthy of any chaste ears; or some extreme shew of dolishness, indeed, fit to lift up a loud laughter, and nothing else. Sidney, Def. of Poetry.

DOM.* Sax. dom, power, dominion. Dr. Johnson in birthdom refers to dom, of which, however, there is no notice in his dictionary. It is found only in composition.

Kingdom, dukedom, earldom, — meant originally the domain or property of the king, duke, or earl; and in a secondary sense dom was afterwards applied to express quality, state, condition, or property of another kind, as freedom.

Whiter, Blym. Magn. p. 210.

DO'MABLE. adj. [domabilis, Latin.] Tamable. Dict.
DOMA'IN.† n. s. [domaine, French, from dominium, Latin.]

1. Dominion; empire.

Rome's great emperor, whose wide domain
Had ample territory, wealth and pow'r.
Ocean trembles for his green domain.

Milton, P. L. Thomson.

2. Possession; estate.

A Latian field, with fruitful plains,
And a large portion of the king's domains.

Dryden, P. n.

3. The land about a mansion-house occupied by the lord.

But now nor shaggy hill, nor pathless plain,
Forms the lone refuge of the sylvan game;
Since Lyttelton has crown'd the sweet domain
With softer pleasures and with fairer fame.

Shenstone.

DO'MAL.* adj. [low Lat. doma, house.] Relating to the astrological use of house. See HOUSE.

Mars is now entering into the first house, and will shortly appear in all his domal dignities.

Addison, Drummer.

DOME.† n. s. [dome, French, from domus, Latin.]

1. A building; a house; a fabrick.

Best be he call'd among good men,
Who to his God this column rais'd:
Though lightning strike the dome again,
The man who built it shall be prais'd.
Stranger! whose'er thou art, securely rest,
Asian! in my faith, a friendly guest:
Approach the dome, the social banquet share.

Prior.

Pope, Odys.

2. A spherical arch; a cupola.

And domes, and domes, and cells, and grottoes.

Shenstone.

DOMESDAY.* See DOOMSDAY.

DOMESMAN.* n. s. [dome, Sax. judgement.] An umpire; a judge. Not now in use.

And Jesus stood before the domesman, and the justice axide him and seide, Art thou kyng of Jewis?

Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxvii.

The domesman is one of those that sit in the court in judicature with the steward.

Blount, Anc. Ten. p. 165.

DOMESTICAL.* } adj. [domesticus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the house; not relating to things publick.

The necessities of man had at the first no other helps and supplies than domestical; such as that which the prophet implyeth, saying, Can a mother forget her child?

Hooker.

The practical knowledge of the domestick duties is the principal glory of a woman.

Richardson, Clarissa.

2. Private; done at home; not open.

In this their domestical celebration of the Passover, they divided supper into two courses.

Hooker.

Beholding thus, O, happy as a queen!
We cry; but shift the gaudy, flatt'ring scene,
View her at home in her domestick light,
For thither she must come, at least at night.

Granville.

3. Inhabiting the house; not wild.

The faithful prudent husband is an honest, tractable, and domestick animal.

Addison, Spect.

4. Not foreign; intestine.

Domestick evils, for that we think we can master them at all times, are often permitted to run on forward, till it be too late to recall them.

Hooker, Dedication.

Equality of two domestick pow'rs
Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Combine together 'gainst the enemy:

For these domestick and particular broils

Are not the question here.

Shakespeare, A. Lear.

Such they were, who might presume I have done
Much for the king and honour of the state;

Having the chiefest actions undergone,

Both foreign and domestick of late.

Daniel.

Next to the sin of those who began that rebellion, theirs must needs be who hindered the speedy suppressing of it, by domestick dissensions.

King Charles.

DOMESTICALLY.* adv. [from domestical.] Relatively to domestick affairs.

Is it not a miracle, that so many of your Priests, Ignatians, and Monks feeding here in England, daintily, arrayed gallantly, lodging softly, should be very domestically and privily conversant with ladies, dames, matrons, maids of all sorts, and yet none of all these be scorched?

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 135.

He was glad — to return to Sheene, where he lived domestically as usual, till the death of Sir W. Temple.

Orrery on Swift, Lett. 2.

DOMESTICANT.* adj. [from domestick.] Forming part of the same family.

The power — was virtually residing and domesticant in the plurality of his assessors.

Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 71.

TO DOMESTICATE.† v. a. [from domestick.]

1. To make domestick; to withdraw from the publick.

Richardson, Clarissa.

2. To familiarize; to render, as it were, of the same family. This is the primitive sense of the word, which is not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

It is true, that the symptoms are well allayed, or otherwise peradventure custom hath taught me to bear them better, being now familiarized and domesticated evils, Iam mansueta mali.

Sir H. Wotton, Letters, p. 366.

Having the entry into your houses, and being half domesticated by their situation.

Burke, Lett. to a Member of the Nat. Assembly.

DOMESTICK. n. s. One kept in the same house.

A servant dwells remote from all knowledge of his lord's purposes: he lives as a kind of foreigner under the same roof; a domestick, and yet a stranger too.

South.

DOMICILE.* n. s. [Fr. domicile; Lat. domicilium.]

Burke uses the Latin word, as if he had not known of the English. It is not indeed in our lexicography. But the example, which I adduce, is of the date of a century and a half since. A house.

This famous domicile was brought with these apparitanances in one night from Nazareth over seas and lands by mighty Angels; and can, if honoured with a visit, with an offering, or with a vow, cure in a moment all diseases.

Brevint, Saul and Samuel at Pador, p. 303.

DOMICILIARY.* adj. [Lat. domicilium.] This word, as

Mr. Mason also has observed, has arisen out of the practice of the late French republican tyranny. Intruding into private houses.

Supervisors of domiciliary visitation.

Burke.

TO DOMICILIATE.* v. a. [Lat. domicilium.] To render domestick or familiar. A modern word.

Pownall on Antiq. (1782,) p. 61.

TO DOMIFY. v. a. [domifico, Latin.] To tame. Dict.

DOMINANT.† adj. [dominant, French; dominans, Latin.] Predominant; presiding; ascendant.

By the then dominant party it [Milton's Eiconoclastes] was esteemed an excellent piece.

A. Wood, of Milton, Fast: Oxon. sub ann. 1635.

Observing the scurvy and the dropsy to be the epidemic and dominant diseases of this nation.

Evelyn's Acetaria.

TO DOMINATE. v. n. [dominatus, Lat.] To pre-dominate; to prevail over the rest.

DOM

I thus conclude my theme,
The dominating humour makes the dream. Dryden.
TO DO'MINATE.* v. a. To govern.
He was, during twelve years, dominated by his step-mother.
Transl. of a Spanish Sonnet, App. to Twiss's Travels, in 1772.

DOMINA'TION. n. s. [dominatio, Latin.]

1. Power; dominion.

Thou and thine usurp
The domination, royalties, and rights
Of this oppressed boy. Shakspeare, K. John.

2. Tyranny; insolent authority.

Maximinus traded with the Goths in the product of his own estate in Thracia, the place of his nativity, whither he retired, to withdraw from the unjust domination of Opilius Macrinus. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. One highly exalted in power: used of angelick beings.

He heav'n of heav'ns, and all the pow'rs therein,
By thee created; and by thee threw down
Th' aspiring dominations. Milton, P. L.

Hear all ye angels, progeny of light,
Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, pow'rs.
Milton, P. L.

DO'MINATIVE.* adj. [from dominate.]

1. Imperious; insolent. Dict.

2. Presiding; governing.

To each thing hath the goodness of that Architect imparted a peculiar badge of honour, that nothing should be despicable in the eyes of other, the prince in majesty and sovereignty of power, the nobility in wisdom and dominative virtue.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

DO'MINATOR.* n. s. [Latin.]

1. The presiding or predominant power or influence.

Jupiter and Mars are dominators for this North-west part of the world, which maketh the people impatient of servitude, lovers of liberty, martial and courageous. Camden, Remains.

2. The absolute governour, or ruler.

God, who is the dominator of glory, gives and takes it away, as seemeth good to him. Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 155.

TO DOMINEER. v. n. [dominor, Latin.] To rule with insolence; to swell; to bluster; to act without controul.

Go to the feast, revel and domineer,
Carouse full measure. Shakspeare, Tem. of the Shrew.

The voice of conscience now is low and weak, chastising the passions, as old Eli did his lustful domineering sons. South.

Both would their little ends secure;
He sighs for freedom, she for pow'r;
His wishes tend abroad to roam,
And her's to domineer at home. Prior.

TO DOMINEER.* v. a. To govern.

Think'st thou, because my friend, with humble fervour,
Kneels to Omnipotence, each gossip's dream,
Each village-fable domineers in turn
His brain's to emper'd nerves?

Walpole, Myster. Mother, ii. 2.

DOMINICAL.* adj. [dominicalis, Latin.]

1. Noting the Lord's day, or Sunday.

The cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations.

Holder on Time.

2. Noting the prayer of our Lord Christ.

The Dominical Prayer, and the Apostolical Creed, (whereof there was such a hot dispute in our last conversation,) are two Acts tending to the same object of devotion.

Howell, Lett. iv. 29.

DOMINICAL.* n. s. The Lord's day, or Sunday.

The whole space betwixt this and Pentecost, and every dominical in the year. Hammond, Serm. ix.

DOMINICAN.* n. s. One of the order of St. Dominick, in the Romish church.

DOMINICAN.* adj. Respecting those who belong to the order of Dominick.

DON

There it was that I found and visited the famous Galilee grown old, a prisoner to the Inquisition, for thinking in astronomy otherwise than the Franciscan and Dominican licenser-thought. Milton, Arcopagitica

DO'MINO.* n. s. [Ital.] A kind of hood worn by canons of cathedral churches in Italy; also a dress formerly much worn at Venice; and adopted in this country as a masquerade-garment.

DOMINION. n. s. [dominium, Latin.]

1. Sovereign authority; unlimited power.

They on the earth
Dominion exercise, and in the air,
Chiefly on man. Milton, P. L.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl,
Dominion absolute; that right we hold
By his donation: but man over man
He made not lord. Milton, P. L.

Blest use of pow'r, O virtuous pride in kings!
And like his bounty, whence dominion springs. Tickell.

2. Power; right of possession or use, without being accountable.

He could not have private dominion over that, which was under the private dominion of another. Locke.

3. Territory; region; district; considered as subject.

The donations of bishopricks the kings of England did ever retain in all their dominions, when the pope's usurped authority was at the highest. Davies on Ireland.

4. Predominance; ascendant.

Objects placed foremost ought to be more finished than those cast behind, and to have dominion over things confused and transient. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

5. An order of angels.

By him were all things created, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principalities or powers.

Col. i. 16.

DON. n. s. [dominus, Lat.] The Spanish title for a gentleman; as, Don Quixote. It is with us used ludicrously.

To the great dons of wit,
Phœbus gives them full privilege alone,
To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryden.

TO DON.* v. a. [To do on.] To put on; to invest with; the contrary to do off. Obsolete.

He dyed on his clothes. Jobb Festivalis, fol. 53. b.
The purple morning left her crimson bed,
And don'd her robes of pure vermilion hue. Fairfax.
Her helm the virgin don'd. Fairfax.
Then up he rose, and don'd his clothes. Song in Hamlet.
What! should I don this robe, and trouble you?
Tit. Andronicus.

DONARY.* n. s. [donarium, Lat.] A thing given to sacred uses.

Æsculapius of old, that counterfeit god, did as many famous cures; his temple (as Strabo relates) was daily full of patients, and as many several tables, inscriptions, pendants, donaries, &c.
to be seen in his Church. Barton, Anat. of Mel. p. 225.

DONATION. n. s. [donatio, Lat.]

1. The act of giving any thing; the act of bestowing.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl
Dominion absolute; that right we hold
By his donation. Milton, P. L.

After donation there is an absolute change and alienation made of the property of the thing given; which being so alienated, a man has no more to do with it than with a thing bought with another's money. South.

2. The grant by which any thing is given or conferred.

Howsoever the letter of that donation may be unregarded by men, yet the sense thereof is so imprinted in their hearts, as if every one had claim for himself unto that which was conferred upon all. Raleigh, Essays.

The kingdoms of the world to thee were giv'n,
Permitted rather, and by thee usurp'd,
Other donation none thou can'st produce. Milton, P. R.

DO'NATISM.* n. s. [from Donatist.] The heresy of Donatists. See DONATIST.

To resist an error not much differing from Donatism.

Abp. Whitgift, in Fleetwood's Pref. to Lay Baptism, P. ii.

DO'NATIST.* n. s. [from one Donatus, founder of the sect.] One of a pestilent sect of hereticks, which sprang up about the beginning of the fourth century. In some things they concurred with the Arians; their general profession was an exclusive pretended puritanism. The Circumcelliones were a branch of this sect. See CIRCUMCELLIONES.

Arians and Donatists began both about one time. Hooker.

Let no idle Donatist of Amsterdam dream hence of an Utopical perfection. Bp. Hall, Beauty and Unity of the Church.

There is nothing so absurd with the Donatists, nor so impious with the Manichees, which some miracle or other, wrought among them, might not countenance in some measure.

Brevint, Saul and Samuel at Endor, p. 36.

DONATISTICAL.* adj. [from Donatist.] Pertaining to the heresy of Donatists.

Let truth never challenge error at the weapon of number alone, without other arguments; for some orthodox councils have had fewer suffrages in them, than this donatistical conference; and we may see small pocket-bibles, and a great folio-alcoran. Fuller, Profane State, p. 383.

DO'NATIVE. n. s. [donatif, Fr. from donatus, Lat.]

1. A gift; a largess; a present; a dole of money distributed.

The Roman emperor's custom was, at certain solemn times, to bestow on his soldiers a donative; which donative they received, wearing garlands upon their heads. Hooker.

They were entertained with publick shews and donatives, to make them more easily digest their lost liberty. Dryden.

2. [In law.] A benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either presentation to the ordinary, or institution by the ordinary, or induction by his orders. Corcel.

Never did steeple carry double truer;

His is the donative, and mine the cure. Cleveland.

DONE.† part pass. of the verb To Do. Formerly written down.

Another like fair tree eke grew thereby,

Whereof who so did eat, eftsoums did know

Both good and evil: O mournful memory!

That tree, through one man's fault, hath done us all to dye. Spenser, F. Q.

DONE.*

1. The infinitive of Do, in our old language; as in Spenser, "as maydens used to done."

2. Sometimes used for do in the indicative mood.

Ne to your lady will I service done.

Spenser, F. Q.

DONE. a kind of interjection. The word by which a wager is concluded; when a wager is offered, he that accepts it says done.

Done: the wager?

Shakspeare, Tempest.

One thing, sweet-heart, I will ask;

Take me for a new-fashion'd mask.

— Done: but my bargain shall be this,

I'll throw my mask off when I kiss.

Cleveland.

'Twas done and done, and the fox, by consent, was to be the judge. L'Estrange.

DONER.* n. s. [from doneo, Lat.] The person to whom a gift is made.

There is an error all over; but whether are most to blame, you may judge between the donor and the donee; if one would not give, the other could not receive.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634,) p. 217.

Touching the parties unto deeds and charters, we are to consider as well the donors and granters, as the donees or grantees. Spelman.

DO'NION.† n. s. [now corrupted to dungeon, from dominionum, low Latin, according to Menage; old Fr. dongecour, or donjon. V. Cotgrave.]

1. A strong tower in the middle of a castle or fort, wherein the besieged make their last efforts of defence, when the rest is forced. Cotgrave.

The keep or dungeon [was] generally a large square tower, flanked at its angles by small turrets, having within them one or more wells. Grose, Military Antiq. ii. 3.

2. A tower or place in which prisoners were kept; now used of subterraneous prisons.

The grete toure, that was so thicke and strong,

Which of the castle was the chief dungeon,

Wherein the knightes were in prison,

Was evn joyuant to the garden-wall,

Ther as this Emely had her playcing.

Chaucer.

DO'NNAT.* n. s. [do and naught.] An idle, good-for-nothing person; who is employed only in doing mischief. A word yet used in the north of England, where it is also applied to the devil.

DO'NOR. n. s. [from doneo, Lat.] A giver; a bestower; one who gives any thing.

Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,

And begging lords and teeming ladies wait

The promised dote.

Dryden, Juvenal.

It is a mighty check to beneficent tempers to consider how often good designs are frustrated and perverted to purposes, which, could the donors themselves have foreseen, they would have been very loth to promote. Atterbury.

DO'NSHIP. n. s. [from don.] Quality or rank of a gentleman or knight.

I'm none of those,

Your bosom-friends, as you suppose,

But Ralph himself, your trusty squire,

Wh' has dragg'd your donship out o' th' mire. Hudibras.

DO'NZEL.* n. s. [Italian; low Lat. domicellus. See DAMEL.] A page.

He is esquire to a knight-errant, donzel to the damsels.

Buller's Characters.

DOO'DLE. n. s. [a cant word, perhaps corrupted from do little, Faincant.] A trifle; an idler.

DOOLE.* So Spenser sometimes writes dole, as he also writes doleful, doolclul.

To DOOM.† v. a. [denian, Saxon; doemen, Dutch; Su. doma; Icel. demu; Goth. domjan.]

1. To judge.

Thou through malice fall'n,

Father of mercy and grace! thou did'st not doom

So strictly, but much more to pity inquire. Milton, P. L.

2. To condemn to any punishment; to sentence.

He may be doom'd to chains, to shame, to death,

While proud Hippolitus shall mount his throne.

Smith.

Justly th' impartial fates conspire,

Dooming that son to be the sire

Of such another son.

Granville.

3. To pronounce condemnation upon any.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,

And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears;

Round in his urn the blended balls he rolls,

Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden, Æn.

4. To command judicially or authoritatively.

Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death?

And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave? Shakspeare.

5. To destine; to command by uncontrollable authority.

Fate and the gods, by their supreme command,

Have doom'd our ships to seek the Latian land. Dryden, Æn.

I have no will but what your fates ordain;

Destin'd to love, as they are doom'd to reign. Granville.

DOOM.† n. s. [born, Saxon; doem, Dutch.]

1. Judicial sentence; judgement.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shakspeare.

To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd,
Though in mysterious terms, judg'd as then best. Milton, P. L.

And now, without redemption, all mankind
Must have been lost, unjudg'd to death and hell
By doom severe. Milton, P. L.

In the great day, wherein the secrets of all hearts shall be laid open, no one shall be made to answer for what he knows nothing of; but shall receive his doom, his conscience accusing or excusing him. Locke.

2. The great and final judgement.

Search Windsor-castle, elves within and out;
Strew good luck, Ouphes, on every sacred room,
That it may stand till the perpetual doom. Shakspeare.

3. Condemnation; judicial sentence.

Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou do'st evil. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. Determination declared.

If I for soe, let him be gently used.
— Revoke that doom of mercy; for 'tis Clifford. Shakspeare.

5. The state to which one is destined.

By day the web and loom,
And homely household-task shall be her doom. Dryden, Iliad.

6. Ruin; destruction.

From the same foes, at last, both felt their doom,
And the same age saw learning fall, and Rome. Pope.

7. Discrimination; discernment.

In him no point of courtesy there lapt:
He was of manners mild, of doom exact. Mir. for Mag. p. 175.

DOOMSDAY.† n. s. [Sax. dom and dæg.]

1. The day of final and universal judgement; the last, the great day.

Men, wives, and children stare, cry out, and run,
As it were doomsday. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

They may serve for any theme, and never be out of date until doomsday. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomsday wander in the shades of night:
This only holiday of all the year,
We privileg'd in sunshine may appear. Dryden.

2. The day of sentence or condemnation.

All-souls day is my body's doomsday. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

DOOMSDAY-BOOK.† n. s. [doomsday and book. Sometimes also called doom-book, as in Sadler's Rights of the Kingdom, 1649. Sax. dom-boc. Sometimes simply, domesday.] A book made by order of William the Conqueror, in which the estates of the kingdom were registered.

King Alfred, about the year 900, composed a book of this nature, which was extant at Winchester at the coming-in of the Conqueror, but is since lost. But the incomparable record of doomsday, now remaining at the chapter-house at Westminster, and lately printed, was begun by order of William the Conqueror, with the advice of his parliament, in the year of our Lord 1080, and completed in the year 1086. Commissioners were sent into every county, and juries summoned and impannelled in each hundred out of all orders of freemen, from barons down to the lowest farmers, to give in upon oath to the commissioners, by verdict or presentment, due information. Kelham.

be Domes also brought in a reckoning of money by ores, which is mentioned in doomsday-book. Candler.

See DOMESMAN.

Row on doom.] Full of destruction.

And by th' infectious slime that doomsful deluge left,
Nature herself hath since of purity been rest.

Drayton, Polyolb. 8.9.

DOOR.† n. s. [dop, bupe, Saxon; dorris, Erse; daur, M. Goth. dyp, dur, Ice], and old Goth. darr, Pers. See Sir T. Herbert's Trav. p. 317.]

1. The gate of a house; that which opens to yield entrance. Door is used of houses, and gates of cities, or publick buildings, except in the licence of poetry.

All the castle quaked from the ground,
And every door of free-will open flew. Spenser, F. Q.

In the side, a door
Contriv'd; and of provisions laid in large,
For man and beast. Milton, P. L.

To the same end men sev'ral paths may tread,
As many doors into one temple lead. Denham.

For without rules there can be no art, any more than there can be a house without a door to conduct you in. Dryden.

2. In familiar language, a house; often in the plural, doors.

Lay one piece of flesh or fish in the open air, and another of the same kind and bigness within doors. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Let him doubt whether his clothes be warm, and so go naked; whether his house be firm, and live without doors.

Decay of Piety.

Martin's office, is now the second door in the street, where he will see Parnel. Arbuthnot.

Lambs, though they are bred within doors, and never saw the actions of their own species, push at those who approach them with their foreheads. Addison, Spect.

The sultan entered again the peasant's house, and turned the owner out of doors. Addison, Guardian.

3. Entrance; portal.

The tender blades of grass appear,
And buds, that yet the blast of Eurus fear,
Stand at the door of life, and doubt to clothe the year. Dryden.

4. Passage; avenue; means of approach.

The indispensable necessity of sincere obedience, shuts the door against all temptations to carnal security. Hammond.

5. Out of Door, or Doors. No more to be found; quite gone; fairly sent away.

Should he, who was thy lord, command thee now,
With a harsh voice and supercilious brow,
To serve duties, thou would'st fear no more;
The gallows and the whip are out of door. Dryden, Persius.

His imaginary title of fatherhood is out of doors, and Cain is no prince over his brother. Locke.

6. At the Door of any one. Imputable; chargeable upon him.

In any of which parts, if I have failed, the fault lies wholly at my door. Dryden, Dufrenoy, Pref.

7. Next Door to. Approaching to; near to; bordering upon.

A seditious word leads to a broil, and a riot unpunished is but next door to a tumult. D'Estrange.

DOORCASE. n. s. [door and case.] The frame in which the door is inclosed.

The making of frames for doorcases, is the framing of two pieces of wood athwart two other pieces. Moxon.

DOORING.* n. s. [from door.] A doorcase.

He reports of a whirlpool, between the Root Islands and Lofoot, called Malestrand; which from half ebb to half flood is heard to make so terrible a noise as shakes the doorings of houses in those islands ten miles off.

Milton, Hist. Moscovia, chap. 5.

DOORKEEPER. n. s. [door and keeper.] Porter; one that keeps the entrance of a house.

He that hath given the following assistances to thee, desires to be even a doorkeeper in God's house, and to be a servant to the meanest of God's servants. Bp. Taylor's Pref.

DOORNAIL.* n. s. [door and nail.] The nail on which in ancient doors the knocker struck. See DEAD as a doornail.

D O R

DOORPOST.* n. s. [door and post.] The post of a door.

He shall also bring him unto the door, or to the doorpost.
Eccl. xxi. 6.

DOORSTEAD.* n. s. [door and stead.] Entrance of the door.

Did nobody clog up the king's doorstead more than I, there would be room for all honest men.

Warburton to Hurd, Letters, L. 197.

DOQUET. n. s. A paper containing a warrant.

Before the institution of this office, no doquet for licence to alien, nor warrant for pardon of alienation made, could be purchased without an oath.

Bacon, Office of Alienation.

TO DOR.* See TO DORR.

DORÉE.* n. s. [Fr. dorée.] A fish, corruptly called by us, and sometimes so written, John Dory. The word John is perhaps a corruption of the Fr. jaune, yellow; the sides of this fish being of a gold-yellow colour.

DORIAN.* adj. [Fr. dorien.] Used by Milton for Dorick.

The Dorian mood

Of flutes and soft recorders.

Milton, P. L.

DORICISM.* n. s. [from Dorick.] A phrase of the Dorick dialect.

We have a letter writ by Dion of Syracuse to Dionysius, tyrant of that place; and part of another, written by Dionysius himself; both preserved among the Epistles of Plato; where there is not the least shadow of doricism; but as well the prince, as the philosopher, have written their epistles in such a dialect, as if (to use Dr. Bentley's gentlemanlike phrase) they had gone to school at Athens.

Boyle, on Bentley's Phalaris, p. 43.

DORICK.* adj. [from Doris, Fr. Dorique.]

1. Denoting a species of the ancient music.

Go to their tune; the one delights in the Ionick; the other altogether in the Dorick. Howell, Instruct. For Trav. p. 73.

No music must be heard, no song be set or sung, but what is grave and Dorick.

Milton, Arcopagitica.

2. Denoting an order of architecture.

Pilasters round

Were set, and Dorick pillars overlaid
With golden architrave.

Milton, P. L.

DORISM.* n. s. [from Doris.] An expression of the Dorick dialect.

The genuine Dorisms of Archimedes were preserved.

Essay on Gr. and Lat. Prosodies, (1796), p. 49.

DORMANCY.* n. s. [from dormant.] Quiescence.

The dormancy of religious oppression, and the natural conclusion that the statutes complained of are not likely to be enforced, form in my mind no reason why they should be suffered to remain.

Bp. Horsley, Parl. Reg. xxvi. 258.

DORMANT.* adj. [dormant, Fr.]

1. Sleeping.

He a dragon! if he be, 'tis a very peaceful one: I can insure his anger is dormant; or should he seem to rouse, 'tis well lashing him, and he will sleep like a top.

Congreve, Old Bachelor.

With this ragus he is said to strike and kill his prey, for which he lies, as it were, dormant, till it swims within his reach.

Grew, Muscum.

2. In a sleeping posture.

If a lion wear the coat of Judah, yet were it not a lion rampant, but rather couchant and dormant.

Brown.

3. Private; not publick.

There were other dormant musters of soldiers throughout all parts of the realm, that were put in readiness, but not drawn together.

Bacon, War with Spain.

4. Concealed; not divulged.

It would be prudent to reserve these privileges dormant, never to be produced but upon great occasions.

Swift.

D O R

5. Leaning; not perpendicular; made in the roof of a house. See DORMANT, n. s.

Old dormant windows must confess
Her beams: their glimmering spectacles,
Struck with the splendour of her face,
Do th' office of a burning-glass.

Cleveland.

DORMANT.* } n. s.
DORMAR. }

1. A large beam; a piece of timber, sometimes called a sleeper.

Ropes — the dormant toss'd

Now out, now in; now back, now forward east.

Fairfax, Tasso.

In a parlour belonging to a farm-house, there was a remarkably large dormar of chestnut.

Clabbe's Antig. of Wheatfield.

2. A window made in the roof of a house, or above the entablature; being raised upon the rafters.

Chambers.

DORMITIVE.* n. s. [Lat. dormio.] A soporifick medicine; an opiate.

Does any distressed patient want an emetick — or a dormitive?

Arbutnot.

This is the dormitive I take to Bedward.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 112.

DORMITORY.* n. s. [dormitorium, Lat.]

1. A place to sleep in; used commonly for a room with many beds.

Sure it was in some obscure hole of the peak, or some blind dormitory of a convent.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of Murr. Clergy.

If we be then taken down from the cross and put into the quiet chambers or dormitories, if there be seasons of rest and peace yet behind upon this earth in these our days, O they will be rich seasons of opportunity to bring forth glorious proportionable fruits of such repentance.

Hammond, Sermon.

Rooms that have thorough lights are left for entertainment, and those that have windows on one side for dormitories.

Mortimer.

Naked mourns the dormitory wall,

And Jones and Boyle's night labours fall.

Pope, Dunciad.

Sloth is another principal personage: she also is discovered in the dormitory of a monastery.

Watson, Essay on Pope, p. 221.

2. A burial place. The places where dead bodies are buried, are in Latin called cemeteria, and in English dormitories.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

New dormitories are bought for the dead, and furnished; neither might the corpses be allowed to lie single in their earthen beds, but are filled up like faggots in a stack, for the society of their future resurrection.

Bp. Hall, Sermon of Publick Thanksgiving.

He which numb'reth the sands of the sea, knoweth all the scattered bones, seeth into all the graves and tombs, searcheth all the repositories and dormitories in the earth, knoweth what dust belongeth to each body, what body to each soul.

Parson, on the Creed, Art. 11.

He [bishop Rust] was buried in the quire of his own cathedral church of Domore, in a vault made for his predecessor bishop Taylor, whose sacred dust is deposited also there: and what dormitory hath two such tenants?

Glanville, Lett. concerning Bp. Rust's Discourse of Truth.

DORMOUSE.* n. s. [dormio, to sleep, and mouse.] A small animal which passes a large part of the winter in sleep.

Dull as a dormouse.

Bauman and Fl. Ph.

Come, we all sleep, and are mere dormice flies,

A little less than dead: more dulness hangs

On us than on the moon.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

After they have lain a little while, they grow as drowsy as dormice, unless they are roused.

Collier on Thought.

DORN. n. s. [from dorn, German, a thorn.] The name of a fish; perhaps the same as the thorn-back.

D O R

The coast is stored both with shellfish, as scallops and sheathfish, and flat, as turbets, dorns, and holybut. Carew.
DO'RNICK. † n. s. [of Dornick in Flanders, where first made.] A species of linen cloth used in Scotland for the table, Dr. Johnson says; but it means also linsey-woolsey, and sometimes coarse damask: written sometimes damnick.

Three yards of Dornick for a pleyer's cote, 5 Hen. VIII.

Laysons, Rev. of Lond. i. 230.

I have got them painted with your arms,
 With a fair darnex carpet of my own
 Laid cross for the more statè.

Braun, and Fl. Two Noble Gent.

DORP.* n. s. [Teut. dorp; Su. torp; Goth. thorp.]
 A small village.

Amsterdam—being from a mean fishing-dorp come, in a short revolution of time, by a monstrous increase of commerce and navigation, to be one of the greatest marts in Europe.

Howell, Lett. (dat. 1619,) i. i. 7.

What should they do, beset with dangers round,
 No neighbouring dorp, no lodging to be found,
 But blocky plains, and bare un hospitable ground.

Dryden, Hind and Panther.

To DORR. † v. a. [tor, stupid, Teutonick; Dr. Johnson says. The Goth. and Su. dara, to infatuate, may be added.] • To dor or stupify with noise. This word I find only in Skinner, Dr. Johnson says. It is thus used, however, by the learned, and memorable, John Hales.

When we are so easily dorred and amated with every sophism, it is a certain argument of great defect of inward furniture and worth.

Hales, Rem. p. 13.

DORN. n. s. [so named probably from the noise which he makes.] A kind of flying insect, remarkable for flying with a loud noise.

Some insects fly with four wings, as all the vaginipennous, or sheathwinged, as beetles and dorns. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The dorr, or hedge-chaffer's chief marks are these: his head is small, like that of the common beetle: this and his eyes black: his shoulder-piece, and the middle of his belly, also black; but just under the wing-shells spotted with white. His wing-shells, legs, and the end of his tail, which is long and flat-pointed, of a light chestnut: his breast, especially, covered with a downy hair.

Grew, Museum.

DO'RRERS.* n. s. [from dorr.] • A drone.

There is a great number of gentlemen which cannot be content to live idle themselves, like dorrers, of that which others have laboured for.

Robinson, Tr. of Sir T. More's Utopia, (1551,) B. 1.

DORSE.* n. s. [old Fr. dors, "a cloth of state, hanging full over, and falling low behind;" Cotgrave; probably from the Lat. dorsum.] A canopy. Obsolete.

Imprints, a dorse and redorse of crymsyn velvet, with flowers of gold, in length two yards three quarters.

Will of Sir R. Sutton, Life by Churton, p. 521.

DO'RSAL.* adj. [Fr. dorsal.] • Belonging to the back.

The first dorsal fin is black.

Pennant.

DO'RSAL. † } n. s. [dorsal, Lat. a packsaddle.]

DO'RSER. } pannier; a basket or bag, one of which hangs on either side a beast of burthen, for the reception of things of small bulk. It is corruptly spoken, and perhaps written, dossel, Dr. Johnson says. He perhaps intended dossier; as Beaumont and Fl. and B. Jonson use the word. See DOSSE.

I may meet her

Riding from market one day, 'twixt her dorsers.

Beaumont, and Fl. Little Thief.

DORSIFEROUS. } adj. [dorsum and fero, or pario, Lat.]

DORSIPAROUS. } Having the property of bearing or bringing forth on the back. It is used of plants that have the seeds on the back of their leaves, as fern; and may be properly used of the American frog, which brings forth young from her back.

D O S

DORSUM.* n. s. [Latin.] A side of a hill.

I know not if it had any connection with a similar ridge, which creeping through the deep south-east valley beneath the trench of the great encampment on the brows of Catharine hill near Winchester, suddenly rises into a massy dorsum.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 69.

DORTURE. † n. s. [contracted from dormitury; dormitura, Lat. dortoir, Fr. Sometimes written dortet.]
 A dormitory; a place to sleep in.

He led us to a gallery like a dorture, where he shewed us along the one side seventeen cells, very neat.

Bacon.

To a friar that begs, or to a monk in his dortet.

Rp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. ii. § 2.

DO'RY.* See DORRE.

DOSE. † n. s. [Gr. δosis, Fr. dose.]

1. So much of any medicine as is taken at one time.

Quincy.

The too vigorous dose so fiercely wrought,
 And added fury to the strength it brought.

Dryden, Virg.

In a vehement pain of the head he prescribed the juice of the thapsia in warm water, without mentioning the dose.

Arbutnot.

2. Any thing nauseous.

If you can tell an ignoramus in power and place, that he has a wit and understanding above all the world, I dare undertake that as fulsome a dose as you give him, he shall readily take it down.

South.

3. As much of any thing as falls to a man's lot. Ludicrously.

No sooner does he peep into
 The world, but he has done his dose;
 Married his punctual dose of wives,
 Is cuckolded, and breaks, or thrives.

Hudibras.

4. Quantity.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so.

Granville.

5. It is often used of the utmost quantity of strong liquor that a man can swallow. He has his dose, that is, he can carry off no more.

To DOSE. † v. a.

1. To proportion a medicine properly to the patient or disease.

Plants seldom used in medicine, being esteemed poisonous, if corrected, and exactly dosed, may prove powerful medicines.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

2. To give physick or any thing nauseous to any man in a ludicrous sense.

He may cast him upon a bold, self-opinioned physician, worse than his distemper; who shall dose, and bleed, and kill him secundum artem!

South, Sermon i. 298.

DOSIS.* n. s. [Greek.] A dose.

As if a physician should prescribe a dosis or recipe to his patient of such simples, or compounded medicines, as cannot be had in this part of the world.

Dr. Jackson's Works, (1673,) iii. 517.

DO'SSEL.* n. s. [Fr. dossier.] A basket; a panier.

See DORSEL.

Mine old host of Ram-ally,

You ha' some market here;

Some dossier of fish,

Or fowl to fetch off.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

To hire a ripper, mare, and buy new dossers.

Braun, and Fl. Two Nob. Gent.

DO'SSIL. † n. s. [not corrupted from dorsel, as Dr. Johnson thinks; but adopted from the old French dosil, a stopple.] A pledget; a nodule or lump of lint, to be laid on a sore.

D O T

Her complaints put me upon dressing with such medicaments as basilicon, with præcipitate, upon a dossil. Wiseman.

DOST. [the second person of do.]

Why then dost treat me with rebukes, instead Of kind condoling cares, and friendly sorrow? Addison, Cato.

DOT.† n. s. [This is derived by Skinner from dotter, German, the white of an egg, and interpreted by him a grune of pus. It has now no such signification, and seems rather corrupted from jot, a point, Dr. Johnson says. But it may rather be considered as regularly derived from our old verb dit, to close; which, however, has hitherto found no place in our lexicography, and no comment from our critics, as to its usage by any English writer; though Mr. Tooke has observed it in the Scottish, Gawin Douglas.] A small point or spot made to mark any place in a writing; usually a period.

To DOT.† v. a. To mark with specks.

Is it not a singular phenomenon, that while the philosophers of the shambles are pricking their dotted lines upon his hide, all the while they are measuring him, his Grace is measuring me? Burke, Lett.

To DOT. v. n. [from the noun.] To make dots or spots.

DO'TAGE.† n. s. [from dote.]

1. Loss of understanding; imbecillity of mind; deliriousness.

The soul in all hath one intelligence;
Though too much moisture in an infant's brain,
And too much driness in an old man's sense,
Cannot the points of outward things retain:
Then doth the soul want work, and idle sit,
And this we childishness and dotage call. Davies.

No less are they out of the way in philosophy pestered their heads with the sapless dotages of old Paris and Salamanca. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts As joyful as our hearts:

Our senses tell us, if we please not them,
Our love is but a dotage, or a dream. Suckling.

2. Excessive fondness.

If on your head my fury does not turn,
Thank that fond dotage which so much you scorn. Dryden.

DO'TAL.† adj. [dotal, Fr. Cotgrave; dotalis, Lat.]

Relating to the portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town possess,
My people thin, my wretched country waste?
An exil'd prince, and on a shaking throne,
Or risk my patron's subjects, or my own. Garth's Ovid.

DO'TARD.† n. s. [from dote.] A man whose age has impaired his intellects; a man in his second childhood; called in some provinces a twichild. Shakespeare once writes this word dotard. Mr. Tooke strangely thinks this word to be doddered.

Dotard, said he, let be thy deep advise;
Seems that through many years thy wits thee fail,
And that weak old hath left thee nothing wise,
Else never should thy judgement be so frail. Spenser, F. Q.

I am come to insult thee for an old fantastick dotard, as thou art, in ever defending the women. Tatler, No. 266.

The sickly dotard wants a wife,
To draw off his last drops of life. Prior.

DO'TARDLY.* adj. [from dotard.] Like a dotard; stupid.

That sunk and sottish, that dull and dotardly sin of idolatry. Merc. Antid. against Idolatry.

DOTA'TION.† n. s. [dotatio, Lat.]

1. The act of giving a dowry or portion. Dict.

D O T

2. Endowment.

That all the places and offices of the church be provided of such a dotation, that they may be maintained.

Bacon, Consid. on the Ch. of Eng.
When the Christian religion then had taken foot in the empire, what sumptuous monuments were erected by that pious Constantine (in whom our nation claimeth a just interest) let histories speak; no stones were too precious, no metal was too costly for that happy use; and so powerful influence had that example upon Christian kings and princes, that each strove who should exceed other in the cost and splendour of those holy fabricks, the riches of their dotation, the price of their sacred vessels.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 259.

To DOTIE.† v. n. [doten, Dutch; radoter, French; probably from the Goth. dalt, weakness of mind.]

1. To have the intellect impaired by age or passion; to be delirious.

Unless the fear of death make me dote,
I see my son. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

A sword is upon the liars, and they shall dote; a sword is upon her mighty men, and they shall be dismayed. Jeremiah, l. 36.

'Time has made you dote, and vainly tell
Of arms imagin'd, in your lonely cell:

Go, be the temple and the gods your care;
Permit to men the thought of peace and war. Dryden, Ann.

When an old woman begins to dote, and grow chargeable to a parish, she is turned into a witch, and fills the country with extravagant fancies. Addison, Spect.

2. To be in love to extremity.

He was stricken with great affection towards me, which since is grown to such a doting love, that I was fain to get this place sometimes to retire in freely. Sidney.

Three sorts of men my soul hateth, and I am greatly offended at their life; a poor man that is proud, a rich man that is a liar, and an old adulterer that doteth. Berlus, xxv. 2.

I have long loved her, and bestowed much on her, followed her with a doting observance. Shakspeare.

To DOTE upon. To regard with excessive fondness; to love to excess.

All their prayers and love
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on
And bless'd, and grac'd. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love. Shakspeare.

All the beauties of the court besides,
Are mad in love, and dote upon your person. Denham.

Mark those who dote on arbitrary power,
And you shall find 'em either hot-brain'd youth,
Or needy bankrupts. Dryden.

Would you so dote upon your first desire,
As not to entertain a noble fire? Dryden, Ind. Emp.

We dote upon this present world, and the enjoyments of it;
And 'tis not without pain and fear, and reluctancy, that we are torn from them, as if our hopes lay all within the compass of this life. Barnet.

O death, all eloquent! you only prove
What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

DO'TED. adj. [from the verb.] Stupid. Not used.

His senseless speech and doted ignorance
The prince had marked well. Spenser, F. Q.

DO'TER. n. s. [from dote.]

1. One whose understanding is impaired by years; a dotard.

What should a bald fellow do with a comb, a dumb doter with a pipe, or a blind man with a looking-glass? Burton.

2. A man fondly, weakly, and excessively in love.

If in black my lady's brow be deckt,
It mourns that painting and usurping hair
Should ravish doters with a false aspect;
And therefore is she born to make black fair. Shakspeare.

Our doters upon red and white are incessantly perplexed, by the uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and of the lasting of her beauty. Boyle.

DO'TINGLY. † adv. [from doting.] Fondly; by excessive fondness.

So dotingly the old one loves her young one.

Beaumont and Fl. Women Pleased.

Henceforth thou treacherous and murdering spring,
Be ever call'd the Fountain of Self-love:

And with thy water let this curse remain,
(As an inseparable plague) that who but tastes
A drop thereof, may, with the instant touch,
Grow dotingly enamour'd on themselves.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Thus did those tender-hearted reformers dotingly suffer themselves to be overcome with harlot's language.

Milton, Apology for Smectymur.

That he, to wedlock dotingly betray'd,
Should hope in this low town to find a maid!

Dryden, Juvenal.

DO'TTARD. † n. s. This word seems to signify a tree kept low by cutting, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Bacon. It seems also to mean a decayed tree, and perhaps should be written dotard.

For great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees in churchyards, or near ancient buildings, and the like, are pollards and dotards, and not trees at their full height.

Bacon.

In China they speak of a tree called magnolia, which affords not only good drink, being pierced, but all things else that belong to the subsistence of man.—It bears huge nuts, which have excellent food in them; it shoots out hard prickles above a fathom long, and those arm them; with the bark they make tents; and the dotard trees serve for firing.

Howell, Lett. ii. 54.

DO'TTEREL. n. s. [from dote.] The name of a bird that mimicks gestures.

We see how ready apes and monkeys are to imitate all motions of man; and, in catching of dotterels, we see how the foolish bird playeth the ape in gestures.

Bacon.

DOUANEER. * n. s. [French.] An officer of customs.

The entrance is guarded by certain vigilant dragons, called douaneers, who mumbled us for some time.

Gray, Lett. to West.

DOUBLE. adj. [double, French; duplex, Latin; duplex, Erse.]

1. Two of a sort; one corresponding to the other; in pairs.

All things are double one against another, and he hath made nothing imperfect.

Eccles. xlii. 24.

2. Twice as much: containing the same quantity repeated. It is sometimes used with to, and sometimes without.

Great honours are great burthens; but, on whom

They are cast with envy, he doth bear two loads:

His cares must still be double to his joys,

In any dignity.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

This sum of forty thousand pounds is almost double to what is sufficient.

Swift, Draper's Letters.

3. Having one added to another; having more than one in the same order or parallel.

It is a curiosity also to make flowers double, which is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary part, double flowers by neglecting, and not removing, prove single.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I met a reverend, fat, old gouty friar,

With a paunch swoll so high, his double chin

Might rest upon't.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

4. Twofold; of two kinds.

Thus cursed steel, and more accursed gold,

Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold;

And double death did wretched man invade,

By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd.

Dryden, Ovid.

No star appears to lend his friendly light;

Darkness and tempest make a double night.

Dryden.

5. Two in number.

And if one power did not both see and hear,
Our sights and sounds would always double be.

Davies.

6. Having twice the effect or influence; having the power of two. Not used.

The magnifico is much belov'd,

And hath in his effect a voice potential,

As double as the duke's.

Shakespeare, Othello.

7. Deceitful; acting two parts, one openly, the other in secret.

I th' presence

He would say untruths, and be ever double

Both in his words and meaning.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Fifty thousand could keep rank, that were not of double heart.

1 Chron. xli. 33.

DOUBLE. adv. Twice over.

I am not so old in proportion to them as I formerly was, which I can prove by arithmetick; for then I was double their age, which now I am not.

Swift.

DOUBLE is much used in composition, generally for doubly, two ways; as double-edged, having an edge on each side; or for twice the number or quantity, as double-died, twice died.

DOUBLE-BITING. adj. [double and bite.] Biting or cutting on either side.

But most their looks on the black monarch bend,

His rising muscles and his brawn commend;

His double-biting ax, and beamy spear,

Each asking a gigantick force to rear.

Dryden, Fables.

DOUBLE-BUTTONED. adj. [double and buttoned.] Having two rows of buttons.

Others you'll see, when all the town's about

Wrapt in th' embraces of a kersey coat,

Or double-button'd frieze.

Gay, Trivia.

To DOUBLE-CHARGE. * v. a. [double and charge.]

To charge or entrust with a double proportion.

I will double-charge thee with dignities.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

DOUBLE-DEALER. n. s. [double and dealer.] A deceitful, subtle, insidious fellow; one who acts two parts at the same time; one who says one thing and thinks another.

Double-dealers may pass muster for a while; but all parties wash their hands of them in the conclusion.

L'Estrange.

DOUBLE-DEALING. n. s. [double and dealing.] Artifice: dissimulation; low or wicked cunning; the action of one thing with the profession of another.

Thou shalt not be the worse for me; there's gold.

—But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Our poets have joined together such qualities as are by nature most compatible; valour with anger, meekness with piety, and prudence with dissimulation: this last union was necessary for the goodness of Ulysses; for without that, his dissimulation might have degenerated into wickedness and double-dealing.

Broome, View of Epick Poetry.

To DOUBLE-DIE. v. a. [double and die.] To die twice over.

Yes, I'll to the royal bed,

Where first the mysteries of our love were acted,

And double-die it with imperial crimson.

Dryden and Lee.

DOUBLE-EDGED. * adj. [double and edge.] Having two edges: as, "a double-edged sword."

Hulot.

DOUBLE ENTENDRE. * n. s. [French.] A double signification of a sentence or expression; a species of low wit.

Selling of bargains and double entendres.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

Jordan, true limit eastward.

Milton, P. R.

To DOUBLE-GILD. v. a. [double and gild.] To gild with double colouring.

England shall double-gild his treble guilt.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. 11.

And double-gilded as the doors of day. Crashaw, Poems.

DOUBLE-HANDED.* adj. [double and hand.] Having two hands.

All things being double-handed, and having the appearances both of truth and falsehood, where our affections have engaged us, we attend only to the former. Glanville, Scorpis.

DOUBLE-HEADED.* adj. [double and head.] Having the flowers growing one to another.

The double rich scarlet consuech is a large double-headed flower, of the richest scarlet colour. Mortimer.

DOUBLE-HEARTED.* adj. [double and heart.] Having a false heart.

So double-hearted hypocrites, so they
Who God forget, shall in their prime decay.

Sandys, Job, p. 14.

To DOUBLE-LOCK. v. a. [double and lock.] To shoot the lock twice; to fasten with double security.

He immediately double-locked his door, and sat down carefully to reading and comparing both his orders. Trotter.

DOUBLE-MEANING.* adj. [double and meaning.] Having two meanings.

He has deceived me, like a double-meaning prophet.

Shakespeare, All's Well, &c.

DOUBLE-MINDED.* adj. [double and mind.] Unsettled; undetermined.

A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. James.

DOUBLE-MOUTHED.* adj. [double and mouth.] Having different mouths.

Fame, if not double-fac'd, is double-mouth'd. Milton, S. A.

DOUBLE-NATURED.* adj. [double and nature.] Having a two-fold nature.

Two kinds of life has double-natur'd man,

And two of death.

Young, Night Th. 7.

DOUBLE-PLEA. n. s. [duplex placitum, Lat.] Is that in which the defendant alleges for himself two several matters, in bar of the action, whereof either is sufficient to effect his desire in debarring the plaintiff. Cowel.

DOUBLE-QUARREL, is a complaint made by any clerk or other to the archbishop of the province, against an inferior ordinary, for delaying justice in some cause ecclesiastical. The effect is, that the archbishop directs his letters, under the authentic seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the said ordinary within nine days to do the justice required, or otherwise to cite him to appear before him or his official: and lastly to intimate to the said ordinary, that if he neither performs the thing enjoined, nor appears at the day assigned, he himself will proceed to perform the justice required. And this seems to be termed a double-quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose petition justice is delayed. Cowel.

To DOUBLE-SHADE. v. a. [double and shade.] To double the natural darkness of the place.

Now began

Night, with her sullen wings, to double-shade
The desert. Milton, P. R.

DOUBLE-SHINING.* adj. [double and shine.] Shining with double lustre.

He was

Among the rest that there did take delight,
To see the sports of double-shining day. Sidney.

DOUBLE-TONGUED.* adj. [double and tongue.] Deceitful; giving contrary accounts of the same thing.

The deacons must be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre. 1 Tim.

For much she fear'd the Tyrians, double-tongued,
And knew the town to Juno's care belong'd. Dryden, Virgil.

To DO'UBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To enlarge any quantity by addition of the same quantity.

Rumour doth double voice, and echo

The numbers of the fear'd. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond;

Double six thousand, and then treble that. Shakespeare.

Our foes too proud the weaker to assail,

Or doubles his dishonour if he fail. Dryden.

This power of repeating or doubling any idea we have of any distance, and adding it to the former, as often as we will, without being ever able to come to any stop or stint, is that which gives us the idea of immensity. Locke.

This was only the value of the silver: there was besides a tenth part of that number of talents of gold, which, if gold was reckoned in a decuple proportion, will just double the sum. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. To contain twice the quantity.

Thus reinforce'd against the adverse fleet,

Still doubling our's, brave Rupert leads the way. Dryden.

3. To repeat; to add.

He saw proud Arcite and fierce Palemon

In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;

Like lightning flam'd their falchions to and fro. Dryden.

4. To add one to another in the same order or parallel.

Thou shalt double the curtain in the tabernacle.

Exodus, xxvi. 9.

5. To fold.

He bought her sermons, psalms, and graces,

And doubled down the useful places. Prior.

6. To just round a headland.

Sailing along the coast, he doubled the promontory of Carthage, yet famous for the ruins of that proud city. Knolles.

Now we have the Cape of Good Hope in sight, the trade-wind is our own, if we can but double it. Dryden.

To DO'UBLE. † v. n.

1. To increase to twice the quantity.

'Tis observed in particular nations, that within the space of three hundred years, notwithstanding all casualties, the number of men double. Burnet's Theory.

2. To enlarge the stake to twice the sum in play.

Throw Egypt's by, and offer in the stead,

Offer—the crown on Berenice's head:

I am resolv'd to double till I win. Dryden, Tyrannick Love.

3. To turn back, or wind in running.

Under the line the sun crosseth the line, and maketh two summers and two winters; but in the skirts of the torrid zone it doubled and goeth back again, and so maketh one long summer. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Who knows which way she points?

Doubling and turning like an hunted hare!

Find out the meaning of her mind who can. Dryden.

4. To play tricks; to use sleights.

Tut, tut, leave pleasing of my honour, Diligence; you double with me.

B. Jonson, Case is altered.

DOUBLE.† n. s.

1. Twice the quantity or number.

If the thief be found let him pay double. Terodius, xxi. 4.

Here's a pot of good double, neighbour: drink, and fear not your man. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. A turn used to escape pursuit; a trick; a shift; an artifice.

He [the hare] outruns the wind; and with what care He cranks and crosses, with a thousand doubles.

Shakespeare, Ven. and Adon.

All their arch-villainies, and all their doubles, Which are more than a hunted hare ere thought on.

Beaumont and Fl. Tamer tamed.

Man is frail;

Convulsions rack his nerves, and cares his breast;

His flying life is chas'd by raving pains,

Through all his doubles, in the winding veins. Blackmore.

These men are too well acquainted with the chase, to be flung off by any false steps or doubles. Addison.

4. In modern times, used for resemblance; as, his or her double, meaning another person extremely like the party.

DOUBLENESS.† n. s. [from double.]

1. The state of being double.

If you think well to carry this as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. Shakespeare.

2. Duplicity; doubleness of heart and tongue. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

As though in this very point other men's confessions in particular beside your own in generality, had not left us marks and traces evident and plain enough to desery doubleness with diversity.

Proceedings against Garnet, &c. (1606,) sign. Aa. b.

Thus had these Nerees caught up in their net,

But to what end I could not thoroughly guess;

Such was my plainness, such their doubleness.

Mir. for Mag. p. 408.

On his seven heads were seven helmets crowned with seven streamers, on which were inscribed, Dissimulation, Delay, Discomfort, Variance, Envy, Detraction, Doubleness.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. ii. 232.

DOUBLER.† n. s. [from double.] He that doubles any thing. Huloet.

DOUBLET.† n. s. [from double.]

1. The inner garment of a man; the waistcoat: so called from being double for warmth, or because it makes the dress double. [I once thought with Dr. Johnson, Mr. Malone says, that doublet meant a waistcoat; but that is not the fact; nor do one of the early instances, which here follow, prove it; though Addison seems to have so used the word. But doublet meant the coat, "the inner garment of a man" "with respect to his cloak, or outer covering. So Lord Capel, at his execution, in March 1648-9, says: "Stay, I must pull off my doublet first, and my waistcoat." So Hudibras's doublet of sturdy buff was not a waistcoat, but a coat, i. e. an outer garment.]

What a pretty thing a man is, when he goes in his doublet and hose, and leaves off his wit! Shakespeare.

His doublet was of stuffy buff,

And though not sword yet cudgel proof. Hudibras.

It is common enough to see a countryman in the doublet and breeches of his great grandfather. Addison on Italy.

They do but imitate ancient wits at best,

As apes our grandsires, in their doublets drest. Pope.

2. Two; a pair.

Those doublets on the sides of his tail seem to add strength to the muscles which move the tail-fins. Grew, Museum.

DOUBLING.* n. s. [from double.] An artifice; a shift; a turn to escape pursuit.

Instruct my quivering pen,
To tell the rest of fortune's doublings then.

Mir. for Mag. p. 485.

At their turns and doublings no men readier, to the right, or to the left. Milton, Ten. of Kings and Magistrates.

So keen thy hunters, and thy scent so strong,
Thy turns and doublings cannot save thee long.

Swift.

When, I say, you see those, or any such like shiftings and doublings in any party dissenting from the government, you may certainly conclude, that 'tis not their conscience sways, but their faction.

Scott, Works, ii. 42.

DOUBLON. n. s. [French.] A Spanish coin containing the value of two pistoles.

DOUBLY.† adv. [from double.]

1. In twice the quantity; to twice the degree.

Young Hollis, on a muse by Mars begot,
Born, Cæsar like, to write and act great deeds,
Impatient to revenge his fatal shot,
His right hand doubly to his left succeeds.

Dryden.

Haply at night he does with horror shun

A widow'd daughter, or a dying son:

His neighbour's offspring he tomorrow sees,

And doubly feels his want in their increase.

Prior.

2. Deceitfully; with a double heart and face.

He is a man that deals doubly, that speaks what he thinks not, or that speaks one thing and thinks another. Huloet.

TO DOUBT. v. n. [doubter, French; dubito, Latin.]

1. To question; to be in uncertainty.

Even in matters divine, concerning some things, we may lawfully doubt and suspend our judgement, inclining neither to one side or other; as, namely, touching the time of the fall both of man and angels. Hooker.

Let no man, while he lives here in the world, doubt whether there is any hell or no, and thereupon live so, as if absolutely there were none. Smith.

I doubt not to make it appear to be a monstrous folly to deride holy things. Tillotson.

2. To question any event, fearing the worst.

Doubting things go ill, often hurts more

Than to be sure they do.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Admitting motion in the heavens to shew

Invalid that which thee to doubt it mov'd. Milton, P. L.

3. Sometimes with of in both the foregoing senses.

Solyman said he had hitherto made war against divers nations, and always had the victory whereof he doubted not now also.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Have I not manag'd my contrivance well,

To try your love and make you doubt of mine?

Dryden.

4. To fear; to be apprehensive of ill.

I doubt there's deep resentment in his mind,

For the late slight his honour suffer'd there.

Otway.

If there were no fault in the title, I doubt there are too many in the body of the work. Baker on Learning.

This is enough for a project, without any name; I doubt more than will be reduced into practice. Swift.

5. To suspect; to have suspicion.

The king did all his courage bend

Against those four which now before him were,

Doubting not who behind him doth attend.

Daniel.

6. To hesitate; to be in suspense; to waver undetermined.

What fear we then, why doubt we to incense

His utmost ire?

Milton, P. L.

At first the tender blades of grass appear,

And buds that yet the blast of Eurus fear,

Stand at the door of life, and doubt to clothe the year.

Dryden.

TO DOUBT.† v. a.

1. To hold questionable; to think uncertain.

2. To think endangered.

DOU

He from the terror of this arm so late
Doubted his empire.

Milton, P. L.

3. To fear; to suspect.

He did ordain the interdicts and prohibitions which we have to make entrance of strangers, which at that time was frequent, doubting novelties and commixture of manners. Bacon.

If they turn not back perverse,
But that I doubt.

Milton, P. L.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the change of it, prefer
A noble life before a long.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

4. To fill with fear; to fright.

I'll tell ye all my fears; one single valour,
The virtues of the valiant Curatach,
More doubts me than all Britain. Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

5. To distrust; to hold suspected.

To teach vain wit a science little known,
To admire superior sense, and doubt their own.

Pope.

DOUBT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Uncertainty of mind; suspense; undetermined state of opinion.

Could any difficulty have been proposed, the resolution would have been as early as the proposal; it could not have had time to settle into doubt. South.

Those who have examined it, are thereby got past doubt in all the doctrines they profess. Locke.

2. Question; point unsettled.

Hippocrates commends the flesh of the wild sow above the tame, and no doubt but the animal is more or less healthy according to the air it lives in. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

'Tis past a doubt,

All Bertram or Parnassus is let out.

Pope.

3. Scruple; perplexity; irresolution.

Our doubts are traitors,
And make us love, by fearing to attempt,
The good we oft might win.

Shakespeare.

4. Uncertainty of condition.

And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have no assurance of thy life. Dent. xxviii. 66.

I'm bound in

To saucy doubts and fears.

Shakespeare.

5. Suspicion; apprehension of ill.

I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; for I stand in doubt of you. Gal. iv. 20.

6. Difficulty objected.

To every doubt your answer is the same,
It so fell out, and so by chance it came.

Blackmore.

7. Dread; horror.

Yet dread of shame and doubt of foul dishonour
Made her not yield.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 8.

8. Difficulty; danger.

[He] forced them, however strong and stout
They were, as well approv'd in many a doubt,
Back to recule.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 47.

DOUBTABLE.* adj. [old Fr. doutable.] What may be doubted. Sherwood.

DOUBTER.† n. s. [from doubt.] One who entertains scruples; one who hangs in uncertainty.

Protagoras was no atheist; he was not a denier, but a doubter of the gods, at the most. Fotherby, Atheism, p. 101.

Such oracles of vain reason have all the doubters and disputers against Religion been since the world began.

Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 263.

DOUBTFUL. adj. [doubt and full.]

1. Dubious; not settled in opinion.

Methinks I should know you, and know this man;
Yet I am doubtful. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Thus they their doubtful consultations dark Ended. Milton, P. L.

2. Ambiguous; not clear in his meaning: as, a doubtful expression.

DOU

3. That about which there is doubt; that which is not yet determined or decided; obscure; questionable; uncertain.

In handling the right of a war, I am not willing to inter-mix matter doubtful with that which is out of doubt; for as in capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; so much more in a judgement upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.

In doubtful cases, reason still determines for the safer side; especially if the case be not only doubtful, but also highly concerning, and the venture be a soul, and an eternity. South.

Themetes first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,

Or so the Trojan destiny required,

Mov'd, that the ramparts might be broken down.

Dryden.

4. Hazardous; of uncertain event.

We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What Heaven's Lord had powerfullest to send Against us from about his throne.

Milton, P. L.

New counsels to debate

What doubtful may ensue.

Milton, P. L.

5. Not secure; not without suspicion.

Our manner is always to cast a doubtful and a more suspicious eye towards that, over which we know we have no real power. Hooker, Dedication.

6. Not confident; not without fear.

With doubtful feet and wavering resolution
I come, still dreading thy displeasure. Milton, S. A.

This was at first resolved

If we were wise, against so great a foe

Contending, and so doubtful what might fall.

Milton, P. L.

7. Partaking different qualities.

Looks

Downcast and damp, yet such wherein appear'd

Some glimpse of joy, which on his countenance cast

Like doubtful hue.

Milton, P. L.

DOUBTFULLY.† adv. [from doubtful.]

1. Dubiously; irresolutely.

2. Ambiguously; with uncertainty of meaning.

Knowing how doubtfully all allegories may be construed, and this book of mine being a continual allegory, I have thought good to discover the general intention.

Spenser on Ireland.

Nor did the goddess doubtfully declare

Her alter'd mind, and alienated care.

Dryden.

3. In a state of dread. See the 4th sense of TO DOUBT, v. a.

With that she waked, full of fearful fright,

And doubtfully dismay'd through that so uncouth sight.

Spenser, F. Q. v. vii. 16.

DOUBTFULNESS.† n. s. [from doubtful.]

1. Dubiousness; suspense; instability of opinion; "flitting of mind."

Hulot.

Though doubtfulness or uncertainty seems to be a medium between certain truth and certain falsehood in our minds, yet there is no such medium in things themselves. Watts.

2. Ambiguity; uncertainty of meaning.

In arguing, the opponent uses as comprehensive and equivocal terms as he can, to involve his adversary in the doubtful-ness of his expressions; and therefore the answerer on his side, makes it his play to distinguish as much as he can. Locke.

Most of his philosophy is, in broken sentences, delivered with much doubtfulness. Baker on Learning.

3. Hazard; uncertainty of event or condition.

DOUBTING.* n. s. [from doubt.] Scruple; perplexity.

Lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting.

1 Tim. ii. 8.

Doubtings, terrors, and disquietings of conscience.

Rep. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 19.

Can we conclude upon Luther's instability, because in a single notion, no way fundamental, an enemy writes that he had some doubtings? Atterbury.

DOUBTINGLY.† adv. [from doubt.] In a doubting manner; dubiously; without confidence.

Whatsoever a man imagineth doubtingly, or with fear, must needs do hurt, if imagination have any power at all; for a man representeth that oftener that he feareth than the contrary.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That life and immortality which was brought to light through the Gospel, was very doubtingly and obscurely spoken of by some of the wisest of the ages before.

Derham, Christo-Theology, p. 14.

DOUBTLESS. adj. [from doubl.] Free from fear; void of apprehension of danger.

Pretty child, sleep doubtless and secure,

That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,

Will not offend thee.

Shakespeare, K. John.

I am doubtless; I can purge

Myself of many I am charg'd withal.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

DOUBTLESS. adv. Without doubt; without question; unquestionably.

Doubtless he would have made a noble knight. Shakespeare.

All their desires, desires, or expectations the Conqueror had no other means to satisfy, but by the estates of such as had appeared open enemies to him, and doubtless many innocent persons suffered in this kind.

Hale, Common Law.

Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's sins to answer for, but their own.

South.

Mountains have been doubtless much higher than they are at present; the rains have washed away the soil, that has left the veins of stones shooting out of them.

Woodward.

Doubtless, oh guest! great laud and praise were mine,

If, after social rites and gifts bestow'd,

I stain'd my hospitable hearth with blood.

Pope, Odyssey.

DOUBTLESSLY.* adv. [from doubtless.] Unquestionably; without doubt.

La. You would stay at home?

El. Lo. Yes, lady,

La. Why you may, and doubtlessly will, when you have debased that your commander is but your mistress.

Beaumont and Fl. Scornful Lady.

DOUCED.* n. s. [from the Fr. douce; Lat. dulcis, sweet. This word is used by Chaucer, which Mr. Tyrwhit imagines to be a corruption of doucete, the name of a musical instrument, in a manuscript poem of Lydgate's. Douced is admitted into some Musical Dictionaries, as another word for dulcimer; which the passage in Chaucer cannot be said to support; as it hardly implies an instrument with strings of wire.] A musical instrument. Obsolete.

Many an other pipe,
That craftily began to pipe,
Both in douced, and eke in rede.

Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 111.

DOUCET.* n. s. [doucet, French.] A custard. This word I find only in Skinner, and in Ainsworth, Dr. Johnson says. Cotgrave uses it under the word flannet, where he calls it "a little custard;" and in the list of diet for K. Charles I. when Duke of York, it repeatedly occurs, usually in conjunction with hart, under the form of doucet. See Archæolog. vol. xv. pp. 3. et seq.

DOUCERS of a Deer.* See DOWSETS.

DOUCFUR.* n. s. [French.] Flattery; a lure; a coaxing temptation.

Blame with indulgence, and correct with doucur.

Ld. Chesterfield.

He has a douceur for Ireland in his pocket.

Burke on a Late State of the Nation.

These are the douceurs by which we are invited to regicide fraternity and friendship.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

DOUCKER. n. s. [colymbus; from To douck, corrupted from To duck.] A bird that dips in the water.

The colymbi, or douckers, or loons, are admirably conformed for diving, covered with thick plumage, and their feathers so slippery that water cannot moisten them.

Ray.

DOVE.* n. s. [dumb, old Teutonic; taub, daub, German; dofva, Swedish; Saxon, duwa, i. e. duva.]

1. A wild pigeon.

So shews a snowy dove trouping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Say, will the falcon, stooping from above,

Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove?

Pope.

Not half so swift the trembling doves can fly;

When the fierce eagle cleaves the liquid sky,

Not half so swiftly the fierce eagle moves,

When through the skies he drives the trembling doves.

Pope.

2. A pigeon.

I have here a dish of doves, that I will bestow upon your worship.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

DOVE-COT.* n. s. [dove and cot.] A small building in which pigeons are bred and kept.

Like an eagle in a dovecot, I

Flutter'd your Volsians in Cprioli;

Alone I did it.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Every salmon usually returns to the same river; as young pigeons, taken out of the same dove-cote, have also been observed to do.

Walton, Angler.

DOVEHOUSE. n. s. [dove and house.] A house for pigeons.

The hawk gets up for protector, and makes havock in the dovehouse.

I. Entangle.

But still the dovehouse obstinately stood.

Dryden.

DOVE-LIKE.* adj. [dove and like.]

1. Like a dove in quality.

Lay by your anger for an hour, and dovelike

Before the holy altars of your helpers

(The all-fear'd gods) bow down your stubborn bodies.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

If ye find these dispositions and actions dovelike, applaud them, as becoming the true spouse of Christ, who is ever like herself, columba perfecta yea perfecta columba a true dove for her quiet innocence.

Bp. Hall, Sermon on the Unity of the Church.

2. Resembling the appearance of a dove.

Thou from the first

Wast present, and with mighty wings outspread

Dovelike sat'st brooding on the vast abyss.

Milton, P. L.

DOVESHIP.* n. s. [from dove.] The quality of a dove.

For us, let our doveship approve itself in meekness of suffering, not in actions of cruelty.

Bp. Hall, Sermon on the Unity of the Church.

DOVETAIL. n. s. [dove and tail.] A form of joining two bodies together, where that which is inserted has the form of a wedge reversed, and therefore cannot fall out.

DOVETAILED.* adj. [from dovetail.] Fastened in the dovetail way.

He made an administration, so checkered and speckled; he put together a piece of joinery, so crossly indented, and whimsically dovetailed.

Burke, Speech on American Taxation.

DOVISH.* adj. [from dove.] Having the innocence of a dove.

Contempt of this world, doveshe simplicity, serpentlike wisdom.

Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546,) sign. G. iv. b.

DOUGH.* n. s. [bah, Saxon; deegh, Dutch, from the Teutiscan thihen, to grow bigger, to rise, as the bakers speak; or it may be the past participle of the Sax. deapian, to moisten or wet, as Mr. Horne Tooke contends.]

1. The paste of bread, or pies, yet unbaked.

DOU

How boldly and how saucily he talk'd,
And how unlike the lump I took him for,
The piece of ignorant dough, he stood up to me,
And mat'd my commands. Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife, &c.
She has found what dough you are made of, and so kneads
you. Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.

When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
Some of their dough was left upon their hands;
For want of souls, and so they made Egyptians. Dryden.

You that from pliant paste would fabrics raise,
Expecting thence to gain immortal praise,
Your knuckles try, and let your sinews know
Their power to knead, and give the form to dough. King.

2. My Cake is Dough. My affair has miscarried;
my undertaking has never come to maturity.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest;
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. Shakspeare.

DO'UGHBAKED.† adj. [dough and baked.] Unfinished; not hardened to perfection; soft.

For when, through tasteless flat humility,
In doughbak'd men, some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he. Donne.

The Lutherans, who by a doughbak'd reformation, striking off from the Romish errors, have rather changed than corrected this grand absurdity. South, Sermon i. 20.

DO'UGHKNEADED.* adj. [dough and kneaded.] Soft;
capable of being kneaded like dough.

He demeans himself in the dull expression so like a dough- kneaded thing, that he has not spirit enough left him so far to look to his syntax, as to avoid nonsense.

Milton, Apology for Smectymn.

DO'UGHINESS.* n. s. [from doughty.] Valour;
bravery.

The Biscayan, who perceived him come in that manner, perceived, by his doughiness, his intention.

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quixote.

DO'UGHTY.† adj. [dohtiz, Saxon; dought, virtue, Dutch. So far Dr. Johnson. To this may be added the Sax. duzud, valour, virtue: the Theotiscan, dugeth, dugatha, dohta, and the Goth. dugr, the same. The Greek ἀγαθός will also be obvious.]

1. Brave; noble; illustrious; eminent. Used of men and things.

Such restless passion did all night torment
The flatt'ning courage of that fairy knight,
Devising how that doughty tournament
With greatest honour he atchieven might. Spenser, F. Q.

He is made as strong as brass, is of brave years too,
And doughty of complexion. Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife, &c.

2. It is now seldom used but ironically, or in burlesque.

If this doughty historian hath any honour or conscience left,
he ought to beg pardon. Stillingfleet.

She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain,
But at her smile the beau reviv'd again. Pope.

DO'UGHY. adj. [from dough.] Unsound; soft; un-hardened.

Your son was misled with a snipt taffata fellow there, whose villainous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour. Shakspeare.

TO DOUSE.† v. a. [duos; but probably it is a cant word formed from the sound, Dr. Johnson says.
But he gives no example. It is, however, no cant word. The learned Hammond employs it in a very serious way, writing the word with a z instead of an s.] To put over head suddenly in the water.

To profess such kindness to immaterial joys, and yet immerse and douse himself in carnal! Hammond, Sermon ii.

I have washed my feet in mire or ink, doused my carnal affections in all the vileness of the world. Hammond, Sermon vii.

TO DOUSE. v. n. To fall suddenly into the water.

DOW

It is no jesting, trivial matter,
To swing i' th' air, or douse in water. Hudibras.

TO DOUSE.* v. a. To strike. See To DOWSE.

TO DOUT.* v. a. [To do out.] To put out. A word, like doff, now little used except in low language; as, dout the candle; dout the fire; which phrases are common in several counties. The commentators on Shakspeare have settled that dout is the true reading in the following passage, and that doubt has been there, and elsewhere in Shakspeare.
as in other old books, misprinted for it.

The dram of base

Doth all the noble substance often dout,

To his own scandal.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

DO'UTER.* n. s. [from dout.] An extinguisher for a candle. Ray, and Bailey.

DO'WABLE.* adj. [from the obsolete verb dow, to give; old Fr. dowé, endowed.] Capable of being dowered.

At the age of nine years she is dowable.

Cowel.

A seisin in law of the husband will be as effectual as a sei-sin in deed, in order to render the wife dowable. Blackstone.

DO'WAGER. n. s. [douairierr, French.]

1. A widow with a jointure.

She lingers my desires,

Like to a stepdame or a dowager,

Long wintering on a young man's revenue.

Shakspeare.

Widows have a greater interest in property than either maids or wives; so that it is as unnatural for a dowager as a freeholder to be an enemy to our constitution. Addison.

2. The title given to ladies who survive their husbands.

Catharine no more

Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager.

And widow to prince Arthur.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

DO'WCETS.* n. s. plur. With hunters, the testicles of a hart or stag.

I gave them

All the sweet morsels, call'd dwets, ears, and dowcets.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

DO'WDY. n. s. An aukward, ill-dressed, inelegant woman.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench: Dido a dowdy;
Cleopatra, a gipsy; Helen and Hero, slidings and harlots.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

The bellam train of lovers use

To enhance the value, and the faults excuse;

And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see

They doat on dowties and deformity.

Dryden.

DO'WDY. adj. Awkward.

No houswifery the dowdy creature knew;

To sum up all, her tongue confess'd the shrew.

Gay.

DO'WER.† } n. s. [dottaire, French.]
DOWERY.

1. That which the wife bringeth to her husband in marriage.

His wife brought in dow'r Cilicia's crown,

And in herself a greater dow'r alone.

Dryden.

His only daughter in a stranger's pow'r;

For very want, he could not pay a dow'r.

Pope.

Rich, though depriv'd of all her little store,

For who can seize fair virtue's better dow'r?

Melmoth.

2. That which the widow possesses. This is a very imperfect definition of this legal dower, as Mr. Mason has observed.

Tenant in dower is, where the husband of a woman is seised of an estate of inheritance and dies: the wife shall have the third part of all lands and tenements whereof he was seised during the coverture, to hold to herself for the term of her natural life.

D O W

His patrimonial territories of Flanders were in dower to his mother-in-law.

Blackstone.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. The gifts of a husband for a wife.

Ask me never so much dowery and gift, and I will give according as you shall say unto me; but give me the damsel to wife.

Gen. xxxiv. 12.

4. Endowment; gift.

What spreading virtue, what a sparkling fire;
How great, how plentiful, how rich a dow'r,
Do'st thou within this dying flesh inspire!

Davies.

I wonder by what dower,
Or patent, you had power
From all to rape a judgement.

Feltham, Answ. to B. Jonson.

DO'WERED. adj. [from dower.] Portioned; supplied with a portion.

Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriendly, new-adapted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leave her.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

DO'WERLESS. † adj. [from dower.] Wanting a fortune; unportioned.

Thy dow'rless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
Is queen of us, and ours, and our fair France.
Come to these groves, and these life-breathing glades,
Ye friendless orphans, and ye dow'rless maids!

Shakespeare.
Sir W. Jones, Solyma.

DOWLE. n. s. [perhaps from wool. See WOOL.]

Mr. Horne Tooke vehemently contends, against the commentators on Shakespeare, that this word is nothing more than the past participle of deal, i. e. a piece, a portion. They shew, that it is a feather, with Bailey; who also calls it the single particles of the down.

One dowle that's in my plume.
There is a certain shell-fish in the sea, called Pinna, that bears a mossy dowl, or wool, whereof cloth was spun and made.

Shakespeare, Tempest.
Humane Industry, &c. Hist. of Man. Arts, 1661.

DO'WLAS. n. s. A coarse kind of linen.

Dowlas, filthy dowlas; I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made bolsters of them.

Shakespeare.

DOWN. n. s. [duun, Danish.]

1. Soft feathers.

Virtue is the roughest way;

But proves at night a bed of down.

Wotton.

Leave, leave, fair bride! your solitary bed,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nurseth sadness; and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint.

Downe.

We tumble on our down, and court the blessing
Of a short minute's slumber.

Denham, Scylla.

A tender weakly constitution is very much owing to the use of down beds.

Locke.

2. Any thing that soothes or mollifies.

Thou bosom softness! down of all my cares!
I could recline my thoughts upon this breast
To a forgetfulness of all my griefs,
And yet be happy.

Southern, Oroonoko.

3. Soft wool, or tender hair.

I love my husband still;
But love him as he was when youthful grace,
And the first down began to shade his face.
On thy thin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man.

Dryden.

Prior.

4. The soft fibres of plants which wing the seeds.

Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind, sheweth a wind at hand; as when feathers, or down of thistles, fly to and fro in the air.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Like scatter'd down by howling Boreas blown,
By rapid whirlwinds from his mansion thrown.

Sandys.

DOWN. † n. s. [duun, Saxon; dune, Frise, a hill.

This is the etymology given by Dr. Johnson. The Celt. and old Fr. dun may be added. In the earlier editions of his Dictionary, Dr. Johnson had said, that the word "is used now as if derived from the adverb; for it means, 1st, a large open plain or valley; and 2d, a hill or rising ground, which sense is very rare." He saw the impropriety of this statement, and converted the two definitions into that single one which has since stood in all the editions, viz. "a large open plain; properly, a flat on the top of a hill." Mr. Horne Tooke, however, long afterwards ungenerously commented on the mistake, without adverting to the rectification. Div. of Parley, i. 446. Our old lexicography thus defines the present word, Barret in V. Down. "Downs or plains, where corn cannot grow, bare earth, &c." A large open plain: properly a flat on the top of a hill.

D O W

On the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A hasten'd hare from greely greyhound go.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing severally seven drams in the air, the balance in the water weigheth only four drams and forty-one grains, and abate of the weight in the air two drams and nineteen grains: the balance kept the same depth in the water.

Bacon.

2. A small quantity, in a kind of proverbial sense.

One loving hour

For many years of sorrow can dispense;

A drum of sweet is worth a pound of sour.

Spenser, F. Q.

No drum of judgement with thy force is join'd;

Thy body is of profit, and my mind.

Dryden, Fables.

3. Such a quantity of distilled spirits as is usually drank at once.

I could do this, and that with no rash potion,

But with a ling'ring drum, that should not work

Maliciously like poison.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Every drum of brandy, every pot of ale that you drink, raiseth your character.

Swift.

4. Spirits; distilled liquors.

A second sec, by meeker manners known,

And modest as the maid that sips alone;

From the strong fate of drums if thou get free,

Another Durfy, Ward! shall sing in thee.

Pope.

50. To DRAW over. To persuade to revolt; to induce to change a party.

Some might be brought into his interests by money, others drawn over by fear. Addison on the War.

One of differing sentiments would have drawn Luther over to his party. Atterbury.

51. To DRAW out. To protract; to lengthen.

He must not only die the death,
But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
To ling'ring sufferance. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
Notes with many a winding bout
Of linked sweetness long drawn out. Milton, L. Allegro.

52. To DRAW out. To beat out, as is done to hot iron.

Batter a piece of iron out, or as workmen call it, draw it out, till it comes to its breadth. Moxon.
Virgil has drawn out the rules of tillage and planting into two books, which Hesiod has dispatched in half a one. Addison.

53. To DRAW out. To extract; to pump out by insinuation.

Philoclea found her, and, to draw out more, said she, I have often wondered how such excellencies could be. Sidney.

54. To DRAW out. To induce by motive.

Whereas it is concluded, that the retaining diverse things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can shew that they have done ill: What needed this wrest to draw out from us an accusation of foreign churches? Hooker.

D R A

55. To DRAW out. To call to action; to detach for service; to range; to muster.

*Draws out a file, pick man by man,
Such who dare die, and dear will sell their death. Dryden.
Next of his men, and ships, he makes review,
Draws out the best and ablest of the crew. Dryden, Æn.
The numerous rabble was drawn out.
Of several countries round about. Hudibras, i. ii.*

56. To range in battle.

Let him desire his superiour officer, that the next time he is draws out the challenger may be posted near him. Collier.

57. To DRAW up. To form in order of battle.

*So Muley-Zeydan found us
Drawn up in battle to receive the charge. Dryden.
58. To DRAW up. To form in writing; to compose in a formulary manner.*

To make a sketch, or a more perfect model of a picture, is, in the language of poets, to draw up the scenery of a play. Dryden.

A paper may be drawn up, and signed by two or three hundred principal gentlemen. Swift.

To DRAW.† v. n.

1. To perform the office of a beast of draught.

*An heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke. Deut. xxi. 3.
Think every bearded fellow, that's but yok'd,
May draw with you. Shakspeare, Othello.*

2. To act as a weight.

They should keep a watch upon the particular bias in their minds, that it may not draw too much. Addison, Spect.

3. To contract; to shrink.

*I have not yet found certainly, that the water itself, by mixture of ashes, or dust, will shrink or draw into less room.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.*

4. To advance; to move; to make progression any way.

*You were Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda: Oh, omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose. Shakspeare.
Draw ye near hither, all the chief of the people. Sam. xiv. 38.*

*He ended; and th' archangel soon drew nigh,
Not in his shape celestial, but as man
Clad to meet man. Milton, P. L.*

They returned to the camp where the king was, and the Scots drew a little back to a more convenient post for their residence. Clarendon.

Ambitious meteors! how willing they are to set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun. Dryden, Don Sebast.

*Now nearer to the Stygian lake they draw,
Whom from the shore the surly boatman saw,
Observ'd their passage through the shady wood,
And mark'd their near approaches to the flood. Dryden.*

*And now I faint with grief; my fate draws nigh:
In all the pride of blooming youth I die. Addison, Ovid.*

5. To draw together; to be collected; to come together.

*They muster there, and round the centre swarm,
And draw together in a globous form. Blackmore.*

6. To adhere; to cleave; to unite in concord and interest.

For this thing a man shall leave his father and mother, and shall draw to his wife. Wickliffe, St. Mark, x.

7. To draw a sword.

*For his sake
Did I expose myself, pure; for his love
Drew to defend him, when he was beset. Shakspeare.*

8. To practise the act of delineation.

So much insight into perspective, and skill in drawing, as will enable him to represent tolerably on paper any thing he sees, should be got. Locke.

9. To take a card out of the pack; to take a lot.

He has drawn a black, and smiles. Dryden.

10. To make a sore run by attraction.

11. To DRAW off. To retire; to retreat.

D R A

When the engagement proves unlucky, the way is to draw off by degrees, and not to come to an open rupture. Collier.

12. To DRAW on. To advance; to approach.

The fatal day draws on, when I must fall. Dryden.

13. To DRAW up. To form troops into regular order.

The lord Bernard, with the king's troops, seeing there was no enemy left on that side, drew up in a large field opposite to the bridge. Clarendon.

14. To DRAW retains, through all its varieties of use, some shade of its original meaning, to pull. It expresses an action gradual, or continuous, and leisurely. Thus we forge a sword by blows, but we draw it by a continued line. We pour liquor quick, but we draw it in a continued stream. We force compliance by threats, but we draw it by gradual prevalence. We write a letter with whatever haste, but we draw a bill with slow scrupulosity.

DRAW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of drawing.

2. The lot or chance drawn.

DRA'WABLE.* adj. [from draw.] Capable of being drawn.

By a magick night.

Drawable here and there.

More, Song of the Soul.

DRA'WBACK.† n. s. [draw and back.] Money paid back for ready payment, or any other reason.

In poundage and drawbacks I lose half my rent;

Whatever they give me, I must be content. Swift.

Of these encouragements what are called drawbacks seem to be the most reasonable. To allow the merchant to draw back upon exportation either the whole or a part of whatever excise or inland duty is imposed upon domestic industry, can never occasion the exportation of a greater quantity of goods than what would have been exported had no duty been imposed. A. Smith, Wealth of Nations, iv. 4.

DRA'WBRIDGE. n. s. [draw and bridge.] A bridge made to be lifted up, to hinder or admit communication at pleasure.

Half the buildings were raised on the continent, and the other half on an island, continued together by a drawbridge.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

DRAWEE.* n. s. [from draw.] One on whom a bill of exchange is drawn.

The person who draws this letter is called in law the drawer, and he to whom it is written the drawee. Blackstone.

DRA'WER.† n. s. [from draw.]

1. One employed in procuring water from the well.

From the hewer of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water.

Deut. xxix. 11.

2. One whose business is to draw liquors from the cask.

Stand in some bye room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave me the sugar. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Let the drawers be ready with wine and fresh glasses;

Let the waiters have eyes, though their tongues must be tied.

B. Jonson, Tavern Academy.

A man of fire is a general enemy to all waiters, and makes the drawers abroad, and his footmen at home, know he is not to be provoked. Tattler.

3. That which has the power of attraction; that which incites.

I usher

Such an unexpected dainty bit for breakfast,

As yet I never cook'd: tis not botargo, —

Nor our Italian delicate, oil'd mushrooms;

And yet a drawer-on too.

*Massinger, Guardian.
Love is a flame, and therefore we say beauty is attractive, because physicians observe that fire is a great drawer. Swift.*

D R A

4. A box in a case, out of which it is drawn at pleasure.
There may be other and different intelligent beings, of whose faculties he has as little knowledge, or apprehension, as a worm, shut up in one drawer of a cabinet, hath of the senses or understanding of a man. Locke.

We will suppose the China dishes taken off; and a drawer of medals supplying their room. Addison on Medals.

5. One who draws a bill of exchange. See DRAWEE.

6. [In the plural.] The lower part of a man's dress.
The Maltese harden the bodies of their children, by making them go stark naked, without shirt or drawers, till they are ten years old. Locke.

DRAWING. n. s. [from draw.] Delineation; representation.

They random drawings from your sheets shall take,
And of one beauty many blunders make. Pope.

DRAWING-ROOM. † n. s. [draw and room.]

1. The room in which company assembles at court.

What you heard of the words spoken of you in the drawing-room was not true: the sayings of princes are generally as ill related as the sayings of wits. Pope.

2. The company assembled there, Dr. Johnson says; which, as Mr. Malone also observes, is not quite correct; for a drawing-room means also the room, in which company, or a private family, assemble in a private house. The word is an abbreviation of withdrawing-room; the room into which company retire; in which sense the phrase is old.

[After dinner] queene Aurelia sent for the chosen company, who [were] placed in the drawing chamber. Whetstone's Heptameron, 1582.

In winter they are an incumbrance to the playhouse, and the ballast of the drawing-room. Lord Halifax.

- TO DRAWL. † v. n. [Teut. draelen, to delay.] To utter any thing in a slow, driveling way.

The nimble dactyl striving to outgo
The drawling spondees, pacing it below. Sp. Hall, Sat. i. 6.
I never heard such a drawling, affecting rogue. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Then mount the clerks, and in one lazy tone
Through the long heavy page drawl on. Pope.

- TO DRAWL.  v. a.* To consume in a driveling way; with out.

Thus, sir, does she constantly drawl out her time, without either profit or satisfaction; and, while I see my neighbours' wives helping in the shop, and almost earning as much as their husbands, I have the mortification to find, that mine is nothing but a dead weight upon me. Idler, No. 15.

- DRAWL.  n. s.* [from the verb.] A protracted modulation of the voice.

This, while it added . . . intelligibility, would take from psalmody its tedious drawl, and certainly leave it sufficient gravity. Mason on Ch. Music, p. 223.

DRAWN. † participle from draw.

1. Collected.

An army was drawn together of near six thousand horse. Clarendon.

2. Pulled.

So lofty was the pile a Parthian bow,
With vigour drawn, must put the shaft below. Dryden, Fab.

3. Equal; where each party takes his own stake.

If we make a drawn game of it, or procure but moderate advantages, every British heart must tremble. Addison.

4. With a sword drawn.

What, art thou drawn among these heartless hinds? Shakespeare.

5. Open; put aside, or unclosed.

A curtain drawn, presented to our view
A town besieged. Dryden, Tyr. Love.

6. Eviscerated. [This may be doubted in the example.]

There is no more faith in thee than in a stoned prune; no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox. Shakespeare.

7. Induced as from some motive.

D R E

The Irish will better be drawn to the English, than the English to the Irish government. Spencer on Ireland.
As this friendship was drawn together by fear on both sides, so it was not like to be more durable than was the fear. Hayward.

DRAWWELL. n. s. [draw and well.] A deep well; a well out of which water is drawn by a long cord.

The first conceit, tending to a watch, was a drawwell: the people of old were wont only to let down a pitcher with a handcord, for as much water as they could easily pull up. Grew.

DRAY. † } n. s. [brag, Saxon. Our word
DRAYCART. } means originally, and is so defined by Huloet and Barret, a sled drawn without wheels.]
The car on which beer is carried.

Let him be brought into the field of election upon his draycart, and I will meet him there in a triumphant chariot. Addison.

When drays bound high, then never cross behind,
Where bubbling yeast is blown by gusts of wind. Gay.

DRAYHORSE. n. s. [dray and horse.] A horse which draws a dray.

This truth is illustrated by a discourse on the nature of the elephant and the drayhorse. Tatler.

DRAYMAN. n. s. [dray and man.] One that attends a dray or cart.

A brace of draymen bid God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee. Shakespeare.

Have not cobblers, draymen, and mechanicks governed as well as preached? Nay, have not they by preaching come to govern? South.

DRAYPLOUGH. n. s. [dray and plough.] A plough of a particular kind.

The drayplough is the best plough in winter for miry clays. Mortimer, Husbandry.

DRA'ZEL. n. s. [perhaps corrupted from drossel, the scum or dross of human nature; or from drossesse, French, a whore] A low, mean, worthless wretch. See DROTCHEL.

As the devil uses witches,
To be their cully for a space,
That, when the time's expir'd, the drazels
For ever may become his vassals. Hudibras.

DREAD. † n. s. [bræd, Saxon; Iccl. and Goth. thra, sadness. The Prompt. Parv. and Ort. Vocab. define this substantive, dreadfulness. It is not often used in the plural. "Whose dreads in his behalf were rarely so deposited." Fell, Life of Hammond.]

1. Fear; terrour; affright; horror either felt or impressed.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare, X. Lear.
Let not thy dread make me afraid. Job, xiii. 21.

Was ever any wicked man free from the stings of a guilty conscience, from the secret dread of divine displeasure, and of the vengeance of another world? Tillotson.

If our fears can be awakened with the dread of evil, he has armed his laws with the terrour of eternal misery. Rogers.

2. Habitual fear; awe.

The fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast of the earth. Gen. ix. 2.

3. The person or thing feared; the cause of fear.

Let him be your dread. Isaiah, viii. 13.
To thee, of all our good the sacred spring;
To thee, our dearest dread; to thee our softer king. Prior.

DREAD. adj. [bræd, Saxon.]

1. Terrible; frightful.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond' proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakespeare, Rich. II.

D R E

It cannot be, but thou hast murder'd him;
So should a murderer look, so dread, so grim. Shakespeare.
To be expos'd against the warring winds;
To stand against the deep dread boited thunder. Shakespeare.

Terrour seiz'd the rebel host,
When, coming towards them, so dread they saw
The bottom of the mountains upward turn'd. Milton, P. L.

2. Awful; venerable in the highest degree.

Thou, attended gloriously from heav'n,
Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send
The summoning archangels to proclaim Thy dread tribunal. Milton, P. L.

From this descent
Celestial virtues rising will appear
More glorious and more dread than from no fall. Milton.

3. This seems to be the meaning of that controverted phrase dread majesty. Some of the old acts of parliament are said in the preface to be metuendissimi regis, our dread sovereign's.

To DREAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fear in an excessive degree.

You may despise that which terrifies others, and which yet all, even those who most dread it, must in a little time encounter. Wake.

To DREAD. v. n. To be in fear.

Dread not, neither be afraid of them. Deut. i. 8.

DREADABLE. * adj. [from dread.] To be dreaded or feared.

How every man and woman ought to cease of their sinnes at the sounding of a dreadable horn.

Kalendar of Shepherds, cap. li.

I have suspended much of my pity towards the great dreaders of popery. Swift.

DREADFUL. † adj. [dread and full.]

1. Terrible; frightful; formidable.

The rigid interdiction which resounds
Yet dreadful in mine ear. Milton, P. L.

The still night,
Accompanied with dumps and dreadful gloom. Milton, P. L.

Thy love, still arm'd with fate,
Is dreadful as thy hate. Graunville.

2. Awful; venerable.

How dreadful is this place. Genesis, xxviii. 17.

3. Full of fear. Obsolete.

Dreadful of danger that might him betide
She oft and oft advis'd him to refrain
From chase of greater beasts. Spenser, F. Q.

DREADFULNESS. n. s. [from dreadful.] Terribleness; frightfulness.

It may justly serve for matter of extreme terrour to the wicked, whether they regard the dreadfulness of the day in which they shall be tried, or the quality of the judge by whom they are to be tried. Hakewill on Providence.

DREADFULLY. adv. [from dreadful.] Terribly; frightfully.

Not sharp reſenge, nor hell itſelf can find
A fiercer torment than a guilty mind,
Which day and night doth dreadfully accuſe,
Condemns the wretch, and ſtill the charge renews. Dryden.

DREADLESS. adj. [from dread.] Fearless; un-affrighted; intrepid; unshaken; undaunted; free from terror.

Dreadless, ſaid he, that ſhall I ſoon declare;
It was complain'd, that thou had'ſt done great tort Unto an aged woman. Spenser, F. Q.

All night the dreadless angel, unpursu'd
Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way. Milton, P. L.

DREADLESSNESS. n. s. [from dreadless.] Fearlessness, intrepidity; undauntedness.

Zelmaue, to whom danger then was a cauſe of dreadleſſneſs, all the compoſition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with ſwiftness of deſire croſſed him. Sidney.

DREAM. † n. s. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Meric Casaubon, with more ingenuity than truth, from drōma τὸ δράμα, the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a representation of something which does not really happen. This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram.

Συνην πῶς ὁ βίῃ καὶ παλύνει ἡ μάθη παλίστιν,

Τὴν σπουδὴν μεταδίδει ἡ φέρε τὰς ἀδυνας. Anthologia.

So far Dr. Johnson. The word might be as well referred to the Greek drōma, to run, to pass swiftly, to post away: which indeed aptly suits a dream;
or it may be, by a metathesis, the Lat. dormire, to sleep.]

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

In dreams they fearful precipices tread;
Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore. Dryden.
Glorious dreams stand ready to restore
The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dryden.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundless suspicion.

Let him keep
A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,
Each buz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
He may enguard his dotage. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To DREAM. v. n. preter. dreamed, or ureamt. [from the noun.]

1. To have the representation of something in sleep.

Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilst the outward senses are stopped, not suggested by any external objects, or known occasion, nor under the rule or conduct of the understanding.
Locke.

I dreamed that I was conveyed into a wide and boundless plain. Tatler.

2. It has of before the noun.

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
But, being awake, I do despise my dream. Shakespeare.

I have nightly since
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakespeare, Coriol.

3. To think; to imagine.

These boys know little they are sons to th' king,
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shakespeare.
He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that first orb more than a transient crust. Burnet, Theory.

He little dream'd how nigh he was to cure,
Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the snare. Dryden.

4. To think idly.

They dream on in a constant course of reading, but not digesting. Locke.
I began to dream of nothing less than the immortality of my work. Smith.

5. To be sluggish; to idle.

Why does Anthony dream out his hours,
And tempts not fortune for a nobler day? Dryden.

To DREAM. v. a. To see in a dream.

The Macedon, by Jove's decree,
Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolomy.
At length in sleep their bodies they compose,
And dreamt the future fight, and early rose. Dryden.

DREAMER. † n. s. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who has fancies in his sleep.

The vision said, and vanish'd from his sight;
The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fright.
If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be wakened into a certainty. Locke.

2. An idle fanciful man; a visionary.

Sometimes he awakes me,
With telling of the moldwarp, and the ant,
Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shakespeare.

3. Formerly, an interpreter of dreams.

They said one to another, Behold this dreamer [in the margin, master of dreams] cometh. Gen. xxxvii. 19.

What labour and what travel have I run through,
And through what cities to absolve this riddle;
Diviners, dreamers, school-men, deep magicians,
All have I try'd. Beaum. and Fl. Women Pleased.

4. A mope; a man lost in wild imagination; a reverer.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flowers;
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie and gnaws the streamer. Prior.

5. A sluggard; an idler.

DREAMFUL* adj. [from dream.] Proper, as the opposite to dreamless. Hulot.

DREAMINGLY* adv. [from the part. dreaming.] Sluggishly; negligently. Hulot.
To speak dreamingly. Cockeram in V. Draule.

DREAMLESS* adj. [from dream.] Free from dreams. The savages of Mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameless and dreamless. Camden, Rem.

DREAR* adj. [dreapuz, Saxon. dreary.] Mournful; dismal; sorrowful;
In urns and altars round,
A drear and dying sound
Affrights the flames at their service quaint. Milton, Ode Nativ.

DREAR. n. s. Dread; terror.

The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger;
The hoarse night-raven, trump of doleful drear. Spenser, F. Q.

DREARHEAD. n. s. [from dreary.] Horror; dismalness: a word now no longer in use.

That shortly from the shape of womanhood,
Such as she was when Pallas she attempted,
She grew to hideous shape of drearhead,
Pined with grief of folly late repented. Spenser, F. Q.

DREARILY* adv. [from dreary.] Dreadfully; terribly.

But oft, when ye count you freed from feare,
Comes the breme winter with chamfred brows,
Full of wrinkles and frosty furrowes,
Drearily shooting his stormy darte,
Which cruddles the blood, and pricks the harte. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

DREARIMENT. n. s. [from dreary.]

1. Sorrow; dismalness; melancholy.

I teach the wood and waters to lament
Your doleful dreariment. Spenser, Epithal.

2. Horror; dread; terror. This word is now obsolete.

Almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,
To wreak the guilt of mortal sins is bent;
Hurls forth his thundering dart with deadly food,
Insoild in flames and smouldring dreariment. Spenser, F. Q.

DREARINESS* n. s. [Sax. dreapuznyffe.] Dismalness; sorrow. Manning.

DREARY* adj. [dreapuz, Saxon.]

1. Sorrowful; distressful.

The messenger of death, the ghastly owl,
With dreary shrieks did also yell;
And hungry wolves continually did howl
At her abhorred face, so horrid and so foul. Spenser, F. Q.

2. Gloomy; dismal; horrid.
Obscure they went through dreary shades, that led Along the vast dominions of the dead. Dryden.

D R E

Towns, forests, herds and men promiscuous drown'd,
With one great death deform the dreary ground. Prior.

3. This word is scarcely used but in poetical diction.

DREDGE* n. s. [To dredch, in Chaucer, is to delay; perhaps a net so often stopped may be called from this, Dr. Johnson says. But his remark is foreign to the purpose. A dredge is nothing more than a drag, and that is Gothick. See DRAG and DRAGNET.] A kind of net.

For oysters they have a peculiar dredge, a thick, strong net, fastened to three spills of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern, gathering whatsoever it meeteth lying in the bottom. Carew.

To DREDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To gather with a dredge.

The oysters dredged in the Lyne, find a welcome acceptance. Carew.

DREDGE* n. s. This word is used in some parts of England, as in Norfolk and Essex, for a mixture of oats and barley sown together.

They reap every one his corn in the field, [in the margin, mingled corn or dredge.] Job, xxiv. 6.

To DREDGE* v. a. [from dredge, mixed corn.] To scatter flour on any thing which is roasting. Still a term in cookery.

My spice-box, gentlemen;
And put in some of this, the matter's ended;
Dredge you a dish of plovers; there's the art on't. Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.

Burnt figs, dredged with meal and powdered sugar. Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

DREDGER* n. s. [from dredge.]

1. One who fishes with a dredge.
2. An instrument to scatter flour on meat while roasting. Ash.

To DREG* v. a. [Sax. dreapah, dreogan.] To suffer; to endure. North.

DREGGINESS. n. s. [from dreggy.] Fulness of dregs or lees; foulness; muddiness; feculence.

DREGGISH* adj. [from dregs.] Foul with lees; feculent.

To give a strong taste to this dreggish liquor, they fling in an incredible deal of broom or hops, whereby small beer is rendered equal in mischief to strong. Harvey on Consumptions.

DREGGY* adj. [from dregs.] Containing dregs; consisting of dregs; muddy; feculent.

These numerous veins, such is the curious frame,
Receive the pure insinuating stream;
But no corrupt or dreggy parts admit,
To form the blood, or feed the limbs unfit. Blackmore.

Ripe grapes, being moderately pressed, their juice may, without much dreggy matter, be squeezed out. Boyle.

DREGS* n. s. [drejsten, Sax.; dreggian, Icelandic; Su. Goth. dregg. This word is rarely found in the singular. But it is once used by Shakspeare. "What too curious dreg espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?"]

1. The sediment of liquors; the lees; the grounds; the feculence.

Fain would we make him author of the wine,
If for the dregs we could some other blame. Davies.

They often tread destruction's horrid path,
And drink the dregs of the revenger's wrath. Sandys.

We from the dregs of life think to receive,
What the first sprightly running could not give. Dryden.

Such run on poets in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain. Pope.

2. Any thing by which purity is corrupted.
The king by this journey purged a little the dregs and leaven of the northern people, that were before in no good affections towards him. Bacon.

D R E

3. Dross; sweepings; refuse.

Hear n's favourite thou, for better fate's design'd,
Than we the dross and rubbish of mankind. Dryden.
What diffidence we must be under, whether God will regard our sacrifice, when we have nothing to offer him but the dross and refuse of life, the days of loathing and satiety, and the years in which we have no pleasure. Rogers.

To DREIN. v. n. [See DRAIN.] To empty. The same with drain: spelt differently perhaps by chance.

She is the sluice of her lady's secrets: 'tis but setting her mill agoing, and I can drein her of them all. Congreve.

'Tis drein'd and empty'd of its poison now;

A cordial draught. Southern.

To DRENCH.† v. a. [Sax. dræncean; Su. Goth.
draenca, to immerse.]

1. To wash; to soak; to steep.

Our garments being as they were drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness and glosses. Shakspeare.

To-day deep thoughts resolve with me to drench

In mirth; that after no repenting draws. Milton, Sonnet.

Now dam the ditches, and the floods restrain;

Their moisture has already drench'd the plain. Dryden.

2. To saturate with drink or moisture: in an ill sense.

In swinish sleep

Their drenched natures lie, as in a death. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Too oft, alas! has mutual hatred drench'd

Our swords in native blood. Philips.

3. To physick by violence.

If any of your cattle are infected, speedily let both sick and well blood, and drench them. Mortimer, Husbandry.

DRENCH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A draught; a swill: by way of abhorrence or con- tempt

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench

Of that forgetful lake benum not still,

That in our proper motion we ascend. Milton, P. L.

2. Physick for a brute.

A drench is a potion or drink prepared for a sick horse, and composed of several drugs in a liquid form. Farrier's Dict.

Harry, says she, how many hast thou kill'd to-day? Give my roan horse a drench, says he; and answers, fourteen, an hour after. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

A drench of wine has with success been us'd,
And through a horn the generous juice infus'd. Dryden.

3. Physick that must be given by violence.

Physicians, some with glisters;

Some with lettuce-caps; some, posset-drinks; some, pills;

Twenty consulting here about a drench.

Beaum. and Fl. Thier. and Theod.

Their counsels are more like a drench, that must be poured down, than a draught which must be leisurely drank, if I liked it. King Charles.

4. A channel of water.

DRENCHER. n. s. [from drench.]

1. One that dips or steeps any thing.

2. One that gives physick by force. Dict.

DRENT.† part. Probably corrupted from drenched, to make a proverbial rhyme, to brent or burnt,
Dr. Johnson says, in the first of the two passages cited from Spenser. But it is the old regular past participle of drench, and is adopted by Spenser from Chaucer.

What flames, quoth he, when I the present see,

In danger rather to be drent than brent? Spenser, F. Q.

Nor so great wonder and astonishment

Did the most chaste Penelope possess,

To see her lord, that was reported drent. Spenser, F. Q.

To DRESS.† v. a. [dresser, French; trasio, old Welsh, to dress, to deck.]

D R E

1. To clothe; to invest with clothes.

The first request

He made, was, like his brothers, to be dress'd;

And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest. Dryden.

2. To clothe pompously or elegantly. It is used with up and out to enforce it.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beautifully; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed; for then they paint and smile, and dress themselves up in tinsel and glass gems and counterfeit imagery.

Taylor.

Few admir'd the native red and white,

Till poets dress'd them up to charm the sight. Dryden.

Lollia Paulina wore, in jewels, when dress'd out, the value of three hundred twenty-two thousand nine hundred and sixteen pounds thirteen shillings and four pence. Arbuthnot.

3. To adorn; to deck; to embellish; to furnish.

Where was a fine room in the middle of the house, handsomely dress'd up, for the commissioners to sit in. Clarendon.

Skill is used in dressing up power with all the splendour absoluteness can add to it. Locke.

The mind loses its natural relish of real truth, and is reconcil-ed insensibly to any thing that can be dress'd up, into any faint appearance of it. Locke.

4. To cover a wound with medicaments.

In time of my sickness another chirurgeon dress'd her.

Wiscman.

5. To curry; to rub: a term of the stable.

Our infirmities are so many, that we are forced to dress and tend horses and asses, that they may help our needs.

Bp. Taylor.

Three hundred horses, in high stables fed,
Stood ready, shining all, and smoothly dress'd. Dryden, Æn.

6. To break or teach a horse. A term of horseman- ship.

A steed

Well mouth'd, well-managed, which himself did dress;

His aid in war, his ornament in peace. Dryden.

7. To rectify; to adjust.

And the Lord God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it, and to keep it. Gen. ii. 15.

Adam! well may we labour still to dress

This garden; still to tend plant, herb, and flow'r.

Milton, P. L.

Well must the ground be digg'd and better dress'd,

New soil to make and meliorate the rest. Dryden.

8. To prepare for any purpose.

In Orkney they dress their leather with roots of tormentil, instead of bark. Mortimer, Husbandry.

9. To trim; to fit any thing for ready use.

When he dresseth the lamps he shall burn incense. Ex. xxx.

When you dress your young hops, cut away roots or sprigs.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

10. To prepare victuals for the table.

He spared to take of his own flock, and of his own herd, to dress for the wayfaring man. 2 Sam. xii. 4.

Thus the voluptuous youth, bred up to dress

For his fat grandsire some delicious mess,

In feeding high his tutor will surpass,

An heir apparent of the gourmand race. Dryden

To DRESS.* v. n.

1. To pay particular regard to dress: as, to dress for dinner, to dress for the opera; to dress for a ball.

My hair I'd powder in the women's way,

And dress, and talk of dressing more than they.

Bramston's Man of Taste.

2. In military language, to keep the body in such a relative position, as to contribute towards, and make a part of, an exact continuity of line, upon what- ever front, or in whatever shape, the battalion may be formed. Soldiers dress by one another in ranks, and the body collectively dresses by some given ob- ject. James, Military Dict.

D R I

DRESS. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; garment; habit.

Dresses laughed at in our forefathers' wardrobes or pictures, when, by the circulation of time and vanity, they are brought about, we think becoming. Gov. of the Tongue.

A robe obscene was o'er his shoulders thrown,
A dress by filices and furies worn alone. Pope, Statius.

2. Splendid clothes; habit of ceremony.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher. Richardson, Clariissa.

3. The skill of adjusting dress.

The men of pleasure, dress, and gallantry. Pope.

DRESSER.† n. s. [from dress.]

1. One employed in putting on the clothes and adorning the person of another.

Presently the tailors, the tirewomen, the gorgetmakers, the seamstresses, the chambermaids, the dressers, and all that wretched crew of obsequious attendants, are condemned as Antichristians, and only fit to wait upon the whore of Babylon. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hand. p. 64.

She hurries all her hand-maids to the task;
Her head alone will twenty dressers ask. Dryden, Jur.

2. One employed in regulating, trimming, or adjusting any thing.

Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none. St. Luke, xiii. 7.

3. The bench in a kitchen on which meat is drest or prepared for the table.

'Tis burnt, and so is all the meat:
What dogs are these? Where is the rascal cook?
How durst you, villains, bring it from the dresser,
And serve it thus to me that love it not? Shakespeare.

A simple dresser in her hall she had,
On which full many a slender meal she made. Dryden.

When you take down dishes, tip a dozen upon the dresser.
Swift, Direct. to the Cook.

DRESSING.† n. s. [from dress.]

1. Attire; ornament; habiliment; outward appearance.

A dressing I saw a jeweller's wife wear, who indeed was a jewel herself. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

So may Angelo,
In all his dressings, characts, titles, forms,
Be an archvillain. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

2. The application made to a sore.

The second day after we took off the dressings, and found an eschar made by the cathartick. Wiseman on Tumours.

3. Manual labour upon ground.

Every year you shall give them three dressings or half diggings. Evelyn, ii. i. § 3.

DRESSY.* adj. [from dress.] Distinguished by dress; affecting great taste and elegance in dress. A modern word, frequent in conversation.

DRESSINGROOM. n. s. [dress and room.] The room in which clothes are put on.

Latin books might be found every day in his dressingroom, if it were carefully searched. Swift.

DREST. park [from dress.]

In flow'ry wreaths the royal virgin drest
His bending horns, and kindly clapt his breast. Addison.

TO DRIB.† v. a. [contracted from dribble.] To crop; to cut off; to defalcate. A cant word, Dr. Johnson says; but why, I am at a loss to learn. It is true that, in the solitary citation which he brings from Dryden, the word may wear the appearance of a vulgarism. But it is a serious word of more than a century before Dryden's time.

Not at the first sight, nor yet with a dribbed shot,
Love gave the wound. Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

Merchants gains come short of half the mart,
For he who drives their bargains, drips a part. Dryden.

DRIB.* n. s. [for drip.] A drop.

D R I

Do not, I pray thee, paper stain
With rhymes retail'd in dribble. Swift, on Gibbs's Poems.
TO DRIBBLE.† v. n. [This word seems to have come from drop by successive alterations, such as are usual in living languages. Drop, drip, drizzle, dribble, from thence drive! and driver. Drip may indeed be the original word, from the Danish drypp.]

1. To fall in drops.

2. To fall weakly and slowly.

Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a compleat bosom. Shakespeare.

3. To proceed slowly.

Small temptations allure but dribbling offenders.
Milton, Apology for Smeectymnus.

4. To slaver as a child or idiot.

TO DRIBBLE. v. n. To throw down in drops.

Let the cook follow with a ladle full of soup, and dribble it all the way up stairs. Swift, Rules to Servants.

DRIBBLING.* n. s. [from dribble.] A falling in drops.

Semilunar processes on the surface, owe their form to the dribbling of water that passed over it. Woodward on Fossils.

A dribbling, difficulty, and a momentary suppression of urine, may be caused by the stone's shutting up the orifice of the bladder. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DRIBLET. n. s. [from dribble.] A small aum; odd money in a sum.

Twelve long years of exile born,
Twice twelve we number'd since his blest return:
So strictly wert thou just to pay,
Even to the driblet of a day. Dryden.

DRIER. n. s. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture; a desiccative.

There is a tale, that boiling of daisy roots in milk, which it is certain are great driers, will make dogs little. Bacon.

DRIFT. n. s. [from drive.]

1. Force impellent; impulse; overbearing influence.

A man being under the drift of any passion, will still follow the impulse of it, till something interpose, and, by a stronger impulse, turn him another way. South.

2. Violence; course.

The mighty trunk, half rent with rugged rift,
Doth roll adown the rocks, and fall with fearful drift. Spenser, F. Q.

3. Any thing driven at random.

Seine log, perhaps, upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

4. Any thing driven or borne along in a body.

The ready racers stand,
Swift as on wings of wind up-borne they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope, Odyssey.

5. A storm; a shower.

Our thunder from the South
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town. Shakespeare.

6. A heap or stratum of any matter thrown together by the wind; as, a snowdrift, a deep body of snow.

7. Tendency, or aim of action.

The particular drift of every act, proceeding eternally from God, we are not able to discern; and therefore cannot always give the proper and certain reason of his works. Hooker.

Their drift comes known, and they discover'd are;
For some, of many, will be false of course. Daniel.

8. Scope of a discourse.

The main drift of his book being to prove, that what is true is impossible to be false, he opposes nobody. Tillotson.

The drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison.

This by the stile, the manner, and the drift,
'Twas thought could be the work of none but Swift. Swift.

DRY

To DRIFT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive; to urge along.

Snow no larger than so many grains of sand, drifted with the wind in clouds from every point. Ellis's Voyage.

2. To throw together on heaps. Not authorized.

He wanders on

From hill to dale, still more and more astray,
Impatient flouncing through the drifted heaps.

Thomson.

To DRIFT. * v. a. To form into heaps; as, the snow drifts.

DRIFT-WAY. * n. s. [drift and way.] A common road for driving cattle. Cowel.

DRIFT-WIND. * n. s. [drift and wind.] A wind that drives all before it, or that throws any matter into heaps or drifts.

It could

No more be hid in him, than fire in flax,
Than humble banks can go to law with waters,
That drift-winds force to raging.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

To DRILL. † v. a. [drillen, Dutch; drilian, Sax. from drugh, through.]

1. To pierce any thing with a drill.

The drill-plate is only a piece of flat iron, fixed upon a flat board, which iron hath an hole punched a little way into it, to set the blunt end of the shank of the drill in, when you drill a hole. Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

2. To perforate; to bore; to pierce.

My body through and through he drill'd,
And Whacum by my side lay kill'd.

Hudibras.

Tell, what could drill and perforate the poles,
And to th' attractive rays adapt their holes?

Blackmore.

3. To make a hole.

When a hole is drilled in a piece of metal, they hold the drill-bone in their right hand; but when they turn small work they hold the drill-bone in their left hand. Moxon.

4. To delay; to put off; in low phrase; corrupted, I believe from drawled.

She has bubbled him out of his youth; she drilled him on to five and fifty, and she will drop him in his old age. Addison.

5. To draw from step to step. A low phrase.

By such insinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drill him on from one lewdness to another; by the same arts corrupting and squeezing him as they please.

South, Sermon. ii. 216.

6. To drain; to draw slowly. This sense wants better authority, Dr. Johnson says; meaning the authority of Thomson, which is all that he could find. It seems, however, to have been adopted from the neuter verb, which was unknown to Dr. Johnson, and is used by old and good authors.

Drill'd through the sandy stratum every way,
The waters with the sandy stratum rise.

Thomson.

7. To form to arms; to teach the military exercise. An old cant word. See the verb neuter, and the substantive.

The foe appear'd drawn up and drill'd,
Ready to charge them in the field.

Hudibras.

To DRILL. * v. n.

1. To flow gently or slowly; "to trickle down."

Cockeram.

Choice vineyards planted, paradises made,
Stor'd with all sorts of fruits, with trees of shade,
And water'd with cool rivulets that drill'd

Along the borders. Sandys, Ecclesiastes, p. 2.

With honey the hard rocks supply'd his want,
And pure oil drill'd from cliffs of adamant.

Sandys, Songs out of the O. and N. Test.

A small spring (Maxera in Ptolomy) streaming from the Taurisian mountains drills in two branches through it.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 174.

DRILL

All have cool refreshing rivulets of crystal, drilling over pebbles of amber. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 329.

2. To muster; to assemble in order to exercise.

I fir'd it: and gave him three sweats,
In the artillery-yard, three drilling days.

Beaumont and Fl. Martial Maid.

DRILL. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An instrument with which holes are bored. It is a point pressed hard against the thing bored, and turned round with a bow and string.

The way of tempering steel to make gravers, drills, and mechanical instruments, we have taught artificers. Boyle.

Drills are used for the making such holes as punches will not serve for; as a piece of work that hath already its shape, and must have an hole made in it. Moxon.

2. An ape; a baboon.

Shall the difference of hair be a mark of a different internal specifick constitution between a changeling and a drill, when they agree in shape and want of reason? Locke.

Would you have your son move his ears like a drill? — Yes, fool, said he, why should he not have the perfection of a drill, or of any other animal? Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

3. A small dribbling brook. This I have found no where else, and suspect it should be rill, Dr. Johnson says. By no where else he means the passage from Sandys; but it seems to have been no uncommon word.

Springs through the pleasant meadows pour their drills,
Which snake-like glide between the bordering hills. Sandys.
From hence in smaller drills her course she keeps,
And scarce discern'd along the vallies creeps.

F. Wiat, Verses Pref. to Sandys's Psalms, (1648.)

Is not that rill or drill of water called by foreign writers Rhinocolura? Bp. Richardson on the Old Test. (1654) p. 115.

4. Military exercise. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

He that but saw thy curious captain's drill,
Would think no more of Flushing or the Brill.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

To DRINK. † v. n. preter. drank, or drunk; part. pass. drunk, or drunken, formerly drank and dronken. [Sax. drincan; Goth. driggan, in which the first g is sounded like our n.]

1. To swallow liquors; to quench thirst.

Here, between the armies,

Let's drink together friendly, and embrace. Shakespeare.

She said drink, and I will give thy camels' drink also; so I drank, and she made the camels drink also. Gen. xxiv. 46.

He drank of the wine. Gen. ix. 21.

2. To feast; to be entertained with liquors.

They drank, and were merry with him. Gen. xliii. 34.

3. To drink to excess; to be an habitual drunkard.

A colloquial phrase.

First for his son a gay commission buys,
Who drinks, whores, fights, and in a duel dies!

Pope, Eth. Epist.

4. To DRINK to. To salute in drinking; to invite to drink by drinking first.

I take your princely word for those redresses.

— I gave it you, and will maintain my word;

And thereupon I drink unto your grace. Shakespeare.

5. To DRINK to. To wish well to in the act of taking the cup.

Give me some wine; fill full:

I drink to th' general joy of the whole table,

And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss. Shakespeare.

I'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the cavaleroes about London. Shakespeare.

To DRINK. v. a.

1. To swallow: applied to liquids.

He had eaten no bread, nor drunk any water three days and three nights. 1 Sam. xxi. 4.

We have drunk our water for money. Sam. vi. 4.

2. To suck up; to absorb.

Set rows of rosemary with flow'ring stem,
And let the purple v'lets drink the stream.
Brush not thy sweeping skirts too near the wall;
Thy heedless sleeve will drink the colour'd oil.

Dryden.

3. To take in by an inlet; to hear; to see.

My ears have yet not drunk a hundred words
Of that tongue's uttering, yet I know the sound.

Shakspeare.

Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

Pleinius! let acts of gods, and heroes old,
What ancient bards in hall and bow'r have told,
Attemper'd to the lyre, your voice employ;
Such the pleas'd ear will drink with silent joy.
I drink delicious poison from thy eye.

Pope.

Pope.

4. To act upon by drinking.

Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner: come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness.

Shakspeare.

He will drown his health and his strength in his belly; and, after all his drunken trophies, at length drink down himself too.

South.

5. To make drunk.

Benhadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions.

Kings, xvi. 9.

6. It is used with the intensive particles off, up, and in: Off to note a single act of drinking.

One man gives another a cup of poison, a thing as terrible as death; but at the same time tells him that it is a cordial, and so he drinks it off, and dies.

South.

7. Up, to note that the whole is drunk.

Alexander, after he had drank up a cup of fourteen pints, was going to take another.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

8. In, to enforce the sense; usually of inanimate things.

The body being reduced nearer unto the earth, and emptied, becometh more porous, and greedily drinketh in water.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

DRINK. n. s. [from the verb.]1. Liquor to be swallowed: opposed to meat.

When God made choice to rear
His mighty champion, strong above compare,
Whose drink was only from the liquid brook!

Milton, S. A.

2. Liquor of any particular kind.

We will give you rare and sleepy drinks.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The juices of fruits are either watry or oily: I reckon among the watry all the fruits out of which drink is expressed, as the grape, the apple, and the pear.

Bacon.

O madness, to think use of strongest wines,
And strongest drinks, our chief support of health.

Milton, S. A.

These, when th' allotted orb of time's compleat,
Are more commended than the labour'd drink.

Philips.

Amongst drinks, austere wines are apt to occasion foul eruptions.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DRINKABLE. adj. [from drink.] Potable; such as may be drank.

Men say that water is both navigable, drinkable, and washable.

Wodrolphe, Tr. and Eng. Gram. (1623), p. 247.

DRINKER. n. s. [Sax. drincepe.]

1. One that drinks to excess; a drunkard.

It were good for those that have moist brains, and are great drinkers, to take fume of lignum, aloes, rosemary, and frankincense, about the full of the moon.

Bacon.

The drinker and debauched person is the object of scorn and contempt.

South.

The urine of hard drinkers affords a liquor extremely fetid, but no inflammable spirit: what is inflammable stays in the blood, and affects the brain. Great drinkers commonly die apoplectick.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. One that drinks any liquor, but not to excess.

A well, in the midst of Arcadia, causeth the drinker of it to loath wine for ever after.

Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1635), p. 229.

Having considered the effects of tea upon the health of the drinker, which I think he has aggravated in the vehemence of his zeal, and which, after soliciting them by this watery luxury year after year, I have not yet felt; he proceeds to examine how it may be shown to affect our interest.

Dr. Johnson, Review of a Journal, &c.

DRINKING. n. s. [from drink.]

1. The act of quenching thirst.

When delight is the only end, and rests in itself, and dwells there long; then eating, and drinking, is not a serving of God, but an inordinate affection.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

2. A festival; an entertainment with liquors.

The drinking was according to the law; none did compel.

Ezra, i. 2.

The church-wardens or quest-men, and their assistants, shall suffer no plays, feasts, banquets, suppers, churchales, drinkings, temporal courts, or leets, layjuries, musters, or any other prophane usage to be kept in the church, chapel, or church-yard.

Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical.

3. The habit of drinking strong liquors to excess.

I then considered drinking as a necessary qualification for a gentleman and a man of fashion!

Ld. Chesterfield.

DRINKING-HORN. n. s. [Sax. drinc-horn.] A drinking cup made of horn.DRINKING-HOUSE. n. s. [Sax. drinc-hus.] An ale-house.DRINKLESS. adj. [drink and less.] Without drink. A very old word.

In every thing, I wot, there lieth measure;

For though a man forbiddeth drunkenness,

He nought forbiddeth that every creature

Be drinkless for alway.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cr. ii. 718.

DRINKMONEY. n. s. [drink and money.] Money given to buy liquor.

Peg's servants were always asking for drinkmoney.

Arbuthnot.

To DRIP. v. n. [druppen, Dutch; drypan, Sax.]

1. To fall in drops.

2. To have drops falling from it.

The soil, with fat'ning moisture fill'd,

Is cloth'd with grass, and fruitful to be till'd;

Such as in fruitful vales we view from high,

Which dripping rocks, not rolling streams supply.

Dryden.

The finest sparks, and cleanest beaux,

Drip from the shoulders to the toes.

Prior.

To DRIP. v. a.

1. To let fall in drops.

Her flood of tears

Seem like the lofty barn of some rich swain,

Which from the thatch drips fast a shower of rain.

Swift.

2. To drop fat in roasting.

Let what was put into his belly, and what he drips, be his sauce.

Walton's Angler.

His offer'd entrails shall his crime reproach,
And drip their fatness from the hazle broach.

Dryden, Virgil.

DRIP. v. n. [from the verb.]

1. That which falls in drops.

So long as justice and judgement sit upon all the benches of a kingdom, either it is not possible for fluxes and meltings to begin in the state; or, if they do begin, their drip will be cured presently.

Abp. Laud, Sermon, p. 161.

Water may be procured for necessary occasions from the heavens, by preserving the drips of the houses.

Mortimer.

2. [In architecture.] A large flat member of the cornice, the corona; so called because it crowns the entablature and the whole order. It is called by workmen the drip.

Chambers.

DRIPPING. n. s. [from drip.] The fat which housewives gather from roast meat.

Shew all her secrets of housekeeping;

For candles how she trucks her dripping.

Swift.

DRIPPINGPAN. n. s. [drip and pan.] The pan in which the fat of roast meat is caught.

He hath followed your court, and your last predecessors, from place to place, any time this seven years, as faithfully as your spits and your dripping-pans have done, and almost as greasily.

Beaumont, and Ff. Woman-hater.

D R I

When the cook turns her back, throw smoking coals into the dripping pan. Swift.

DRIFFLE. adj. [from drip.] This word is used somewhere by Fairfax for weak, or rare; dripple shot.

To DRIVE. † v. a. preterite drove, anciently drave; part. pass. driven, or drove. [dreifa, old Goth. drieban, M. Gothick; bujan, Saxon; dryven, Dutch. Chaucer writes our verb drife, in the Rom. of the Rose.]

1. To produce motion in any thing by violence: as, the hammer drives the nail.

2. To force along by impetuous pressure.
He builds a bridge, who never drove a pile. Pope.
On helmets, helmets throng, Pope.
Shield press'd on shield, and man drove man along. Pope.

3. To expel by force from any place: with from.
Driven from his native land to foreign grounds,
He with a generous rage resents his wounds. Dryden, Virg.
His ignominious flight the victors boast,
Beaux banish beaux, and swordsmen swordknots drive. Pope.

4. To send by force to any place: with to.
Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage and rocks grow cold. Shakespeare.
Fate has driven 'em all
Into the net. Dryden, Don Sebast.

5. To chase; to hunt.
To drive the deer with hound and horn
Earl Percy took his way. Chevy Chase.

6. To force or urge in any direction.
He drove and measured the earth: he beheld, and drove asunder the nations. Hab. iii. 6.

7. To impel to greater speed.
She saddled an ass, and said to her servant, Drive, and go forward; slack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee.
2 Kings, iv. 24.

8. To guide and regulate a carriage.
He took off their chariot-wheels, that they drove them heavily. Ex. xiv. 25.

9. To convey animals; to make animals march along under guidance.
There find a herd of heifers, wand'ring o'er
The neighb'ring hill, and drive 'em to the shore. Addison.

10. To clear any place by forcing away what is in it.
We come not with design of wasteful prey,
To drive the country, force the swains away. Dryden.

11. To force; to compel.
For the metre sake, some words in him sometime be driven awry, which require straighter placing in plain prose. Ascham.

12. To hurry on inconsiderately.
Most miserable if such unskillfulness make them drive on their time by the periods of sin and death. Bp. Taylor.
He, driven to dismount, threatened, if I did not the like, to do as much for my horse as fortune had done for his. Sidney.
The Romans did not think that tyranny was thoroughly extinguished, till they had driven one of their consuls to depart the city, against whom they found not in the world what to object, saving only that his name was Tarquin. Hooker.
He was driven by the necessities of times, more than led by his own disposition, to rigour. K. Charles.

13. To distress; to straiten.
This kind of speech is in the manner of desperate men far driven. Spenser, State of Ireland.

14. To urge by violence, not kindness.
He taught the gospel rather than the law,
And forc'd himself to drive; but lov'd to draw. Dryden.

15. To impel by influence of passion.
I drive my suffer from his mad humour of love to a living humour of madness. Shakespeare, As you like it.
Discontents drive men into slings. K. Charles.
Lord Cottington, being master of temper, and of the most profound dissimulation, knew too well how to lead him into a mistake, and then drive him into choler. Clarendon.

D R I

It is better to marry than to burn, says St. Paul; where we may see what drives men into a conjugal life: a little burning pushes us more powerfully than greater pleasures in prospect.
Locke.

16. To urge; to press to a conclusion.

The experiment of wood that shineth in the dark, we have diligently driven and pursued; the rather for that of all things that give light here below, it is the most durable, and hath least apparent motion. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

We have thus the proper notions of the four elements, and both them and their qualities, driven up and resolved into their most simple principles. Digby on Bodies.

To drive the argument farther, let us inquire into the obvious designs of this divine architect. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

The design of these orators was to drive some particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal. Swift.

17. To carry on; to keep in motion.

As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sit at great usury. Bacon.

The bees have common cities of their own,
And common sort, beneath one law they live,
And with one common stock their traffick drive. Dryden.

Your Parasimon a lawless bargain drive,
The parent could not sell the daughter's love. Dryden.
The trade of life cannot be driven without partners. Collier.

18. To purify by motion: so we say to drive feathers.

His thrice driv'n bed of down. Shakespeare.
The one's in the plot, let him be never so innocent; and the other is as white as the driven snow, let him be never so criminal. L'Estrange.

19. To DRIVE out. To expel.

Tumults and their excitors drive myself and many of both houses out of their places. K. Charles.

As soon as they heard the name of Roscetes, they forthwith drive out their governour, and received the Turks into the town. Knolles, Hist.

To DRIVE. † v. n.

1. To go as impelled by any external agent. [In the sea-phrase, it is probably from the French dérivér.]

The needle endeavours to conform unto the meridian; but being distracted, driveth that way where the greater and power-fuller part of the earth is placed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Love, fixt to one, still safe at anchor rides,
And dares the fury of the winds and tides;
But losing once that hold, to the wide ocean born,
It drives away at will, to every wave a scorn. Dryden.

Nor with the rising storm would vainly strive;
But left the helm, and let the vessel drive. Dryden, Æn.

2. To rush with violence.

Fierce Boreas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets. Dryden, Æn.

Near as he draws, thick halibingers of smoke
With gloomy pillars cover all the place;
Whose little intervals of night are broke,
By sparks that drive against his sacred face. Dryden.

Then with so swift an ebb the flood drove backward,
It slipt from underneath the scaly herd. Dryden, All for Love.

The bees drive out upon each other's backs,
T' imboss their hives in clusters. Dryden, Don Sebast.

While thus he stood,
Pirithous' dart drove on, and nail'd him to the wood. Dryden.

As a ship, which winds and waves assail,
Now with the current drives, now with the gale;
She feels a double force, by turns obeys
The imperious tempest, and th' impetuous seas. Dryden.

The wolves scampered away, however, as hard as they could drive. L'Estrange.

Thick as autumnal leaves, or driving sand,
The moving squadrons blacken all the strand. Pope, Iliad.

3. To pass in a carriage. [Perhaps the examples belong rather to the eighth sense of the verb active.]

There is a litter ready; lay him in's,
And drive tow'rd Dover. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

D R I

Thy flaming chariot-wheels, that shook
Heaven's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks
Thou driv'st of warring angels disarray'd. Milton, P. L.

4. To tend to; to consider as the scope and ultimate design.

Authors drive at these as the highest elegancies which are but the frigidities of wit. Brown, Vulg. Err.

We cannot wholly mistake his discourse, when we have found out the point he drives at. Locke.

They look no further before them than the next line; whence it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point, but ramble from one subject to another. Dryden.

We have done our work, and are come within view of the end that we have been driving at. Addison on the War.

5. To aim; to strike at with fury.

Four rogues in buckram let drive at me. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

At Auxur's shield he drove, and at the blow
Both shield and arm to ground together go. Dryden, Æn.

6. To distract; the word, I think, is still thus used.

His landlord, who, he fears, hath sent
His water-bailiff thus to drive for rent. Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 19.

7. To drive, in all its senses, whether active or neuter, may be observed to retain a sense compounded of violence and progression.

DRIVE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Passage in a carriage. A modern word.

We had a dreary drive, in a dusky night, to St. Andrews, where we arrived late. Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

To DRIVE.† v. n. [from drip, drip, dribble, drivel. Such is Dr. Johnson's etymological deduction.] The word is perhaps from the Icel. dráfa, to talk idly or foolishly; whence also the Danish dræve or dræver, a fool, a trifler; and the Tent. ravelen, to dote. And thus the second definition ought to be the first.]

1. To slaver; to let the spittle fall in drops, like a child, an idiot, or a dotard.

I met with this Chremes, a drivelling old fellow, lean, shaking both of head and hands, already half garth, and yet then most greedy of earth. Sidney.

No man could spit from him, but would be forced to drive like some paralytick, or a fool. Grew.

2. To be weak or foolish; to dote.

This drivelling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted,
Made sour and senseless, turn'd to whey by love;
A drivelling hero, fit for a romance. U. gden.

DRIVEL.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Slayer; moisture shed from the mouth.

Besides th' eternal drivel, that supplies
The dropping beard, from nostrils, mouth and eyes. Dryden.

2. A fool; an idiot; a driveller. This sense is now out of use, Dr. Johnson says. But the sense he has thus assigned to it was not an exclusive one; it meant, before the time of Sidney, whose authority alone is cited by Dr. Johnson, a servant. Yet Dr. Jamieson has questioned, in his Scottish Dictionary, this relationship of the word to the Teut. drevel, a servant; and considers it only as a driveller. Our old lexicography militates against this opinion. "Drevill, a servant." Prompt. Parv. "Drevell and drudge." Vulg. Herm. "Drivel or slave." Hulot. "A drivel, drug, or kitchen-slave." Barret.

What fool am I, to mingle that drivel's speeches among my noble thoughts? Sidney.

D R I

Millions of years this old drivel Cupid lives,
While still more wretch, more wicked he doth prove. Sidney.
That false witch, and that foul aged drivel;
The one a fiend, the other an incarnate devil. Spenser, F. Q. iv. ll. 3.

DRIVELLER. n. s. [from drivel.] A fool; an idiot; a slaverer.

I have heard the arrantest drivellers commended for their shrewdness, even by men of tolerable judgement. Swift.

DRIVEN. Participle of drive.

They were driven forth from among men. Job, xxx. 5.

DRIVER.† n. s. [from drive.]

1. The person or instrument who gives any motion by violence.

2. One who drives beasts.

He from the many peopled city flies;
Contemns their labours, and the driver cries. Sandys.

The driver runs up to him immediately, and beats him almost to death. Et Strange.

The multitude or common rout, like a drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which their driver shall accustom them to. South.

3. One who drives a carriage.

Not the fierce driver with more fury lends
The sounding lash, and ere the stroke descends,
Low to the wheels his pliant body bends. Dryden, Virg.

4. One who considers a thing as his ultimate design.

It is strange, that for wishing and advising, and in his own particular using and ensuring that moderation, thereby not to engarboil the church, and disturb the course of piety, he should so, by you and yours, be blamed, accused, and traduced for a Papist and an Arminian; calumniated almost in every ordinary, by your means, for a dangerous driver at popery and sedition. Mountagu, Appals Cas. p. 80.

DRIVING.* n. s. [from drive.]

1. The act of giving motion.

The driving [in the margin marching] is like the driving of Jehu the Son of Nimsi. 2 Kings, ix. 20.

2. Tendency.

Did you mark the dainty driving of the last point.

Brewer, Com. of Lingua, iii. 7.

To DRIZZLE.† v. a. [driselen, German, to shed dew; drisan, Goth. to fall.] To shed in small slow drops; as winter rains.

When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew. Shakespeare.

Though now this face of mine be hid
In sap-consuving winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakespeare.

To DRIZZLE. v. n. To fall in short slow drops.

And drizzling drops that often do redound,
The firmest flint doth in continuance wear. Spenser, F. Q.

Her heart did melt in great compassion,
And drizzling tears did shed for pure affection. Spenser, F. Q.

This day will pour down,
If I conjecture ought, no drizzling show'r,
But rattling storm of arrows bur'd with fire. Milton, P. L.
The neighbouring mountains, by reason of their height, are more exposed to the dews and drizzling rains than any of the adjacent parts. Addison in Italy.

DRIZZLE.* n. s. A small rain.

DRIZZLING.* n. s. [from the verb.] A slow drop.

The drizzly declarations of my lord Boner, with such other dirty drizzlings of Antichrist.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c., fol. 97. b.

DRIZZLY.† adj. [from drizzle.] Shedding small rain.

This during winter's drizzly reign be done,
Till the new ram receives th' exalted sun. Dryden, Virg.

Thus easy rob'd, they to the fountain sped,
That in the middle of the court up-threw
A stream high-spouting from its liquid bed,
And falling back again in drizzly dew. Thomson, Castle of Indolence.

DRO

DROIL.† n. s. [by Junius understood a contraction of drivel, Dr. Johnson says. Drivel certainly means a slave, one who is a very low servant. So the Ital. dròle, a slave.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; a drudge.

Then I begin to rave at my stars' bitterness,
To see how many muckhills plac'd above me,
Peasants and droils! Beaum. and Fl. Wit at Sev. Weapons.

To DROIL.† v. n. [from the noun.] To work sluggishly and slowly; to plod.

Let such vile vassals, born to base vocation,
Drudge in the world, and for their living droil,
Which have no wit to live withouten toyle. Spenser, F. Q.

The soul—finding the ease she had from her visible and sensuous colleague the body, in performance of religious duties, her pinions, now broken and flagging, shifted off from herself the labour of high soaring any more, forgot her heavenly flight, and left the dull and droiling carcass to plod on in the old road and droiling trade of controversy. Milton, Of Reform. B. i.

Desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things in which we are conversant; the droiling peasant scarce thinks there is any world beyond the neighbouring markets. Gov. of the Tongue.

DROLL.† n. s. [drôle, French.]

1. One whose business is to raise mirth by petty tricks; a jester; a buffoon; a jackpudding.

But since I am fallen upon Dr. Dale, who was a witty kind of droll, I will tell you instead of news (for there is little good stirring now) two other facetious tales of his.

Howell, Lett. iv. 2.

As he was running home in all haste, a droll takes him up by the way. L'Étrange.

He whom we allowed, and formerly, for a certain pleasant subtilty, and natural way of giving you an unexpected hit, called a droll, is now mimicked by a biter, who is a dull fellow, that tells you a lie with a grave face, and laughs at you for knowing him no better than to believe him. Tatler, No. 12.

Why, how now, Andrew, cries his brother droll;
To-day's conceit methinks is something dull. Prior.

Democritus, dear droll, revisit earth,
And with our follies glut thy heighten'd mirth. Prior.

2. A farce; something exhibited to raise mirth. See DROLLERY.

Some as justly fame extols,
For lofty lines in Smithfield drolls. Swift.

To DROLL.† v. n. [droler, Fr.] To jest; to play the buffoon.

Such august designs as inspire your inquiries used to be decided by droiling fantasticks, that have only wit enough to make others and themselves ridiculous. Glanville.

Good words, friend, said the bee, (having now pruned himself, and being disposed to droll,) I'll give you my hand and word to come near your kennel no more. Swift, Tale of a Tub.

To DROLL.* v. a. To cheat; to trick; to cajole; to flatter.

Men that will not be reasoned into their senses, may yet be laughed at drolled into them. L'Étrange.

We must not be drolled out of our religion.

Wallis, Sermon at Oxf. (1682), p. 30.

Let virtuosos insult, and despise on, yet they never shall be able to droll away nature. South.

That no example of great men, or of the multitude, may bias him, no sophistry of cunning men cheat him of his religion, no atheistical person droll or rally him out of it, nor scurrility make him ashamed of it.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

It would be a jest indeed, should he droll himself into a belief that there are no such things as pain or death.

Scott, Christian Life.

DRO'LLER.* n. s. [from droll.] A jester; a buffoon.

He is making an experiment by another sort of enemies, and sets the apes and droillers upon it. Glanville, Sermon, p. 193.

VOL. II.

DRO

DRO'LLERY.† n. s. [Fr. drôlerie.]

1. Idle jokes; buffoonery.

They hang between heaven and hell, borrow the Christians' faith, and the atheists' drollery upon it. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. A show; the old word for the present drolls exhibited at fairs.

Alon. What were these?

Seb. A living drollery: now I will believe

That there are unicorns.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

DRO'LLING.* n. s. [from droll.] Burlesque; low wit; contemptible jesting.

These whiffers, who have neither learning nor good manners, are neither afraid nor ashamed by their rude droilling and buffooning to expose to contempt all that which the wisest and best men in the world have always had the greatest veneration for.

Hallywell, Moral Sermons, p. 56.

DRO'LLINGLY.* adv. [from droilling.] In a jesting manner.

Are all men puritans when they are sick, or upon their deathbeds? And yet then there are very few are so modest as to wave the talk of religion, or to talk lightly and droillingly of it.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

DRO'LLISH.* adj. Somewhat droll. A word frequent in conversation; and somewhere used by Sterne.

DRO'MEDARY.† n. s. [dromedare, Ital. dromedarius, low Lat. from the Gr. δρομας, swift; δρομας καμηλος.]

A sort of camel so called from its swiftness, because it is said to travel a hundred miles a day.

Dromedaries are smaller than common camels, slenderer, and more nimble, and are of two kinds: one larger, with two small bunches, covered with hair, on its back; the other lesser, with one hairy eminence, and more frequently called camel, both are capable of great fatigue. Their hair is soft and shorn: they have no fangs and fore-teeth, nor horn upon their feet, which are only covered with a fleshy skin; and they are about seven feet and a half high, from the ground to the top of their heads.

See CAMEL. Calcut.

Straw for the houses and dromedaries brought they unto the place. Kings, iv. 28.

Mules after these, camels and dromedaries, And wagons fraught with utensils of war. Milton, P. R.

DRONE.† n. s. [Sax. drōen, according to Dr. Johnson; drāne, or drān, of drōgan, to curl; according to Mr. Horne Tooke. The German frone, is a drone. Serenius refers to the old Sax. drōenen, to murmur; to make a low noise. Dr. Johnson's drōen, therefore, may be no error, as I know some have asserted.]

1. The bee which makes no honey, and is therefore driven out by the rest.

The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,

Delivering o'er to executor's pale

The lazy yawning drone.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Luxurious kings are to their people lost;

They live, like drones, upon the publick cost.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

All, with united force, combine to drive,

The lazy drones from the laborious hive.

Dryden, Virgil.

2. A sluggard; an idler.

He sleeps by day

More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me,

Therefore I part with him.

Shakespeare.

Sit idle on the household hearth.

A burdensome drone, to visitant's gaze.

Milton.

It is my misfortune to be married to a drone, who lives upon what I get, without bringing any thing into the common stock.

Addison.

3. The hum, or instrument of humming.

D R O

If men should ever be thumbing the drone of one plain song, it would be a dull opiate to the most wakeful attention.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

Born to no possession of your own, but a pair of wings, and a drone-pipe.

Swift, Tale of a Tub.

Here while his canting drone-pipe scann'd,

The mystick figures of her hand;

He tipples palmestry, and dines

On all her fortune-telling lines.

Cleveland.

To DRONE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in idleness; to dream.

What have I lost by my forefathers' fault?

Why, was not I the twentieth by descent

From a long restive race of droning kings?

Dryden.

2. To give a heavy dull tone.

Melfoil and honeysuckles pound,

With these alluring savours strew the ground,

And mix with tinkling brass the cymbal's droning sound.

Dryden.

DRO'NING.* n. s. [from drone.] Utterance in a dull, drivelling manner.

Cant and droning supply the place of sense and reason in the language of men.

Swift, Tale of a Tub.

DRO'NISH.† adj. [from drone.] Idle; sluggish; dreaming; lazy; indolent; unactive. This is a very old word in our language, though Dr. Johnson has adduced only a solitary instance of it from Rowe.

Drones — make great buzzing, to the disturbance of the good travelling bees, whose inclination, upon examination, you shall find more profitable than the dronish ones.

Knight, Tr. of Truth, (1580,) fol. 37.

The dronish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood

Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,

To nestle in their ancient hives again.

Rowe.

Several, who have gotten to be elected into fellowships or students' places, — not regarding the ends of this institution, do live, upon the said fellowships or students' places, a dronish and slothful life.

Dean Prideaux, Art. for the Ref. of the two Univ. 1715.

To DROOP.† v. n. [droef, sorrow, Dutch; driupa, Icel. to mourn.]

1. To languish with sorrow.

Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,

He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply;

Fasten'd, and fix'd the shame on't in himself.

Shakespeare.

I droop, with struggling spent,

My thoughts are on my sorrows bent.

Sandys.

2. To faint; to grow weak; to be dispirited.

I find my zenith doth depend upon

A most auspicious star: whose influence

If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes

Will ever after droop.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,

While night's black agents to their prey do rowse.

When by impulse from heav'n, Tyrtas sung,

In drooping soldiers a new courage sprung.

Roscommon.

Can flow'r's but droop in absence of the sun,

Which wak'd their sweets? and mine, alas! is gone.

Time seems not now beneath his years to stoop,

Nor do his wings with sickly feathers droop.

Dryden.

When factious rage to cruel exile drove

The queen of beauty and the court of love,

The muses droop'd with their forsaken arts.

Dryden.

I'll animate the soldiers' drooping courage,

With love of freedom and contempt of life.

I saw him ten days before he died, and observed he began very much to droop and languish.

Swift.

3. To sink; to lean downwards; commonly by weakness or grief.

I never from thy side henceforth must stray,

Where'er our day's work lies; though now enjoin'd

Laborious, till day droop.

Milton, P. L.

D R O

His head, though gay,

Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold,

Hung drooping, unsustain'd.

Milton, P. I.

On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,

Which, with a sigh she rais'd, and this she said.

Pope.

DROP. n. s. [dropa, Saxon.]

1. A globule of moisture; as much liquor as falls at once when there is not a continual stream.

Meet we the med'cine of our country's weal,

And with him pour we in our country's purge.

Each drop of us.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Whereas Aristotle tells us, that if a drop of wine be put into ten thousand measures of water, the wine being overpowered by so vast a quantity of water, will be turned into it; he speaks very improbably.

Boyle.

Admiring in the gloomy shade,

Those little drops of light.

Waller.

Had I but known that Sancho was his father,

I would have pour'd a deluge of my blood

To save one drop of his.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. Diamond hanging in the ear.

The drops to thee, Brillante, we consign;

And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine.

Pope.

DROP SERENE. n. s. [gutta serena, Lat.] A disease of the eye, proceeding from an inspissation of the humour.

So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,

Or dim suffusion veil'd!

Milton, P. I.

To DROP.† v. a. [dropian, Sax.]

1. To pour in drops or single globules.

His heavens shall drop down dew.

Deut. xxxiii. 28.

2. To let fall.

Others o'er chimney tops and turrets row,

And drop their anchors on the tides below.

Dryden.

One only hag remain'd:

Propp'd on her trusty staff, not half upright,

And dropp'd an awkward court'sy to the knight.

Dryden.

St. John himself will scarce forbear

To bite his pen and drop a tear.

Swift.

3. To let go; to dismiss from the hand, or the possession.

Though I could

With barefac'd power sweep him from my sight,

And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,

For certain friends that are both his and mine,

Whose loves I may not drop.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Those who have assumed visible shapes for a season, can hardly be reckoned among this order of compounded beings; because they drop their bodies, and divest themselves of those visible shapes.

Watts, Logick.

4. To utter slightly or casually.

Drop not thy word against the house of Isaac.

Amos, vii. 16.

5. To insert indirectly, or by way of digression.

St. Paul's epistles contain nothing but points of Christian instruction, amongst which he seldom fails to drop in the great and distinguishing doctrines of our holy religion.

Locke.

6. To intermit; to cease.

Where the act is unmanly or immoral, we ought to drop our hopes, or rather never entertain them.

Collier on Despair.

After having given this judgement in its favour, they suddenly drop the pursuit.

Sharp, Surg.

7. To quit a master.

I have beat the hoof till I have worn out these shoes in your service, and not one penny left me to buy more; so that you must even excuse me, if I drop you here.

J. Estrange.

8. To let go a dependant, or companion, without farther association.

She drilled him on to five and fifty, and will drop him in his old age, if she can find her account in another.

Addison.

They have no sooner fetched themselves up to the fashion of the polite world, but the town has dropped them.

Addison.

Mention either of the kings of Spain or Poland, and he talks notably; but if you go out of the Gazette, you drop him.

Addison.

9. To suffer to vanish, or come to nothing.

D R O

Thus was the fame of our Saviour perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditional account of him to after-ages, and rectify it, if, by passing through several generations, it might drop any part that was material. Addison.

Opinions, like fashions, always descend from those of quality to the middle sort, and thence to the vulgar, where they are dropped and vanish. Swift.

10. To bedrop; to speckle; to variegate with spots.
"Variis stellatus corpora guttis."

Or, sporting, with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their way'd coats, dropp'd with gold.
Milton, P. L.

To DROP. v. n.

1. To fall in drops, or single globules.
The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heaven,
Upon the place beneath. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

2. To let drops fall; to discharge itself in drops.
The heavens dropped at the presence of God. Psalms lxxvii. 3.
While cumber'd with my dropping clothes I lay,
The cruel nation covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' inhospitable coast. Dryden, Æn.
Beneath a rock he sigh'd alone,
And cold Lycæus wept from every dropping stone. Dryden.

3. To fall; to come from a higher place.
Philosophers conjecture that you dropped from the moon, or one of the stars. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.
In every revolution, approaching nearer and nearer to the sun, this comet must at last drop into the sun's body. Cheyne.

4. To fall spontaneously.
So may'st thou live, till, like ripe fruit, thou drop Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton, P. L.

5. To fall in death; to die suddenly.
It was your presumption,
That in the dole of blows your son might drop. Shakespeare.

6. To die.
Nothing, says Seneca, so soon reconciles us to the thoughts of our own death, as the prospect of one friend after another dropping round us. Digby to Pope.

7. To sink into silence; to vanish; to come to nothing: a familiar phrase.
Virgil's friends thought fit to let drop this incident of Helen. Addison, Travels.

I heard of threats, occasioned by my verses: I sent to acquaint them where I was to be found, and so it dropped.
Pope.

8. To come unexpectedly.
Either you come not here, or as you grace
Some old acquaintance, drop into the place,
Careless and qualmish, with a yawning face. Dryden.
He could never make any figure in company, but by giving disturbance at his entry; and therefore takes care to drop in when he thinks you are just seated. Spectator, No. 448.

9. To fall short of a mark.
Often it drops or overshoots by the disproportions of distance or application. Collier.

DRO'PPING. n. s. [from drop.]

1. That which falls in drops.
Thrifty wench scrapes kitchen-stuff,
And barreling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles. Donne.

2. That which drops when the continuous stream ceases.

Strain out the last dull droppings of your sense,
And rhyme with all the rage of impotence. Pope.

DRO'PPINGLY. * adv. [from dropping.] By drops. Hulnot.

DRO'PLET. n. s. A little drop.

Thou abhor'st in us our human griefs,
Scorn'd our brine's flow, and those our droplets, which
From niggard nature fall. Shakespeare, Timon.

DRO'STONE. n. s. [drop and stone.] Spar formed into the shape of drops. Woodward.

D R O

DRO'PWORT. n. s. [drop and wort.] A plant of various species.

DRO'PSICAL. adj. [from dropsy.] Diseased with a dropsy; hydropical; tending to a dropsy.

The diet of nephritic and dropsical persons ought to be such as is opposite to, and subdueth the alkaliescent nature of the salts in the serum of the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

DRO'PSIED. adj. [from dropsy.] Diseased with a dropsy.

Where great addition swells, and virtue none,
It is a dropsied honour: good alone
Is good. Shakespeare, All's well.

DROPSY. n. s. [hydrops, Lat.; whence anciently hydropisy, thence dropisy, dropsy.] A collection of water in the body, from too lax action of the solids, whereby digestion is weakened, and all the parts stuffed. Quincy.

An anasura, a species of dropsy, is an extravasation of water lodged in the cells of the membrana adiposa. Sharp.

DROSS. † n. s. [dross, Sax.; tross, Icel. refuse; leavings. Wicliffe writes it drastis. So the Sax. dpercep, sieces.]

1. The recement or despumation of metals.
Some scum'd the dross that from the metal came,
Some stir'd the molten ore with ladles great,
And every one did swink, and every one did sweat. Spenser, F. G.

Should the mixture of a little dross constrain the church to deprive herself of so much gold, rather than learn how, by art and judgement, to make separation of the one from the other? Hooker.

2. Rust; incrustation upon metal.
An emperor, hid under a crust of dross, after cleansing, has appeared with all his titles fresh and beautiful. Addison.

3. Refuse; leavings; sweepings; any thing remaining after the removal of the better part; dregs; feculence; corruption.

Fair proud, now tell me, why should fair be proud,
Sith all world's glory is but dross unclean;
And in the shade of death itself shall shroud,
However now thereof ye little ween? Spenser.

That most divine light only shineth on those minds, which are purged from all worldly dross and human uncleanness. Raleigh.

All treasures and all gain esteem as dross,
And dignities and powers all but the highest. Milton.
Such precepts exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson

DRO'SSEL. * See DROTCHEL.

DRO'SSINESS. n. s. [from drossy.] Foulness; feculence; rust.

The furnace of affliction refines us from earthly drossiness, and softens us for the impression of God's stamp. Boyle.

DRO'SSY. † adj. [from dross.]
1. Full of scorious or recementitious parts; full of dross.

So doth the fire the drossy gold refine. Davies.
For, by the fire, they emit not only many drossy and scorious parts, but whatsoever they had received either from earth or loadstone. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Worthless; foul; feculent.
Your intention hold,
As fire these drossy rhymes to purify,
Or as elixir to change them into gold. Donne.

O be Thou pleased to cure this sad, this miserable disease; to inspirit and enliven this earthly, drossy heart, that it may freely mount towards Thee. Wh. Duty of Man, Collects.

DRO'TCHEL. † n. s. [corrupted perhaps from drotchel. To drotch, in Chaucer, is to idle, to delay. Droch, in Frisick, is delay. Or, it may be another corruption of drossel. See DRAZEL, which is, in some parts of England, still the name for a slut; and sometimes pronounced dratchel.] An idle wench; a sluggard. In Scottish it is still used. An unwieldy drossel, nothing but guts.

D R O

Minsheu, in V. Pangute.

DROVE. † n. s. [from drive, Sax. drap.]

1. A body or number of cattle; generally used of oxen or black cattle.

They brought to their stations many droves of cattle; and within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons.

Hayward.

A Spaniard is unacquainted with our northern droves.

Brown.

2. A number of sheep driven. To an herd of oxen we regularly oppose, not a drove, but a flock of sheep.

A drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which the drivers shall accustom them to.

South.

3. Any collection of animals.

The sounds and seas, with all their finny drove.

Now to the moon in wavering morrice move.

Milton, Com.

4. A crowd; a tumult.

But if to fame alone thou dost pretend,

The miset will his empty palace lend,

Set wide with doors, adorn'd with plated brass,

Where droves, as at a city-gate, may pass.

Dryden, Jun.

5. A drift-way, or common road for driving cattle.

Cowel.

DROVEN. part. from drive. Not now used.

This is fought indeed;

Had we so done at first, we had droven them home

With clouts about their heads.

Shakspeare.

DROVER. † n. s. [from drove.]

1. One that lats oxen for sale, and drives them to market.

The prince hath got your hero.

— I wish him joy of her.

— Why, that's spoken like an honest drover; so they sell bullocks.

Shakspeare, Much Ado.

The temple itself was prophaned into a den of thieves, a rendezvous of higers and drovers, and a place not for the sacrificing, but for the selling of sheep and oxen.

South, Serm. iii. 311.

The drover who his fellow drover meets,

In narrow passages of winding streets.

Dryden, Jun.

2. Once used by Spenser for a boat driven forward by the tide.

He woke,

And saw his drover drive along the stream.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 22.

DROUGHT. † n. s. [Sax. drugode, (drugoth) from drygan, to dry. Hence our word has been often written drowth; and in old time drythe or drith. Iden in 1557 and Sir Thomas Elyot use the latter. Hulot also has dryth and drith, in his old dictionary, under dryness.]

1. Dry weather; want of rain.

O earth! I will befriend thee more with rain

Than youthful April shall with all his showers:

In Summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still.

Shakspeare.

Great droughts in Summer, lasting till the end of August, some gentle showers upon them, and then some dry weather, portend a pestilent Summer the year following.

Baron.

To south the Persian bay,

And inaccessible th' Arabian drought.

Milton, P. L.

As torrents in the drowth of Summer fail,

So perisht man from death shall never rise.

Sandys.

They were so learned in natural philosophy, that they foretold earthquakes and storms, great droughts, and great plagues.

Temple.

In a drought the thirsty creatures cry,

And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain.

Dryden.

D R O

Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and landsnails innumerable come out of their lurking-places.

Ray.

2. Thirst; want of drink.

His carcase, pin'd with hunger and with drought.

Milton.

One whose drought

Yet scarce allay'd, still eyes the current stream,

Whose liquid murmur heard, new thirst excites.

Milton.

DROUGHTINESS. n. s. [from droughty.] The state of wanting rain.

DROUGHTY. adj. [from drought.]

1. Wanting rain; sultry.

That a camel, so patient of long thirst, should be bred in such droughty and parched countries, where it is of such eminent use for travelling over those dry and sandy deserts, where no water is to be had, must be acknowledged an act of providence and design.

Ray on Creation.

2. Thirsty; dry with thirst.

If the former years

Exhibit no supplies, alas! thou must

With tasteless water wash thy droughty throat.

Philips.

DROUTH.* See DROUGHT.

To DROWN. v. a. [from drunden, below, Germ.

Skinner; from druncian, Sax. Mr. Lye.]

1. To suffocate in water.

They would soon drown those that refused to swim down the popular stream.

King Charles.

When of God's image only eight he found

Snatch'd from the wat'ry grave, and sav'd from nations drown'd.

Prior.

2. To overwhelm in water.

Or so much as it needs

To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds.

Shakspeare.

Galleys might be drowned in the harbour with the great ordnance, before they could be rigged.

Knollen, Hist.

3. To overflow; to bury in an inundation; to deluge.

Between the prince and parliament we stand,

The barriers of the state on either hand:

May neither overflow, for then they drown the land.

Dryden.

4. To immerge; to lose in any thing.

Most men being in sensual pleasures drown'd,

It seems their souls but in their senses areen.

Davies.

5. To lose in something that overpowers or covers.

Who cometh next will not follow that course, however good, which his predecessors held, for doubt to have his doings drowned in another man's praise.

Spenser on Ireland.

That the brightness of the sun doth drown our discerning of the lesser lights, is a popular error.

Wotton.

My private voice is drown'd amid the senate.

Addison.

Some aged man who lives this act to see,

And who in former times remember'd me,

May say, the son, in fortitude and fame,

Outgoes the mark, and drowns his father's name.

Dryden.

To DROWN. v. n. To be suffocated in the waters.

There be, that keep them out of fire, and yet was never burned; that beware of water, and yet was never high drowning.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Methought what pain it was to drown!

What dreadful noise of waters in my ears!

Shakspeare.

DROWNER.* n. s. [from drown.] That which overwhelms or suffocates.

Idleness [is] enemy of virtue, the drowner of youth.

Ascham, Torophilus.

To DROWSE. v. a. [droosen, Dutch.] To make heavy with sleep.

There gentle sleep

First found me, and with soft oppression seiz'd

My drowst senses uncontroll'd.

Milton, P. L.

To DROUSE. † v. n.

1. To slumber; to grow heavy with sleep.

All their shape

Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those

Of Argus, and more wakeful than to drowse,

Charm'd with Arcadian pipe.

Milton, P. L.

He drowst upon his couch.

South, Serm. iv. 78.

D R U

2. To look heavy; not cheerful.

They rather drows'd; and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
An cloudy men use to their adversaries. Shakespeare, Ham. VI.

DRO'WSIED. n. s. Sleepiness; inclination to sleep.

Obsolete.
The royal virgin shook off drowsyhed;
And, rising forth out of her baser boure,
Look'd for her knight. Spenser, F. Q.

DRO'WSILY. adv. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepily; heavily; with an inclination to sleep.

The air swarms thick with wand'ring deities,
Which drowsingly like humming beetles rise. Dryden.

2. Sluggishly; idly; slothfully; lazily.

We satisfy our understanding with the first things, and, thereby satiated, slothfully and drowsily sit down. Raleigh.

DRO'WSINESS. n. s. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepiness; heaviness with sleep; disposition to sleep.

What a strange drowsiness possesses them!
In deep of night, when drowsiness
Hath lock'd up mortal sense, then listen I
To the celestial syren's harmony. Milton, Arcades.

What succour can I hope the muse will send,
Whose drowsiness hath wrong'd the muse's friend? Crashaw.
He passes his whole life in a dozed condition, between sleeping and waking, with a kind of drowsiness and confusion upon his senses. South.

He tint from his childhood has made rising betimes familiar to him, will not waste the best part of his life in drowsiness and lying a-bed. Locke.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, and lassitude, are signs of a plentiful meal in young people. Arbuthnot.

2. Idleness; indolence; inactivity.

It falleth out well, to shake off your drowsiness; for it seemed to be the trumpet of a war. Bacon, Holy War.

DRO'WSY. adj. [from drowsc.]

1. Sleepy; heavy with sleep; lethargick.

Drowsy am I, and yet can rarely sleep. Sidney.
Men drowsy, and desirous to sleep, or before the fit of an ague, do use to yawn and stretch. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
The flowers, call'd out of their beds,
Start and raise up their drowsy heads. Cleveland.
Drunken at last, and drowsy they depart,
Each to his house. Dryden.

2. Heavy; lulling; causing sleep.

Sir Guyon, mindful of his vows yplight,
Up rose from drowsy couch. Spenser, F. Q.
While thus she rested, on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind,
And feather'd quires that warbled in the shade,
And purling streams that through the meadow stray'd,
In drowsy murmurs lull'd the gentle maid. Addison.

3. Stupid; dull.

Those inadvertencies, a body would think, even our author, with all his drowsy reasoning, could never have been capable of. Atterbury.

DRO'WSY-HEADED.* adj. [drowsy and head.] Having a sluggish disposition; heavy.

The appetite of sleeping is as unsatiable as any of the rest, if a man do give himself unto it; as Solomon also observeth:
who so elegantly characterizeth the drowsy-headed sluggard, that no character in Theophrastus is more graphically described.
Fotherby, Athena, p. 200.

To DRUB.† v. a. [druber, to kill, Danish; drabba, Su. to contend or fight; treffen, Germ. to strike.] To thresh; to beat; to bang; to thump; to thwack; to cudgel. A word of contempt.

He that is valiant, and dares fight,
Though drubb'd, can lose no honour by't. Hudibras.
The little thief had been soundly drubbed with a good honest cudgel. L'Estrange.
Though the bread be not mine, yet, if it had been less than weight, I should have been drubbed. Locke.

D R U

DRUB. n. s. [from the verb.] A thump; a knock; a blow.

The blows and drubs I have receiv'd,
Have bruise'd my body, and bereav'd
My limbs of strength. Hudibras.

By setting an unfortunate mark on their followers, they have exposed them to innumerable drubs and contusions. Addison.

To DRUDGE.† v. n. [dreccan, to vex, Saxon; dragen, to carry, Dutch. So far Dr. Johnson. Mr. Horne Tooke shews that it is the past participle (drpoot, druze,) of the Sax. dreogan, to act, to suffer.] To labour in mean offices; to toil without honour or dignity; to work hard; to slave.

And to crack'd fiddle, and hoarse labour,
In merriment, did drudge and labour. Hudibras.
Advantages obtained by industry directed by philosophy, can never be expected from drudging ignorance. Glauville.

Soon he came to court,
Proffering for hire his service at the gate,
To drudge, draw water, and to run or wait. Dryden.

I made no such bargain with you, to live always drudging.
Dryden, Dedication.

To DRUDGE.* v. a. To consume tediously, or la- boriously.

What is an age, in dull renown drudg'd o'er?
One little single hour of love is more. Granville.

The poor sleep little: we must learn to watch
Our labours late, and early every morning,
Midst Winter frosts; then clad and fed with sparring,
Rise to our toils, and drudge away the day. Otway.

DRUDGE. n. s. [from the verb.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; one doomed to servile occu- pation.

To conclude, this drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

He sits above and laughs the while
At thee, ordain'd his drudge, to execute Whate'er his wrath shall bid. Milton, P. L.

Art thou our slave,
Our captive, at the publick mill our drudge,
And dar'st thou, at our sending and command,
Dispute thy coming? Milton, S. A.

He is content to be their drudge,
And on their errands gladly trudge. Hudibras.

The hard master makes men serve him for nought, who rewards his drudges and slaves with nothing but shame and sorrow, and misery. Tillotson.

DRUDGER. n. s. [from drudge.]

1. A mean labourer.

2. The drudging-box; the box out of which flour is thrown on roast meat. Dict.

DRUDGERY. n. s. [from drudge.] Mean labour; ignoble toil; dishonourable work; servile occupa- tion.

My old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry, and her drudgery. Shakespeare.

Were there not instruments for drudgery as well as offices of drudgery? Were there not people to receive orders as well as others to give and authorize them? L'Estrange.

You do not know the heavy grievances,
The toils, the labours, weary drudgeries,
Which they impose? Southern, Oroonoko.

To thee that drudgery of pow'r I give;
Cares be thy lot; reign thou, and let me live. Dryden.

Paradise was a place of bliss, as well as immortality, without drudgery, and without sorrow. Locke.

It is now handled by every dirty wench, and condemned to do her drudgery. Swift, Meditations on a Broomstick.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace-stone, looks gay. Thomson, Summer.

DRUDGING-BOX. n. s. [drudging and box.] The box out of which flour is sprinkled upon roast meat.

But if it lies too long, the crackling's pall'd,
Not by the drudging-box to be recall'd. King, Cookery.

D R U

DRUGGINGLY. adv. [from drudging.] Laboriously; toilsomely.

He does now all the meanest and triflingest things himself druggingly, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister. Ray on the Creation.

DRUG. † n. s. [drogue, French; droge, Sax. of drigan or drigan, to dry. Mr. H. Tooke.]

. An ingredient used in physick; a medicinal simple.

A fleet descry'd

Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs.

Milton, P. 1.

Judicious physick's noble art to gain,

He drugs and plants explor'd, alas, in vain!

South.

Bright Helen mix'd a birth-aspiring bowl,

Temper'd with drugs of sov'reign use, t' assuage

The boiling bosom of tumultuous rage.

Pope, Odyssey.

In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life. Baker, Reflex. on Learning.

. It is used sometimes for poison.

Mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law

Is death to any he that utters them.

Shakespeare.

And yet no doubts the poor man's draught control;

He dreads no poison, in his homely bowl;

Then fear the deadly drug, when gods divine

Euchase the cup, and sparkle in the wine.

Dryden.

. Any thing without worth or value; any thing of which no purchaser can be found.

Each noble vice

Shall bear a price,

And virtue shall a drug become;

An empty name,

Was all her fame,

But now she shall be dumb.

Dryden, Albion.

. A drudge. This seems the meaning here, Dr. Johnson says; that is, in the passage of Shakespeare, which is all he notices, as to this meaning. But it was formerly common. "Drudge, or drudge, a servant which doth all the vile service." Huloet. "Drudge, a drug, or kitchen-slave." Barret.

He from his first swath proceeded

Through sweet degrees that this brief world affords,

To such as may the passive drugs of it freely command.

Shakespeare.

To DRUG. v. a. [from the noun.]

. To season with ingredients, commonly medicinal.

The surfeited grocers

Do mock their charge with drugs. — I've drugg'd their pos.

That death and nature do contend about them. Shakespeare.

. To tincture with something offensive.

Of they assay'd,

Hunger and thirst e'er training; drugg'd as oft

With hatefullest drabish, with'd their jaws,

With soot and cinders fill'd.

Milton, P. L.

To DRUG.  n. s.* To prescribe or administer drugs.

Past all the doses of your drugging doctors. B. Johnson, Aich.

DRUGGER.  n. s.* [from drug.] Our old word for a druggist.

Fraternities and companies, I approve of, as merchants' burses, colleges of druggers, physicians, musicians, &c.

Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 63.

DRUGGERMAN.  n. s.* [δραγμάνος, Græco-Barb.

One who interprets. • Fr^t drogueman. It is sometimes written, in English, dragoman, and sometimes trudman. Chald. targeman. See TRUDGMAN.] An interpreter.

Your drugging prayers? Dryden, Don Sebast.

D R U

DRUGGET. † n. s. A slight kind of woollen stuff.

Even I, a dunce of more renown than they,

Was sent before but to prepare thy way;

And, coarsely clad in Norwich drugget, came

To teach the nations in thy greater name.

Dryden, Mac Flecknoe.

In druggets dress, of thirteen penec. a yard,

See Philip's son amidst his Persian guard.

Swift.

DRUGGIST. † n. s. [from drug. Dr. Johnson says.

Rather from our old substantive druggister, of which the next word, drugster, is another abbreviation.

Druggister is in Sherwood's Dictionary.] One who sells physical drugs.

Common nitre we bought at the druggist's.

Boyle.

DRUGSTER. n. s. [from drug.] One who sells physical simples.

Common oil of turpentine I bought at the drugster's.

Boyle.

They set the clergy below their apothecaries, the physician of the soul below the drugsters of the body.

South, Sermon. i. 158.

DRUID. † n. s. [In some editions of Dr. Johnson's Dictionary, this word is unaccountably left out.

But it is in the first; without any example, however; and with this short etymological notice:

"derio, oaks, and hud, incantation; which may be as ancient as the Grecian επος, Perron; darrach, oak, Erse." — The word deru in the Celtick, as derve in Welsh and Armorick, signifies an oak; and, as the druids held this tree in great reverence, it is supposed that their name was hence derived; the Gr. επος, an oak, offers, of course, the same reason.

The Welsh derwyddon, and the ancient Fr. druides, thus shew their original. Steele uses this word in the singular number; "the druid of the family." Tatler, No. 255.] One of the priests and philosophers of the ancient Britons and Gauls.

After he [Brute] had furnished Britain with new regiments and laws, there entered in a new fashioned sorte of priests; all differs from the other; and they were called druids. These dwelt in the forests, like heremites; and procured both public and private sacrifices to be done. To them was it always put to discuss all matters of religion; to appoint thereunto the ceremonies; to brynge up youthe in natural discipline; and to end all controversies.

Bale, Eng. Vat. P. i. (1560.) fol. 13. b.

That any law or superstition of our philosophers, the druids, forbade the Britons to write their memorable deeds, I know not why any out of Caesar should allege. Milton, Hist. of England.

The British druids took this isle of Anglesey, then well-stored with thick woods and religious groves, (in so much that it was then called Llwydwl, the dark isle,) for their chief residence.

Selden on Drayton's Polygl. S. 9.

DRUIDICAL.  adj.* [from druid.] Pertaining to the manners, rites, or customs, of the druids.

I have frequently wondered that our modern writers have made so little use of the druidical times, and the traditions of the old bards, which afford subjects fruitful of the most genuine poetry, with respect both to imagery and sentiment.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope

Any druidical anecdotes that I can meet with, I will be sure to send you when I return to Cambridge.

Gray, Letter to Mason.

In the battle of Hastings, said to be translated from the Saxon, Stonehenge is called a druidical temple.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 155.

DRUIDISM.  n. s.* [from druid.] The philosophy, or religion, of the druids.

The great and capital objects of their worship were taken from druidism; trees, stones, the elements, and the heavenly bodies.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. ii. 1.

DRUM. † n. s. [tromme, Danish; drumme, Erse.]

D R U

1. An instrument of military musick, consisting of vellum strained over a broad hoop on each side, and beaten with sticks.

Let's march without the noise of threat'ning drums.

Shakspeare.

In drums the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole, far more loud and strong than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air.

Bacon.

Tears trickling down their breasts bedew the ground, And drums and trumpets mix their mournful sound.

Dryden.

Now no more the drum

Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill

Affrights the wives, and chills the virgin's blood.

Philips.

2. The tympanum of the ear, or the membrane which perceives the vibration of the air.

3. In use, when Johnson wrote, for a large concourse of visitors; what is now called a rout.

The young ladies contented themselves to be found employed in domestick duties; for then routs, drums, balls, assemblies, and such like markets for women, were not known.

Rambler, No. 97.

Not dreaming the least of a drum or a rout.

Poems by Gent. of Oxford, (1757,) p. 5.

To DRUM. † v. n.

1. To beat a drum; to beat a tune on a drum.

There is still some talk about the drumming spirit in Wiltshire, but with many the story is as suspicious as that (which made no less noise) at Driffield.

Hill's Fam. Letters, L. 33. (dat. 1663.)

Fantome advances to him drumming.

Addison, Com. of the Drummer.

2. To beat with a pulsatory motion.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

Now, heart,

Set ope thy sluices, send the vigorous blood

Through every active limb for my relief;

Then take thy rest within the quiet cell;

For thou shalt drum no more.

Dryden.

3. To tinkle.

This indeed makes a noise, and drums in popular ears.

Brown, Rel. Medici.

A boiling stomach, rotten teeth, a stinking breath, a drumming ear.

Junius, Sin Stigm. p. 38.

To DRUM, * v. a. To expel with the sound of a drum. A military expression, signifying the greatest ignominy.

They drummed and trumpeted the wretches out of their hall of audience.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

To DRUMBLE. † v. n. [To drumble, in Devonshire, means to mutter in a sullen and inarticulate voice.

The Welsh drwm is sad. This may be easily converted into sluggish. So, in Pegge's Supplement to Grose's Glossary, "To drumble, to drone; i. e. to be sluggish." The drone is, in some places, called a drumbl-bee. And drumble and drone are still sometimes applied to a person muttering over and over the same circumstance.] To drone; to be sluggish.

Hanmer.

Take up these clothes here quickly: where's the cowstaff? Look, how you drumble: carry them to the landress in Dutch meal.

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

DRUMFISH. n. s. The name of a fish.

The under jaw of the drumfish from Virginia.

Woodward.

DRUMLY. * adj. [probably from drumble; in a true sense of sluggish.] Thick; stagnant; muddy.

D. Draw me some water out of this spring.

I. Madam, it is all foul—it is all drumly, black, muddy.

Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gramm. (1623,) p. 210.

DRUMMAJOR. n. s. [drum and major.] The chief drummer of a regiment.

D R U

Such company may chance to spoil the swearing;

And the drummajor's onths, of bulk unruly,

May dwindle to a feeble.

Cleaveland.

DRUMMAKER. n. s. [drum and maker.] He who deals in drums.

The drummer uses it, and the cabinetmaker.

Mortimer.

DRUMMER. n. s. [from drum.] He whose office it is to beat the drum.

Drummers, strike up, and let us march away.

Shakspeare.

Here rows of drummers stand in martial file,

And with their vellum-thunder shake the pile.

Gay.

DRUMSTICK. † n. s. [drum and stick.] The stick with which a drum is beaten.

I warrant you if the ghost appears, he'll whisk ye that wand before his eyes, and strike you the drumstick out of his hand.

Addison, Drummer.

DRUNK. adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with strong liquor; inebriated.

This was the morn when issuing on the guard,

Drawn up in rank and file, they stood prepar'd

Of seeming arms to make a short assay;

Then hasten to be drunk, the business of the day.

Dryden.

We generally conclude that man drunk, who takes pains to be thought sober.

Spectator.

2. Drenched or saturated with moisture.

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood.

Deut. xxxii. 42.

DRUNKARD. n. s. [from drunk.] One given to excessive use of strong liquors; one addicted to habitual ebriety.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion

Of my more fierce endeavour. I've seen drunkards

Do more than this in sport.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

My bowels cannot hide her woes,

But, like a drunkard, I must vomit them.

Shakspeare.

God will not take the drunkard's excuse, that he has so long accustomed himself to intemperate drinking, that now he cannot leave it off.

South.

DRUNKEN. † adj. [Sax. spuncen.]

1. Intoxicated with liquor; inebriated.

O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies!

Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man.

Shakspeare.

Drunken men imagine every thing turneth round: they imagine that things come upon them; they see not well things afar off; those things that they see near hand, they see out of their place, and sometimes they see things double.

Bacon.

2. Given to habitual ebriety.

Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler?

Shakspeare, Tempest.

3. Saturated with moisture.

She, therewith well uppaid,

The drunken lamp down in the oil did steep.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. ii. 47.

Then let the earth be drunken with our blood.

Shakspeare.

4. Done in a state of inclination.

When your carters, or your waiting vassals,

Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd

The precious image of our dear Redeemer,

You strait are on your knees for pardon, pardon.

Shakspeare.

We should for honour take

The drunken quarrels of a rake.

Swift.

DRUNKENLY. adj. [from drunken.] In a drunken manner.

My blood already, like the pelican,

Has thou tapt out, and drunkenly carous'd.

Shakspeare.

DRUNKENNESS. † n. s. [Sax. spuncenneffe.]

1. Intoxication with strong liquor.

Every going off from our natural and common temper, and our usual severity of behaviour, is a degree of drunkenness.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Holy Living.

2. Habitual ebriety.

The Lacedemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness, by bringing a drunken man into their company.

Watts on the Mind.

D R Y

3. Intoxication, or inebriation of any kind; disorder of the faculties.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore in its present workings not controllable by reason.

South, Serm. ii. 362.

DRY.† adj. [δρῖς, δρῖ, Sax. of δρῖzan.]

1. Arid; not wet; not moist.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon.

When God said,

Be guther'd now, ye waters under heaven,
Into one place, and let dry land appear! Milton, P. L.

Of turbid elements the sport;

From clear to cloudy tost, from hot to cold,
And dry to moist. Thomson.

2. Not rainy.

A dry March and a dry May portend a wholesome Summer, if there be a showering April between. Bacon.

The weather, we agreed, was too dry for the season.

Addison.

3. Not succulent; not juicy.

I will drain him dry as hay;

* Sleep shall neither night nor day

Hang upon his penthouse lid:

He shall live a man forbid. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

4. Being without tears.

Dry mourning will decay more deadly bring,

As a North wind burns a too forward Spring:

Give sorrow vent, and let the sighs go. Dryden.

Upon the reading of this letter, there was not a dry eye in the club. Addison, Spect. No. 517.

5. Thirsty; athirst.

* So dry he was for sway. Shakespeare, Ten-pist.

Void of a bulky charger near their lips,

With which, in often interrupted sleep,

Their frying blood compels to irrigate

Their dry furr'd tongues. Philips.

6. Jeune; barren; plain; unembellished; without pathos; without flowers.

As we should take care that our stile in writing be neither dry nor empty, we should look again it be not winding or wanton with far-fetched descriptions; either is a vice.

B. Jonson.

It remaineth to treat concerning ornaments within, or without the fabrick, a piece not so dry as the meer contemplation of proportions: and therefore, I hope, therein somewhat to refresh both the reader and myself. Wotton, Architecture.

That the fire burns by heat, is an empty dry return to the question, and leaves us still ignorant. Glanville.

It is a dry tale, with little or nothing in it. L'Estrange.

Authority and friendship work upon some, dry and sober reason works upon others. L'Estrange.

To clear up this theory, I was willing to lay aside dry subtilties with which the schools are filled. Burnet, Theology.

These epistles will become less dry, and more susceptible of ornament. Pope.

7. Wanting; barren. Applied to persons.

So am I innocent of all those joys,

And dry of those embraces. Dryden, Amphitryon.

8. Jeune; cold. Applied also to persons.

I asked his pardon for giving him the trouble of a letter to convey the Irish papers to him: he thanked me for them; and said, he had not seen so particular an account of those affairs before; but he was very dry as to all things else. Diary of Lord Clarendon, 1688—9.

9. In another personal application of the word, we say, he is a dry fellow, that is, a sarcastick man. See the next definition.

10. Sneering; sarcastical. Applied to things.

Have you not sometimes observed what dry looks, and sarcastical jeers the most underling fellows will now and then bestow upon their betters? Goodman, Wint. Ex. Conf. P. i.

11. Hard; severe. [drien anciently to endure; dree, Scottish, and old Eng. See To DREE.]

Of two noblemen the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, was there never a flout or dry-blow given? Bacon.

D R Y

I rather hop'd I should no more
Hear from you o' th' gallanting score;
For hard dry bastings used to prove
The readiest remedies of love;
Next a dry diet. Hudibras.

DRY-FOOT.* [In hunting.] A sort of adverbial expression, applied to a dog who pursues the game by the scent of the foot.

A hound that runs counter, and yet draws dry-foot well.

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

The truth is, my old master intends to follow my young, dry-foot, over Moorfields to London.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

All persons, licensed for making and training up of setting dogs, shall — be compelled to train up, teach, and make one or more hounds, to hunt on dry-foot. Irish Stat. 10 Will. III.

To DRY. v. a.

1. To free from moisture; to arefy; to exsiccate.

The meat was well, if you were so contented.

— I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt, and dry'd away. Shakespeare.

Heat, drieth bodies that do easily expire; as parchment, leaves, roots, and clay; and so doth time arefy. Bacon.

Herbs and flowers, if they be dried in the shade, or dried in the hot sun a small time, keep best. Bacon.

The runningstreams are deep:

See, they have caught the father of the flock,
Who drys his fleece upon the neighbouring rock. Dryden.

2. To exhale moisture.

'Twas grief no more, or grief and rage were one,

Within her soul: at last 'twas rage alone;

Which burning upwards in succession, dries

The tears that stood considering in her eyes Dryden.

3. To wipe away moisture.

Then with her vest the wound she wipes and dries.

Denham.

See, at your blest returning,

Rage disappears;

The widow'd isle in mourning,

Dries up her tears. Dryden, Albion.

4. To scorch with thirst.

Their honourable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst. Isaiah, v. 13.

5. To drain; to exhaust.

Rash Elphnor, in an evil hour,

Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought

T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep

Imprudent: him, death's iron sleep oppress. Philips.

6. To DRY up. To deprive totally of moisture; to take all moisture away.

The water of the sea, which formerly covered it, was in time exhaled and dried up by the sun. Woodward.

To DRY.† v. n. To grow dry; to lose moisture; to be drained of its moisture.

The deeps of the river shall dry up. Zechariah, x. 11.

To dry and desiccate like the mummies in Egypt.

Meant, Greek Church, p. 277.

To DRY-RUB.* v. a. [dry and rub.] To make clean without wetting.

At twelve years old the sprightly youth is able

To turn a pancake, or dry-rub a table. Anon. in Dodsley's Coll. of Poems.

DRY'AD.* n. s. [Gr. ἐρύς, an oak.] A wood-nymph.

Soft she withdrew; and, like a wood-nymph light,

Orcad, or Dryad, or of Delia's train,

Betook her to the groves. Milton, P. L.

DRY'ER. n. s. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture.

The ill effects of drinking are relieved by this plant, which is a great dryer and open-r, especially by perspiration.

Temple.

DRY'EYED. adj. [dry and eye.] Without tears; without weeping.

DRY

Sight so deform, what heart of rock could long Drye'd behold? Adam could not, but wept. Milton, P. L.

DRY-FAT.* n. s. [dry and Sax. fat.] A large basket, or receiver, in which liquids are not put; in opposition to fat. See VAT.

The poor gentleman was faine to put me in a driefalte of feathers that stood in an old chamber.

Tagleton, News out of Purgatory, (1590.)
I'll undertake, and with much ease, to buy his birth-right of him for a dry-fat of new books.

Beaum. and Fl. Elder Brother.
Such pamphlets, whereof we have abroad so good store, as I think would freight a dry-fat to the mart.

Mountagu, App. to Cas. p. 245.

DRY-ly.† adv. [from dry.]

1. Without moisture.

Like one of our French withered pears, it looks ill, it eats dryly. Shakspeare, All's well.

2. Coldly; frigidly; without affection.

The archduke, conscious to himself how dryly the king had been used by his council, did strive to recover the king's affection. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Would'st thou to honour and preferments climb,
Be bold in mischief, dare some mighty crime,
Which dungeons, death, or banishment deserves;
For virtue is but dryly prais'd, and starves. Dryden, Juv.

3. Jejunely; barrenly; without ornament or embellishment.

Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made. Pope.

4. Slyly; sarcastically.

DRY'NESS.† n. s. [from dry.]

1. Want of moisture; siccidity.

The Africans are conceived to be peculiarly scorched and tormented by the sun, by dryness from the soil, from want and defect of water. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Such was the discord which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists. Denham.

The marrow supplies an oil for the inunction of the bones and ligaments in the articulations, and particularly of the ligaments; preserving them from dryness and rigidity, and keeping them supple and flexible. Ray on the Creation.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Why then must we fancy this impossible dryness, and then, upon that fictitious account, calumniate nature? Bentley.

2. Want of succulence.

If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for't. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The difference of muscular flesh depends upon the hardness, tenderness, moisture, or dryness of the fibres. Arbuthnot.

3. Exhaustion.

This will preserve borrowing from any general stop or dryness. Bacon, Ess. of Usury.

4. Want of embellishment; want of pathos; jejune-ness; barrenness; coldness.

Their new flowers and sweetness do as much corrupt as others dryness and squalor, if they chuse not carefully. B. Jonson.

Be faithful where the author excels, and paraphrase where penury of fancy or dryness of expression ask it. Garth.

He spoke little and very slowly, and most commonly with a disgusting dryness, which was his character at all times, except in a day of battle. Burnet, Hist. of his own Times, Charact. of Will. III.

5. Want of sensibility in devotion; want of ardour; aridity.

It may be, that by this dryness of spirit God intends to make us the more fervent and resigned in our direct and solemn devotions, by the perceiving of our weakness. Dr. Taylor.

DRY-NURSE.† n. s. [dry and nurse.]

VOL. II.

DUB

1. A woman who brings up and feeds a child without the breast.

Her nurse, whose name was Deborah, did not suckle her, perhaps; but was, as we speak, her drynurse.

Sp. Patrick on Genesis.

2. One who takes care of another: with some contempt of the person taken care of.

Mistress Quickly is his nurse, or his drynurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer. Shakspeare.

To DRY-NURSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed without the breast.

As Romulus a wolf did rear,
So he was drynurs'd by a bear. Hudibras.

DRY-SALTER.* n. s. A dealer in salted or dried meats, sauces, oils, pickles, and various other articles.

Almost thirty years have elapsed since I heard by accident of a drysalter, who had acquired a great reputation and a large fortune, from possessing a secret that had enabled him to send out to the Indies, and other hot countries, beef and pork, in a better state of preservation than any of the trade. As he was observed to pour into each cask a small bottle of transparent liquor, it occurred to me, that this could be no other than the spirit of sea-salt.

Sir W. Fordyce on the Muriat. Acid, (1796,) p. 7.

DRY-SHOD. adj. [dry and shod.] Without wet feet; without treading above the shoes in the water.

He had embarked us in such disadvantage, as we could not return dryshod. Sidney.

Dryshod to pass, she parts the floods in tway;
And eke huge mountains from their native seat
She would command themselves to bear away. Spenser, F. Q.

Has honour's fountain then suck'd back the stream?
He has; and hooting boys may dryshod pass,
And gather pebbles from the naked ford. Dryden.

DUAL.† adj. [dualis, Lat.] Expressing the number two.

The word is dual, and tells of two armies, and no more.

Lightfoot, Muccl. (1629,) p. 142.

Modern languages have only one variation, and so the Latin; but the Greek and Hebrew have one to signify two, and another to signify more than two: under one variation the noun is said to be of the dual number, and under the other of the plural. Clarke, Lat. Grammar.

DUALITY.* n. s. [from dual.]

1. That which expresses two in number; the state of being two.

There was lately raised in the church a controverſie concerning the duality or unity of wills in Christ.

Hales, Rev. p. 22.

A duality or binary number of persons. South, Serm. iv. 270.

2. Division; separation.

Then sith that unity hath so great grace,
And that duality be so deform'd,
Let's not be two. Davies, W. Pilgrim. sign. G. 4. b.

But he's the fount of foul duality,
That wicked witch Duessa is his bride.

More, Song of the Soul, lib. 26.

To DUB.† v. a. [hubban to pubepe, Saxon; ad-dubba till riddara, Icelandick, to dub a knight.

Addubba, in its primary sense, signifies to strike, knights being made by a blow with the sword. So far Dr. Johnson. But the word may be referred to the ancient French adoubier, “habiller, équiper, armer, garnir, arranger, faire un chevalier, le revêter et l'armer des vêtements de la chevalerie, du mot Latin adaptare, qui a ces significations, et non pas d'adoptare, adopter, comme le prétend M. Du Cange.”

Gloss. Fabliaux, par Barbazan, edit. Meon. Thus, Sir Burben tells Sir Artegall, in the Fairy Queen of Spenser, that he was dubbed knight by the Knight of the Redcross, “who gave him arms in field to fight.”

DUB

1. To make a man a knight.
Knight, knight, good mother! Basilisco like.
What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder. Shakespeare.
The robes which the kings then allowed to each knight, when he was dubb'd, of green or burnet, as they spake in that age, appeareth upon record. Camden, Rem.
The king stood up under his cloth of state, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubb'd the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward on Edw. VI.
2. To confer any kind of dignity, or new character.
The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
He
Gave thee no instance why thou should'st do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor. Shakespeare.
Women commence by Cupid's dart,
As a king hunting dubs a hart. Cleveland.
A plain gentleman, of an ancient family, is of better quality than a new knight, though the reason of his dubbing was meritorious. Collier on Pride.
O, poet! thou had'st been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou had'st dubb'd thy star a meteor,
That did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.
These demonjacks let me dub
With the name of legion club. Swift.
A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth;
Venus shall give him form, and Anstis birth. Pope.
- To DUB.* v. n. [from the sound.] To make a quick or brisk noise.
But say, Sir Huon,
Now the drum dubs, —
What trade do you mean to follow?
Beaum. and Fl. Mad Lover.
- DUB. n. s. [from the verb.] A blow; a knock.
As skilful coopers hoop their tubs
With Lydian and with Phrygian dubs. Hudibras.
- DUB.* n. s. [Irish dob; Gael. duba; a pond, a gutter.] A puddle; still in use in the north of England.
- DUBBED.* adj. Blunt. A common expression in many places. But I know not where to discover its etymology.
- DUBIETY.* n. s. [Lat. dubietas.] Uncertainty;
doubtfulness.
As we are naturally prone to action, a state of dubiety and suspense is ever accompanied with uneasiness. Richardson.
- DUBIETY. n. s. [from dubious.] A thing doubtful.
A word not used.
Men often swallow falsities for truths, dubiosities for certainties, feasibilities for possibilities, and things impossible for possible. Brown, Vulg. Err.
- DUBIOUS.* adj. [dubius, Lat.]
1. Doubtful; not settled in an opinion.
Dubious he stray'd, with wav'ring thoughts possess'd,
Alternate passions struggling shar'd his breast. Shenstone.
2. Uncertain; that of which the truth is not fully known.
No quick reply to dubious questions make. Denham.
We also call it a dubious or doubtful proposition, when there are no arguments on either side. Watts, Logick.
3. Not plain; not clear.
Satan with less toil, and now with ease,
Waits on the calmer wave by dubious light. Milton, P. L.
4. Having the event uncertain.
His utmost power with adverse pow'r oppos'd,
In dubious battle, on the plains of heav'n. Milton, P. L.
- DUBIOUSLY. adv. [from dubious.] Uncertainly;
without any determination.
Authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict definitive truth. Brown, Vulg. Err.
Almanackmakers wander in generals, and talk dubiously, and leave to the reader the business of interpreting. Swift.

DUC

- DUBIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from dubious.] Uncertainty;
doubtfulness.
She speaks with dubiousness, not with the certainty of a goddess. Broom.
The dubiousness of this affair seems to be the reason of Mr. Ashmole's omission. Introduct. to Ashmole's Berks.
- DUBITABLE.* adj. [dubito, Lat.] Doubtful; uncertain; what may be doubted.
"Whatsoever is not of faith, is sin"; and therefore the ground of invocation of saints or angels being at least dubitable, their invocation is sin. More, Antidote against Idolatry, p. 25.
It hath been a question very dubitable, and not meanly con-troverted, what side the Greek church hath maintained in this dispute. Ricaut, Greek Church, p. 182.
- DUBITANCY.* n. s. [Lat. dubitans.] Doubt; uncertainty.
Only our stupid, undisciplined, absurd, illogical hearts have the skill to avoid it, running headlong and wilfully after the old impurities, even then when they are most fully without all dubitancy resolved, that all the joys of heaven are forfeited by this choice. Hammond, Sermon, vi.
- DUBITATION. n. s. [dubitatio, Lat.] The act of doubting; doubt.
Many of the ancients denied the antipodes; but the experience of our enlarged navigation can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown, Vulg. Err.
Dubitatio may be called a negative perception; that is, when I perceive that what I see, is not what I would see. Grew.
- DUCAL. adj. [from duke.] Pertaining to a duke; as,
a ducal coronet.
- DUCAT. n. s. [from duke.] A coin struck by dukes:
in silver valued at about four shillings and sixpence; in gold at nine shillings and six-pence.
I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. Shakespeare.
There was one that died in debt: it was reported, where his creditors were, that he was dead: one said, he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine into the other world. Bacon.
- DUCHESS.* See DUTCHESS.
- DUCHY.* See DUTCHY.
- DUCK.* n. s. [anas; ducken, to dip, Dutch.]
1. A water fowl, both wild and tame.
The ducks that heard the proclamation cried,
And fear'd a prosecution might betide,
Full twenty miles from town their voyage take,
Obscure in rushes of the liquid lake. Dryden.
Grubs, if you find your land subject to, turn ducks into it.
Mortimer, Husbandry.
2. A word of endearment, or fondness.
Will you buy any tape or lace for your cap,
My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.
Prythee go in, my duck; I'll but speak to 'em.
Beaum. and Fl. Span. Curate.
3. A declination of the head: so called from the frequent action of a duck in the water.
Back, shepherds, back; enough your play,
Till next sunshine holyday:
Here be, without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes, and such court guise
As Mercury did first devise. Milton, Comus.
4. A stone thrown obliquely on the waters so as to strike it and rebound.
Neither cross and pile, nor ducks and drakes, are quite so ancient as handy-dandy. Arbuthnot and Pope.
5. From the foregoing expression, which describes a sport among children, has arisen a phrase, to make ducks and drakes with one's property or money, that is, to squander it, to hurl it away, like children hurling their slates or stones.
Play at duck and drake with my money! take heed, sidler.
Beaum. and Fl. The Chances.

D U C

Did I ever enslave myself to money; or, on the other side, make ducks and drakes with it, and squander it away in gaming, revelling, and whoring? L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo.

To DUCK.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dive under water as a duck.

The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiercely leapt;
And deep himself, he ducked in the same,
That in the lake his lofty crest was steep. Spenser, F. Q.

Let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus high, and duck again as low
As hell's from heav'n. Shakespeare, Othello.

Well, my dear brother, if I 'scape drowning, 'tis your turn next to sink, you shall duck twice before I help you.
Beaumont and Fl. Scornful Lady.

Thou art wickedly devout;
In Thier ducking thrice, by break of day. Dryden.

2. To drop down the head, as a duck.

As some raw youth in country bred,
When at a skirmish first he hears
The bullets whistling round his ears,
Will duck his head aside, will start,
And feel a treabbling at his heart. Swift.

3. To bow low; to cringe. * In Scottish duyk, or juyk, to make obeisance, is still used.

I cannot flatter and look fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods and apish courtesy. Shakespeare.

The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakespeare, Timon.
Sometimes five imprimatur are seen together dialogue-wise in the piazza of one title-page, complimenting and ducking each to other with their shaven reverences. Milton, Areopagitica.

To DUCK.† v. a. To put under water.

And down I sprang with all the force I could,
So duck't, that neither head nor foot were seen.
Mir. for M. g. p. 21.

The art of swimming, he that will attain to't,
Must fall down plump, and duck himself at first,
And that will make him hardy.
Beaumont and Fl. Wit at Sev. Weapons.

DU'CKER.† n. s. [from duck.]

1. A diver.

This bird [the didapper] is also called a doucker, [a corruption of ducker,] and a dabchick. Ray, Diet. Tril. p. 21.

2. A cringer.

Let no dainty duckers
Up with your three-pil'd spirits, your wrought valours.
Beaumont and Fl. Philaster.

DU'CKINGSTOOL.† n. s. [duck and stool.] A chair in which scolds are tied, and put under water. A corruption of cucking-stool; which has happened on account of the ducking, or immersion, which the scold underwent. See CUCKINGSTOOL.

She in the duckingstool should take her seat,
Drest like herself in a great chair of state. Dorset.

Reclaim the obstinately opprobrious and virulent women, and make the duckingstool more useful. Addison, Freeholder.

DU'CKLEGGED. adj. [duck and leg.] Short legged.

Ducklegg'd, short waisted, such a dwarf she is,
That she must rise on tiptoes for a kiss. Dryden, Juv.

DU'CKLING,† n. s. [from duck.]

1. A young duck; the brood of the duck.

Ducklings, though hatched and led by a hen, if she brings them to the brink of a river or pond, presently leave her, and in they go. Ray on the Creation.

Ev'ry morn
Amid the ducklings let her scatter corn. Gay, Pastorals.

2. A word of fondness.

But hark you, duckling; be sure you do not tell him that I am let into the secret. Addison, Drummer.

DU'CKMEAT. n. s. [duck and meat; lens palustris.] A common plant growing in standing waters.

D U C

To DUCKO'Y. v. a. [mistaken for decoy: the decoy being commonly practised upon ducks, produced the error.] To entice to a snare.

This fish hath a slender membranous string, which he projects and draws in at pleasure, as a serpent doth his tongue:
with this he duckoys little fishes, and preys upon them. Grew.

DUCKCO'Y. n. s. Any means of enticing and ensnaring.

Seducers have found it the most compendious way to their designs to lead captive silly women, and make them the duck-coys to their whole family. Decay of Piety.

DU'CKSFOOT. n. s. Black snakeroot, or Mayapple.

DU'CKWEED. n. s. [duck and weed.] The same with duckmeal.

That we call duckweed hath a leaf no bigger than a thymeleaf, but of a fresher green; and putteth forth a little string into the water, far from the bottom. Bacon.

DUCT.† n. s. [ductus, Lat.]

1. Guidance; direction.

This doctrine, by fastening all our actions, by a fatal decree at the foot of God's chair, leaves nothing to us but only to obey our fate, to follow the duct of the stars, or necessity of those iron chains which we are born under.
Hammond.

According to the duct of this hypothesis
Glennville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 146.

2. A passage through which anything is conducted:
a term chiefly used by anatomists, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the anatomical remarks of Addison and Arbuthnot. Our publick language uses it in a more general way.

A duct from each of those cells ran into the root of the tongue, where both joined together, and passed forward in one common duct to the tip of it. Addison, Spectator.

It was observed, that the chyle in the thorack duct retained the original taste of the aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The commissioners are impowered to contract with any persons for making and perfecting any channel, course, main cut, or duct, through any of the grounds.
Acts of Parl. 16 Georg. III. ch. 56.

DU'CTILE. adj. [ductilis, Lat.]

1. Flexible; pliable.

Thick woods and gloomy night
Conceal the happy plant from human sight:
One bough it bears; but, wondrous to behold,
The ductile rind and leaves of radiant gold. Dryden, Æn.

2. Easy to be drawn out into length, or expanded.

All bodies, ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn or thread, have the appetite of not discontinuing strong. Bacon.
Gold, as it is the purest, so it is the softest and most ductile of all metals. Dryden.

3. Tractable; obsequious; complying; yielding.

He generous thoughts instills
Of true nobility; forms their ductile minds
To human virtues. Philips.

Their designing leaders cannot desire a more ductile and easy people to work upon. Addison, Freeholder.

DU'CTILENESS. n. s. [from ductile.] Flexibility;
ductility.

I, when I value gold, may think upon
The ductilness, the application;
The wholesomeness, the ingenuity,
From rust, from soil, from fire ever free. Dennie.

DUCT'ILITY.† n. s. [from ductile.]

1. Quality of suffering extension; flexibility.

Yellow colour and ductility are properties of gold: they belong to all gold, but not only to gold; for saffron is also yellow, and lead is ductile. Watts, Logic.

2. Obsequiousness; compliance.

This ductility of spirit commendeth men, as well as that other doth metals. Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 44.

Which considerations, I suppose, drove Origen to assert, that Christ's soul had such a command over his body, and his body such a ductility to comply with those commands, that the soul could contract or expand it, into what compass, or transfigure it into what shape, it pleased. South, Serm. i. 15.

DUCTURE.* n. s. [Lat. ducturus.] Direction; guidance.

So far as the ducture of common reason, scripture, and experience will direct our enquiries, we shall find that there are three ways, by which he powerfully reaches, and operates upon the minds of men. South, Serm. v. 109.

Interest and design are a kind of force upon the soul, bearing a man oftentimes beside the ducture of his native propensities, and the first outgoings of his will.

South, Serm. viii. 28.

DUDGEON.† n. s. [dolch, German, Dr. Johnson says. Rather perhaps from the Germ. degen, a sword. Our weapon is termed by Cotgrave "a Scottish dagger, or dudgeon-haft dagger," and rendered dague à roïlles, that is, a dagger perhaps with a handle of defence, a little plate of iron. It is remarkable, that the particular passage, which I cite from Beaumont and Fletcher, should have escaped the notice of those who have illustrated the Hudibras of Butler; the application of the phrase in it being given to men of the same spirit, and inclination, as the redoubted Hudibras.]

1. A small dagger.

There's ne'er a one of these, the worst and weakest, (Choose where you will,) but dare attempt the raising, Against the sovereign peace of puritans, A may-pole and a morrice, maugre mainly Their zeal and dudgeon daggers. Beaum. and Fl. Tamer tamed.

He [Dr. Harvey] in his younger days wore a dagger, as the fashion then was; nay, I remember my old schoolmaster, Mr. Latinfer, at 70, wore a dudgeon, with a knife and bodkin.

Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 382.

It was a servicable dudgeon, Either for fighting or for drudging. Hudibras.

2. Malice; sullenness; malignity; ill-will.

When civil dudgeon first grew high, And men fell out they knew not why. Hudibras.
The cuckoo took this a little in dudgeon. L'Estrange.

DUE. adj. The participle passive of owe. [dû, Fr.]

1. Owed; that which any one has a right to demand in consequence of a compact, or for any other reason.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation and gracing, where causes are well handled and fair pleaded. There is likewise due to the publick a civil reprehension of advocates, where there appeareth cunning, gross neglect, or slight information. Baron.

Mirth and cheerfulness are but the due reward of innocency of life. More, Divine Dialogues.

A present blessing upon our fasts is neither originally due from God's notice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity.

Smalridge, Sermons.

There is a respect due to mankind, which should incline ever the wisest of men to follow innocent customs. Watts.

2. Proper; fit; appropriate.

Opportunity may be taken to excite, in persons attending on these solemnities, a due sense of the vanity of earthly satisfactions. Atterbury.

3. Exact; without deviation.

You might see him come towards me beating the ground in so due time, as no dancer can observe better measure. Sidney.
And Eve within, due at her hour, prepar'd
For dinner savoury fruits. Milton, P. L.

4. Consequent to; occasioned or effected by. Proper, but not usual.

The motion of the oily drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit which may tumble them to and fro. Boyle.

DUE. adv. [from the adjective.] Exactly; directly; duly. The course is due east, or due west.

Like the Pontick sea,

Whose icy current, and compulsive course,
Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on
To the Propontick and the Hellespont. Shakespeare, Othello.

DUE. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. That which belongs to one; that which may be justly claimed.

My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me Shakespeare.

The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Thou better know'st
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude:
Thy half o' th' kingdom thou hast not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The due of honour in no point omit. Shakespeare, Cymb.

I take this garland, not as given by you,

But as my merit, and my beauty's due. Dryden.

No popular assembly ever knew, or proposed, or declared what share of power was their due. Swift.

2. Right; just title.

The key of this infernal pit by due,
And by command of heav'n's all-powerful king,
I keep. Milton, P. L.

3. Whatever custom or law requires to be done.

Befriend

Us thy vow'd priests, till the utmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out. Milton, Commus.
They pay the dead his annual dues. Dryden.

4. Custom; tribute; exactions; legal or customary perquisites.

In respect of the exorbitant dues that are paid at most other ports, this deservedly retains the name of free. Addison.

TO DUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay as due; perhaps for endow. It is perhaps only in this single passage.

This is the latest glory of their praise,
That I thy enemy due thee withal. Shakespeare.

DUEFUL.* adj. [from due.] Fit; becoming.

All which that day in order seemly good
Did on the Thames attend, and waited well
To doe their duefull service, as to them befall. Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 44.

DU'ENESS.* n. s. [from due.] Fitness. This word is somewhere used by Glanville.

DUEL.† n. s. [duel, old French; duello, Ital. duellum, Latin.] A combat between two; a single fight; contention between two.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet if it be tried by the gross, go on the other side. Baron.

That which the proud Spirit would have had Christ to have done to him in his great duel, the same he now doth unto Christ, fearfully, servilely, forcedly. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 2.

Dream not of their fight:
As of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head or heel. Milton, P. L.

Victory and triumph to the Son of God,
Now entering his great duel, not of arms,
But to vanquish by wisdom hellish wiles. Milton, P. R.

'Twas I that wrong'd you; you my life have sought:
No duel ever was more justly fought. Waller.

TO DUEL.† v. n. [from the noun.] To fight a single combat.

With the king of France duelled he.

We come not hither to debate, but to combat; not to cavil, but to duel. Metrical Romances, iii. 297.
Baron, Cyprian Acad. (1648.) p. 23.

DUE

If death be not more formidable than hell, you are fit for a reserve, or forlorn hope, for the cannon's mouth, for cuirassiers, for fiends to duel with. Hammond, Serm. viii.

TO DUEL.† v. a. To attack or fight with singly.

Who single
Duelt d their armies, rank'd in proud array,
Himself an army, now unequal match
To save himself against a coward arm'd,
At one spear's length.

Milton, S. A.

He must at length, poor man! die dully of old age at home; when here he might so fashionably and genteelly, long before that time, have been duelled or fluxed into another world!

South, Serm. vol. ii. S. 6.

On its other side is a plain field near the sea, which is said to be the stage on which St. George duelled and killed the dragon. Maundrell, Journey to Aleppo, p. 38.

DUELLER.† n. s. [from duel.] A single combatant.

Fourthly, each dueller challengeth his King as unable or unwilling legally to fight him, and therefore he usurps the office himself. Fuller, Holy State, p. 115.

You may also see the hope and support of many a flourishing family untimely cut off by the sword of a drunken dueller, in vindication of something that he miscalls his honour.

South, Serm. vi. 119.

They perhaps begin as single duellers, but then they soon get their troops about them. Decay of Piety.

DUELLING.* n. s. [from duel.] The custom of fighting duels.

The challenging and fighting with a man is called duelling.

Locke.

Shakspeare, in As you like it, has rallied the mode of formal duelling, then so prevalent, with the highest humour and address; nor could he have treated it with a happier contempt, than by making his clown so knowing in the forms and preliminaries of it. Warburton.

DUELLIST.† n. s. [from duel.]

1. A single combatant.

If the king ends the differences, the case will fall out no worse than when two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword again, without further hurt. Suckling.

Henceforth let poets, ere allow'd to write,
Be search'd like duellists before they fight. Dryden.

You imagine, perhaps, that a contempt for your own life gives you a right to take that of another: but where, Sir, is the difference between a duellist, who hazards a life of no value, and the murderer who acts with greater security? Is it any diminution of the gamester's fraud, when he alleges that he has staked a counter? Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield.

2. One who professes to study the rules of honour.

He fights as you sing, prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion—the very butcher of a silk button, a duellist, a gentleman of the very first house; of the first and second cause! Ah! the immortal passado! the punto reverso!

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

His bought arms Mung not lik'd; for his first day
Of bearing them in field, he threw 'em away;
And hath no honour lost, our duellists say. B. Jonson.

DUELLO.† n. s. [Italian.] The duel; the rule of duelling.

The gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the duello avoid it. Shakspeare.
Spurn out the duelloes out o' the kingdom.

Beaumont and Fl. Passionate Madman.

DUEÑA. n. s. [Spanish.] An old woman kept to guard a younger.

I felt the ardour of my passion increase as the season advanced, till in the month of July I could no longer contain: I bribed her dueña, was admitted to the bath, saw her undressed, and the wonder displayed. Arbutnot and Pope.

DUEY.* n. s. [Ital. due, two.] An air, vocal or instrumental, for two performers.

In the choral parts the experiment has succeeded better than in the solo airs, and duets. Mason on Ch. Music, p. 119.

DUG. n. s. [deggia, to give suck, Icelandic.]

DUL

1. A pap; a nipple; a teat: spoken of beasts, or in malice or contempt of human beings.

Of her there bred

A thousand young ones, which she daily fed,
Sucking upon her poisonous dugs; each one
Of sundry shape, yet all ill favoured.

Spenser, F. Q.

They are first fed and nourished with the milk of a strange dug. Raleigh, Hist.

Then shines the goat, whose brutish dugs supply'd
The infant Jove, and nurs'd his growing pride. Creech.

2. It seems to have been used formerly of the breast without reproach.

It was a faithless squire that was the source

Of all my sorrow, and of these sad tears;

With whom, from tender dug of common nourse,

At once I was up brought.

Spenser, F. Q.

As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,

Dying with mother's dug between its lips.

Shakspeare.

DUG. preterit. and part. pass. of dig.

They had often found medals, and pipes of lead, as they dug among the rubbish. Addison on Italy.

DUKE.† n. s. [duc, Fr. dux, Lat.].

1. A general; a leader. This is the primitive sense; but it is unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.

Of thee a duke shall go out, that shall governe my people of Israel. Hiclipe, St. Matt. ii.

Herself the dame of Carthage kill'd,

When as the Trojan duke did her forsake.

Harrington, Orl. Furioso.

2. One of the highest order of nobility in England; in rank a nobleman next to the royal family.

The duke of Cornwall, and Regan, his dutchess, will be here with him this night. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Auricular, Surrey, and Exeter must lose

The names of dukes, their titles, dignities,

And whatsoever profits thereby rise.

Daniel, Civ. Wars.

DU'KEDOM.† n. s. [from duke.]

1. The seigniory or possessions of a duke.

Her brother found a wife,

Where he himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom

In a poor isle.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

The cardinal never resigned his purple for the prospect of giving an heir to the dukedom of Tuscany. Addison.

2. The title or quality of a duke.

Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. III.

DULBRAINED. adj. [dull and brain.] Stupid; doltish; foolish.

This arm of mine hath chastised

The petty rebel, dulbrain'd Buckingham.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

DULCET.† adj. [dulcis, Lat.].

1. Sweet to the taste; luscious.

This dulcet water in four parts did spout;

Of which there flowed four rivers right cleare;

I did then taste the aromattick licoure,

Fragrant of fume, and sweete as any floure.

Hawes, Hist. Gr. Amoure, (1555), ch. 4.

From sweet kernels press'd,

She tempers dulcet creams; nor these to hold

Wants she fit vessels pure.

Milton, P. L.

2. Sweet to the ear; harmonious; melodious.

I sat upon a promontory,

And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,

Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,

That the rude sea grew civil at her song.

Shakspeare.

A fabrick huge

Rose like an exhalation, with the sound

Of dulcet symphonies, and voices sweet.

Milton, P. L.

3. Sweet to the mind.

And whereas they entitle philosophy to be a rigid and austere poetry; they have, on the contrary, styled poetry a dulcet and gentle philosophy, which leads on and guides us by the hand to action with ravishing delight, and incredible sweetness.

DUL

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

DULCIFICATION. n. s. [from dulcify.] The act of sweetening; the act of freeing from acidity, saltiness, or acrimony.

In colcothar the exactest calcination, followed by an exquisite dulcification, does not reduce the remaining body into elementary earth; for after the salt of vitriol, if the calcination have been too faint, is drawn out of the colcothar, the residue is not earth, but a mixt body, rich in medical virtues.
Boyle.

To DULCIFY. v. a. [dulcifier, Fr.] To sweeten; to set free from acidity, saltiness, or acrimony of any kind.

A decoction of wild gourd, or colocynthis, though somewhat qualified, will not from every hand be dulcified into aliment, by an addition of flour or meal.
Brown.

I dressed him with a pledgit, dipt in a dulcified tincture of vitriol.
Wiseman, Surgery.

Spirit of wine dulcifies spirit of salt; nitre or vitriol have other bad effects.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DULCIMER. n. s. [dolcimello, Skinner.] A musical instrument played by striking the brass wires with little sticks.

Ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of musick.
Dan. iii.

DULCITUDE. n. s. [Lat. dulcitus.] Sweetness.

Cockeram.

To DULCORATE. v. a. [from dulcor, Lat.]

1. To sweeten.

The ancients, for the dulcorating of fruit, do commend swine's dung above all other dung.
Bacon.

2. To make less acrimonious.

Turbith mineral, as it is sold in the shops, is a rough medicine; but being somewhat dulcorated, first procureth vomiting, and then salivation.
Wiseman, Surgery.

DULCORATION. n. s. [from dulcorate.] The act of sweetening.

Malt gathereth a sweetness to the taste, which appeareth in the wort: the dulcoration of things is worthy to be tried to the full; for that dulcoration importeth a degree to nourishment: and the making of things inalimental to become alimental, may be an experiment of great profit.
Bacon.

DULCOUR. n. s. [Lat. dulcor.] Sweetness.

This sort of wine is at this time made use of, out of no less mystery, than that by its colour and dulcour they might be remembered of the purity and delightfulness of the law.

L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 176.

DULHEAD. n. s. [dull and head.] A blockhead; a wretch foolish and stupid; a dolt.

This people be fools and dulheads to all goodness; but subtle, cunning, and bold in any mischief.
Ascham.

QULIA. n. s. [Qulua.] An inferior kind of adoration.

Paleofus saith, that the same worship which is given to the prototype may be given to the image; but with the different degrees of latria and qulia.

Sidney.
O help thou my weak wit, and sharpen my dull tongue.
Spenser, F. Q.

Memory is so necessary to all conditions of life, that we are not to fear it should grow dull for want of exercise, if exercise would make it stronger.
Locke.

4. Hebated; not quick.

This people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing.
St. Matt. xiii. 15.

The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension; now that fear is sharpened and pointed.
Bacon.

5. Sad; melancholy.

Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends;
Unless some dull and favourable hand
Will whisper musick to my weary spirit.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

A man

So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone.
Shakespeare.

6. Sluggish; heavy; slow of motion.

Thenceforth the waters waxed dull and slow,
And all that drunk thereof did faint and feeble grow.

Spenser, F. Q.

4. To hebetate; to weaken.

Now forc'd to overflow with brackish tears, The troublous noise did dull their dainty ears. Spenser, F. Q.
Nothing hath more dulled the wits, or taken away the will of children from learning, than care in making of Latin. Ascham.

Dulling my bodily senses to the meats and eases of this world. Donne, Dev. p. 36.

5. To damp; to clog.

Prayers were short, as if darts thrown out with a sudden quickness, lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker.

In bodies, union strengtheneth and cherisheth any natural action; and, on the other side, weakeneth and dulleth any violent impression; and even so is it of minds. Bacon.

6. To make heavy, or slow of motion.

Usury dulls and damps all industries, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for the slug. Bacon.

7. To sully brightness.

The breath dulls the mirror. Bacon.

8. To consume in sleep or idleness.

Dull not away thy days in slothful supinity, and the tediousness of doing nothing. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 33.

To DULL.* v. n. To become dull.

I dull under your discipline. Chaucer, Rom. of the Rose, 3792.

DU'LLARD.* n. s. [from dull.] A blockhead; a dolt; a stupid fellow; a dunce.

What, mak'st thou me a dullard in this act? Wilt thou not speak to me? Shakespeare, Cymb.

Thou must make a dullard of the world, If they not thought the profits of my death Were very pregnant and potential spurs To make thee seek it. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

How many shall once wish they had been horn dullards, yea idiots, when they shall find their wit to have barred them out of heaven! Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 3.

DU'LLARD.* adj. Doltish; stupid.

But would I be a poet if I might, To rub my brows three days and wake three nights, And bite my nails, and scratch my dullard head, And curse the backward muses on my bed. Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 1.

I durst essay the new-found paths, that led *To slavish Mosco's dullard sluggishness. P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. i. st. 12.

DU'LLER.* adj. [from dull.] Not bright.

Illuminate my dim and dulled eyne. Spenser, Hymn on Beauty.

DU'LLER.* n. s. [from dull.] That which makes dull, or weakens.

Your grace must fly phlebotomy, fresh pork, conger, and clarified whey; they are all dullers of the vital spirits. Beaumont and Fl. Philaster.

DU'LLY.* adv. [from dull.]

1. Stupidly; doltishly.

D U M

I rather would entreat thy company To see the wonders of the world abroad, Than living dully sluggardis'd at home, Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully, literally, and meanly; but it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful. Dryden, Dufroncy.

2. Slowly; sluggishly.

I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go dully by us. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

The air, if it be moist, doth in a degree quench the flame, and howsoever maketh it burn more dully. Bacon.

3. Not vigorously; not gaily; not brightly; not keenly.

Not that I think those pantomimes, Who vary action with the times, Are less ingenious in their art, Than those who dully act one part. Hudibras.

He must at length, poor man, die dully of old age at home! South, Sermon ii. S. 6.

DU'LNES.* n. s. [from dull.]

1. Stupidity; weakness of intellect; indocility: slowness of apprehension.

Nor is the dulness of the scholar to extinguish, but rather to inflame the charity of the teacher. South.

Shadwel alone my perfect image bears, Mature in dulness from his tender years. Dryden.

2. Want of quick perception.

Nature, by a continual use of any thing, groweth to a satiety and dulness, either of appetite or working. Bacon.

We shall often mark in it [the eye of children] a dulness, or apprehensiveness, even before the understanding. Watson, of Education.

3. Drowsiness; inclination to sleep.

Here cease more questions; Thou art inclin'd to sleep. 'Tis a good dulness, And give it way. Shakespeare, Tempest.

4. Sluggishness of motion.

5. Dimness; want of lustre.

6. Bluntness; want of edge.

DU'LY.* adv. [from due.]

1. Properly; fitly; in the due manner.

Ever since they firmly have retained, And duly well observed his behest. Spenser, F. Q.

My prayers Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes More worth than vanities; yet prayers and wishes Are all I can return. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

In the body, when the principal parts, as the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferior smaller vessels act orderly and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole which we call health. South.

If attention be duly engaged to those reflections, they cannot fail of influence. Rogers.

2. Regularly; exactly.

Seldom at church, 'twas such a busy life; But duly sent his family and wife. Pope.

DUMB.* adj. [דום] he was silent; dumbs, Gothick;

dumb, Saxon; dum, Danish; dom Dutch, dull.]

1. Mute; incapable of speech.

It hath pleased himself sometime to unloose the very tongues even of dumb creatures, and to teach them to plead in their own defence, lest the cruelty of man should persist to afflict them. Hooker.

They spake not a word; But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones, Star'd each on other. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Some positive terms signify negative ideas: blind implies a privation of sight, dumb a denial of speech. Watts, Logick.

2. Deprived of speech.

They sing no more, or only sung his fame; Struck dumb, they all admir'd the god-like man. Dryden.

D U M

3. Mute; not using words.

He is a proper man's picture; but alas! who can converse with a dumb show. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

His gentle dumb expression turn'd at length
The eye of Eve to mark his play. Milton, P. L.

Her humble gestures made the residue plain,
Dumb eloquence persuading more than speech. Roscommon.

For he who covets gain in such excess,
Does by dumb signs himself as much express,
As if in words at length he show'd his mind. Dryden, Juv.

Nothing is more common than for lovers to complain, relent, languish, despair, and die in dumb show. Addison.

4. Silent; refusing to speak.

The good old seer withstood
Th' intended treason, and was dumb to blood;
Till tir'd with endless clamours and pursuit
Of Ithacus, he stood no longer mute. Dryden, Æn.

To DUMB.* v. a. [Sax. abumbian.] To silence; to oblige to hold peace.

What I would have spoke,
Was heastly dumb'd by him. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

She sings like one immortal, and she dances
As goddess-like to her admired lays;
Deep clerks she dumbs. Shakespeare, Pericles.

Every soul is more deafened and bedumbed, by increasing corruptions, by actual sins. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

DUMBLEDORE.* n. s. In some parts of England the humble or bumble bee is so called; and, in some, the brown cock-chaffer. It is also corruptly called drumledore.

DUMBLY.† adv. [from dumb.] Mutely; silently; without words.

I have seen them shiver and look pale,
*Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accent in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly, have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

DUMBNESS.† n. s. [Sax. dumnyrje.]

1. Incapacity to speak.

2. Omission of speech; muteness.

There was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture: they looked as they had heard of a world ransom'd, or one destroyed. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

To the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret. Shakespeare, Tim. of Athens.

3. Refusal to speak; silence.

'Tis love, said she; and then my downcast eyes,
And guilty dumbness, witness'd my surpris'd. Dryden.

To DUMFOUND.† v. a. [from dumb.] To confuse; to strike dumb. A low phrase, as Dr. Johnson observes; and sometimes used, in low language also, for "to beat soundly, till the person beaten cannot speak."

They had like to have dumfounded the justice; but his clerk came in to his assistance. Spectator.

DUMMERER.* n. s. [from dumb.] A pretendedly dumb man; a cheat. A low word. Sometimes written dommerer; and, according to Bailey, denoting also a madman.

Every village almost will yield abundant testimonies [of counterfeits] amongst us; we have dummerers, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 159.

DUMMY.* n. s. [from dumb.]

1. One who is dumb. A low expression.

2. At the game of whist, when played by three persons instead of four, the exposition of the fourth hand is considered equivalent to a player, which is called dummy; the partner having the direction of it.

D U M

DUMP.† n. s. [from don, stupid, Dutch.]

1. Sorrow; melancholy; sadness. Every example which Dr. Johnson has given under this definition, belongs to "a doleful or melancholy tune," of which he takes no notice. I have therefore here supplied examples. And it may be added, that to this sense the common expression, "to be in the dumps," belongs; "in dumps, Fr. morne," i. e. melancholy, sad. Sherwood.

Sudden dumps, and dreary sad disdain
Of all world's gladness, more my torment feed.

Spenser, Sonnet. 52.

Alas, poor man, how willing thou art to make thyself believe that thou hast truly repented; whereas this is nothing but some dump of melancholy; or some relenting of nature, after too much expence of spirits.

Bp. Hall, Temptations repelled.

2. A melancholy tune or air; an elegy.

Sing no more ditties, sing no mo
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The frauds of men were ever so,
Since Summer first was leafy. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

Visit, by night your lady's chamber window
With some sweet consort: to their instruments
Tune a deploring dump; the night's dead-silence
Will well become such sweet complaining grievance.

Shakespeare.

If thou wert not some blockish and senseless dolt, thou wouldst never laugh when I sung a heavy mixt Lidian tune, or a note to a dump or doleful ditty.

Holland, Tr. of Plutarch's Morals, p. 61.

Funerals with stately pomp
March slowly on, in solemn dump. Hudibras.

The squire who fought on bloody stumps,
By future bards bewail'd in doleful dumps. Gay, Pastorals.

3. Any tune.

Some good old dump that Chaucer's mistress knew.
Sidney, Sonnet.

Play me some merry dump to comfort me.
Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

4. Absence of mind; reverie. Locke uses dumps singularly, Dr. Johnson says. But the word in its true singular, in this sense, is not wanting.

He's in a deep dump now.
Beaumont and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

This shame dumps cause to well-bred people, when it carries them away from the company. Locke.

DUMPISH. adj. [from dump.] Sad; melancholy; sorrowful.

New year, forth looking out of Janus' gate,
Doth seem to promise hope of new delight;
And bidding th' old adieu, hisp'd date
Bids all old thoughts to die in dumpish spite.

Spenser, Sonnet. 4.

The life which I live at this age is not a dead, dumpish, and sour life; but cheerful, lively, and pleasant. Herbert.

DUMPISHLY.* adv. [from dumpish.] In a moping, melancholy way.

And for dispositions; how do we see one so ragingly furious as if he had newly torn off his chains, and escaped; another so stupidly senseless, that you may thrust pins into him up to the head, and he startles not at it: one so dumpishly sad, as if he would freeze to death in melancholy, and hated any contentment but in sorrow. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, iii. 729.

DUMPISHNESS.* n. s. [from dumpish.] Sadness; melancholy.

How many worthy Christians are there in the world who bear a part with us in this just blame; who have yielded over themselves to a disconsolate heartlessness, and a sad dejection of spirit; partly through a natural disposition inclining to dumpishness, and partly through the prevalence of temptation.

Bp. Hall, Christ Mystical.

He had need to be more than man, that can contentedly make himself contemptible, to follow Christ; to have his religion judged hypocrisy; his Christian prudence, craft and policy; his godly simplicity, silliness; his zeal, madness; his contempt of the world, ignorance; his godly sorrow, dumppishness. Junius, Sin Stigmat. p. 750.

DUMPLING. n. s. [from dump, heaviness.] A sort of pudding.

Pudding and dumpling burn to pot.

Dryden.

DUMPY.* adj. [This, it seems, is also a Scottish adjective, which Dr. Jamieson has given in his dictionary, without any example, however, of its usage. He refers the word to the Icel. doomp, a stout or thick servant-maid. In our own language, it is a low word.] Short and thick.

Whenever he was with me, his short, dumpty, gouty, crooked fingers were continually teasing my spinnet, to his own harmonious croaking. Student, ii. 225.

DUN. adj. [bun, Sax.]

1. A colour partaking of brown and black.

We are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown.

Newton, Opticks.

2. Dark; gloomy.

Come, thick night!

And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell. Shakespeare.

He then survey'd

Hell, and the gulph between, and Satan there

Coasting the wall of heav'n on this side,

In the dun air sublime.

Milton, B. B.

TO DUN. v. a. [bunan, Sax. to clamour.] To claim a debt with vehemence and importunity.

Borrow of thy back, and borrow of thy belly: they'll never ask thee again. I shall be dunning thee every day. Bacon.

When thou dun'st their parents, seldom they,

Without a suit before the tribune, pay.

Dryden, Jur.

I remember what she won:

And hath she sent so soon to dun?

Swift.

DUN. n. s. [from the verb.] A clamorous, importunate, troublesome creditor.

Thus, while my joyless minutes tedious flow,

With looks demure, and silent pace, a dun,

Horrible monster! hated by gods and men,

To my aerial citadel ascends.

Philips.

It grieves my heart to be pulled by the sleeve by some rascally dun, "Sir, remember my bill."

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

DUN.* n. s. [See DOWN.] An eminence; a mound; a kind of fortification.

With him we went to see an ancient building, called a dun or borough. Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands.

They erected palaces, rude indeed in their construction; and their chiefs raised duns or artless fortifications.

Walker, Hist. Mem. of the Irish Bards, (1786) p. 5.

DUNCE.* n. s. [A word of uncertain etymology; perhaps from dun, Dutch, stupid, Dr. Johnson says. Minshew derives it from densus, thick; Skinner, from the Span. tonto, stupid. None of these will be received. Serenius offers the Sn. dunser, a heavy-footed man. In the margin of Mr. Horne Tooke's copy of Johnson's dictionary are these words: "Perhaps a word of reproach first used by the Thomists, from Duns Scotus, their antagonist: but we must first find out when this word began to be used." I had made a similar remark, many years since; and am enabled to strengthen it, by what Mr. Tooke had not met with, an example in point: "They hate even to death all them that preach the pure worde of God, void of all the dregges of Dunsser learning and man's traditions." Confutation of N. Shaxton, 1546, sign. F. iii. From the same source a curious adverb seems to have been formed, which may here be mentioned: "Note the varietie of gifts in scholars — One speaks fluently, but writes dunsticallie: another writes elbquently, but speaks stottishly." Stafford's Niobe, 1611, P. ii. p. 195.] A dullard; a dolt; a thickskull; a stupid, indocile animal.

Dunce at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd,

To tinkle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd.

Dryden.

Was Epiphanius so great a dunce to imagine a thing, indifferent in itself, should be directly opposite to the law of God?

Stillingfleet.

I never knew this town without dunces of figure, who had credit enough to give rise to some new word. Swift.

DUNCERY.* n. s. [from dunce.] Dulness; stupidity.

Here you come with your fine and logical distinction, and bring in the causes essential and accidental of marriage; as though we were in a school of duncery, and not in a discourse of pleasure. Sir T. Smith, Orat. IV. Append. to his Life.

Their overspreading barbarism — hath tainted also the fountains of divine doctrine, and rendered the pure and solid law of God unbeneificial to us by their calumnious dunceries.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

An indirect way is introduced of buying the said degrees for money, to the discouragement of learning, and the encouragement of duncery and idleness.

Dean Prideaux, on Reform. of the Two Univ. 1715.

TO DUNCIFY.* v. a. [from dunce.] To make a dunce. A contemptuous word, perhaps coined by Warburton.

Here you have a fellow ten thousand times more duncified than dunce Webster. Warburton to Hurd, Lett. L. 130.

DUNE.* n. s. [Sax.] A hill; vulgarly pronounced down. See DOWN. Barret.

DUNG.* n. s. [bung, Sax. of byngan, to dung.] The excrement of animals used to fatten ground.

For dung all excrements are the refuse and putrefactions of nourishment. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I judge the likeliest way to be the perforation of the body of the tree in several places, one above the other; and the filling of the holes with dung, mingled with the medicine; and the watering of those lumps of dung, with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water, once in three or four days. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

For when from herbs the pure part must we won,

From gross by stilling, this is better done

By despis'd dung than by the fire or sun.

Donne.

He soon would learn to think like me,

And blis his ravish'd eyes to see

Such order from confusion sprung.

Such gaudy tulips rais'd from dung.

Swift.

TO DUNG.* v. a. [not from the noun, as Dr. Johnson asserts, (the noun being the participle of the verb,) but from the Sax. byngan, to dung.] To manure with dung.

It was received of old, that dunging of grounds, when the West wind bloweth, and in the decrease of the moon, doth greatly help. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There, as his dream foretold, a cart he found,

That carry'd compost forth to dung the ground. Dryden.

TO DUNG.* v. n. To void excrement.

A wild ass, broke loose, ran about trampling and kicking, and dunging in their faces. Swift, Battle of the Books.

DUNGED.* adj. [from dung.] Covered with dung.

The dunged folds of dag-tail'd sheep. Bp. Hall, Sat. v. 2.

DUNGEON. n. s. [from donjon, the tower in which prisoners were kept, whence all prisons eminently strong were in time called dungeons.] A close prison; generally spoken of a prison dark or subterraneous.

D U N

Then up he took the slumbered senseless corse,
And e're he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought with hasty force,
And in a dungeon deep him threw without remorse.

Spenser, F. Q.

We know not that the king of heav'n hath doom'd
This place our dungeon; not our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm.

Milton, P. L.

Now from the North
Of Norumbega, and the Samoed shore,
Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, come stormy gust, and flaw.

Milton, P. L.

By imagination, a man in a dungeon is capable of entertaining himself with scenes and landscapes, more beautiful than any that can be found in the whole compass of nature.

Addison.

To DU'NGEON.* v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up as in a dungeon.

Are we dungeon'd up from the sight of the sun?

Bp. Hall, of Contémtation.

No slave in Argier is more truly sold in the market under a Turkish pirate, than we are naturally sold under the tyranny of sin; by whom we are bound hand and foot, and can stir neither of them towards God; and dungeon'd up in the darkness of our ignorance, without any glimpse of the vision of God.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 128.

Light dungeon'd, unanacted, [of sleep.]
Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 22.

DU'NGFORK.* n. s. [dung and fork.] A fork to toss out dung from stables.

I see well you would take a dongeforke to fight with, rather than you would lacke a weapon.

Abp. Cranmer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 457.

Dung forks and paddles are common every where. Mortimer.

DU'NGHILL. n. s. [dung and hill.]

1. A heap or accumulation of dung.

I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Two cocks fought a duel for the mastery of a dunghill.

L'Estrange.

Never enter into a league of friendship with an ingrateful person; that is, plant not thy friendship upon a dunghill: it is too noble a plant for so base a soil. South.

The dunghill having raised a huge mushroom of short duration, is now spread to enrich other men's land. Swift.

2. Any mean or vile abode.

Perhaps a thousand other worlds, that lie
Remote from us, and latent in the sky,
Are lighten'd by his beams, and kindly nurst,
Of which our earthly dunghill is the worst. Dryden.

3. Any situation of meanness.

The poor he raiseth from the dust,
Even from the dunghill lifts the just. Spandys.

4. A term of reproach for a man meanly born.

Out, dunghill! dar'st thou brave a nobleman? Shakespeare.

DU'NGHILL.* adj. Sprung from the dunghill; mean;
low; base; vile; worthless.

His dunghill thoughts, which do themselves enure
To dirty dross, no higher dare aspire. Spenser, Hymn to Love.
Gripos, the basest and most dunghill swain,
That ever drew a net, or fish'd in fruitful main.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. ii. st. 14.

DU'NGY.* adj. [from dung.] Full of dung; mean;
vile; base; low; odious; worthless.

Ye have seen their abominations, and their idols, [in the margin, dungy gods.] Deut. xxix. 17.

We need no grave to bury honesty;
There's not a grain of it, the face to sweeten
Of the whole dungy earth. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

DU'NGYARD. n. s. [dung and yard.] The place of the dunghill.

Any manner of vegetables cast into the dungyard. Mortimer.

DU'NNER. n. s. [from dun.] One employed in soliciting petty debts.

D U P

They are ever talking of new silks, and serve the owners in getting them customers, as their common dunners do in making them pay. Spectator.

DU'NNY.* adj. A word generally used, in common conversation, for deaf; and, in some parts of England, for dull of apprehension. Grose, and Pegge.

DU'O.* n. s. [from the Lat. duo, two.] A song or piece of musick to be performed in two parts.

They call a duo a musick of two voices, although there be a third part for the thorough bass, and others for the symphony.
In a word, for a duo these must be two principal parts, between which the melody is equally distributed.

Appendix to Mus. Dict. 1769, p. 13.

DUODE'CIMO.* n. s. [Lat.] A book is said to be in duodecimo, when a sheet is folded into twelve leaves.

DUODE'CUPLE. adj. [duo and decuplus, Lat.] Consisting of twelves.

Grisepius, a learned Polander, endeavours to establish the duodecuple proportion among the Jews, by comparing some passages of Scripture together. Arbutnot on Coins.

DUODENUM.* n. s. [Lat.] In anatomy, the first of the small intestines.

To DUP.* v. a. [do and up.] To open. Now used only in low language.

The porters are drunk; will they not dup the gate to-day?

Damon and Pythias, 1582.

Then up he rose, and don'd his clothes,
And dupp'd the chamber door. Song in Shakespeare's Hamlet.

DUPE. n. s. [dupe, French, from duppe, a foolish bird easily caught.] A credulous man; a man easily tricked. A modern word hardly established.

An usurping populace is its own dupe, a mere underworker, and a purchaser in trust for some single tyrant. Swift.

First slave to words, then vassal to a name,

Then dupe to party; child and man the same. Pope, Dunciad.

To DUPE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To trick; to cheat.

Those entertainments and pleasures we most value in life, are such as dupe, and play the wag with, the senses.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 9.

The throne a bigot keep, a genius quit;

Faithless through piety, and dup'd through wit. Pope.

DU'PLE. adj. [duplus, Latin.] Double; one repeated.

To DU'PLICATE.* v. a. [duplico, Latin.]

1. To double; to enlarge by the repetition of the first number or quantity.

And some alterations in the brain duplicate that which is but a single object to our undistemper'd sentiments. Glanville.

Many explications, and duplicate expressions, clear one the other. Instructions of Oratory, (Ox. 1682,) p. 57.

2. To fold together.

DU'PLICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

Duplicate proportion is the proportion of squares.

Thus, in a rank of geometrical proportions, the first term to the third is said to be in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as its square is to the square of the second: so in 2, 4, 8, 16, the ratio of 2 to 8 is a duplicate of that of 2 to 4; or as the square of 2 to the square of 4.

Phillips. Harris. Bailey.

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocally in a duplicate proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the concourse of the glasses, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drop, and its touching each glass in a larger surface; and again reci-procally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attractions growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting surface.

Newton, Opticks.

DU'PLICATE. n. s. Another correspondent to the first;
a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more needful for perfecting the natural history of bodies than the subjecting them to the fire; to which end I have reserved duplicates of the most considerable. Woodward.

DUPLICATION. † n. s. [from duplicate.]

1. The act of doubling.

What they have once said, they must and will maintain, in whole tomes, duplications, triplications, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Melanch. p. 673.

What great pains hath been taken concerning the quadrature of a circle, and the duplication of a cube, and some other mathematical problems. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. The act of folding together.

3. A fold; a doubling.

The peritoneum is a strong membrane, every where double; in the duplications of which all the viscera of the abdomen are hid.

Wise man, Surgery.

DUPLICATION. n. s. [from duplicate.] A fold; any thing doubled.

The lympheducts, either dilacerated or obstructed, exonerate themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes. Ray on the Creation.

DUPPLICITY. † n. s. [duplicis, Latin.]

1. Doubleness; the number of two.

This duplicity was ill contrived to place one head at both extremes, and had been more tolerable to have set three or four at one.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Do not affect duplicities, nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts in your division of things. Watts, Logick.

2. Deceit; doubleness of heart or of tongue.

Cockeram.

I have surveyed all Europe from the east to the west, from the north to the south, in search of this call upon us to purge ourselves of "subtle duplicity and a punick style" in our proceedings.

Burke, on a Regicide Peace.

DURABILITY. n. s. [durabilis, Latin.] The power of lasting; continuance; endurance.

Stones though in dignity of nature inferior unto plants, yet exceed them in firmness of strength, or durability of being.

Hooker.

Our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability.

Raleigh, Hist.

DURABLE. adj. [durabilis, Latin.]

1. Lasting; having the quality of long continuance.

The bones of his body we may compare to the hard rocks and stones, and therefore strong and durable.

Raleigh, Hist.

With pins of adamant,

And chains, they made all fast; too fast they made, And durable!

Milton, P. L.

The glories of her majesty's reign ought to be recorded in words more durable than brass, and such as our posterity may read a thousand years hence.

Swift.

2. Having successive existence.

Time, though in eternity, applied

To motion, measures all things durable

By present, past, and future.

Milton.

DURABLENESS. † n. s. [from durable.] Power of lasting; continuance.

It were pity but that this woman should have been thus sick; the nature, the durableness, cost, pain, incurableness of her disease, both sent her to seek Christ, and moved Christ to her cure.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

The different consistence and durableness of the strata whereof they consist, are more or less.

Woodward.

A bad poet, if he cannot become immortal by the goodness of his verse, may by the durableness of the metal that supports it.

Addison on Ancient Medals.

DURABLY. † adv. [from durable.] In a lasting manner.

There indeed he found his fame flourishing, his monuments engraved in marble, and yet more durably in men's memories.

Sidney.

By the books is meant the knowledge of God, in which all things are kept as durably, and distinctly, as if they were registered in a book.

South, Sermon. vii. p. 270.

DURANCE. † n. s. [from duresse, law French.]

1. Imprisonment; the custody or power of a jailor; a prison.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,

Is in base durance and contagious prison;

Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands.

Shakspeare.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman.

South.

There's neither iron bar nor gate,

Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;

And yet men durance there abide,

In dungeons scarce three inches wide.

Hudibras.

Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance.

Congreve, Old Bachelor.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration. A doubtful word.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round,

And mother earth sigh'd as she felt the wound:

Of how short durance was this new made state!

How far more mighty than heaven's love, hell's hate!

Dryden.

3. A lasting kind of stuff, such as we now call everlasting. Obsolete.

The taylor — out of seven yards stole one and a half of durance.

Three Ladies of London, 1584.

DURATION. n. s. [duratio, Latin.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession.

Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them.

Rogers.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration, that it should have a due length in it.

Addison, Spect.

TO DURE. † v. n. [duro, Lat.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure.

Raleigh, Hist.

Yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while.

St. Matt. xiii. 21.

DUREFUL. adj. [from dure and full.] Lasting; of long continuance; durable. Not in use.

The dureful oak, whose sap is not yet dry'd,

Is long e'er it conceive the kindling fire;

But when it once doth burn, it doth divide

Great heat, and makes his flames to heaven aspire.

Spenser.

DURELESS. adj. [from dure.] Without continuance; fading; transitory; short. Not in use.

Yet were that aptitude natural, more inclinable to follow and embrace the false and dureless pleasures of this stage-play world, than to become the shadow of God.

Raleigh, Hist.

DURESSE. † n. s. [French; hardship, severity.]

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

If he should through pride your doom undo,

Do you by duresse him compel thereto.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. xii. 10.

The case is very hard; and I fear the plea she is advised to make, from the similitude of a man who is in duresse, will not prevail.

Tatler, No. 215.

Henry III., by the ill counsel of Hubert de Burgh, pretended that these charters had been obtained by duresse.

Bp. Ellys on Liberty, P. ii. p. 56.

2. [In law.] A plea used by way of exception, by him who being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, seals any bond to him during his restraint. This the law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained.

Cowell.

D U S

DURING. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure; as, during life, durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Locke.

DURITY. † n. s. [durété, French; durus, Latin.]

1. Hardness; firmness.

The ancients did burn their firmest stone, and even fragments of marble, which in time became almost marble again, at least of indissoluble durity, as appeareth in the standing theatres. Wotton, Architecture.

Irradiancy or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactness and durity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Harshness; cruelty; hardness of mind. Cockeram.

DUROUS. * adj. [Lat. durus.] Hard. The Scots have the adjective dure.

They all of them vary much from their primitive tenderness and bigness, and so become more durous.

Smith, Port. of Old Age, p. 186.

DURST. † The preterite of dare. [Goth dawsta.]

The Christians durst have no images of the Deity, because they would rather die than defile themselves with such an impiety. Stillingfleet.

DUSK. † adj. [duyster, Dutch; dyster, Su. Goth. dark.]

1. Tending to darkness. See DUSKY.

A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades. Milton, P. R.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured.

The hills to their supply,

Vapour, and exhalation dusk, and moist,

Sent up amain.

Dusk faces with white silken turbans wreath'd.

Milton, P. R.

DUSK. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Tendency to darkness; incipient obscurity.

I will wait on you in the dusk of the evening, with my show upon my back. Spectator.

2. Darkness of colour; tendency to blackness.

Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,

Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryden.

To DUSK. † v. a. [from the noun.] To make dusky.

Dict.

The wanton wallowing

In fond delights, and amorous dallying,

Hath dusk'd the fairest splendour of our soul.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. B. iii. S. 8.

To DUSK. † v. n. To grow dark; to begin to lose light or brightness; to have lustre diminished.

Dict.

The heart felt death;

Dusk'd his eyes two; and fail'd his breath.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

DUSKILY. † adv. [from dusky.] With a tendency to darkness or blackness. Sherwood.

DUSKINESS. * n. s. [from dusky. Formerly duskness.] Incipient obscurity.

Time had somewhat sullied the colour of it with such a kind of duskiness, as we may observe in pictures that have hung in some smoky room. Transl. of Boetius, Oxf. 1674, p. 3.

DUSKISH. * adj. [from dusk.]

1. Inclining to darkness; tending to obscurity.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw

Huge flames, that dimm'd all the heaven's light,

Enroll'd in dusky smoke, and brimstone blue. Spenser, F. Q.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured.

Sight is not contented with sudden departments from one extreme to another; therefore let them have rather a dusky tincture than an absolute black. Wotton, Architecture.

DUSKISHLY. adv. [from dusky.] Cloudily; darkly.

D U S

The sawdust burned fair, till part of the candle consumed: the dust gathering about the snout, made the snout to burn duskiſhly. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

DUSKISHNESS. * n. s. [from dusky.] Approach to darkness.

For who can it unfold, and read aright
The divers colours, and the tinctures fair,
Which in this various vesture changes write
Of light, of duskiſhness, of thick, of rare
Consistencies. More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 22.

DUSKNESS. * n. s. [from dusk.] Dimness.

Of satiety or fulnesses be ingendered painful diseases and sicknesses — great bleedings, cramps, duskness of sight.

Sir L. Elyot, Gov. fol. 191. b.

DUSKY. adj. [from dusk; duyster, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness; obscure; not luminous.

Here lies the dusky torch of Mortimer,

Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort.

Shakespeare.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,

Whose every puff bears empty shades away.

Dryden.

Through the plains of one continual day,

Six shining months pursue their even way;

And six succeeding urge their dusky flight,

Obscur'd with vapours and o'erwhelm'd in night.

Prior.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured; not clear; not bright.

They did plot

The means that dusky Dis my daughter got.

Shakespeare.

It is not green, but of a dusky brown colour.

Bacon.

When Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,

And the faint crescent shoots by sits before their eyes.

Dryden.

The surface is of a dusky yellow colour.

Woodward.

By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness; or from white and black; that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown.

Newton, Opticks.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded.

While he continues in life, this dusky scene of horror, this melancholy prospect of final perdition, will frequently occur to his fancy.

Bentley, Sermon.

Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite,

As ever sully'd the fair face of light,

Down to the central earth, his proper scene,

Repairs to search the gloomy cave of spleen.

Pope.

DUST. n. s. [hurt, Saxon; dust, Erse.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The dust

Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n,

Rais'd by your populous troops. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, inasmuch as they cast dust upon them: that powdering, when a shower cometh, maketh a soiling to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.

The sceptre, learning, physick must

All follow this, and come to dust.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Thou

Out of the ground wast taken, know thy birth;

For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return.

Milton, P. L.

3. A mean and dejected state.

God raiseth up the poor out of the dust, to set them among princes.

1 Sam. ii. 8.

DUST-BORN. * adj. [dust and born.] * A forcible compound, and well applied in a paraphrase of "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

The dust-born pomp of earth,

Made thrall to death, returns to dust again.

Mir. for Mag. p. 874.

To DUST. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from dust.

2. To sprinkle with dust.

Sherwood.

Shimei threw stones at him, and cast dust, [in the margin, dusted him with dust.]

2 Sam. xvi. 13.

3. To levigate; to separate by a sieve.

D U T

The lower sieve receives the powder, and lets the dust go thorough the bin, over which the sieve is shaken, called the dusting bin. Sprat, Hist. of R. Soc. p. 281.

DUSTER.* n. s. [from dust.]

1. That which frees from dust, either by wiping, as with a cloth; or by sweeping, as with a brush.
"A duster made of a fox-tail fastened to a staff."

Cotgrave, in V. Vistempnard.

2. In making gunpowder, a sieve so called; a sifter.
The lower sieve is called the dry duster, and retains the small corns, which serve for musquet and pistol; and lets fall the dust into the bin. Sprat, Hist. of R. Soc. p. 283.

DUSTINESS.* n. s. [from dusty.] The state of being covered with dust. Sherwood.

He ran over the heat of the weather, dustiness of the roads, and other general topicks. Graves, Spirit. Quixote, iii. 2.

DUSTMAN. n. s. [dust and man.] One whose employment is to carry away the dust.

The dustman's cart offends thy clothes and eyes, When through the street a cloud of ashes flies. Gay.

DUSTY.* adj. [Sax. dyttig.]

1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.
All our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death.
Arms and the dusty fields I less admire,
And soften strangely in some new desire. Dryden.

2. Covered or scattered with dust.
Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson, Summer.

DUTCH.* n. s. [duytsh.]

1. The people of Holland.
2. The Dutch language.

A question may here be moved, that seeing the Teutonic is so far spread, and also varied, which then it is that we may hold for the more ancient, or the rightest and least varied from the first original; that is, whether the high Dutch, low Dutch, or eastlandish Dutch be it? To this I answer, that as the maritime parts of countries were inhabited before the inland that lie farthest from the sea, the ancient language was there first planted; and is like to have been most varied by such as went afterward to dwell higher, and dispersed abroad in the country; and therefore I hold the eastlandish and low Dutch to draw nearer the true original than the high Dutch.

Versteegen, Recl. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

DUTCHESS.* n. s. [duchesse, Fr.]

1. The lady of a duke.
The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The duke was to command the army, and the dutchess, by the favour she possessed, to be near her majesty. Swift.

The gen'rous god, who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens minds,
Kept dross for dutchesses, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet. Pope.

2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.
The only remedy for these evils, was concluded to be the espousals of the dutchess of Brittany and the king of France. Hume's Hist.

3. A lady raised to the rank of dutchess by the king.
The marchioness of Pembroke!
A thousand pounds a year! for pure respect —
By this time,
I know, your back will bear a dutchess. Shakespeare, K. Hen. VIII.

DUTCHY. n. s. [duché, Fr.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.

Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Bern. Addison on Italy.
France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy. Swift.

DUTCHY COURT. n. s. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court. Cowel.

D U T

DUTEOUS. adj. [from duty.]

1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or legal authority.

Great Aurengzebe did duteous care express,
And durst not push too far his great success. Dryden.

A female softness, with a manly mind;
A duteous daughter, and a sister kind;
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd. Dryden.

Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,
To bring her burden to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the sounding brass? Prior.

2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes: with to.

I know thee well; a serviceable villain!
As duteous to the wiles of thy mistress,
As badness would desire. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Every beast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milton, P. L.

3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another. This sense is not now used.

With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,
With mine own breath release all duteous ties. Shakespeare.

DUTIFUL. adj. [duty and full.]

1. Obedient; submissive to natural or legal superiours; reverent.

She died in an extreme old age, without pain, under the care of the most dutiful son that I have ever known or heard of. Swift to Pope.

2. Expressive of respect; giving token of reverence; respectful; reverential.

There would she kiss the ground, and thank the trees, bless the air, and do dutiful reverence to every thing she thought did accompany her at their first meeting. Sidney.

DUTIFULLY. adv. [from dutiful.]

1. Obediently; submissively.
2. Reverently; respectfully.

His daughter Philoclea he found at that time dutifully watching by her mother, and Miso curiously watching her. Sidney.

He with joyful, nimble wing,
Flew dutifully back again,
And made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

DUTIFULNESS. n. s. [from dutiful.]

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.
Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans. Dryden, Æn.
2. Reverence; respect.

It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great sinner. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

DUTY. n. s. [from due.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded, you say we are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do. St. Luke, xvii. 10.

The pain children feel from any necessity of nature, it is the duty of parents to relieve. Locke.

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality. In this sense it has a plural.

God my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me; I
Return those duties back, as are right fit;
Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Shakespeare.

All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine Assistance; and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine Assistance. Bp. Taylor, Devotions.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governours, or superiours; loyalty; piety to parents.

Thinkst thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When power to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater; it being not probable that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God. Decoy of Picty.

4. Act of reverence or respect.

They both attone;
Did duty to their lady as became.

Spenser, F. Q.

5. The business of a soldier on guard.

The regiment did duty there punctually. Clarendon.
Otho, as often as Galba supped with him, used to give every soldier upon duty an aureus. Arbuthnot on Coins.

6. The business of war; service.

The knight came and severed them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day. Clarendon.

See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains
With which their master, love, rewards their pains!
For sev'n long years, on duty every day,

Lo! their obedience, and their monarch's pay! Dryden.

7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.

All the wines make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port. Addison.

Such shekels as they now shew, were the old ones in which duty was to be paid by their law. Arbuthnot on Coins.

DUMVIRATE.* n. s. [Lat. dumviratus, from dumviri.] A government or jurisdiction among the Romans, exercised by two; "the office or dignity of the dumviri." Chambers. Such is the case, in this country, with regard to the sheriffalty of London and Middlesex, which consists of two persons.

DWALE.* n. s. [Germ. dwalen, to be stupid.]

1. 'In botany, the deadly herb nightshade; so named, perhaps, from its stupifying or poisonous quality. Our old lexicographers Huloet and Barret notice this word. And Chaucer uses it for a soporifick draught.

Nedeth hem no dwale:

This miller hath so wisly libbed ale,
That as an horse he snorteth in his slepe. Chaucer, Reve's Tale

2. In heraldry, sable or black colour.

DWA'LING, or DWA'LLING.* adj. [Goth. dwala, a fool; Sax. dwala, blunder.] Talking nonsense, as if delirious. Exmouth dialect. See TO DWALE. Gruse.

DWARF.† n. s. [Dpeong, Saxon; dwerg, Dutch; dwaerg, Danish. In the mythology of the northern nations, the dwarf was also a demon or fairy, believed to dwell among rocks; "nanos, spirituum aut daemonum genus, credebant saxa inhabitare." Keyseri, Antiq. Septentr. p. 21. These probably belong to that class of which Paracelsus speaks; "reckoning up many places in Germany, where they walk, some two foot long!" Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 47. Barret calls a dwarf an elf, Dict. 1580.]

1. A man below the common size of men.

Get you gone, you dwarf!
You minimus, of hind'ring knot-grass made.

Shakspeare.

'Such dwarfs were some kind of apes.

Brown.

They but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs in narrow foom,
Through numberless.

Milton, P. L.

2. Any animal or plant below its natural bulk.

In a delicate plantation of trees, all well-grown, fair, and smooth, one dwarf was knotty and crooked, and the rest had it in derision. L'Estrange.

Saw off the stock in a smooth place; and for dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers off the ground. Mortimer.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,
Eftsoones dismounted from his courser brave,
And to the dwarf awhile his needless spear he gave.

Spenser, F. Q.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition; as, dwarf elder, dwarf honeysuckle, Dr. Johnson says; but it is not confined to botanical illustration.

Great is this mysterie of godliness,
Exceeding man's dwarf wit.

Fitzgeffry's Blessed Birthday, (1634,) p. 23.

TO DWARF. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree, grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The whole sex is in a manner dwarfed, and shrunk into a race of beauties, that seem almost another species. Addison.

DWA'RFISH. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk; low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Their dwarfish pages were

As cherubins all gilt. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low? Shakspeare.

This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shakspeare, K. John.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish wood.

Dryden.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and creeping moss, and despicable mushrooms.

Bentley.

DWA'RFISHLY. adj. [from dwarfish.] Like a dwarf.

DWA'RFISHNESS.† n. s. [from dwarfish.] Minuteness of stature; littleness.

So when our blessed Saviour tells us we cannot by our taking thought add to our real stature one cubit; he doth not hereby deny the possibility, or lawfulness of setting ourselves higher than naturally we are, either by the heels of our shoes, or by pattens or seats, and the like inventions, which seek to give an advantage of procerity and comeliness to our stature; which, if shrunk to a dwarfishness, and epitomized to a decimo-sexto, makes the persons of men and women subject to be as little in the eyes and esteem of others, as they are in their own inches or size. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 75.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm. Glanville, Sceptis.

TO DWALE.† v. a. [Dpelian, Sax. to wander; dwaelen, Dutch; Germ. dwalen; Goth. dwala, and dwalmon. See DWALE, and DWALING.] To be delirious: a provincial word mentioned by Junius.

TO DWELL.† v. n. preterite dwell, or dwelld. [duala, old Teutonic, is stay, delay; duelia, Icel. to stay, to stand still; duel, the stopping-place to which the ball was to be driven by the victorious party, Callander; dwol, Goth. delay: hence also the Su. dwalias, to stop. Chaucer thus uses dwellings for delays, Boeth. i. Metr. i.]

1. To remain. The primary meaning, hitherto unnoticed.

And clapt his iron wings, as victor he did dwell.

Spenser, F. Q. i. xi. 31.

2. To inhabit; to live in a place; to reside; to have an habitation.

If thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond servant. Lev. xxv. 39.

He shall dwell alone, without the camp shall his habitation be. Lev. xiii. 46.

D W E

John Haywood and Sir Thomas More, in the parish wherein I was born, dwelt and had possessions. Peachment.
Why are you vex'd, lady? Why do you frown?
Here dwelt no frowns nor anger; from these gates Sorrow flies far. Milton, Comus.

3. To live in any form of habitation.

Abraham sojourn'd in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles. Heb. xi. 9.

4. To be in any state or condition.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwelt in doubtful joy. Shakespeare.

5. To be suspended with attention; to hang upon with care or fondness.

He in great passion all this while did dwelt;
More busying his quick eyes, her face to view,
Than his dull ears, to hear what she did tell. Spenser.
Th' attentive queen

Dwelt on his accents. Smith, Phaed. and Hip.

Such was that face, on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled steun'd the tides to Troy. Pope.

6. To continue long speaking.

He preach'd the joys of heaven, and pains of hell,
And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal;
But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwelt. Dryden, Good Parson.
We have dwelt pretty long on the considerations of space and duration. Locke.
Those, who defend our negotiators, dwelt upon their zeal and patience. Swift.

To DWELL. v. a. To inhabit. Not used.

I saw and heard; for we sometimes
Who dwelt this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth
To town or village nigh. Milton, P. R.

DWE'LLER. n. s. [from dwelt.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The houses being kept up, did of necessity enforce a dweller; and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that dweller not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Their cries soon waken all the dwellers near;
Now murmuring noises rise in every street. Dryden.

DWE'LLING. n. s. [from dwelt.]

1. Habitation; place of residence; abode.

His dwelling is low in a valley green,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore. Spenser, F. Q.
Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever. Jer. xlix. 33.

If he have several dwellings, let him sort them so, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.

God will deign
To visit oft the dwellings of just men Delighted. Milton, P. L.

All dwellings else
Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp
Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea,
Sea without shore! Milton, P. L.

The living few, and frequent funerals then,
Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place;
And now those few, who are return'd again,
Thy searching judgements to their dwellings trace. Dryden.
The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky. Dryden, Ovid.

2. State of life; mode of living.

Thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field.
Daniel, iv. 25.

DWE'LLINGHOUSE. n. s. [from dwelt and house.] The house in which one lives.

A person ought always to be cited at the place of his dwellinghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence; and not at the house which he has in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth. Ayliffe, Parergon.

DWE'LLINGPLACE. n. s. [from dwelt and place.] The place of residence.

People do often change their dwellingplaces, and some must die, whilst other some do grow up into strength. Spenser on Ireland.

To DWINDLE.† v. n. [Sax. dyman; Dutch, drynen; Icel. dyyna, to fail, to cease. Chaucer uses dwined for wasted, Rom. R. 360. Dr. Johnson has confounded, in several instances, the verb neuter with the active, and with the adjective dwindled; not noticing either of the latter.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.

Proper names, when familiarized in English, dwindle to monosyllables; whereas in other languages they receive a softer turn, by the addition of a new syllable. Addison.

2. To degenerate; to sink.

If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the earth, that it hath dwindled from nobler animals to puny mice and insects, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley.

Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have dwindled into factious clubs. Swift.

He found the expected council was dwindling into a con-venticle, a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers. Atterbury.

3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.

Weary sev'nights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

We see, that some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench or a blow, the whole leg or thigh thereby loses its strength and nourishment, and dwindles away. Locke.

Physicians, with their milky cheer,
The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair. Gay.

To DWINDLE.* v. a.

1. To make less.

Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought;
Their period finish'd, ere 'tis well begun. Thomson.

2. To sink; to bring low.

'Tis now dwindled down to a light frothy stuff. Norris.

3. To break; to divide into parts; to disperse.

Under Greenvil, there were only five hundred foot, and three hundred horse, left; the rest were dwindled away.
Clarendon.

DWINDLED.* part. adj. [from dwindle.] Shrunk; fallen away.

Setting up one foot parallel to the other; filling out the leanness of their dwindled legs, and the like.

Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to the grave. Dryden.

DYE. n. See DIE.

To DYE.* v. a. See To DIE.

DYER.* n. s. See DIER.

Verdigrase is used by linen dyers in their yellow and greenish colours. Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. Soc. p. 288.

DY'ING.* n. s. The art of tinging cloth, stuff, or other matter, with a permanent colour.

I conceive much light would be given, to the philosophy of dy'ing, by careful experiments of the weight added by each drug or salt, in dy'ing of every colour.

Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. Soc. p. 305.

DY'ING.† part. Tinging; giving a new colour.

Some dy'ing ingredients or drugs, by the coarseness of their bodies, make the thread of the dyed stuff seem coarser.

Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. Soc. p. 303.

DY'ING.† The participle of die. Expiring; giving up the ghost.

By faith Jacob, when he was a dy'ing, blessed both the sons of Joseph. Heb. xi. 22.

DY'ING.* n. s. [from To die.] Death.

Always bearing about in the body the dy'ing of the Lord Jesus. 2 Cor. iv. 10.

DY'INGLY.* adv. of the old of giving up the able tyrann.

But 'tis impossi' Martin, A
You, Leocadia, picken the s
Though I can dy'ing
I know not your d. n. and Fl. Love's Pilgr.

DYKE.* See DIKE.

DYNAST.* n. s. [Gr. δυναστεύς, Fr. dynaste. Milton writes our word, in its first sense, dynasta, from the Latin; "dynastas, or proud monarchs," Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.]

1. A ruler; a governour. In our old lexicography dynastich, "one of great rule or power." Cockeram.

2. A dynasty; a government, if it be not a misprint. See DYNASTY.

He might give some account for the heroical times of those Egyptian dynasts, pretending antiquity many years further back into the chaos than the Mosical beginning.

Gregory's Posthuma, (1650.) p. 142.

DYNASTY.* n. s. [Gr. δυναστία, Fr. dynastie.]

1. Government; sovereignty.

Some account him fabulous, because he carries up the Egyptian dynasties before the flood, yea, and long before the creation. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Greece was divided into several dynasties, which our author has enumerated under their respective princes. Pope.

2. A race or family of rulers.

This was the light put into the hands of the next dynasty of theologians, the schoolmen. Reeves on the Psalms, p. 18.

DYSCRASIA.* n. s. [δυσκρασία.] An unequal mixture of elements in the blood or nervous juice; a distemperature, when some humour or quality abounds in the body. Dict.

I will somewhat write of two dyscrasies of the body.

Sir T. Elyot, Cast. of Health, (1541.) B. 4.

D Y S

If his conscience were come to that unnatural dyscrasy, as to digest poison and to keek at wholesome food, it was not for the parliament, or any of his kingdoms, to feed with him any longer. Milton, Eiconoclastes.

Sin is but a disease and dyscrasy in the soul.

Cudworth, Serms. (1676,) p. 81.

In this pituitous dyscrasy of blood, we must vomit off the pituita, and purge upon intermissions. Floyer on the Humours.

DY'SENTERY.* n. s. [dysenterie, Fr. from δυσεντερία.]

A looseness, wherein very ill humours flow off by stool, and are also sometimes attended with blood. Dict.

From an unusual inconstancy of the weather, and perpetual changes of the wind from East to West, proceed epidemical dysenteries. Arbutnot on Air.

DY'SNOMY.* n. s. [Gr. δυσνομία.] Ill ordering of laws; or the enacting bad laws. See ANOMY. Cockeram.

DYSPE'PSY.* n. s. [δυσπεψία.] A difficulty of digestion, or bad fermentation in the stomach or guts. Dict.

DYS'PHONY.* n. s. [δυσφωνία.] A difficulty in speaking, occasioned by an ill disposition of the organs. Dict.

DYS'PNO'EA.* n. s. [δύσπνοια.] A difficulty of breathing; straitness of breath.

DYS'URY.* n. s. [δυσουρία.] A difficulty in making urine.

It doth end in a dysentery, pains of the hæmorrhoids, inflammations of any of the lower parts, diabetes, a continual pissing, or a hot dysury, difficulty of making water. Harvey.

E.

E·A·C

E Has two sounds; long, as scène, and short, as men. E is the most frequent vowel in the English language; for it not only is used like the rest in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as cân, câne; mân, mâne; gâp, gâpe; glâd, glâde; brêd, brêde; chîn, chîne; whip, wipe; thin, thine; nôd, nôde; tân, tâne; plûm, plûme. Yet it sometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as gone, knowledge, edge, give. Anciently almost every word ended with e; as for can, canne; for year, yeare; for great, greate; for need, neede; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this e final had at first a soft sound, like the female e of the French; and that afterwards it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verse required, till at last it became universally silent.

Ea has the sound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the apposition of e to the end of the word; as mên, mēan; sêll, sēal; mēt, mēat; nēt, nēat.

EACH. † pron. [Sax. æghpîc, ælc, elc; elch, Dutch; ilk, Scottish. Each is called a distributive pronoun, because it relates to persons or things that make up a number, including every individual of any number referred to.]

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of diff'rent greatness be,
Yet both are for each other's use dispos'd;
His to inclose, and your's to be inclos'd. Dryden.

2. Every one of any number. This sense is rare, except in poetry, Dr. Johnson says; citing only Milton and Denham.

In the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes. Isaiah, xxxv. 7.

The invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be the inventor miss'd. Milton, P. L.

Let each
His adamantine coat gird well, and each
Fit well his helm. Milton, P. L.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible besides. Milton, P. R.

Wise Plato said the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.

When I consider how each of these professions [divinity, law, and physick,] are crowded with multitudes that seek their livelihood in them. Addison, Spect. No. 21.

E·A·G

3. To EACH the correspondent word is other, whether it be used of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis said they eat each other. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Let each esteem other better than themselves. Phil. ii. 3.
Loveliest of women! heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Brightening each other! Thou art all divine. Addison, Cato.

EA'CHWHERE. * adv. [each and where.] Every-where.

The cases questioned are for the most part only such as you will confess, before the suspicion of antichristian apostasy, to have obtained eachwhere in the church. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 309.

EAD. [æd, ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the simple names, denotes happiness, or blessedness. Thus Eadward is a happy preserver; Eadulph, happy assistance; Eadgar, happy power; Eadwin, happy conquerour; which Macarius Eupolemus, Fausta, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in some measure resemble. Ead may also in some cases be derived from the Saxon eath, which signifies easy, gentle, mild. Gibson's Camden.

EA'GER. † adj. [eagon, Saxon; aigre, French, Dr. Johnson says. We must derive it, however, from the Latin acer, brisk and courageous, as well as sharp or sour.]

1. Struck with desire; ardently wishing; keenly desirous; vehement in desire; hotly longing.

Of action eager, and intent of thought,
The chiefs your honourable danger sought. Dryden, Ovid.
Eager to read the rest, Archates came. Dryden, Æn.
With joy the ambitious youth his mother heard,
And, eager for the journey, soon prepar'd;
He longs the world beneath him to survey,
To guide the chariot, and to give the day. Dryden.

Love inflam'd, and eager on his bliss,
Smother'd her words. Addison, Ovid.

Perhaps by that time this reaches you, I shall have entered on my 67th year; which makes me the eagerer to see Mrs. Morice and you once at least before I die.

Atterbury to Mr. Morice, Lett. 66.

2. It is used sometimes with of, sometimes with for, sometimes with on or after before the thing sought.

3. Hot of disposition; vehement; ardent; impetuous.

He preserved the holy women Susan and Tecla, the one from the furious raging of the old judges, and the other from a most eager and forcible tyrant. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) A. a. iii.
Apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager. Hooker.

Nor do the eager clamours of disputants yield more relief to eclipsed truth, than did the sounding brass of old to the labouring moon. Glanville, Scepstis.

Imperfect zeal is hot and eager, without knowledge. Sprat.

Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.

A man, charged with a crime of which he thinks himself innocent, is apt to be too eager in his own defence. Dryden.

4. Quick; busy; easily put in action.

His Numidian genius
Is well dispos'd to mischief, were he prompt
And eager on it; but he must be spur'd. Addison, Cato.

5. Sharp; sour; acid. See VINEGAR.

The wine aygre or sour. Ordinary of Crysten Men, p. 237.

With a sudden vigour it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings, into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

6. Keen; severe; biting.

The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

7. Brittle; inflexible; not ductile. A cant word of artificers.

Gold will be sometimes so eager, as artists call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glass itself. Locke.

EA'GERLY, adv. [from eager.]

1. With great ardour of desire; with impetuosity of inclination.

To the holy war how fast and eagerly did men go, when the priest persuaded them that whosoever died in that expedition was a martyr? South.

How eagerly he flew, when Europe's fate
Did for the seed of future actions wait. Stepney.

2. Ardently; hotly.

Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Anthony were all inclos'd. Shakespeare.

3. Keenly; sharply.

Abundance of rain froze so eagerly as it fell, that it seemed the depth of Winter had of a sudden been come in. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

EA'GERNESS, † n. s. [from eager.]

1. Keeness of desire; ardour of inclination.

She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint. Shakespeare.
Have you not seen, when whistled from the fist,
Some faulcon stoop'd at what her eye design'd,
And, with her eagerness, the quarry miss'd. Dryden.

—The eagerness and strong bent of the mind after knowledge, if not warily regulated, is often an hindrance to it. Locke.

Derision and obloquy are received with as much eagerness as wit and humour. Addison, Freeholder.

Juba lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too,
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love. Addison, Cato.

His continued application to publick affairs diverts him from those pleasures, which are pursued with eagerness by princes who have not the publick so much at heart. Addison.

The things of this world, with whatever eagerness they engage our pursuit, leave us still empty and unsatisfied with their fruition. Rogers.

2. Impetuosity; vehemence; violence.

It finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate and dead when it departs. Dryden.

I'll fill thee with such eagerness of haste,
As fiends, let loose, would lay all nature waste. Dryden.

3. Tartness; sourness.

EA'GLE, n. s. [aigle, French; aquila, Latin; caller, Erse.]

1. A bird of prey, which, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. It is also said not to drink at all, like other birds with sharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle sees its young so well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their nest, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it sees them weary, or fearful, it takes them upon its back. Eagles are said to be extremely sharp-sighted, and, when they take flight, spring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes steadily fixed upon the sun. Calmet.

Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. The standard of the ancient Romans.

Arts still follow'd where Rome's eagles flew. Pope.

EA'GLE-EYED, † adj. [from eagle and eyed.] Sharp-sighted as an eagle.

Contain thy self;
For though all things beneath us are transparent,
The sharpest sighted, were he eagle-ey'd,
Cannot discover us. Beaum. and Fl. The Prophetess.

As he was quick and perspicacious, so was he inwardly eagle-eyed, and versed in the humours of his subjects. Howell.

Ev'ry one is eagle-ey'd to see
Another's faults and his deformity. Dryden.

EA'GLE-SIGHTED,  adj.* [eagle and sight.] Having quick-sight, like an eagle.

What peremptory eagle-sighted eye
Dares look upon the heaven of her brow,
That is not blinded by her majesty? Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

The eagle-sighted prophets too
Which were thy church's organs. Donne, Poems, p. 339.

EA'GLESPEED, n. s. [eagle and speed.] Swiftmess like that of an eagle.

Abrupt with eaglespeed she cut the sky,
Instant invisible to mortal eye. Pope.

EA'GLESS,  n. s.* [fr. aiglesse.] The hen eagle.

Sherwood.
EA'GLESTONE, n. s. A stone said to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder. Calmet.

The eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it, a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken; and every fossil, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The analogy between a stone, thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and effects in accelerating or retarding delivery; so that if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. On such idle and imaginary virtues was raised all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages.

• Hill's Materia Medica.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle; and so doth the attites, or eaglestone, which hath a little stone within it. Bacon.

EA'GLET, n. s. [from eagle.] A young eagle.

This treason of his sons did the king express in an emblem, wherein was an eagle with three eaglets tying on her breast, and the fourth pecking at one of her eyes. Davies.

EA'GLEWINGED,  adj.* [eagle and wing.] Having the wings, as it were, of an eagle.

The eaglewinged pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts. Shakespeare, K. Rich. II.

At his right hand Victory
Sat eaglewing'd. Milton, P. L.

EA'GRE, † n. s. [æger, in Runick, is the ocean; eggia, in Icelandick, is to agitate, to incite. Sax. eagor- stream] A tide swelling above another tide, observable in the river Severn. See AGRE. Dr. Johnson cites a passage from Dryden, which he, or his scribe, has strangely altered. Dryden, in a note on the passage, says that he had observed the eagre on the river Trent. See EGER.

E A R

His manly heart, whose noble pride
Was still above
Dissembled hate or varnish'd love,
Its more than common transport could not hide;
But, like an eagre, rode in triumph o'er the tide:
Thus, in alternate course,
The tyrant passions, hope and fear,
Did in extremes appear,
And flash'd upon the soul with equal force.

Dryden, Thren. August.

EA'LDERMAN.† n. s. [calbepman, Sax.] The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman.

The king, archbishop, eorles, bishops, ealdermen, and other degrees, may suffice to prove them to be acts of parliament.

Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, p. 89.

Those ealdormen who were ranked with bishops in the Saxon laws, and in the old Latin translations called aldermanni, wore such as had counties or other territories under their government; and had the same power and jurisdiction as the earl had afterwards. The word ealdorman signifies literally no more than elder, or senator; but it signified, among the Saxons, a duke, an earl, a nobleman, a petty viceroy; a consul.

Shelton, Notes on Wotton's View of Hickee's Thesaurus, p. 60.

EAME.† n. s. [eam, Saxon; com, Dutch; amma, Icel. a grandmother, and Swedish, a nurse.] Uncle: a word still used in the wilder parts of Staffordshire; and in the north for a friend or gossip.

Whilst they were young, Cassibalan's their eme
Was by the people chosen in their stead.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 47.

Daughter, says she, fly, fly, behold thy dame
Foreshows the treason of thy wretched can!

Fairfax.

TO EAN.* v. n. [Sax. eamian; Lat. enitor.] To bring forth young. Used of sheep. This is the old orthography of the word; as, "an eaned lamb." Barret. This spelling the last editors of Shakspeare have revived. Dr. Johnson uses only yea. See TO YEAN.

He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes;

Who, then conceiving, did in eaning time

Fall party-coloured lambs. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

EA'NLING.* n. s. [from ean.] A lamb just dropt.
See YEANLING.

EAR.† n. s. [eape, Sax. oor, Dutch; auris, Lat.]

1. The whole organ of audition or hearing.

What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?

Stand I condemn'd!

Shakspeare, Much Ado.

His ears are open unto their cry.

Psalm xxxiv. 15.

Valsalva discovered some passages into the region of the ear drum; of mighty use, among others, to make discharges of bruises.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

2. That part of the ear that stands prominent.

You have heard of the news abroad: I mean, the whisper'd ones; for they are yet but ear kissing arguments. Shakspeare.

His master shall bore his ear through with an awl. Exod.

3. Power of judging of harmony; the sense of hearing.

I have a reasonable good ear in musick.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

She has a delicate ear, and her voice is musick. Richardson.

4. The head; or the person: in familiar language.

Their warlike force was sore weakened, the city beaten down about their ears, and most of them wounded. Knolles.

Better pass over an affront from one scoundrel, than draw the whole herd about a man's ears. L'Estrange.

E A R

Be not alarmed, as if all religion was falling about our ears.

Burnet's Theory.

5. The highest part of a man; the top.

A cavalier was up to the ears in love with a very fine lady.

L'Estrange.

6. The privilege of being readily and kindly heard; favour.

Aristippus was earnest suitor to Dionysius for some grant, who would give no ear to his suit: Aristippus fell at his feet, and then Dionysius granted it.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

They being told there was small hope of ease,
Were willing at the first to give an ear

To any thing that sounded liberty.

B. Jonson.

If on a pillory, or near a throne,

He gain his prince's ear, or lose his own.

Pope.

7. Disposition to like or dislike what is heard; judgement; opinion; taste.

He laid his sense closer, and in fewer words, according to the style and ear of those times.

Denham.

8. Any prominences from a larger body, raised for the sake of holding it.

There are some vessels, which, if you offer to lift by the belly or bottom, you cannot stir them; but are soon removed, if you take them by the ears. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

A quilted night-cap with one ear.

Congreve, Way of the World.

A pot without an ear.

Swift.

9. The spike of corn; that part which contains the seeds. [Sax. ælihep. See TO EAR.]

He delivereth to each of them a jewel, made in the figure of an ear of wheat, which they ever after wear.

Bacon.

The leaves on trees not more,

Nor bearded ears in fields, nor sands upon the shore. Dryden.
From several grains he had eighty stalks, with very large ears, full of large corn.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

10. To be by the *EAR*S.

To fall together by the *EAR*S.

To go together by the *EAR*S.

To fight; to scuffle;

to quarrel. [In

Dutch oorloggen.]

A familiar phrase.

Poor naked men belaboured one another with shagged sticks, or dully fell together by the ears at fisty-cuffs. More.

Fools go together by the ears, to have knives run away with the stakes.

L'Estrange.

All Asia now was by the ears,

And gods heat up for volunteers.

Prior.

11. To set by the *EAR*S. To make strife; to quarrel: in low language.

A mean rascal sets others together by the ears without fighting himself.

L'Estrange.

She used to carry tales from one to another, till she had set the neighbourhood together by the ears.

Arbuthnot.

It is usual to set these poor animals by the ears.

Addison.

EAR-BORED.* adj. [ear and bore.] Having the ears perforated; among the Atheuans a mark of nobility; among the Hebrews and Romans, a mark of servitude.

And she, like to some servile ear-bor'd slave,

Must play and sing.

Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 1.

EAR-DEAFENING.* adj. [ear and deafen.] Stunning the ear with noise.

The burst

And the ear-deafening voice o' the oracle,

Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpriz'd my sense,

That I was nothing.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tuf.

EAR-LAP.* n. s. [Sax. eap-lappe.] The tip of the ear.

Hulot.

EAR-LOCK.* n. s. [Sax. eap-locca.] A curl or twist of the hair, formerly called a love-lock; against which the indignation of Ryme was so great in 1628 as to occasion his writing a treatise, in which he deduces "the birth, source, and pedigree" of this lock "from the devil!" Those who, in the present times, seem to have revived this ornament, would not, even if they "had three ears," hear this denouncer of curls with any other emotion than that of laughter at his rage, and pity at his want of taste!

These love-locks, or ear-locks, in which too many of our nation have of late begun to glory, whatever they may seem to be in the eyes and judgements of many humorous, singular, effeminate, ruffianly, vain-glorious or time-serving persons, who repute and deem them a very generous, necessary, beautiful, and comely ornament; are yet, notwithstanding, but so many badges of infamy, effeminacy, vanity, singularity, pride, &c.

Prynne, Unloveliness of Love-Locks, p. 3.

EAR-MARK.* n. s. [ear and mark.] A mark on the ear, by which shepherds know their sheep; figuratively, any distinction.

Sir J. Perrot [in 1584] ordered the Irish to mark all their cattle with pitch or ear-mark, on pain of forfeiture.

Cox, Hist. of Ireland.

Telling us further, that we should know the time of the fulfilling this prophecy by the various fashions and mutability of apparel that should be in use, the very ear-mark of the age we live in.

Stephens, Add. to Spelman's Hist. of Sacrilege, (1698,) p. 235.

To EAR-MARK.* v. a. [from the noun.] To mark cattle on the ear.

For feare lest we like rogues should be reputed,
And for ear-marked beasts abroad be bruited.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale, ver. 188.

EAR-PICK.* n. s. [ear and pick.] An instrument by which the ears are cleansed; an old word in Huloet's dictionary; and noticed in modern cyclopædias, with an observation of Sir Hans Sloane that the use of this instrument seems prejudicial.

EAR-PIERCING.* adj. [ear and pierce.] Affecting the ear with shrill vibrations of sound.

The ear-piercing fife. Shakespeare, Othello.

EAR-RING.† n. s. [Sax. earþring.] Jewels set in a ring and worn at the ears; ornament of a woman's ear.

With gold and silver they increase his store,
And gave the precious ear-rings which they wore. Sandys.
A lady bestowed ear-rings upon a favourite lamprey.

Arbutnot.

EAR-SHOT. n. s. Reach of the ear; space within which words may be heard.

Gomez, stand you out of ear-shot. — I have something to say to your wife in private. Dryden, Span. Friar.

EAR-WAX. n. s. [ear and wax.] The cerumen or exudation which smears the inside of the ear.

The ear being to stand open, because there was some danger that insects might creep in thereat; therefore hath nature loricated or plastered over the sides of the hole with ear-wax, to entangle insects. Ray on the Creation.

EAR-WIG.† n. s. [eape and piſſa, a grub, Saxon, Dr. Johnson says. Wallis, however, derives it from the Lat. eruca; and both Mr. Pegge and Mr. Malone think his notion correct; our word péridig being, in like manner, corrupted from the French peruque.]

1. A sheath-winged insect, imagined to creep into the ear.

Himself he on an ear-wig set;
Yet scarce he on his back could get,
So oft and high he did curvet.

Drayton, Nymphid.

Ear-wigs and snails seldom infect timber. Mortimer, Husb.

Doll never flies to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face,
Because she heard a sudden drum,
Or found an ear-wig in a plum.

Swift.

E A R

2. By way of reproach, a whisperer; a prying informer.

EAR-WITNESS. n. s. [ear and witness.] One who attests, or can attest any thing as heard by himself.

All present were made ear-witnesses, even of each particular branch of a common indictment. Hooker.

The histories of mankind, written by eye or ear-witnesses, are built upon this principle. Watts, Logick.

To EAR.† v. a. [Norm. Fr. eare, to plow; Sax. epian; Goth. arian; Lat. aro. See EARTH.] To till; to plow. Obsolete.

He that ears my land spares my team, and gives me leave to enjoy the crop. Shakespeare, All's well.

Menecrates and Menas, famous pirates,

Make the sea serve them, which they ear and wound

With keels of every kind. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

A rough valley, which is neither ear'd nor sown.

Deuteronomy, xxi. 4.

The field of love, with plow of virtue ear'd.

Fairfax.

To EAR.† v. n. [from ear.] To shoot into ears.

Be they like corn on houses tops,

Which reaper's sickle never crops,

Nor linger in his bosom bears,

But withers still before it ears. Sandys, Ps. (1636,) p. 211.

EA'UBLE.* adj. [from the verb.] Used to be tilled, grabilis. Barret.

EA'RAL.* adj. [from ear.] Receiving by the ear.

They are not true penitents that are merely earal, verbal, and worded men, that speak more than they really intend.

Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 34.

EA'RED.† adj. [from ear.]

1. Having ears, or organs of hearing. Sherwood.

2. Having ears, or ripe corn. Dr. Johnson applies, to this definition, a passage from Pope where the word means plowed. See the next definition.

3. Plowed.

Bush, or grass, or ered land. Chaucer, H. of Fame, i. 485.

The fallow field, or land ered to be sown.

Barret.

The covert of the thrice ear'd field

Saw stately Ceres to her passion yield. Pope, Odyssey.

EA'RING.* n. s. [from ear.] A plowing of land.

Huloet.

Yet there are five years, in the which there shall neither be earing nor harvest. Gen. xlv. 6.

EARL. n. s. [eoþl, Sax.; coryl, Erse.] A title of nobility, anciently the highest of this nation, now the third.

Thanes and kinsmen,

Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland

For such an honour nam'd. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

EARL-MARSHAL.† n. s. [earl and marshal.]

1. He that has chief care of military solemnities.

The marching troops through Athens take their way;

The great earl-marshal orders their array. Dryden.

2. One of the great officers of state in England; whose business is to take cognizance of all matters respecting honour and arms. The office is hereditary in the family of Howard, and is now filled by Charles, Duke of Norfolk.

EA'RLDOM.† n. s. [Sax. eoþlþome, which signified a province or county, as well as the office and jurisdiction of an earl.] The seigniorship of an earl; the title and dignity of an earl.

The duke of Clarence having married the heir of the earl of Ulster, and by her having all the earldom of Ulster, carefully went about redressing evils. Spenser on Ireland.

When I am king, claim thou of me

The earldom of Hereford.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

EA'RLDORMAN.* n. s. An alderman; so Burke has chosen to write this word. See EALDERMAN.

Enjoining all his earldormen and sheriffs immediately to apply themselves to learning, or to quit their offices.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. B. ii. ch. 4.

EARLES-PENNY.* n. s. [Lat. arrha, money given in part of payment. An earnest-penny. Ray. Yet used in the north of England; and sometimes written and pronounced arles, as well as carles. See Ray and Grose. See also EARNEST.

EA'RLLESS.† adj. [from ear.]

1. Not inclined to hear; as if deaf. This sense is not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

He who hath had the patience of Diogenes, to make orations unto statues, may more sensibly apprehend how all words fall to the ground, spent upon such a surd and earless generation of men, stupid unto all instruction, and rather requiring an exorcist than an orator for their conversion.

Brown, Chr. Morals, ii. 6.

2. Without any ears.

Earless on high stood uhabash'd Defoe,
And Tutchin flagrant from the scourge below. Pope.

EA'RLINESS. n. s. [from early.] Quickness of any action with respect to something else: as, earliness in the morning, the act of rising soon with respect to the sun; earliness of growth, the act of growing up soon in comparison with other things of the same kind.

The next morning we, having striven with the sun's earliness, were beyond the prospect of the highest turrets. Sidney.

The goodness of the crop is great gain, if the goodness answer the earliness of coming up. Bacon.

EA'RLY.† adj. [æp, Saxon, before, Dr. Johnson says; but he should have observed that there is another Sax. æp, which means in the morning; whence æplice, aplice; and thence directly our early. Goth. ar, day-break.] Soon with respect to something else: as, in the morning, with respect to the sun; in time, with respect to creation; in the season, in comparison with other products.

I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meetest for death: the weakest kind of fruit

Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me. Shakespeare.

It is a curiosity to have several fruits upon one tree; and the more when some of them come early, and some come late. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

God made all the world, that he might be worshipped in some parts of the world; and therefore, in the first and most early times of the church, what care did he manifest to have such places erected to his honour? South.

The nymphs, forsaking ev'ry cave and spring,
Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring. Pope.

Sickness is early old age: it teaches us diffidence in our earthly state, and inspires us with thoughts of a future. Pope.

Oh soul of honour!

Oh early hero! Smith, Phæd. and Hippol.

EA'RLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; betimes.

Early before the morn with crimson ray
The windows of bright heav'n opened had. Spenser.

None in more languages can show
Those arts, which you so early know. Waller.

The princess makes her issue like herself, by instilling early into their minds religion, virtue and honour. Addison.

To EARN. v. a. [æapntan, Sax.]

1. To gain as the reward or wages of labour, or any performance.

Those that have joined with their honour great perils, are less subject to envy; for men think that they earn their honours hardly. Bacon, Ess.

Winning cheap the high repute,
Which he through hazard huge must earn. Milton, P. L.

I to the evil turn

My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milton, P. L.

Men may discern

From what consummate virtue I have chose

This perfect man, by merit call'd my Son,

To earn salvation for the sons of men. Milton, P. R.

Since they all beg, it were better for the state to keep them, even although they earned nothing. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

The poems gained the plagiary wealth, while the author hardly earned his bread by repeating them. Pope on Homer.

After toiling twenty days,

To earn a stock of pence and praise,

Thy labour's grown the critick's prey. Swift.

2. To obtain, as a consequence of action.

I can't say whore;

It does abhor me, now I speak the word:

To do the act, that might th' addition earn,

Not the world's mass of vanity could make me. Shakespeare.

To EARN.* v. n. [Germ. gerinnen, to 'coagulate.]

To curdle; to earn us cheese doth. Earning, cheese-rennet. Ray and Grose. The word is still in use in the north of England.

To EARN.* v. n. [Sax. gynnan, to desire.] To long for; to feel anxiety. So Spenser writes the word:

But it is properly yearn. See To YEARN.

EA'RNEST. adj. [eopnert, Sax.]

1. Ardent in any affection; warm; zealous; importunate.

He which prayeth in due sort, is thereby made the more attentive to hear; and he which heareth, the more earnest to pray for the time which we bestow, as well in the one as the other. Hooker.

2. Intent; fixed; eager.

On that prospect strange

Their earnest eyes they fix'd; imagining,

For one forbidden tree, a multitude

Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame. Milton, P. L.

They are never more earnest to disturb us, than when they see us most earnest in this duty. Dryden.

3. Serious; important. Some say in earnest, not in jest.

They whom earnest lets do often hinder from being partakers of the whole, have yet this the length of divine service, opportunity for access unto some reasonable part thereof. Hooker.

EA'RNEST.† n. s.

1. Seriousness; a serious event not a jest; reality not a feigned appearance. [from the adjective.]

Take heed that this jest do not one day turn to earnest. Sidney.

I told you Klaius was the hapless wight,

Who earnest found what they accounted play. Sidney.

Therewith she laugh'd, and did her earnest end in jest. Spenser, F. Q.

That high All-seer, which I dallied with,

Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,

And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakespeare.

Nor can I think that God, Creator wise!

Though threat'ning, will in earnest so destroy

Us, his prime creatures. Milton, P. L.

But the main business and earnest of the world is money, dominion, and power. L'Estrange.

We shall die in earnest, and it will not become us to live in jest. Gov. of the Tongue.

Sempronius, you have acted like yourself;

One would have thought you had been half in earnest. Addison.

2. [ernitz penge, Danish; arres, French, Dr. Johnson says. The latter word brings earnest near to the Latin arrha, the parent of our carles or arles penny; and earnest penny has long been an expression substituted for that. "Abundance or want are arrha-bones mortis, the earnest pennies of dissolution of bodies." Whitlock, Mann. of the English, 1654. p. 172. See also the next definition.] Pledge;

handsel; first fruits; token of something of the same kind in futurity.

The apostles term it the handsel or earnest of that which is to come. Hooker.

Which leader shall the doubtful vict'ry bless,
And give an earnest of the war's success. Waller.

It may be looked upon as a pledge and earnest of quiet and tranquillity. Bp. Smalridge.

The mercies received, great as they are, were earnest and pledges of greater. Atterbury.

3. The money which is given in token that a bargain is ratified.

You have conspir'd against our person,
Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers
Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death. Shakspeare.

Pay back the earnest penny received from Satan, and fling away his sift. Decay of Piety.

EA'RNESTLY.† adv. [Sax. eornostlice.]

1. Warmly; affectionately; zealously; importunately; intensely.

When earnestly they seek

Such proof, conclude they then begun to fail. Milton, P. L.

Shame is a banishment of him from the good opinion of the world, which every man most earnestly desires. South.

Earnestly invoke the goodness and power of an all merciful and almighty God. Bp. Smalridge.

2. Eagerly; desirously.

Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter? Shakspeare.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,

Will outstrip her's; as buets flown before,

A latter bullet may o'ertake, the powder being more. Donne.

EA'RNESTNESS. n. s. [from earnest.]

1. Eagerness; warmth; vehemence; impetuosity.

Often with a solemn earnestness,

More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trifle,

He begg'd of me to steal it. Shakspeare, Othello.

Audacity and confidence doth in business so great effects, as a man may doubt, that, besides the very daring and earnestness, and persisting and importunity, there should be some secret binding, and stooping of other men's spirits to such persons. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Marcus is overwarm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison, Cato.

2. Solemnity; zeal; seriousness.

There never was a charge maintained with such a shew of gravity and earnestness, which had a slighter foundation to support it. Atterbury.

3. Solicitude; care; intenseness.

With overstraining, and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden.

EA'RNFUL.* adj. [from earn.] Full of anxiety.

More properly earnful. In Kent, earnful or crunful is still used for lamentable.

Whatever charms might move a gentle heart
I oft have tried, and shew'd the earnful smart
Which eats my breast. P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. v. st. 8.

EA'RNING.* n. s. [Sax. eapnung.] That which is gained as the reward or wages of any labour.

This is the great expence of the poor, that takes up almost all their earnings. Locke.

EARSH. n. s. [from ear, to plow.] A plowed field.

Not now in use.

Fires oft are good on barren earshes made,
With crackling flames to burn the stubble blade. May's Virgil.

EARTH.† n. s. [Sax. eapd, eapð; Goth. airtha, airjan, to plow; Su. geria, to till or plow. So Mr. H. Tooke says, that earth is the third person of the indicative of the Sax. eþuan, to plow; that which one eareth, that which is cared. Div. of Purl. ii. 417. Our word, however, may be traced to more ancient sources: Heb. aretz; Chald. artha; Syr. arho; Arab. erd.]

1. The element distinct from air, fire, or water; soil; terrene matter.

The smiling god is seen; while water, earth,
And air attest his bounty. Thomson.

2. The terraqueous globe; the world.

Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give. Shakspeare.

This solid globe we live upon is called the earth; which word, taken in a more limited sense, signifies such parts of this globe as are capable, being exposed to the air, to give rooting and nourishment to plants, so that they may stand and grow in it. Locke.

3. Different modification of terrene matter. In this sense it has a plural.

The five genera of earths are, 1. Boles. 2. Clays. 3. Mails. 4. Ochres. 5. Tripelas. Hill, Mat. Medica.

Earths are opaque, insipid, and, when dried, friable, or consisting of parts easy to separate, and soluble in water; not disposed to burn, flame, or take fire. Woodward.

4. This world opposed to other scenes of existence.

What are these,

So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't? Shakspeare, K. Lear.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakspeare, Coriol.

5. The inhabitants of the earth.

The whole earth was of one language. Gen. xi. 1.

6. Country; distinct region.

In ten set battles have we driven back
These heathen Saxons, and regain'd our earth,
As earth recovers from the ebbing tide. Dryden.

7. The act of turning up the ground in tillage. [from ear, to plow.]

Such land as ye break up for barley to sow,
Two earths, at the least, ere ye sow it bestow. Tusser.

8. The earth or hole of a fox or badger. See To EARTH.

To EARTH.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hide in earth.

The devil eartheth himself in an homonymie, as a fox in the ground. Fuller, Holy War, p. 272.
The fox is earthed; but I shall send my two varriers in after him. Dryden, Span. Friar.

The miser earths his treasure; and the thief, Watching the mole, half-beggars him ere morn. Young, Night Th. 9.

2. To bury; to inter.

This lord of weak remembrance,—
Who shall be of as little memory,
When he is earth'd. Shakspeare, Tempest.

3. To cover with earth.

Earth up with fresh mould the roots of those auriculas which the frost may have uncovered. Eorlyn's Kalendar.

To EARTH. v. n. To retire under ground.

Hence foxes earth'd, and wolves abhor'd the day,
And hungry churles ensnar'd the nightly prey. Tickell.

EA'RTHBAG.* n. s. [earth and bag.] In fortification, a sack filled with sand or earth, to keep off the shot of the enemy. Sacs à terre, Fr.

EA'RTHBANK.* n. s. [earth and bank.] In husbandry, a fence made of earth and turf; common, more particularly, about London, and in other parts of England.

EA'RTHBOARD. n. s. [earth and board.] The board of the plow that shakes off the earth.

The plow reckoned the most proper for stiff black clays, is one that is long, large, and broad, with a deep head and a square earthboard, so as to turn up a great furrow. Mortimer.

EA'RTHBORN.† adj. [earth and born.]

1. Born of the earth; terrigenous.

Concord, the only perfect pleasure,
That wretched earthborn men have ever known;
For many hearts it doth compound in one

Sir J. Davies, Orch. (1599.) st. 109.

Creatures of other mould, earthborn perhaps,
Not spirits.

Milton, P. L.

The wounds I make but sow new enemies;
Which from their blood, like earthborn brethren rise.

Dr. Jden.

The God for ever great, for ever king,
Who slew the earthborn race and measures right
To heav'n's great habitats!

Prior.

2. Meanly born.

Earthborn Lycon shall ascend the throne.

Smith.

EA'RTHBOUND. adj. [earth and bound.] Fastened by the pressure of the earth.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earthbound root?

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

EA'RTHBRED.* adj. [earth and bred.] Grovelling;
low; abject.

Peasants, I'll curb your headstrong impudence,
And make you tremble when the lion roars;
Yea, earthbred worms!

Brewer, Com. of Lingua, i. 6.

EA'RTHCREATED.* adj. [earth and create.] Formed of earth.

Great day! for which all other days were made;
For which earth rose from chaos; man from earth;
And an eternity, the date of gods,
Descended on poor earth-created man!

Young, Night Th. 9.

EA'RTHEN. adj. [from earth.] Made of earth; made of clay.

About his shelves
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds
Were thinly scatter'd.

Shakespeare.

As a rustick was digging the ground by Padua, he found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn, and in this lesser a lamp clearly burning.

Wilkins.

The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would sail sometimes in the boats made of earthen ware.

Arbutnot on Coins.

EA'RTHENGENDERED.* adj. [earth and engender.]
Bred of earth.

If that speak, it is
A thundering voice; and if it sigh, the hiss
Of earth-engendered winds.

Fanshau, Transl. of Pastor Fido.

EA'RTHFED.* adj. [earth and fed.] Low; abject;
delighted only with earthly pursuits.

Such earthfed minds,

That never tasted the true heaven of love.

B. Jonson, Fox.

EA'RTHFLAX. n. s. [earth and flax.] A kind of fibrous fossil.

Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaister, or par-get; the finer, earthflax, or salamander's hair.

Woodward.

EA'RTHINESS.† n. s. [from earthy.]

1. The quality of containing earth; grossness.

They're not so eas'ly turn'd by sympathy,
The air there having less of earthiness.

More, Song of the Soul, ii. iii. 3. 55.

2. Intellectual coarseness. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

While a dull earthiness flags the rest of the creatures, these mount him like a stobler fire to the honour of the company and being a friend unto God.

Fellham, Disc. upon Eccles. ii. 11.

A second hindrance was the grossness, and earthiness of their fancy, which was not able to conceive God to be any thing but a corporeous substance.

Hammond, Works, iv. 641.

EA'RTHLINESS.* n. s. [from earthly.] Worldliness.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EA'RTHLING.† n. s. [Sax. eopthling.] An inhabitant of the earth; a mortal; a poor frail creature.

Earth's not alone; for earthlings creep upon it.

Davies, Wit's Pilgrim, sign. L. 2.

To earthlings, the footstool of God, that stage which he raised for a small time, seemeth magnificent.

Drummond.

EA'RTHLY.† adj. [Sax. eopthlic.]

1. Not heavenly; vile; mean; sordid.

But I remember now

I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudible; to do good, sometime
Accounted dangerous folly.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

When faith and love, which parted from thee never,
Had ripen'd thy just soul to dwell with God,
Meckly thou didst resign this earthly load
Of death, call'd life.

Milton, Sonnet.

2. Belonging only to our present state; not spiritual.
Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly fuyours, is in each kind easily known.

Hooker.

You have scarce time

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

It must be our solemn business and endeavour, at fit seasons to turn the stream of our thoughts from earthly towards divine objects.

Atterbury.

3. Corporeal; not mental.

Great grace that old man to him given had,
For God he often saw, from heaven hight,
All were his earthly eyes both blunt and bad.
Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,
An earthly lover lurking at her heart.

Pope.

4. Any thing in the world; a female hyperbole.

Oh! to dance all night, and dress all day,
Charm'd the small-pox, or chas'd old-age away,
Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce?
Or who would learn one earthly thing of use?

Pope.

EA'RTHLY-MINDED.* adj. [earthly and mind.] Having a sensual or an abject mind.

The earthly-minded antichrists and hypocrites.

Bale on the Revel. P. ii. sign. k. ji.

Adam — had become so earthly-minded by listening to the voice of the deceived woman.

More, Conj. Cobb. p. 75.

EA'RTHLY-MINDEDNESS.* n. s. [from the adjective.]
Grossness; sensuality.

Our other backslidings and variations from him, how wide and distant soever, yet may be thought to be but like those of the compass, more or less according to a less or greater interposition of earthly-mindedness.

Gregory, Notes on Passages in Script. p. 164.

The earthly-mindedness came from this animated earth, the body; and is to shrink up again into its own principle, and to perish.

More, Conj. Cobb. p. 75.

EA'RTHNUT. n. s. [earth and nut.] A pignut; a root in shape and size like a nut.

Where there are earthnuts in several patches, though the roots lie deep in the ground, and the stalks be dead, the swine will by their scent root only where they grow.

Ray.

EA'RTHQUAKE. n. s. [earth and quake.] Tremor or convulsion of the earth.

This subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth stopt, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it used to ascend, and being preter-naturally assembled in greater quantity into one place, causes a great rarefaction and tumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and concussion which we call an earthquake.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

These tumults were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horror.

King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or success,
These might perhaps be found in other men:
'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me;
That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,
And with a silent earthquake shook his soul.

Dryden.

The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed.

Addison on Italy.

EA'RTHSHAKING. adj. [earth and shake.] Having power to shake the earth, or to raise earthquakes.

E A S

By the earthshaking Neptune's mace,
And Tethys' grave majestick pace. Milton, Comus.
Now scarce withdrawn the fierce earthshaking pow'r,
Jove's daughter Pallas watch'd the fav'ring hour;
Back to their caves she bade the winds to fly,
And hush'd the blust'ring brethren of the sky. Pope.

EARTHWORM. n. s. [earth and worm.]

1. A worm bred under ground.

Worms are found in snow commonly, like earthworms, and therefore it is not unlike that it may likewise put forth plants. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and landsnails innumerable come out of their lurking places. Ray.

2. A mean sordid wretch.

Thy vain contempt, dull earthworm, cease;
I won't for refuge fly. Norris.

EARTHY. † adj. [from earth.]

1. Consisting of earth.

Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthly pit! Shakespeare.

Lamps are inflamed by the admission of new air, when the sepulchres are opened, as we see in fat earthly vapours of divers sorts. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

All water, especially that of rain, is stored with matter, light in comparison of the common earthly matter. Woodward.

2. Composed or partaking of earth; terrene.

The first man is of the earth, earthly; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthly, such are they also that are earthly; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. 1 Cor. xv. 47-49.

To survey his dead and earthly image,
What were it but to make my sorrow greater. Shakespeare.

Him lord pronounce'd, he, O indignity!
Subjected to his service angel-wings,
And flaming ministers to watch and tend
Their earthly charge. Milton, P. L.

3. Inhabiting the earth; terrestrial.

Those earthly spirits black and envious are;
I'll call up other gods of form more fair. Dryden.

4. Relating to earth.

Mine is the shipwreck, in a watry sign;
And in an earthly, the dark dungeou thine. Dryden.

5. Not mental; gross; not refined.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;
Lay open to my earthly gross conceit,
Smoother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak
The folded meaning of your words deceit. Shakespeare.
Nor is my flame
So earthly, as to need the dull material force
Of eyes, or lips, or cheeks. Denham, Sophy.

EASE. † n. s. [aise, French; otium, Lat. The Goth. azrits is easy, not difficult.]

1. Quiet; rest; undisturbed tranquillity; not solicitude.

We should not find her half so brave and bold
To lead it to the wars and to the seas;
To make it suffer watchings, hunger, cold,
When it might feed with plenty, rest with ease. Davies.

By this we plainly view the two imposthumes
That choke a kingdom's welfare; ease and wantonness.

The priest on skirts of off'rings takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his slumber sees. Dryden, Æn.

2. Freedom from pain; a neutral state between pain and pleasure.

That which we call ease is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain. L'Estrange.

Is it a small crime to wound himself by anguish of heart, to deprive himself of all the pleasures, or eases, or enjoyments of life? Temple.

3. Rest after labour; intermission of labour.

Give yourselves ease from the fatigue of waiting. Swift.

4. Facility; not difficulty.

E A S

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease, if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state;
If not, no labour can the tree constrain,
And strength of stubborn arms and steel are vain. Dryden.

5. Unconstraint; freedom from harshness, formality, forced behaviour, or conceits.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance;
As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance. Pope.

6. AT EASE. In a state of undisturbed leisure; without pain; without anxiety.

Lucan, content with praise may lie at ease
In costly grots and marble palaces. Dryden, Juv.

Men of parts and penetration were not idle to dispute at their ease, but were to act according to the result of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing: knowledge and science in general is the business only of those who are at ease and leisure. Locke.

7. Chapel of EASE. See CHAPEL.

To EASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain.

Help and ease children the best you can; but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

2. To assuage; to mitigate; to alleviate.

Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude. 2 Chron.

Complain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be ease'd, if France can yield relief. Shakespeare.

As if with sports my sufferings I could ease. Dryden.

Though he speaks of such medicines as procure sleep, and ease pain, he doth not determine their doses. Arbuthnot.

Will he for sacrifice our sorrows ease?
And can our tears reverse his firm decrees? Prior.

3. To relieve from labour, or any thing that offends: with of before the thing.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear;
And that thou may'st not be too late abroad
Sing, and I'll ease thy shoulders of thy load. Dryden.

I will ease me of mine adversaries. Isaiah, i. 24.

No body feels pain that he wishes not to be ease'd of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it. Locke.

EASEFUL. † adj. [ease and full.] Quiet; peaccable; fit for rest.

I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Ere he attain his easeful western bed. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Since it hath been our easeful happiness to enjoy both the aids and industry of so vigilant a senate, we profess to have been the more indulgent to our pleasures, not as being careless of our office, but rather secure of the necessity.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

EASEFULLY.* adv. [from easeful.] In a quiet manner. Sherwood.

EASEL.* n. s. The frame on which painters strain their canvass.

EASEL-PIECE.* n. s. A painting which is painted on the easel, in contradistinction to those which are painted on the wall or ceiling.

EASELESS.* adj. [ease and less.] Wanting ease; deprived of rest.

Send me some tokens, that my hope may live,
Or that my easeless thoughts may sleep and rest.

Donne, Poems, p. 264.

That bottomless gulf of easeless and everlasting flames. Junius, Sin Stigm. p. 271.

EASEMENT. † n. s. [from ease, Fr. aisement, Dict. Trev.]

1. The primary usage of this word seems to have been in the sense of evacuation. See Barret's and Sherwood's dictionaries.

See that I lack not by my beddis side a chair of easement, with a vessel under.
During the time that he was in the cave, Saul, not knowing thereof, entered into the cave, to do his natural easement.

Surely he covereth his feet, [in the margin, doth his easement, in his summer-chamber.]
Infinite other helps and easements.

2. Assistance; support; relief from expences.

Infinite other helps and easements.

He has the advantage of a free lodging, and some other easements.

3. Relief from any evil.

To be dead, is easement; but to be still dying, is pain.

To the removal or easement of his affliction.

4. [In law.] A service that one neighbour has of another by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his ground, a sink, or such like.

EA'SILY. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.

Sounds move swiftly, and at great distance; but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped.

She ask'd the reason of his woe;
She ask'd, but with an air and mien,
That made it easily foreseen
She fear'd too much to know.

2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

It is not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easily resign to others the praise of your illustrious family.
Not soon provok'd she easily forgives;
And much she suffers, as she much believes.

EA'SINESS. n. s. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid
With half the easiness that they are rais'd.
Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength.

The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread; but it has not been considered.

You left a conquest more than half atchiev'd,
And for whose easiness I almost griev'd.

This plea, under a colour of friendship to religion, invites men to it by the easiness of the terms it offers.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that time would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them.

Since the custom of easiness to alter and change laws is so evil, no doubt but to bear a tolerable sore is better than to venture on a dangerous remedy.

Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness; save his life, but, when you have done, look to your own.

The safest way to secure honesty, is to lay the foundations of it early in liberality, and an easiness to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves.

3. Freedom from constraint; not effort; not formality.

Abstruse and mystick thoughts you must express
With painful care, but seeming easiness;
For truth shines brightest through the plainest dress.

4. Rest; tranquillity; ease; freedom from pain.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and easiness we enjoy when asleep.

EAST.† n. s. [eort, Sax. heos, Erse; Icel. astur; Goth. cyster; Gr. ēwēs, hōēs, the morning, the orient.]

1. The quarter where the sun rises: opposite to the West.

They counting forwards towards the East, did allow 180 degrees to the Portugals eastward.

2. The regions in the eastern parts of the world.

I would not be the villain that thou thinkest,
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot.

The gorgeous East, with richest hand,
Pours on her kings barbarick pearl and gold.

EAST.* adj. [Mr. H. Tooke says that "the past participle of the Sax. ýppian or ieppian, to be angry, is ýpped, ýppe, ýppt; dropping the p (which many cannot articulate) it becomes ýrt; and so it is much used in the Anglo-Saxon. They who cannot pronounce r, usually supply its place by a: hence, I suppose, east, which means angry, enraged." Div. of Purl. ii. 398. This, of course, he applies to the wind. But it is too far-fetched to be admitted; even by the defaulters in r. Sax. eart; as, earten wind, the east wind; eart wæ, east sea. So the Goth. cystra salt for the Baltick. See the etymology of east under the substantive.] Coming from, or being towards, the rising sun.

The Lord brought an east wind upon the land.

The length shall be over against one of the portions, from the west border unto the east border.

On the east side of the garden place,
Where entrance up from Eden easiest climbs,
Cherubick watch.

EA'STER.† n. s. [eartne, Saxon; ooster, Dutch.

"Easter is so called from the Sax. ortep, to rise, being the day of Christ's resurrection; or, as others think, from one of the Saxon goddesses called Eastre, whom they always worshipped at this season." Wheatly on the Common Prayer. That the goddess Eastre gave rise to this word, was the opinion of Bede in old time, and of Burke in our own. Wachter derives it from the Goth. urríst, he hath risen. The month of April was called by the Saxons ortep-monað.] The day on which the Christian church commemorates our Saviour's resurrection.

Did'st thou not fall out with a taylor for wearing his new doublet before Easter?

Victor's unbrother-like heat towards the Eastern churches, in the controversy about Easter fomented that difference into a schism.

EA'STERLING.† n. s. [from East.]

1. A native of some country eastward to another.

He oft in battle vanquished

Those spoilful, rich, and swarming Easterlings.

It is most likely the Easterlings did preserve a record of many words and actions of the Holy Jesus, which are not transmitted to us.

2. A species of waterfowl.

EA'STERLING.* adj. See STERLING.

EA'STERLY. adj. [from East.]

1. Coming from the parts towards the East.

When the easterly winds or breezes are kept off by some high mountains from the vallies, whereby the air, wanting motion; doth become exceeding unhealthy.

2. Lying towards the East.

E A S

These give us a view of the most easterly, southerly, and westerly parts of England. Grant's Bills of Mortality.

3. Looking towards the East.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell, drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbuthnot.

EA'STERN.† adj. [Sax easternn.]

1. Dwelling or found in the East; oriental.

Like eastern kings a lazy state they keep. Pope.

Eastern tyrants from the light of heaven Seclude their bosom-slaves. Thomson.

2. Lying or being towards the East.

The eastern end of the isle rises up in precipices. Addison.

3. Going towards the East.

A ship at sea has no certain method in either her eastern or western voyages, or even in her less distant sailing from the coasts, to know her longitude, or how much she is gone eastward or westward, as can easily be known in any clear day or night how much she is gone northward or southward. Addison.

4. Looking towards the East.

The angel caught Our ling'ring parents, and to th' eastern gate Led them direct. Milton, P. L.

EASTLANDISH.* adj. [east and land.] Lying or being towards the east.

They had among them three languages, but I should rather think that they only differed as the high Dutch, low Dutch, and eastlandish Dutch. Venuegan's Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

EA'STWARD. adv. [East and toward.] Towards the East.

The moon, which performs its motion swifter than the sun, gets eastward out of his rays, and appears when the sun is set. Brown, Vulg. Err.

What shall we do, or where direct our flight? Eastward, as far as I could cast my sight, From op'ning heav'ns, I saw descending light. Dryden.

EA'SY.† adj. [from ease. Old Fr. easez, moderate, easy. Kelham.]

1. Not difficult.

The service of God, in the solemn assembly of saints, is a work, though easy, yet withal very weighty, and of great respect. Hooker.

How much it is in every one's power to make resolutions to himself, such as he may keep, is easy for every one to try. Locke.

2. Not causing difficulty.

The whole island was probably cut into several easy ascents, and planted with variety of palaces. Addison, on Italy.

3. Quiet; at rest; not harassed; unmolested; secure; not anxious.

Those that are easy in their conditions, or their minds, refuse often to enter upon publick charges and employment. Temple.

Keep their thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke.

A marriage of love is pleasant, a marriage of interest easy, and a marriage where both meet happy. Spectator.

When men are easy in their circumstances, they are naturally enemies to innovations. Addison, Frecholder.

A man should direct all his studies and endeavours at making himself easy now, and happy hereafter. Addison, Spect.

We plainly feel whether at this instant we are easy or uneasy, happy or miserable. Smalbridge.

4. Free from pain.

Bold adventure to discover wide That dismal world, if any cline perhaps Might yield them easier habitation. Milton, P. L.

Pleasure has been the business of my life, And every change of fortune easy to me, Because I still was easy to myself. Dryden.

5. Complying; unresisting; credulous.

You have practised upon the easy yielding spirit of this woman. Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

E A T

You will say,

I was a good, cold, easy spirited man, Nay, laugh at my simplicity. Ford, Love's Sacrifice.

Baited with reasons not unplaussible, Win me into the easy hearted man, And hug him into snares. Milton, Comus.

With such deceits he gain'd their easy hearts, Too prone to credit his perfidious arts. Dryden, Tru.

The kindest father I have ever found him, Easy and good, and bounteous to my wishes. Addison, Cato.

6. Ready; not unwilling.

Pity and he are one; So merciful a king did never live, Loth to revenge, and easy to forgive. Dryden.

7. Free from want of more.

They should be allowed each of them such a rent as would make them easy. Swift.

8. Not constrained; not formal.

Those move easiest that have learn'd to dance. Pope.

Praise the easy vigour of a line, Where Denham's strength, and Waller's sweetness join. Pope.

1. To devour with the mouth.

Locusts shall eat the residue of that which is escaped from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth. Ex. x. 5.

Other states cannot be accused for not staying for the first blow, or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up. Bacon, War with Spain.

Even wormwood, eat with bread, will not bite, because it is mixed with a great quantity of spittle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To consume; to corrode.

Thou best of gold art worst of gold; Other less fine in carat is more precious, Preserving life in med'cine potable: But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd, Hast eat thy bearer up. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

And ever, against eating cares, Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton, L' All.

They entail a secret curse upon their estates, which does either insensibly waste and consume it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it. Tillotson.

There arises a necessity of keeping the surface even, either by pressure or eating medicines, that the eminence of the flesh may not resist the fibres of the skin in their tendency to cover the wound. Sharp's Surgery.

3. To swallow back; to retract. This is only used of a man's word.

They cannot hold, but burst out those words, which afterwards they are forced to eat. Hakewill on Providence.

Credit were not to be lost B' a brave knight errant of the post, That eats, perfidiously, his word, And swears his ears through a two inch board. Hudibras.

To EAT. v. n.

1. To go to meals; to take meals; to feed.

He did eat continually at the king's table. 2 Sam. ix. 13. And when the scribes and pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth with publicans and sinners! St. Matt. ii. 16.

2. To take food.

He that will not eat till he has a demonstration that it will nourish him, he that will not stir till he infallibly knows the business he goes about will succeed, will have little else to do but sit still and perish. Locke.

3. To be maintained in food.

The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul, but the belly of the wicked shall want. Prov. xiii. 25.

Thou art past the tyrant's stroke; Care no more to cloath and eat. Shakespeare, Cymb.

But, thanks to my indulgent stars, I eat, Since I have found the secret to be great. Prior.

4. To make way by corrosion.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials. South.

E A V

An hungry traveller stept into an eatinghouse for his dinner. L'Estrange.

EAVES.† n. s. [eefe, Saxon, Dr. Johnson says.] It may be, however, from the old Fr. aive or cve, which were among the many modes of spelling, in ancient times, eau, water. V. Roquesfort, Gloss. Lang. Rom. Goth. aha, Icel. ga, a river. The eaves is that part of the roof, from which rain-water drops.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.

Every night he comes
With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us
To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,
As if his life lay on't. Shakespeare, All's well.

His tears run down his beard, like Winter drops
From eaves of reeds. Shakespeare, Tempest.

If in the beginning of Winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty Winter. Bacon.

Usher'd with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves,
With minute drops from off the eaves. Milton, Il Pens.

The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses. Woodward.

To EAVESDROP.† v. n. [eaves and drop.] To catch what comes from the eaves; in common phrase, to listen under windows.

Was it such a dissolute speech, telling of some politicians who were wont to eavesdrop in disguises, to say they were often liable to a night-walking cudgeller, or the emptying of an urinal? Milton, Apology for Smeectynnuus.

EA'VESDROPPER.† n. s. [eaves and drop.] A listener under windows; an insidious listener.

Under our tents I'll play the eavesdropper,
To hear if any mean to shrink from me. Shakespeare.

E B I

You are to know then, that Miss, with all her flirting and ogling, had also naturally a strong curiosity in her, and was the greatest eavesdropper breathing. Tatler, No. 9.

EBB.† n. s. [ebba, epplob, Saxon; ebbe, Dutch.]

1. The reflux of the tide towards the sea: opposed to flow.

To gratulate

So great a service done at my desire,
Ye shall have many floods, fuller and higher
Than you have wished for; no ebb shall dare
To let the day see where your dwellings are.

Beaum. and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

The clear sun on his wide wat'ry glass
Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake to tripping ebb, that stole
With soft foot tow'nds the deep. Milton, P. L.

Such an unstable wave of the sea, in St. James's style, tossed perpetually betwixt ebbs and floats. Hammond, Works. iv. 499.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the loaden vessels into port;
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main. Addison on Italy.

2. Decline; decay; waste.

You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of. Spenser on Ireland.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again. Raleigh, Hist.

Thus all the treasure of our flowing years,
Our ebb of life for ever takes away. Roscommon.

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining. Dryden.

Near my apartment let him pris'ner be,
That I his hourly ebbs of life may see. Dryden.

What is it he aspires to?
Is it not this? To shed the slow remains,
His last poor ebb of blood in your defence. Addison, Cato.

To EBB.† v. n. [ebban, Sax.]

1. To flow back towards the sea: opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood

Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now,
Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea. Shakespeare.

From thence the tide of fortune left their shore,
And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before. Dryden, Æn.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste.

Well, I am standing water:

— I'll teach you how to flow.

— Do so: to ebb

Hereditary sloth instructs me. Shakespeare, Tempest.

But oh he ebbs! the smiling waves decay!

For ever, lovely stream, for ever stay! Halifax.

EBBING.* n. s. [from ebb.] The reflux of the tide towards the sea; used figuratively.

The ebbing of the sea. Huloet.

We must have perpetual ebbings and flowings of mirth and melancholy. Howell, Instruct. For Trav. p. 42.

In religious forms, what ebbings and flowings have been and daily are, as to the vulgar opinion, report, and practice of things. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 154.

EBIONITE.* n. s. [Hebrew, ebion, poor; applied by Origen to the understanding of these persons; by Eusebius to the circumstance of their entertaining poor or low notions of our Lord Christ; by others to Ebion, the leader of them. "Ebion" and Cerinthus denied the divinity of Christ." Burnet on the Articles.] One of a sect of hereticks who denied the divinity of our Saviour, and asserted that he was a mere man; and who rejected many parts of Scripture.

St. Jerom has told us that St. John writ his Gospel, at the desire of the bishops of Asia, against Cerinthus, and the heresy of the Ebionites, who held that our Lord was a mere man.

Whitby, Pref. to the Gosp. of St. John.

EBIONITE.* adj. Relating to the heresy of the Ebionites.

As to the Ebionite edition, and interpolations of the Catholic edition of these Recognitions, see the collection of authentick records. Whiston, Mem. p. 204.

E'BON.† } n. s. [Gr. ἔβονος; Lat. ebenus; Fr. ébène.
E'BONY. } Our own word has been written eben, but is now constantly ebon.] A hard, heavy, black, valuable wood, which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vitæ, they are to turn: they use not the same tools they do for soft woods.

Moxon, Mech. Exercices.

E'BON.* adj. [from the substantive.]

1. Dark; black.

Rouse up revenge from ebon den.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

There under ebon shades, and low-brow'd rocks,

As ragged as thy locks,

In dark cimmerian desert ever dwell. Milton, L' Allegro.

Off by the winds extinct the signal lies,

Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne. Gay.

2. Made of ebony.

From the golden quiver at her side

Rattles the ebon arrow's feather'd pride. Prior.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Averroes, a man of his own faith, restraineth his ebriety to hilarity. Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 505.

When Noah planted the vine, Satan attended, and sacrificed a sheep, a lion, an ape, and a sow. These animals were to symbolise the gradations of ebriety.

Warton, Diss. on the Great Rom. Hist. E. P. iii. lxxi.

EBRILLADE. n. s. [French.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIO'SITY. n. s. [ebriositas, Lat.] Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriosity nor ebriety in their intended perversion. Brown.

EBULLIENCY.* n. s. [Lat. ebullio.] A boiling over.

My meaning is only this; to caution against that vulgar and popular error of mistaking the natural and enthusiastick fervour of men's spirits, and the ebullency of their fancy.

Cudworth, Sermon, p. 93.

EBULLIENT.* adj. [Lat. ebulliens.] Boiling over.

They scarce can swallow their ebullient spleen.

Young, Night Th. 8.

EBULLITION.† n. s. [ebullio, Lat.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

Conscience has an eye over a man's most inward and retired behaviour; it spies out the first infant essays and inclinations of virtues and encourages them, and discerns the first movings and ebullitions of concupiscence, and severely checks and condemns them. South, Sermon, viii. S. 1.

2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder. Bacon.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication; as also a crass and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkali and acid liquor; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties. Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal?

Newton.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition; for if sal ammoniac, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue. Arbutnot on Aliments.

ECCE'NTRICAL.† } adj. [eccentricus, Lat.]
ECCE'NTRICK. }

1. Deviating from the centre.

2. Not having the same centre with another circle: such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Thither his course he bends

Through the calm firmament; but up or down,
By centrick or eccentrick, hard to tell. Milton, P. L.

They build, unbuild, contrive,

To save appearances: they gird the sphere
With centrick, and eccentrick, scribbled o'er,
Cycle, and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton, P. L.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentrick? Newton, Opticks.

3. Not terminating in the same point; not directed by the same principle.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentrick to the ends of his master. Bacon, Essays.

4. Irregular: anomalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seems eccentrick and irregular. K. Charles.

A character of an eccentrick virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties. Dryden.

Then from whate'er we can to sense produce,
Common and plain, or wondrous and abstruse,
From nature's constant or eccentrick laws,
The thoughtful soul this gen'ral inference draws,
That an effect must presuppose a cause. Prior.

ECCE'NTRICITY.† n. s. [from eccentrick.]

1. Deviation from a centre.

2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal. Brown.

By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally. Holder.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news. Wotton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptick orbit. Harris.

5. Deviation from established methods; particularity; irregularity. Dr. Johnson has omitted the notice of this meaning; but he supplies an example of it.

Akenside was a young man, warm with every notion that by nature or accident had been connected with the sound of liberty; and, by an eccentricity which such dispositions do not easily avoid, a lover of contradiction, and no friend to any thing established. Johnson, Life of Akenside.

ECCE'NTRICK.* n. s. [Lat. eccentricus.]

1. A circle not having the same centre with another circle. See the second sense of ECCENTRICAL.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena framed to their conceit eccentrics, and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs.

Bacon.

2. That which deviates from usual or common occurrence.

Let the lot decide the main of the controversy, and reserving somewhat for the publick, somewhat for the stranger, somewhat for common calanities, somewhat as it were for the universal motion of the whole body, somewhat for eccentrics.

Hammond, Works, iv. p. 551.

- ECCHY'MOSIS. n. s. [εκχυμωσις.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood.

Quincy.

Ecchymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in or under the skin, the skin remaining whole.

Wiseman.

Laxations are accompanied with tumour and ecchymosis.

Wiseman.

- ECCLE'SIAST. n. s. [Gr. ἐκκλησιαστής.] Chaucer uses this word both for a preacher, and either for the book of Ecclesiastes or of Ecclesiasticus, in his Canterbury Tales. But it is now wholly obsolete.

- ECCLESIA'STES. n. s. [Greek.] One of the canonical books of Holy Scripture.

The book is in the Hebrew denominated Coleleth, a word which signifies one who speaks in public; and which, indeed, is properly translated by the Greek word Ecclesiastes, or, the Preacher.—The Hebrew word has, however, a feminine termination in respect to wisdom, personified, as it were, in Solomon.

Dr. Gray, Key to the Old Test.

- ECCLESIA'STICAL. } adj. [ecclesiasticus, Lat.]
ECCLESIA'STICK. } Relating to the church; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil? If an ecclesiastical, it must belong to the duty of the minister.

Hooker.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers.

Swift.

A church of Englandman has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastick government.

Swift.

- ECCLESIA'STICK. n. s. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministers of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church.

Burnet, Theory.

- ECCLESIA'STICUS. n. s. [Latin.] One of the books which form the Apocrypha.

The book of Ecclesiasticus, according to some writers is so called, because the ancients divided the books of the old testament volume into four sorts; the first contained the Pentateuch; the second, the Prophets; the third, the Hagiographa; the fourth, the ecclesiastical or apocryphal books, as not being in the Jewish canon. Among the ecclesiastical books, this of Jesus the son of Sirach being most remarkable and useful, it was κατ' ἑξῆς called Ecclesiasticus, whilst the rest of the same class have lost their name. According to others, this title was given by the Latins to it, to denote its use in the church, being read for the sake of edification in the publick religious assemblies. Or, lastly, because, like Solomon's Ecclesiastes, which it resembles in name as well as matter, it teaches and instructs such as attend to it by the admirable precepts which it delivers.

Arnald, Comment. on Eccl. Pref.

- ECCOPRO'TICKS. n. s. [ἐκ and ῥόπτειν.] Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are eccoprotick.

Harvey on the Plague.

- ECHINATE. } adj. [from echinus, Lat.] Bristled
ECHINATED. } like an hedgehog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrites in shape approaches the echinated crystalline balls.

Woodward on Fossils.

- E'CHINUS. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A hedgehog.
2. A shell fish set with prickles.
3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.
4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chesnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedgehog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs.

Harris.

- E'CHIO. n. s. [ἠχώ; echo, Lat.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus.

The pleasant myrtle may teach the unfortunate Echo In these woods to resound the renowned name of a goddess.

Sidney.

2. The return or repercussion of any sound.

The sound, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. The sound returned.

Babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once.

Shakespeare.

Wilt thou hunt?

Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from their hollow earth.

Shakespeare.

O woods, O fountain, hillocks, dales and bow'rs!

With other echo late I taught your shades

To answer, and rebound far other song!

Milton, P. L.

To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing;

The woods shall answer, and the echo ring;

Pope.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;

The sound must seem an echo to the sense.

Pope.

- To E'CHO. v. n.

1. To resound; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting

All the church echo'd.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Through rocks and caves the name of Delia sounds;

Delia each cave and echoing rock rebounds.

Pope.

2. To be sounded back.

Hark, how the sound disturbs imperious Rome!

Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!

Her inter'd princes hear the echoing noise,

And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice.

Blackmore.

- To E'CHO. v. a. To send back a voice; to return what has been uttered.

Our separatists do but echo the same note.

Decay of Pulp.

With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song;

Those peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng.

Dryden, Æn.

One great death deforms the dreary ground;

The echo'd woes from distant rocks resound.

Prior.

- ECHO'METER. n. s. [Fr. échomètre, Gr. ἠχός, sound, and μέτρον, measure.] In musick, a kind of scale, or rule, with several lines divided on it, serving to measure the duration, or length, of sounds, and to find their intervals atal ratios.

Chambers.

- ECHO'METRY. n. s. [Fr. échométrie, Gr. ἠχώ, an echo, and μέτρον, measure.] The art of making vaults or arches so as to produce an artificial echo.

ECLAIRCISSEMENT.† n. s. [French.] Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expostulation, Dr. Johnson says; but it may also be by written communication.

The eclaircissement ended in the discovery of the informer.

Clarendon.

I had this day the favour of your letter, and think myself much obliged to our two brethren for this good office, which I hope will have the desired effect: and to promote it, all I can, I will follow your example in the frankness and openness of this eclaircissement.

Warburton, Lett. to Lowth, l. 2.

ECLAT.† n. s. [French; as, a thing is done with eclat, i. e. with noise, with giving occasion of talk: “ce fait un grand eclat dans le monde.”] Splendour; show; lustre. Not English.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprize, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other.

Pope, Essay on Homer.

ECLECTICK.* n. s. [Gr. ἐκλεκτικός, from ἐκλέγω, to choose.]

1. One of those ancient philosophers, who, without attaching themselves to any particular sect, took from any what they judged good.

He [Persius] sticks to his own philosophy; he shifts not sides, like Horace, who is sometimes an Epicurean, sometimes a Stoick, sometimes an Eclectick, as his present humour leads him.

Dryden, Orig. and Prog. of Satire.

2. One of a sect in the Christian church, called also modern Platonicks, as considering the doctrine of Plato conformable to the spirit and genius of the Christian.

3. One of a sect of physicians among the ancients.

ECLECTICK. adj. [ἐκλεκτικός.] Selecting; choosing at will.

Cicero was of the eclectick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth.

Watts on the Mind.

ECLEGMA.† n. s. [ἐκ and λέγειν, Gr. eclegme, Fr. Dr. Johnson gives eclegma, without any example; but the word was anglicised two centuries since.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick.

Quincy.

Confections, treacle, mithridate, eclegmes or linctures, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 380.

ECLIPSE. n. s. [ἐκλειψις.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven; the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the intervention of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Sips of yew,

Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse

Then suffer'd.

Milton, P. L.

So though the sun victorious be,
And from a dark eclipse set free,
The influence, which we fondly fear,
Afflicts our thoughts the following year.

Waller.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, being between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one.

Locke.

2. Darkness; obscuration.

All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life.

Raleigh, Hist.

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our scatterings and eclipses.

King Charles.

To ECLIPSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign.

Sandys.

Now if the earth were flat, the dark'ned moon

Would seem to all eclipse'd as well as one.

Creech.

2. To extinguish; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,

Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

They had seen tokens of more than common greatness, howsoever now eclipsed with fortune.

Sidney.

Praise him to his father:—

—Let the prince's glory

Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his.

Denham, Sophy.

Let other muses write his prosperous fate,

Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings restor'd;

But mine shall sing of his eclipse'd estate,

Which, like the sun's, more wonders does afford.

Dryden.

He descended from his Father, and eclipsed the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh.

Calamy's Sermons.

4. To disgrace.

She told the king, that her husband was eclipsed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shew'd towards him.

Clarendon.

Another now hath to himself engross'd

All pow'r, and us eclipse'd.

Milton, P. L.

To ECLIPSE. v. n. To suffer an eclipse.

The labouring moon

Eclipses at their charms.

Milton, P. L.

ECLIPTICK. n. s. [ἐκλειπτικός.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the Zodiack, and making an angle with the Equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°. 30'. which is the sun's greatest declination. This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. This line is drawn on the globe: but in the new astronomy the Ecliptick is that path among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from West to East. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs.

Harris.

All stars that have their distance from the Ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the Equator.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The terraqueous globe had the same site and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the Ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which passing through the centre of the sun and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the Ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation.

Bentley.

ECLIPTICK.† adj.

1. Described by the ecliptick line.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day;

The sun revolving through th' Ecliptick way,

Effects the various seasons of the year.

Blackmore.

2. Suffering an eclipse; obscured.

The king said—that although he was at that time so eclipsed, yet either he or they might shine out bright again. To return: In this ecliptick condition was the king (the place and persons duly considered) sequestered in a manner from the comfort earth and air affords.

Sir T. Herbert, Memoirs, p. 88.

E'CLOGUE. n. s. [ἐκλογή.] A pastoral poem, so called because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues. See ÆGLOGUE.

What exclaiming praises Basiliss gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great.

It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief, the whole eclogue should be so too.

ECONOMICK. } adj. [from economy.]
ECONOMICAL. }

1. Pertaining to the regulation of an household.

Her quick'ning power in every living part,
 Doth as a nurse, or as a mother serve;
 And doth employ her economick art,
 And busy care, her household to preserve.

Davies.

In economical affairs, having proposed the government of a family, we consider the proper means to effect it.

Watts.

2. Frugal.

Some are plainly economical; as that the seat be well watered, and well fuelled.

Wotton, Architecture.

ECONOMICKS.* n. s. [Gr. οικονομικά.] What apply to the management of household affairs. Formerly written economicks. But see the reason of rejecting this spelling under ECONOMY.

The best authors have chosen rather to handle education in their politics, than in their economicks.

Wotton, of Education.

ECONOMIST.* n. s. [Fr. economiste, from the Greek.]

One who is a good manager of affairs; one who is frugal and discreet.

He did furnish his cabinets with rarities at an easy rate, being, in truth, one of the greatest economists of his age.

Wotton, Charact. of Ferd. di Medici, Rem. p. 244.

I cannot fancy that a shopkeeper's wife in Cheapside has a greater tenderness for the fortune of her husband than a citizen's wife in Paris; or that Miss in a boarding-school is more an economist in dress than Mademoiselle in a nunnery.

Goldsmith, Ess. 15.

Mrs. Busy was too much an economist to feel either joy or sorrow at his death: she received the compliments and consolations of her neighbours in a dark room, out of which she stole privately every night and morning to see the cows milked.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 138.

TO ECONOMIZE.* v. a. [Fr. economizer.] To employ with economy. Both in French and English, of very recent usage.

ECONOMY. n. s. [οικονομία.] This word is often written, from its derivation, economy; but æ being no diphthong in English, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.

By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority; so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the substantial part.

Bp. Taylor.

2. Distribution of expence.

Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his economy; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main.

Dryden.

3. Frugality; discretion of expence; laudable parsimony.

I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease.

Swift to Bolingbroke.

4. Disposition of things; regulation.

All the divine and infinitely wise ways of economy that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature.

Hammond.

5. The disposition or arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as in Plautus, we see the economy and disposition of poems better observed than in Terence.

B. Jonson.

If this economy must be observed in the minutest parts of an epick poem, what soul, though sent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and sciences, can be sufficient to inform the body of so great a work?

Dryden, Ded. to the Æneid.

6. System of matter; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.

These the strainers aid,
 That by a constant separation made,
 They may a due economy maintain,
 Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain.

Blackmore.

ECPHRACTICKS. n. s. [ἐκ and φράττω.] Such medicines as rendered tough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge.

Quincy.

Procure the blood a free course, ventilation, and transpiration, by suitable purges and ecphractick medicines.

Harvey.

ECSTASIED. adj. [from ecstasy.] Ravished; filled with enthusiasm.

These are as common to the inanimate things as to the most ecstasied soul upon earth.

Norris.

ECSTASY. n. s. [ἔκστασις.]

1. Any passion by which the thoughts are absorbed, and in which the mind is for a time lost.

Follow them swiftly,
 And hinder them from what this ecstasy
 May now provoke them to.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

It may be

No longer joy there, but an ecstasy.

Suckling.

Whether what we call ecstasy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined.

Locke.

2. Excessive joy: rapture.

O, love, be moderate! alay thy ecstasy!
 The religious pleasure of a well disposed mind moves gently, and therefore constantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecstasy; but is like the pleasure of health, still and sober.

South.

Each delighted, and delighting, gives
 The pleasing ecstasy which each receives.

Prior.

A pleasure which no language can express;
 An ecstasy, that mothers only feel,
 Plays round my heart.

Philips, Distrest Mother.

3. Enthusiasm; excessive elevation and absorption of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing;
 Which when I did, he on the tender grass
 Would sit, and hearken even to ecstasy.

Milton, Comus.

4. Excessive grief of anxiety. This is not now used.

Better be with the dead, —
 Than on the torture of the mind to lie
 In restless ecstasy.
 Sighs, and groans, and shrieks that rent the air,
 Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
 A modern ecstasy.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. Madness; distraction. This sense is not now in use.

Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
 Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh,
 That unmatch'd forin, and feature of blown youth,
 Blasted with ecstasy.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

TO ECSTASY.* v. a. [from the noun.] To fill with rapture or enthusiasm.

They were so ecstasied with joy, that they made the heavens ring with triumphant shouts and acclamations.

Scott, Christian Life, i. iv. § 5.

ECSTATICAL. } adj. [ἔκστατος.]
ECSTATICK. }

1. Ravished; rapturous; elevated beyond the usual bounds of nature.

There doth my soul in holy vision sit,
 In pensive trance, and anguish, and ecstatic fit.

Milton, Ode on the Passion.

When one of them, after an ecstatic manner, fell down before an angel, he was severely rebuked, and bidden to worship God.

Stillingfleet.

In trance ecstatic may thy pangs be drown'd;
 Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round.

Pope.

2. Raised to the highest degree of joy.

To gain Pescennius one employs his schemes;
One grasps a Cecrops in ecstatic dreams.

Pope.

3. Tending to external objects. This sense is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.

I find in me a great deal of ecstatic love, which continually carries me out to good without myself.

Norris.

E'CTYPAL.* adj. [Lat. ectypus.] Taken from the original.

Exemplars of all the ectypal copies.

Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 417.

E'CTYPE.† n. s. [Gr. εκτυπος, Fr. ectype; properly, an embossed figure, or impression of a seal, ring, or medal.] A copy.

The complex ideas of substances are ectypes, copies, but not perfect ones; not adequate.

Locke.

ECUMENICAL.* adj. [Fr. ecumenique, Gr. διεσμενικός.] General. See OECUMENICAL.

E'CURIE. n. s. [French; equus, Lat.] A place covered for the lodging or housing of horses.

EDA'CIOUS. adj. [edax, Lat.] Eating; voracious; devouring; predatory; ravenous; rapacious; greedy.

EDA'CITY. n. s. [edacitas, Lat.] Voracity; ravenousness; greediness; rapacity.

The wolf is a beast of great edacity and digestion; it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels.

Bacon.

To E'DDER. v. a. [probably from edge.] To bind or interweave a fence.

To add strength to the hedge, edder it; which is, bind the top of the stakes with some small long poles on each side.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

E'DDER.† n. s. [from the verb.] Such fencewood as is commonly put upon the top of fences. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says; which remark he applies also to the verb. But it is in use, both in Essex, and Norfolk; and perhaps in other parts of the kingdom.

In lopping and felling, save edder and stake, Thine hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make.

Tusser.

E'DDER.* n. s. [Sax. ætpep.] A viper. Still so called in Lancashire. And so formerly, eddris for vipers, St. Matt. xi. 34. Wicliffe.

E'NDISH.* n. s. [Sax. endisc.] A second crop of grass, in some parts of England; the aftermath: in others, ground on which wheat, or other corn, has grown in the preceding year. Written and pronounced also gadish, garsh, and etch.

E'DDY.† n. s. [eb, backward, again, and ea, water, Saxon; ida, Icel. a whirlpool.]

1. The water that by some repercussion, or opposite wind, runs contrary to the main stream.

'Twould bring us to an eddy,
Where we should turn, or drown.

Bacon, and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

My prizes are as a bulrush upon a stream: if they sink not, 'tis because they are born up by the strength of the current, which supports their lightness; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they first began.

Dryden.

2. Whirlpool; circular motion.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in,
And smiling eddies dimpled on the main.

Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.

Addison, Cato.

E'DDY. adj. Whirling; moving circularly.

And chaff with eddy winds is whirl'd around,
And dancing leaves are lifted from the ground.

Dryden, Virgil.

E'DDY-WATER.* n. s. In naval language, the dead water; the wake.

To E'NDY.* v. a. [from the noun.] To keep together in a whirl.

High-beat, the circling mountains eddy in,

From the bare wild, the dissipated storm,
And send it in a torrent down the vale.

Thomson, Autumn.

EDEMATOSE. adj. [οίδημα.] Swelling; full of humours: commonly written oedematous.

A serosity obstructing the glands may be watery, edematose, and schirrous, according to the viscosity of the humour.

Arbutnot.

EDEN.* n. s. An Hebrew word signifying delectation, or a place of pleasure; paradise.

Bullockar.

Eden, in the Eastern dialects, is precisely the same with Eden, which we apply to the garden of Paradise: It has two senses, according to a slight difference in its pronunciation; its first meaning is a "settled abode;" its second, "delight, softness, or tranquillity." The word Eden had, probably, one of these senses in the sacred text, though we use it as a proper name.

Sir W. Jones.

E'DENIZED.* adj. [from Eden.] Admitted into paradise or happiness. An old word.

For pure saints edeniz'd unfit.

Davies, Wit's Pilgrim, sign. N. 4.

E'DENTATED. adj. [edentatus, Lat.] Deprived of teeth.

Dict.

E'DENTA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. edentatio.] A pulling out of teeth.

Cockeram.

EDGE.† n. s. [Welsh, arech, the edge of a weapon; Sax. ecge. Wicliffe, after the Saxon, writes egge for edge, Heb. xi.]

1. The thin or cutting part of a blade.

Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' th' sword

His wife, his babes.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He that will a good edge win,

Must forge thick and grind thin.

Proverb.

The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,

No more shall cut his master.

Shakespeare.

'Tis slander,

Whose edge is sharper than the sword.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. A narrow part rising from a broader.

Some harrow their ground over, and then plow it upon an edge.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. Brink; margin: extremity.

The rays which pass very near to the edges of any body, are bent a little by the action of the body.

Newton, Opticks.

We have, for many years, walked upon the edge of a precipice, while nothing but the slender thread of human life has held us from sinking into endless misery.

Rogers.

Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law.

Pope.

4. Sharpness of mind; proper disposition for action or operation; intenseness of desire.

Give him a further edge,

And drive his purpose into these delights.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,

When want had set an edge upon their mind,

Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,

And that which each invented, all enjoy'd.

Silence and solitude set an edge upon the genius, and cause a greater application.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

5. Keeness; acrimony of temper.

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord!

That would reduce these bloody days again.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

6. To set teeth on EDGE. To cause a tingling uneasiness in the teeth.

A harsh grating tune settleth the teeth on edge.

Bacon.

To EDGE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sharpen; to enable to cut.

E D I

Though you edge every word you speak with reason and religion, evidence and demonstration, you shall never affect, nor touch, nor so much as reach his conscience; for it is kept scaled up in a bag under lock and key, and you cannot come at it!

South, Serm. iii. 78.

There sat she rolling her alluring eyes,
To edge her champion's sword, and urge my ruin. Dryden.

2. To furnish with an edge.

I fell'd along a man of hearsed face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case;
So wond'rous hard, and so secure of wound,
It made my sword, though edg'd with flint, rebound. Dryden.

3. To border with any thing; to fringe.

Their long descending train,
With rubies edg'd, and sapphires, swept the plain. Dryden.
I rid over hanging hills, whose tops were edged with groves, and whose feet were watered with winding rivers. Pope.

4. To exasperate; to embitter.

By such reasonings the simple were blinded, and the malicious edged. Hayward.

He was indigent and low in money, which perhaps might have a little edged his desperation. Wotton, Life of D. of Bucks.

5. To put forward beyond a line.

Edging by degrees their chairs forwards, they were in a little time got up close to one another. Locke.

To EDGE. v. n. [perhaps from eb, backward, Saxon.]

To move forward against any power; going close upon a wind, as if upon its skirts or border, and so sailing slow.

I must edge upon a point of wind,
And make slow way. Dryden, Cleomenes.

EDGED. participial adj. [from edge.] Sharp; not blunt.

We find that subtle or edged quantities do prevail over blunt ones. Digby on Bodies.

EDGING. n. s. [from edge.]

1. What is added to any thing by way of ornament.

The garland which I wove for you to wear,
And border'd with a rosy edging round. Dryden.
A woman branches out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat. Addison, Spect.

2. A narrow lace.

EDGELESS. adj. [from edge.] Blunt; obtuse; unable to cut.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; despair and die.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

They are edgeless weapons it hath to encounter.

Decay of Piety.

EDGETOOL. n. s. [edge and tool.] A tool made sharp to cut.

There must be no playing with things sacred, nor jesting with edgetools. L'Estrange.

Nurses from their children keep edgetools. Dorset.

I shall exercise upon steel, and its several sorts; and what sort is fittest for edgetools, which for springs. Moxon.

EDGEWISE. adv. [edge and wise.] With the edge put into any particular direction.

Should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would be soon turned edgewise by the force of it. Ruy.

EDIBLE. adj. [from edo, Lat.] Fit to be eaten; fit for food.

Some flesh is not edible, as horses and dogs. Bacon.

Wheat and barley, and the like, are made either edible or potable by man's art and industry. More against Atheism.

Some of the fungus kind, gathered for edible mushrooms, have produced a difficulty of breathing. Arbuthnot.

The edible creation decks the board. Prior.

EDICT. n. s. [edictum, Lat.] The accent of this word was, formerly, on the second syllable; as might be shewn in numerous instances from the poetry of Drayton, Niccols, &c. Shakspeare uses it on both syllables. And the accent on the last syllable, now disused, continued in the time of Milton, who so gives edict, Par. Lost, B. 5. 798.] A proclamation or command or prohibition; a law promulgated.

E D I

When an absolute monarch commandeth his subjects that which seemeth good in his own discretion, hath not his edict the force of a law? Hooker.

The great king of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded
That thou shalt do no murder; will you then Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's? Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Severe decrees may keep our tongues in awe,
But to our thoughts what edict can give law? Dryden.

The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting out edicts, against gaming and fine clothes. Addison.

EDIFICANT.  adj.* [Lat. edificans.] Building; constructing.

And as his pen was often militant,
Nor less triumphant; so edificant
It also was, like those bless'd builders, who Stood on their guard, and stoutly builded too.

Dugard, Verses on Gataker, (1655.) p. 72.

EDIFICA'TION. n. s. [edificatio, Lat.]

1. A building; but most commonly taken for instruction. See To EDIFY. Bullock.

2. The act of building up man in the faith; improvement in holiness.

Our blessed Saviour told us, that we must account for every idle word, not meaning that every word not designed to edification, or less prudent, shall be reckoned for a sin. Bp. Taylor.

3. Improvement; instruction.

Out of these magazines I shall supply the town with what may tend to their edification. Addison, Guardian.

EDIFICATORY.  adj.* [from edify.] Tending to edification; instructive.

There can be no reason of restraining them from an exercise so beneficially edificatory to the church of God.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

EDIFICE. n. s. [edificium, Lat.] A fabrick; a building; a structure.

My love was like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

God built

So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far,
That man may know he dwells not in his own;
An edifice too large for him to fill. Milton, P. L.

The edifice, where all were met to see him,
Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd. Milton, S. A.

As Tuscan pillars owe their original to this country, the architects always give them a place in edifices raised in Tuscany. Addison on Italy.

He must be an idiot that cannot discern more strokes of workmanship in the structure of an animal than in the most elegant edifice. Bentley.

EDIFICIAL.  adj.* [from edifice.] Respecting the appearance of an edifice.

There are mansions, which, without any striking edificial attraction, have a certain air of appropriate hospitality and provincial dignity. Hist. of the Rivers of Gr. Brit. (1794.) i. 232.

EDIFIER. n. s. [from edify.]

1. A builder. See To EDIFY. This is the only sense applied to the word in the old dictionaries of Huloet, Cotgrave, and Sherwood. Dr. Johnson has not noticed this meaning.

2. One that improves or instructs another.

To EDIFY. v. a. [edifico, Lat.]

1. To build. This is the sole definition of the word in the old dictionary of Huloet. Early in the seventeenth century, it obtained the moral application; for thus Bullokar: "To edify, to build; sometimes, to instruct."

There was a holy chapel edify'd,
Wherein the hermit wont to say
His holy things each morn and eventide. Spenser, F. Q.

Men have edify'd
A lofty temple, and perfum'd an altar to thy name. Chapman.
There was sometime beyond the sea edified and founded a certain house and cloister of religious men.
Palmerin of England, P. i. ch. i.

2. To instruct; to improve.

He who speaketh no more than edifieth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hooker.

Men are edified, when either their understanding is taught somewhat whereof, in such actions, it behoveth all men to consider, or when their hearts are moved with any affection suitable thereunto. Hooker.

Life is no life, without the blessing of a friendly and an edifying conversation. L'Estrange.

He gave, he taught; and edify'd the more,
Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dryden.

3. To teach; to persuade. This is now either obsolete or ludicrous.

You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue. Bacon, Holy War.

EDIFYING.* n. s. [from edify.] Instruction.

Seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church.

1 Cor. xiv. 12.

Endless genealogies, which minister questions rather than godly edifying. 1 Tim. i. 4.

EDIFYINGLY.* adv. [from edifying.] In an instructive manner.

He will discourse unto us edifyingly, and feelingly, of the substantial and comfortable doctrines of religion.

Killingbeck, Serm. p. 324.

EDILE.* n. s. [edilis, Latin.] The title of a magistrate in old Rome, whose office seems in some particulars to have resembled that of our justices of peace.

The edile, ho! let him be apprehended. Shakespeare.

TO E'DIT.* v. a. [old Fr. editer, to proclaim, to publish an ordinance or law; Lat. edo.] To revise or prepare a work for publication; to publish.

If any one will be at the trouble to edit an old work with the accession of such materials as are applicable to the subject of it, he does a service that is received with gratitude.

Brit. Crit. 1798, Sept.

EDITION.* n. s. [editio, Latin.]

1. Publication of any thing, particularly of a book.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition upon the same ground. Bacon.

2. Republication; generally with some revisal or correcting.

These are of the second edition. Shakespeare.

The business of our redemption is to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.
I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition of him.

Dryden, Fab. Pref.

The Code, composed hastily, was forced to undergo an emendation, and to come forth in a second edition. Baker.

EDITIONER.* n. s. [from edition.] Our old word for editor.] A publisher.

They cannot be exact in any map whatever, as Mr. Norden himself, who laboured much in this matter, maketh his complaint in that necessary Guide; added to a little, but not much augmented, by the late editioner.

Gregory, Posthuma, (1650.) p. 321.

EDITOR.* n. s. [editor, Latin.] Publisher; he that revises or prepares any work for publication.

When a different reading gives us a different sense, or a new elegance in an author, the editor does very well in taking notice of it. Addison, Spect.

This nonsense got into all the editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope, Notes on Shakespeare.

EDITORIAL.* adj. [from editor.] Belonging to the office of an editor.

Lambin, in the preface to his Horace, and Heyne also, in the preface to the second edition of his Virgil, seem to have considered it as part of their editorial duty, not to leave the subject of orthography wholly unnoticed.

Dr. Parr, Brit. Crit. 1794, Feb.

EDITORSHIP.* n. s. [from editor.] The office and duty of an editor.

Lord Lyttelton puts it into the mouth of Boileau to observe to Pope, that a great poet, so tied down to so tedious a translation as that of Homer, "is a Columbus chained to an oar;"
and that the editorship of Shakspeare, which Pope afterward undertook with more profit than reputation, was below him, and that his mind was unfit for the drudgery it requires.

Tyters, Hist. Rhapsod. on Pope, p. 14.

TO EDI'TUATE.* v. a. [low Lat. edituo, to perform the office of the edituus, a kind of churchwarden or overseer. Ash has placed this word in his vocabulary, with the general meaning of "to defend, to govern;" but its meaning is confined; and is now disused.] To defend or govern the house or temple. Coles.

The devotion whereof could not but move the city—to edituate such a piece of divine office, where so many gods were present by their proxies; where not only the sports themselves, but all the company, were reputed holy for that time, and some accounted so ever after.

Gregory, Notes on Script. (Acts, xix. 35.) ed. 1684, p. 49.

TO E'DUCATE.* v. a. [duco, Latin.] To breed; to bring up; to instruct youth.

Their young succession all their cares employ;
They breed, they brood, instruct and educate,
And make provision for the future state. Dryden, Virg.

Education is worse, in proportion to the grandeur of the parents: if the whole world were under one monarch, the heir of that monarch would be the worst educated mortal since the creation. Swift on Modern Education.

EDUCATION.* n. s. [from educate.] Formation of manners in youth; the manner of breeding youth; nurture.

Education and instruction are the means, the one by use, the other by precept, to make our natural faculty of reason both the better and the sooner to judge rightly between truth and error, good and evil. Hooker.

All nations have agreed in the necessity of a strict education, which consisted in the observance of moral duties. Swift.

E'DUCATOR.* n. s. [Lat. educator.] One that instructs youth.

Could not the educators of the lowest be consoled under their laborious duty, without detracting from those whom the public voice, and the discernment of their nominators or electors, had appointed to the management of the first seminaries in the kingdom?

Dr. Vincent, Defence of Pub. Education, p. 17.

TO E'DUCE.* v. a. [educ, Latin.] To bring out;
to extract; to produce from a state of occultation.

Bullokar.

The Almighty Power hath given these admirable virtues to several plants, and educes them in his due seasons to these excellent perfections. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 3.

That the world was educed out of the power of space, and give that as a reason of its original: in this language, to grow rich, were to educ money out of the power of the pocket.

Glanville.

This matter must have lain eternally confined to its beds of earth, were there not this agent to educ it thence. Woodward.

The eternal art educes good from ill,
Grafts on this passion our best principle. Pope.

EDUCATION.† n. s. [Fr. education.] The act of bringing any thing into view. Sherwood.

To EDULCORATE.† v. n. [old French, edulcorer; Lat. dulcora, from dulcis, sweet.] To sweeten. A chymical term.

This [swine's dung] though not so proper for a garden, is said yet to edulcorate and sweeten fruit so sensibly, as to convert the bitterest almond into sweet. Evelyn's Earth.

EDULCORA'TION.† n. s. [from edulcorate.]

1. The act of sweetening.
2. In chymistry, the freshening or purging any thing of its salts, by repeated lotions, or washings in cold water. Chambers.
3. In metallurgy, the separating, by a solution in water, the salts that have been left adhering to a body after any operation. Ibid.

EDULCORATIVE.* adj. [from edulcorate.] Having the quality of sweetening.

EDUL'IOUS.* adj. [Lat. edulis; or rather from edulium, any thing to be eaten.] Eatable.

The husks of peas, beans, or such edulous pulses.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 13.

To EEK.† v. a. [eacan, ecan, ican, Sax. eak, Scott.; cek, Erse; Goth. aukan; Icel. auka, to encrease. Our word is now written cke, which see. Formerly it was also echc.]

1. To supply any deficiency.
2. To make bigger by the addition of another piece.

I dempt theré much to have eecked my store.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

Here endless penance for one fault I pay;
But that redoubled crime, with vengeance new,
Thou biddest me to eeke.

Spenser, F. Q.

Was not your skilful hand
In this last stratagem? Were not your mischiefs Eeking the matter on? Beaumont and Fl. Tamer tamed.

EE'KING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Augmentation; encrease. Sherwood.

I dempt there much to have eeked my store,
But such eeeking hath made my heart sore.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

EEL.† n. s. [æ, Saxon; aal, German; Swedish, äl, the same.] A serpentine slimy fish, that lurks in mud.

Is the adder better than the eel,
Because his painted skin contents the eye?
The cockney put the eels i' the pasty alive. Shakespeare.

EE'LP'OUT.* n. s. [Germ. aelp'ut.] A fish of the eel kind, in some places called a burbot. It is common in the river Trent. See BURBOT.

E'EN. adv. Contracted from even. See EVEN.

Says the satyr, if you have a trick of blowing hot and cold out of the same mouth, I have e'en done with ye. I. Extrange.

EFF. n. s. Commonly written EFT. A small lizard. See EFT.

EFFABLE.† adj. [effabilis, Latin.] Expressive; utterable. Dict.

He did, upon this suggestion, accommodate thereunto his universal language, to make his character effable.

Wallis, Def. of the Royal Soc. (1678), p. 16.

To EFFACE. v. a. [effacer, French.]

1. To destroy any thing painted, or carved.
2. To make no more legible or visible; to blot out; to strike out.

Characters on dust, the first breath of wind effaces. Locke.

It was ordered, that his name should be effaced out of all publick registers. Addison on Italy.

Time, I said, may happily efface

That cruel image of the king's disgrace. Prior.

Otway fail'd to polish or refine,
And fluent Shakspeare scarce effac'd a line. Pope.

3. To destroy; to wear away.

Nor our admission shall your realm disgrace,
Nor length of time our gratitude efface. Dryden, Æn.

To EFFA'SCINATE.* v. a. [Lat. effascino.] To bewitch; to charm. Cockeram.

EFFASCINA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. effascinatio.] The state of being bewitched or deluded.

St. Paul sets down the just judgement of God against the receivers of Antichrist, which is effascination, or strong delusion. Shelford's Learned Discourses, (Camb. 1635), p. 317.

EFFE'CT. n. s. [effectus, Latin.]

1. That which is produced by an operating cause.

You may see by her example, in herself wise, and of others beloved, that neither folly is the cause of vehement love, nor reproach the effect. Sidney.

Effect is the substance produced, or simple idea introduced into any subject, by the exerting of power. Locke.

We see the pernicious effects of luxury in the ancient Romans, who immediately found themselves poor as soon as this vice got footing among them. Addison on Italy.

2. Consequence; event.

No man, in effect, doth accompany with others, but he learneth, ere he is aware, some gesture, or voice, or fashion. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To say of a celebrated piece that there are faults in it, is, in effect, to say that the author of it is a man. Addison.

3. Purpose; meaning; general intent.

They spake to her to that effect. 2 Chron.

4. Consequence intended; success; advantage.

Christ is become of no effect unto you. Gal. v. 4.

He should depart only with a title, the effect whereof he should not be possessed of, before he deserved it. Clarendon

The institution has hitherto proved without effect, and has neither extinguished crimes, nor lessened the numbers of criminals. Temple.

5. Completion; perfection.

Not so worthily to be brought to heroical effect by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney.

Semblant art shall carve the fair effect,
And full atchievement of thy great designs. Prior.

6. Reality; not mere appearance.

In shew, a marvellous indifferently composed senate ecclesiastical was to govern, but in effect one only man should, as the spirit and soul of the residue, do all in all. Hobbes.

State and wealth, the business and the crowd,
Seems at this distance but a dark' cloud;
And is to him, who rightly things esteems,
No other in effect than what it seems. Denham.

7. [In the plural.] Goods; movables.

What form of prayer

Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder!

That cannot be, since I am still possess

Of those effects for which I did the murder,

My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen. Shakespeare.

The emperor knew that they could not convey away many of their effects. Addison, Spect.

To EFFE'CT.† v. a. [efficio, Latin.]

1. To bring to pass; to attempt with success; to achieve; to accomplish as an agent.

All that came into Solomon's heart to make in the house of the Lord; and in his own house, he prosperously effected. 2 Chron. vii. 11.

Being consul, I not doubt t' effect

All that you wish. B. Jonson.

What he decreed,

He effected. Milton, P. L.

2. To produce as a cause.

The change made of that syrup into a purple colour, was effected by the vinegar. Boyle on Colours.

EFF

EFFE'CTER.* n. s. See EFFECTOR. Sherwood.

The foreseers and effecters of all the evils which succeeded.
Spencer on Prod. p. 248.

EFFE'CTIBLE. adj. [from effect.] Performable; practicable; feasible.

That a pot full of ashes will still contain as much water as it would without them, is not effectible upon the strictest experiment.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

EFFECT'ION.* n. s. In geometry, a construction; a proposition; a problem, or praxis, drawn from some general proposition.
Ash.

EFFECTIVE. adj. [from effect.]

1. Having the power to produce effects; efficacious; effectual: with of.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them.
Bacon.

If any mystery, rite, or sacrament be effective of any spiritual blessings, then this much more, as having the prerogative and principality above every thing else.
Bp. Taylor.

There is nothing in words and stile; but suitableness, that makes them acceptable and effective.
Glanville.

2. Operative; active; having the quality of producing effects.

Nor do they speak properly who say that time consumeth all things; for time is not effective, nor are bodies destroyed by it.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Producing effects; efficient:

Whosoever, is an effective real cause of doing his neighbour wrong is criminal, by what instrument soever he does it.
Bp. Taylor.

4. Having the power of operation; useful: as, effective men in an army.

EFFECTIVELY. adv. [from effective.] Powerfully; with real operation.

This effectively resists the devil, and suffers us to receive no hurt from him.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

EFFE'CTLESS.† adj. [from effect.] Without effect; impotent; useless; unmeaning.

Sure, all's effectless; yet nothing we'll omit
That bears recovery's name.
Shakespeare, Pericles.

I'll chop off my hands too;—
In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have serv'd me to effectless use.
Tit. Andronicus.

That, yet effectless, this enchanting witch,
Bred baneful jealousy against my lady.
Bacon, and Fl. Knight of Malta.

All proved vain and effectless.

Transl. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 89.

EFFECTOR.† n. s. [effector, Latin. Written also indifferently effector.]

1. He that produces any effect; performer.

That they might be thought the effectors of what they were the foreshewers.
Spencer on Prod. p. 263.

2. Maker; Creator.

We commemorate the creation, and pay worship to that infinite Being who was the effector of it.
Derham.

EFFECTUAL. adj. [effectuel, French.]

1. Productive of effects; powerful to a degree adequate to the occasion; operative; efficacious.

The reading of Scripture is effectual, as well to lay even the first foundation, as to add degrees of farther perfection, in the fear of God.
Hooker.

The communication of thy faith may become effectual, by the acknowledging of every good thing.
Philom. 6.

2. Veracious; expressive of facts. A sense not in use.

Reprove my allegation, if you can;
Or else conclude my words effectual.
Shakespeare.

EFFECTUALLY. adv. [from effectual.] In a manner productive of the consequence intended; efficaciously.

Sometimes the sight of the altar, and decent preparations for devotion, may compose and recover the wandering mind more effectually than a sermon.

EFF

South.

A subject of that vast latitude, that the strength of one man will scarcely be sufficient effectually to carry it on.
Woodward.
TO EFFECTUATE.† v. a. [effectuer, French.] To bring to pass; to fulfil.

He found means to acquaint himself with a nobleman, to whom discovering what he was, he found him a fit instrument to effectuate his desire.
Sidney.

This coming on so quick, after all that was to be done abroad was effectuated.
Burnet, Hist. Own Times, 1708.

EFFECTUOUS.* adj. [Fr. effectueux.] Formerly in use for effectual; as "effectuous words, pithy in sense."
Barret. Obsolete.

EFFECTUOUSLY.* adv. [from effectuous.] Effectually; to the purpose. Not now in use.

It shall, I trust, effectuously prove our purpose to instruct the protestant, and to comfort the catholic.
Stapleton, Fortr. of Faith, (1565,) p. 59.

EFFE'MINACY.† n. s. [from effeminate.]

1. Admission of the qualities of a woman; softness; unmanly delicacy; mean submission.

But foul effeminacy held me yok'd
Her bonds slave: O indignity, O blot
To honour and religion!
Milton, S. A.

To doubt the passage of the blessed through this great abyss is an effeminacy of belief.
Gregory, Notes on Passages in Script. p. 117

2. Lasciviousness; loose pleasure.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy are prevented.
Bp. Taylor.

EFFE'MINATE.† adj. [effeminatus, Lat.]

1. Having the qualities of a woman; womanish; soft to an unmanly degree; voluptuous; tender; luxurious: of persons.

The king, by his voluptuous life and mean marriage, became effeminate, and less sensible of honour.
Bacon.

Luxurious by their wealth, and greedier still,
And from the daily scene effeminate.
Milton, P. R.

2. Resembling the practice of a woman; womanish: of things.

After the slaughter of so many peers,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Shakespeare.

From man's effeminate slowness it begins,
Said the angel, who should better hold his place.
Milton, P. L.

Thus is it in the soul, if the upper, the manly part of it be overswelled with lust, it straight becomes effeminate, and enervate.
Hammond, Works, iv. 661.

Effeminate delicacy and dissoluteness are such vices as will emasculate the bravest mind.
Scott, Works, ii. 28.

The more effeminate and soft his life,
The more his fate to struggle to the field.
Dryden.

3. Womanlike; soft. without reproach. A sense not in use.

As well we know your tenderness of heart,
And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse.
Shakespeare.

TO EFFE'MINATE.† v. a. [effemino, Lat. To make womanish; to weaken; to emasculate; to unman.
Huloet.

Had I my tender years
Committed to the care of thy gray hairs,
That thou shouldst thus effeminate my heart
With love?
Fanshawe, Transl. of Pastor Fido.

How was the strongest man, Sampson, effeminated by his impotent passion!
Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

Their wickedness naturally tends to effeminate them.
Scott, Works, ii. 25.

When one is sure it will not corrupt or effeminate children's minds, and make them fond of trifles, I think all things should be contrived to their satisfaction.
Locke.

TO EFFE'MINATE. v. n. To grow womanish; to soften; to melt into weakness.

EFF

In a slothful peace, both courage will effeminate, and manners corrupt. Pope.

EFFEMINATELY.* adv. [from effeminate.]

1. Weakly; softly; in an unmanly degree.

Champions in philosophy, law, and history, are not wanting to answer or confute opposers: and some of them, to say truth, have not undertook the cause effeminately.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654.) p. 323.

I can smell his lavender water up hither: how effeminately he trips along with his snowy hands hid in a muff!

Dr. Warton, Satire on Ranelagh House.

2. By womanish arts.

What boots it at one gate to make defence,

And at another to let in the foe,

Effeminately vanquish'd?

Milton, S. A.

EFFEMINATENESS.* n. s. [from effeminate.] Unmanly softness; meanness of spirit.

Poetry — not being an art of lies, but of true doctrine; not of effeminateness, but of notable stirring of courage.

Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

In France they sent a distaff and a spindle to all those able men that went not with them, as upbraiding their effeminateness.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 78.

EFFEMINATION. n. s. [from effeminate.] The state of one grown womanish; the state of one emasculated or unmanned.

Vices the hare figured; not only feneration or usury, from its fecundity and superlucation, but degenerate effemination.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To EFFERVE'SCE. v. n. [effervesco, Lat.] To generate heat by intestine motion.

The compound spirit of nitre, put to oil of cloves, will effervesce even to a flame.

Mead on Poisons.

EFFERVE'SCENCE. n. s. [from efferveo, Latin.] The act of growing hot; production of heat by intestine motion.

In the chymical sense, effervescence signifies an intestine motion, produced by mixing two bodies together that lay at rest before; attended sometimes with a hissing noise, frothing, and ebullition.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Take chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it: put it into strong spirit of nitre, till it becomes sweetish, and makes no effervescence upon the injection of the chalk.

Grew.

Hot springs do not owe their heat to any colluctation or effervescence of the minerals in them, but to subterranean heat or fire.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

EFFEROUS.* adj. [Lat. efferus.] Piercing; wild; savage. Obsolete.

From the teeth of that efferus beast, from the tusk of the wild boar, — O Thou, that art the root and generation of David, preserve our root and all his generation.

Bp. King, Vine Palatine, (1614.) p. 34.

EFFE'TE. adj. [effetus, Latin.]

1. Barren; disabled from generation.

It is probable that females have in them the seeds of all the young they will afterwards bring forth, which, all spent and exhausted, the animal becomes barren and effete.

Ray.

In most countries, the earth would be so parched and effete by the drought, that it would afford but one harvest.

Bentley.

2. Worn out with age.

All that can be allowed him now, is to refresh his decrepit effete sensuality with the history of his former life.

South.

EFFICA'CIOUS.† adj. [efficax, Latin, Dr. Johnson says. It is rather from the Fr. adj. efficace; old subst. efficace, power, ability. Our adjective is not in the old dictionaries of Huloet, Barret, Cockeram, and Sherwood. But in an enlarged edition of Bullokar, published in 1656, it merely forms part of the article of efficacy, without any explanation. Dr. Johnson could find no example of earlier date than that of Philips.] Productive of effects; powerful to produce the consequence intended.

EFF

That Spirit, that first rush'd on thee

In the camp of Dan,

Be efficacious in thee now at need!

Milton, S. A.

A glowing drop with hollow'd steel

He takes, and by one efficacious breath

Dilates to cube or square.

Philips.

EFFICA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from efficacious.] Effectually; in such a manner as to produce the consequence desired.

If we find that any other body strikes efficaciously enough upon it, we cannot doubt but it will move that way which the striking body impels it.

Digby on Bodies.

EFFICA'CIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from efficacy.] The quality of being efficacious.

Ash.

EFFICACY.† n. s. [old Fr. efficace, power.] Power to produce effects; production of the consequence intended.

Whatsoever is spoken concerning the efficacy or necessity of God's word, they tie and restrain only into sermons.

Hooker.

Whether if they had tasted the tree of life before that of good and evil, they had suffered the curse of mortality; or whether the efficacy of the one had not overpowered the penalty of the other, we leave it unto God.

Brown.

Efficacy is a power of speech which represents a thing, by presenting to our minds the lively ideas or forms.

Preacham.

The apostle tells us of the success and efficacy of the Gospel upon the minds of men; and, for this reason, he calls it the power of God unto salvation.

Tillotson.

The arguments drawn from the goodness of God, have a prevailing efficacy to induce men to repent.

Rogers.

EFFI'CIENCE. } n. s. [from efficio, Latin.] The act
EFFI'CIENCY. } of producing effects; agency.

The manner of this divine efficiency being far above us, we are no more able to conceive by our reason, than creatures unreasonable by their sense are able to apprehend after what manner we dispose and order the course of our affairs.

Hooker.

That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident, but what that regulating efficiency should be, is not easily determined.

Glanville.

Sinning against conscience has no special productive efficiency of this particular sort of sinning, more than of any other.

South.

A pious will is the means to enlighten the understanding in the truth of Christianity, upon the account of a natural efficiency: a will so disposed will engage the mind in a severe search.

South.

Gravity does not proceed from the efficiency of any contingent and unstable agents; being entirely owing to the direct concurrence of the power of the Author of nature.

Woodward.

EFFI'CIENT. n. s. [efficiens, Latin.]

1. The cause which makes effects to be what they are.

God, which moveth mere natural agents as an efficient only, doth otherwise move intellectual creatures, and especially his holy angels.

Hooker.

2. He that makes; the effector.

Observations of the order of nature carry the mind up to the admiration of the great efficient of the world.

Hale.

EFFI'CIENT. adj. Causing effects; that makes the effect to be what it is.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient.

Collier on Thought.

EFFI'CIENTLY.* adv. [from efficient.] Effectively.

Logical or consequential necessity is, when a thing does not efficiently cause an event, but yet by certain infallible consequence does infer it.

South, Sermon. iii. 397.

To EFFIERCE.* v. a. [from percer.] To make fierce or furious.

With fell woodness he effierced was;

And wilfully him throwing on the grass,

Did beat and bounce his head and breast full sore.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 27.

EFF

To EFFIGIATE. † v. a. [effigio, Latin.] To form in semblance; to image.

Men endued with reasonable souls, effigiated to God's image, the deliberated workmanship of his own divine hands.

Dean King, Sermon (1608), p. 3.

One [of these Roman measures] was lately in the keeping of Cardinal Farnese, and is exquisitely effigiated by Villalpandus in the latter end of his third tome upon the prophet Ezekiel.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 190.

I know that in the state of my body, which is more discernible than that of the soul, Thou [O God] dost effigiate my soul to me.

Donne, Devot. p. 388.

EFFIGIATION. n. s. [from effigiate.] The act of imaging; or forming the resemblance of things or persons. Dict.

EFFIGIES. † } n. s. [effigies, Latin; effigy is from being EFFIGY. } in effigy. The word effigy is reckoned by P. Heylin, in 1656, amongst unusual and uncouth expressions.] Resemblance; image in painting or sculpture; representation; idea.

We behold the species of eloquence in our minds, the effigies or actual image of which we seek in the organs of our hearing.

Dryden, Dufresnoy, Pref.

Observe those numerous wrongs in effigy,

The gods have sav'd from the devouring sea.

Garth.

To EFFLAGITATE. * v. a. [Lat. efflagito.] To demand a thing earnestly.

Cockram.

To EFFLATE. * v. a. [Lat. efflo.] To fill with the breath; to puff up.

Our common spirits, efflated by every vulgar breath upon every act, deify themselves; and conceit all great additions of honour below their merits.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 179.

EFFLORESCENCE. } n. s. [effloresco, Lat.]

EFFLORESCENCY. }

1. Production of flowers.

Where there is less heat, there the spirit of the plant is digested, and severed from the grosser juice in efflorescence.

Bacon.

2. Excrescencies in the form of flowers.

Two white sparry incrustations, with efflorescencies in form of shrubs, formed by the trickling of water.

Woodward.

3. [In physick.] The breaking out of some humours in the skin, in distempers called exanthematous; as in the measles, and the like.

Quincy.

A wart beginneth in the cutis, and seemeth to be an efflorescence of the serum of the blood.

Wiseman, Surgery.

EFFLORESCENT. adj. [effloresco, Lat.] Shooting out in form of flowers.

Yellow efflorescent sparry incrustations on stone. Woodward.

EFFLUENCE. † n. s. [Fr. effluence.] That which issues from some other principle.

Bright effluence of bright essence increate.

Milton, P. L.

These scintillations are not the ascension of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the baches collided.

Brown.

From the bright effluence of his deed

They borrow that reflected light,

With which the lasting lamp they feed,

Whose beams dispel the damps of envious night.

Prior.

EFFLUENT. * adj. [Lat. effluens.] An effluent fever is sometimes used for an inflammatory fever.

Chambers.

EFFLUVIA. † } n. s. [from effluo, Lat. The plural is EFFLUVIUM. } sometimes also effluvium, which Dr. Johnson has not noticed.] Those small particles which are continually flying off from bodies; the subtilty which appears from their being able, a long time together, to produce very sensible effects, without any sensible diminution of the body from whence they arise.

Quincy.

If the earth were an electrick body, and the air but the effluvium thereof, we might believe that from attraction, and by effluxion, bodies tended to the earth.

Brown.

EFF

Neither the earth's diurnal revolution upon its axis, nor any magnetick effluvia of the earth, nor the air, or atmosphere which environs the earth, can produce gravity.

Woodward.

If these effluvia, which do upward tend,

Because less heavy than the air, ascend,

Why do they ever from their height retreat,

And why return to seek their central seat?

Blackmore.

Their inspirations were owing to certain subterraneous effluvia of wind.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 8.

EFFLUX. † n. s. [effluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing out.

Bullockar.

Through the copious efflux of matter through the orifice of a deep ulcer, he was reduced to a skeleton.

Harvey.

2. Effusion; flow.

The first efflux of men's piety, after receiving of the faith, was the selling and consecrating their possessions.

Hammond.

There was an efflux of time.

Annot. on Religio Medici.

3. That which flows from something else; emanation.

If he produced G only, whether that orb G be not either an arbitrary or natural efflux from A.

More, Notes on the Infinity of Worlds.

Prime chearer, light!

Of all material beings, first and best!

Efflux divine!

Thomson, Summer.

4. The act of flowing is more properly effluence, and that which flows more properly efflux.

To EFFLUX. † v. n. [effluo, Lat.] To run out; to flow away. This is not often in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Boyle. But it was in use before.

The same revolution would not bring back the same time, for that was effluxed before.

Annot. on Religio Medici, 1654.

Five thousand and some odd centuries of years are effluxed since the creation.

Boyle, Seraphick Love.

EFFLUXION. n. s. [effluxum, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing out.

By effluxion and attraction bodies tend towards the earth.

Brown.

2. That which flows out; effluvium; emanation.

There are some light effluxions from spirit to spirit, when men are one with another; as from body to body.

Bacon.

To EFFORCE. v. a. [efforcer, Fr.]

1. To force; to break through by violence.

In all that room was nothing to be seen,

But huge great iron chests and coffers strong,

All barr'd with double bonds, that ne'er could ween

Them to efforce by violence or wrong.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To force; to ravish; to violate by force.

Then gan her beauty shine as brightest sky,

And burnt his beastly heart t' efforce her chastity.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. To strain; to exert with effort or vehemence. This word is not now used.

The palmer lent his ear into the noise,

To weet who called so importunately;

Again he heard a more efforced voice,

That bad him come in haste.

Spenser, F. Q.

To EFFORM. † v. a. [efformo, Lat.] To make in any certain manner; to shape; to fashion.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing, and efforming us after thy own image.

Bp. Taylor.

Which corporeal sense, the earthly mind in man,—he saw efformed.

More, Conj. Cabb. p. 235.

EFFORMATION. n. s. [from efform.] The act of fashioning or giving form to.

Nature begins to set upon her work of efformation.

More.

They pretend to solve phenomena, and to give an account of the production and efformation of the universe.

Ray.

EFFORT. † n. s. [effort, Fr. Dr. Johnson places the accent on the second syllable of the word; though the example, which he brings from Pope, presents it on the first. Yet Pope, in his Imitations of Horace, uses the former accent: "Blackmore himself for any grand effort." However, the accent is now constant on the first syllable.] Struggle; strain; vehement action; laborious endeavour.

If, after having gained victories, we had made the same efforts as if we had lost them, France could not have withstood us.

Addison on the State of the War.

Though the same sun, with all diffusive rays,
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We prize the stronger effort of his pow'r,
And always set the gem above the flow'r.

Pope.

EFFOSSION. n. s. [effodio, Lat.] The act of digging up from the ground; deterration.

He set apart annual sums for the recovery of manuscripts, the effusion of coins, and the procuring of mummies.

Arbutnot.

EFFRA'IBLE. adj. [effroyable, Fr.] Dreadful; frightful; terrible. A word not used.

Pestilential symptoms declare nothing a proportionate efficient of their effraïable nature but arsenical fumes.

Harvey.

To EFFRA'Y.* v. a. [old Fr. effrayer.] To affright; to scare.

Their dam upstart out of her den effraide,
And rushed forth.

Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 16.

EFFRENA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. effrenatio.] Unruliness; unbridled rashness.

Cockeram.

E'FFRONTERY. n. s. [effronterie, Fr.] Impudence; shamelessness; contempt of reproach.

They could hardly contain themselves within one unworthy act, who had effrontery enough to commit or countenance it.

K. Charles.

Others with ignorance and insufficiency have self-admiration and effrontery to set up themselves.

Watts.

A bold man's effrontery, in company with women, must be owing to his low opinion of them, and his high one of himself.

Richardson, Clarissa.

To EFFU'LGE.† v. n. [effulgeo, Lat.] To send forth lustre or effulgence. I know not that this word is used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the authority of Savage. But it had been repeatedly used by Thomson.

Bright at his call thy age of men effulg'd.

Thomson, Summer.

His eyes effulging a peculiar fire.

Ib. Britannia.

On pure winter's eve

Gradual the stars effulge.

Ib. Liberty, P. v.

The topaz charms the sight,

Like these effulging yellow streams of light.

Savage.

EFFU'LGENCE. n. s. [effulgeo, Lat.] Lustre; brightness; clarity; splendour.

On thee

Impress'd, the effulgence of his glory abides.

Milton, P. L.

Thy lustre, best effulgence, can dispel

The clouds of error, and the gloom of hell.

Blackmore.

EFFU'LGENT. adj. [effulgens, Lat.] Shining; bright; luminous.

How soon th' effulgent emanations fly

Through the blue gulph of interposing sky!

Blackmore.

The downward sun

Looks out effulgent, from amid the flash

Of broken clouds.

Thomson, Spring.

To EFFU'ME.* v. a. [Lat. fumus, smoke.] To breathe or puff out. See EFFUMABILITY.

I can make this dog take as many whiffs as I list, and he shall retain or effume them at my pleasure.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

EFFUMABI'LITY. n. s. [fumus, Lat.] The quality of flying away, or vapouring in fumes. An useful word but not adopted.

They seem to define mercury by volatility, or, if I may coin such a word, effumability.

Boyle.

To EFFUND.* v. a. [Lat. effundo.] To pour out.

A word, in old times, not uncommon, and retained in a song of great humour, towards the latter part of the seventeenth century. Now disused, though Scott and Ash present it in their vocabularies.

After this went forth the seconde angel of the seconde seal-opening, effundinge his vial upon the sea.

Hale on the Revel. (1550.) P. ii. sign. i. ij. b.

If he his life effund

To utmost death, the high God hath design'd

That we both live.

More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 146.

Much sweat they spent in furious fight,

Much blood they did effund!

Ballad of St. George for England, P. ii.

To EFFU'SE. v. a. [effusus, Lat.] To pour out; to spill; to shed.

He fell, and, deadly pale,

Groan'd out his soul, with gushing blood effus'd.

Milton, P. L.

At last emerging from his nostrils wide,

And gushing mouth, effus'd the briny tide.

Pope, Odys.

EFFU'SE. n. s. [from the verb.] Waste; effusion.

Not used.

The air hath got into my deadly wounds,

And much effuse of blood doth make me faint.

Shakespeare.

EFFU'SE.* adj. [Lat. effusus.] Dissipated; extravagant.

Wherever the body is, yet the heart of fools is on effuse mirth.

Bp. Richardson on the Old Test. (1655.) p. 321.

'Tis pride, or emptiness, applies the straw,

That tickles little minds to mirth effuse.

Young, Night Th. 8.

EFFU'SION. n. s. [effusio, Lat.]

1. The act of pouring out.

My heart hath melted ~~and~~ a lady's tears,

Being an ordinary inundation;

But this effusion of such manly drops,

This show'r, blown up by tempest of the soul,

Startles nine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd.

Shakespeare.

Our blessed Lord commanded the representation of his death, and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking bread and effusion of wine.

Bp. Taylor, Worthington.

If the flood-gates of heaven were any thing distinct from the forty days rain, their effusion, 'tis likely, was at this same time when the abyss was broken open.

Burnet, Theory.

2. Waste; the act of spilling or shedding.

When there was but as yet one only family in the world, no means of instruction, human or divine, could prevent effusion of blood.

Hooker.

Stop effusion of our Christian blood,

And 'stablish quietness.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Yet shall she be restor'd, since publick good

For private int'rest ought not be withstood,

To save th' effusion of my people's blood.

Dryden, Homer.

3. The act of pouring out words.

Endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, oftentimes disgrace, in most unsufferable manner, the worthiest part of Christian duty towards God.

Hooker.

4. Bounteous donation.

Such great force the gospel of Christ had then upon men's souls, melting them into that liberal effusion of all that they had.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

5. The thing poured out.

Purge me with the blood of my Redeemer, and I shall be clean; wash me with that precious effusion, and I shall be whiter than snow.

K. Charles.

EFFU'SIVE.† adj. [from effuse.] Pouring out; dispersing.

The North-east spends his rage; he now shut up
Within his iron cave, th' effusive South
Warns the wide air. Thomson, Spring.

Strait arose
These heavenly orbs, the glad abodes of life,
Effusive, kindled by his breath divine
Through endless forms of being.

Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. ii.
EFT.† n. s. [εφρα, Sax. from the Greek ἐφης, a serpent, to which word our eff more nearly approaches. Arab. cfai. See EFF.] A newt; an evet; a small kind of lizard that lives generally in the water.

Peacocks are beneficial to the places where they are kept, by clearing of them from snakes, adders, and efst, upon which they will live. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The crocodile of Egypt is the lizard of Italy, and the eft in out country. Nichols.

EFT.† adv. [εφταν, Sax. to hasten; εφ, soon, again, and afterwards, and likewise; in all which senses it is found in old English, but is now used in none.] Soon; quickly; speedily; shortly;
again; moreover; afterwards.

Eft through the thick they heard one rudely rush,
With noise whereof he from his lofty steed
Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush,
To hide his coward head from dying dread. Spenser, F. Q.

For notwithstanding that one soul was left,
Yet, had the body not dismembred be, [been,]
It would have lived, and revived eft;
But, finding no fit seat, the lifeless corse it left.

Yet seem'd the soil both faire and fruitful eft.
Spenser, F. Q.

Eft, when years
More ripe as reason lent to choose our peers, Ourselves in league of vowed love we knit. Spenser, F. Q.
Quite consum'd with flame,
The idol is of that eternal maid;
For so at least I have preserv'd the same,
With hands profane, from being eft betray'd. Fairfax.

EFTSOONS. adv. [εφ and soon.] Soon afterwards;
in a short time; again. An obsolete word; formed, as it seems, by the conjunction of two words of the same meaning.

He in their stead eftsoons placed Englishmen, who possessed all their lands. Spenser on Ireland.

Eftsoons the nymphs, which now had flowers their fill,
Run all in haste to see that silver brood. Spenser, Prothalam.

The Germans deadly hated the Turks, whereof it was to be thought that new wars would eftsoons ensue. Knolles, Hist.

Eftsoons, O sweetheart kind, my love repay,
And all the year shall then be holiday. Gau, Pastorals.

E. G. [exempli gratia.] • For the sake of an instance or example.

E'GER. n. s. [See EAGRE.] An impetuous or irregular flood or tide.

From the peculiar disposition of the earth at the bottom, wherein quick excitations are made, may arise those egers and flows in some estuaries and rivers; as is observable about Trent and Humber in England. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To EGERMINATE.† v. n. [Lat. egermino.] To spring or bud out. Cockeram. This old word has been revived in the terms of modern botany.

To EGE'ST. v. a. [εγερσθαι, Lat.] To throw out food at the natural vents.

Divers creatures sleep all the winter; as the bear, the hedgehog, the bat, and the bee: these all wax fat when they sleep, and egest not. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

EGESTION.† n. s. [εγестus, Lat.] The act of throwing out the digested food at the natural vents.

Neither the procuring of ready concoction, nor the avoiding of wearisome labouring, nor the entertaining of moderate walking, nor the disposition unto liberal recreation, nor the benefit of facile and soluble egestion; no, nor any thing else that can preserve health unto us, if God himself do not sustain us. Fotherby, Athcom. (1626,) p. 247.

The animal soul or spirits manage as well their spontaneous actions as the natural or involuntary exertions of digestion, egestion, and circulation. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To confute your learned labours, is but to take wing, like beetles, from your egestions.

Wallis, Correct. of Hobbes, p. 3.

EGG. n. s. [æg, Sax.; ough, Erse.]

1. That which is laid by feathered and some other animals, from which their young is produced.

An egg was found, having lain many years at the bottom of a moat, where the earth had somewhat overgrown it; and this egg was come to the hardness of a stone, and the colours of the white and yolk perfect. Bacon.

Eggs are perhaps the highest, most nourishing, and exalted of all animal food, and most indigestible. Arbutnot.

2. The spawn or sperm of other creatures.

Therefore think him as the serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous.

Shakespeare.

Every insect of each different kind,
In its own egg, cheer'd by the solar rays,
Organs invol'd and latent life displays. Blackmore.

3. Any thing fashioned in the shape of an egg.

There was taken a great glass-bubble with a long neck, such as chemists are wont to call a philosophical egg. Boyle.

To EGG.† v. a. [eggia, to incite, Icelandic; eggan, Sax.] To incite; to instigate; to provoke to action: for this, edge is, I think, sometimes igno-rantly used.

They that egg on or consenten to the sinne, bin partners of the sinne, and of the dampnation of the sinner.

Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

All kinds of lust and luxury, and all things else which do egg forward and stir up fire in men to wantonness, he forbid-deth as severely as adultery itself.

Transl. of Bullinger's Serm. p. 234.

[She] did egg him on to tell
How fair she was. Warner, Albion's England.

Study becomes pleasant to him who is pursuing his genius, and whose ardour of inclination eggs him forward, and carries him through every obstacle. Derham, Phys. Theol.

E'GGER.* n. s. [from the verb.] One who incites others to an action; "an egger-on." Sherwood.

E'GGERY.* See EYRY.

E'GGING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Incitement; egg- ment is also used by Chaucer instead of it.

Tell me, how curst an egging, with a sting
Of lust, do these unwily dances bring.

Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 105.

EGILO'PICAL.* adj. [from ægilops.] Affected with the ægilops, or tending to it. Colles.

E'GILOPS.* See ÆGILOPS.

E'GIS.* See ÆGIS.

E'GLANTINE.* n. s. [églantier, Fr.] A species of rose;
sweet-briar.

O'er canopied with luscious woodbine,
With sweet musk roses, and with eglantine. Shakespeare.

The leaf of eglantine, not to slander,
Outsweeten'd not thy breath. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Sycamores with eglantine were spread,
A hedge about the sides, a covering over head. Dryden.

E'GLOGUE.* See ÆGLOGUE.

E'GOISM, or E'GOMISM.* n. s. [from ego, Lat.] The opinion of those, who profess themselves uncertain of every thing but their own existence. See EGOIST. "Une espece de Pyrrhonisme insensé, nommé l'Egomisme, où chacun se croit le seul être existant." M. Ramsay, Disc. sur la Mythologie, P. I.

That kind of scepticism called egomism.

Baxter, on the Soul, (1737,) ii. 11.

E'GOIST.* n. s. [from ego, Lat.] A sceptick; one who pretends to doubt of every thing but his own existence.

Hitherto Des Cartes was uncertain of every thing but his own existence, and the existence of the operations and ideas of his own mind. Some of his disciples, it is said, remained at this stage of his system, and got the name of Egoists.

Reid.

E'GOTISM. n. s. [from ego, Lat.] The fault committed in writing by the frequent repetition of the word ego, or I; too frequent mention of a man's self, in writing or conversation.

The most violent egotism which I have met with, in the course of my reading, is that of Cardinal Wolsey's; ego & rex meus, I and my king.

Spectator.

E'GOTIST. n. s. [from ego] One that is always repeating the word ego, I; a talker of himself.

A tribe of egotists, for whom I have always had a mortal aversion, are the authors of memoirs, who are never mentioned in any works but their own.

Spectator.

E'GOTISTICAL.* adj. [from egotist.] Self-conceited; praising one's self.

To E'GOTIZE. v. n. [from ego.] * To talk much of one's self.

EGREGIOUS.* adj. [egregius, Lat. i. e. e grege, separated or selected from the flock. See the second sense.]

1. Eminent; remarkable; extraordinary.

If any person of good desert shall wilfully be a delinquent, the same man ought, notwithstanding his former service to be punished. Horatio that in combat gained the victory against the Albani, having insolently slain his own sister, was, notwithstanding his egregious act and the fresh memory thereof, called into trial of his life, and with great difficulty obtained pardon.

Raleigh, Arts of Empire, ch. 26.

Voluntarily therefore and of right we congratulate this accession of dignity to your egregious merits, and the most worthy guerdon of so much virtue.

Milton, Lett. of State.

He might be able to adorn this present age, and furnish history with the records of egregious exploits, both of art and valour.

More against Atheism.

One to empire born;

Egregious prince! whose manly childhood shew'd
His mingled parents, and portended joy Unspenkable.

Philips.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity.

Woodward.

2. Eminently bad; remarkably vicious. This is the usual sense, Dr. Johnson says. This remark requires further notice. In the old dictionary of Huloet, egregious is defined by excellent only. In that of Cockeram, it has the same definition; with this addition, "sometimes vile, base." At the close of the sixteenth century, however, the bad sense of the word seems to have been common; for Gabriel Harvey having used the phrase "an egregious argument," he is thus reprimanded by Nashe, in Four Letters Confuted, 1593: "Egregious is never used in English but in the extreme ill part." Yet Raleigh, and Milton, as I have shewn in the additions to the first definition, considered the word as meaning eminently good, or illustrious, or famous.

We may be bold to conclude, that these last times, for insolence, pride, and egregious contempt of all good order, are the worst.

Hooker, Pref.

Ah me, most credulous fool!

Egregious murderer.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Reader, try by this the egregious impudence of this fellow.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 194.

And hence the egregious wizzard shall foredoom

The fate of Louis, and the fall of Rome.

Pope.

EGRE'GIOUSLY. adv. [from egregious.] Eminently; shamefully.

Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me,
For making him egregiously an ass,
And practising upon his peace and quiet,
Even to madness.

Shakespeare, Othello.

He discovered that, besides the extravagance of every article, he had been egregiously cheated.

Arbutnot, John Bull.

EGRE'GIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from egregious.] The state of being eminent.

Sherwood.

E'GRESS.* n. s. [egressus, Lat. Milton places the accent on the last syllable of the word. But it is now constantly on the first.] The power or act of going out of any place; departure.

Thou shalt have egress and regress.

Shakespeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.

In a nunnery a maid alone, if she cannot have egress, before her window you shall have an old woman, or some prating gossip, tell her some tales of this clerk, and that monk, describing or commending some young gentleman unto her.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 503.

Gates of burking adamant,

Barr'd over us, prohibit all egress:

Milton, P. L.

This water would have been locked up within the earth, and its egress utterly debarr'd, had the strata of stone and marble remained continuous.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

EGRE'SSION.* n. s. [egressio, Lat.] The act of going out.

So thou may'st have a triumphal egression.

B. Jonson, Dev. an Ass.

In the days and periods of their joy and festival egressions, they chose to throw some ashes into their chalices, some sober remembrances of their fatal period.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ii. § 1.

The vast number of troops is expressed in the swarms; their tumultuous manner of issuing out of their ships, and the perpetual egression, which seemed without end, are imaged in the bees pouring out.

Pope.

E'GRET.* n. s.

1. A fowl of the heron kind, with red legs. Bailey.

2. A feather of the fowl.

Of the same work were their bases; their head-tires of flowers, mixed with silver and gold, with some sprigs of egrets among; and, from the top of their dressing, a thin veil hanging down.

B. Jonson, Masques.

E'GRIMONY.* n. s.

1. The herb agrimony, formerly written egrimony. See AGRIMONY.

Cotgrave.

2. Great sorrow; grief. [Lat. agrimonia.] Obsolete. Cockeram.

E'GRIOT. n. s. [aigret, Fr.; perhaps from aigre, sour.] A species of cherry.

The cœur-cherry, which inclineth more to white, is sweeter than the red; but the egriot is more sour.

Bacon.

EGY'PTIANS.* n. s. [from Egypt.] Inhabitants or natives of Egypt; but the word is here noticed as being formerly a phrase applied to gipsies; as, in Sherwood's old dictionary, "a counterfeit Egyptian, v. Gypsie." So, in old Fr. Egyptiens, "certains gueux errans et vagabonds, qui vivent des larcins." Roq. See GIPSY.

To EJA'ULATE. v. a. [ejaculator, Lat.] To throw; to shoot; to dart out.

E J E

Being rooted so little way in the skin, nothing near so deeply as the quills of fowls, they are the more easily ejaculated.
Grew, Museum.

The mighty magnet from the centre darts
This strong, though subtle force, through all the parts :
Its active rays, ejaculated thence,
Irradiate all the wide circumference. Blackmore.

EJACULA'TION.† n. s. [from ejaculate.]

1. The act of darting or throwing out.

There seemeth to be acknowledged, in the act of envy, an ejaculation or irradiation of the eye. Bacon, Ess.

There is to be observed, in those dissolutions which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are; as the ebullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

2. A short prayer darted out occasionally, without solemn retirement.

In your dressing let there be ejaculations fitted to the several actions of dressing; as at washing your hands, pray God to cleanse your soul from sin. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

Which prayers of our Saviour, Matt. xxvi. 39. and others of like brevity, are properly such as we call ejaculations; an elegant similitude from a dart, or arrow, shot or thrown out; and such an one, we know, of a yard long, will fly farther, and strike deeper, than one of twenty. South, Sermon. ii. 150.

EJA'CLATORY.† adj. [from ejaculate.]

1. Throwing out; having power to cast out.

Seminary vessels both preparatory and ejaculatory.

Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 117.

2. Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences.

The continuance of this posture might incline to ease and drowsiness; they used it rather upon some short ejaculatory prayers, than in their larger devotions. Duypa, Devotions.

3. Sudden; hasty.

We are not to value ourselves upon the merit of ejaculatory repentances, that take us by fits and starts. L'Estrange.

EID'ER.* } n. s. [Swed. cider.] The down of a EIDER-DOWN. } Gothland duck, called cider. See Tracts by B. Stillingfleet, p. 48.

From Norway, Iceland, and Greenland, — a vast quantity of the down, known by the name of eider or edder, which these birds furnish, is annually imported. Its remarkably light, elastick, and warm qualities make it highly esteemed, as a stuffing for coverlets, by such whom age or infirmities render unable to support the weight of common blankets. The down is produced from the breast of the bird in the breeding season.

Pennant, Brit. Zool. p. 581.

To EJECT. v. a. [ejicio, ejectum, Lat.]

1. To throw out; to cast forth; to void.

Infernal lightning sallies from his throat!

Ejected sparks upon the billows float!

Sandys.

The heart, as said, from its contracted cave,

On the left side ejects the bounding wave.

Blackmore.

Tears may spoil the eyes, but not wash away the affliction;
sighs may exhaust the mind, but not eject the burthen. South.

2. To throw out or expel from an office or possession.

It was the force of conquest; force with force

Is well ejected, when the conquer'd can.

Milton, S. A.

The French king was again ejected when our king submitted to the church.

Dryden.

3. To expel; to drive away; to dismiss with hatred.

We are peremptory to dispatch

This viperous traitor; to eject him hence,

Were but our danger; and to keep him here,

Our certain death; therefore it is decreed

He dies to-night.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

4. To cast away; to reject.

To have ejected whatsoever the church doth make account of, be it never so harmless in itself, and of never so ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the apt thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could not have been defended. Hooker.

E I G

Will any man say, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament ejected out of the English tongue, we should all awake next morning chaste and temperate? Swift.

EJE'CTION.† n. s. [ejectio, Lat.]

1. The act of casting out; expulsion.

Our first parent comforted himself, after his ejection out of Paradise, with the foresight of that blessed seed of the woman, which should be exhibited almost four thousand years after.

Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 30.

These stories are founded on the ejection of the fallen angels from heaven. Broome.

2. [In physick.] The discharge of any thing by vomit, stool, or any other emunctory. Quincy.

A melancholy patient imagined a mouse had slipped down his throat. The doctor, perceiving his fancy to be strongly perverted, concurred with him that it was a mouse; — and that he should, upon a little physick taken, see the return of him to his great joy. The patient desired his dose; and, within a day or two, the apothecary gave him a slight vomit, which wrought very well; but, at the first and second strains, no mouse appeared; whereat the apothecary sware, he smelt him coming by the scent of the ejection!

Bayton, Notes on D. Quir. p. 158.

EJE'CTMENT.† n. s. [from eject.]

1. A legal writ by which any inhabitant of a house, or tenant of an estate, is commanded to depart.

2. Expulsion in general.

A superstitious worship of God, returning home in triumph from a six years' exile and ejectionment.

Bp. Fleetwood, Four Sermon. (1712,) p. 29.

EIGH. interj. An expression of sudden delight.

EIGHT.* n. s. [Sax. iggað, an island.] An island in a river.

Some do also plant osiers on their eights, like quicksets.

Evelyn.

EIGHT. adj. [ahhta, Saxon; akta, Gothick; acht, Scottish.] Twice four. A word of number.

This island contains eight score and eight miles in circuit.

Sandys, Journey.

EIGHTH.† adj. [Sax. ehteoða.] Next in order to the seventh; the ordinal of eight.

Another yet? — A seventh! I'll see no more;

And yet the eighth appears!

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

In the eighth month should be the reign of Saturn. Bacon.

I stay reluctant seven continu'd years,

And water her ambrosial couch with tears;

The eighth, she voluntary moves to part,

Or urg'd by Jove, or her own changeful heart.

Pope.

EI'GHTEN. adj. [eight and ten.] Twice nine.

He can't take two from twenty, for his heart,

And leave eighteen.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

If men naturally lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about eighteen; and yet eighteen years now are as long as eighteen years would be then. Bp. Taylor.

EI'GHTEENTH. adj. [from eighteen.] The next in order to the seventeenth; twice ninth.

In the eighteenth year of Jeroboam reigned Abijam. 1 Kings.

EI'GHTFOLD. adj. [eight and fold.] Eight times the number or quantity.

EI'GHTHLY. adv. [from eighth.] In the eighth place.

Eighthly, living creatures have voluntary motion, which plants have not.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

EI'GHTIETH. adj. [from eighty.] The next in order to the seventyninth; eighth tenth.

Some balances are so exact as to be sensibly turned with the eightieth part of a grain.

Wilkins, Math. Magick.

EI'GHTSCORE. adj. [right and score.] Eight times twenty; an hundred and sixty.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?

Eightscore eight hours? and lovers absent hours,

More tedious than the dial eightscore times?

Oh weary reckoning!

Shakespeare, Othello.

El'GHTY. adj. [eight and ten.] Eight times ten; fourscore.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakespeare.

Among all other climactericks three are most remarkable; that is, seven times seven, or forty-nine; nine times nine, or eighty-one; and seven times nine, or the year sixty-three, which is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown, Vtg. Err.

EIGNE. adj. [aisne, Fr.] [In law.] Denotes the eldest or first born. Here it signifies unalienable, as being entailed.

It happeneth not seldom, that, to avoid the yearly oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not subject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh after it, the party will offer to sue a pardon unaccomplished before the time; in all which, some mitigation of the uttermost value may well and worthily be offered. Bacon.

ELD.* See ELD.

El'SEL. † n. s. [Sax. eisl and ayil; and also old Fr. aisil, vinegar. Tres. de Borel. And so, in old Eng. aysel, used by Wicliffe.] Vinegar; verjuice; any acid. An old word.

Cast in thy mind
How thou resemblest Christ, as with sowre poison,
If thou paine thy taste; remember therewithall
How Christ for thee tasted eisel and gall. Sir T. More.
Like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of eysel, 'gainst my strong infection.

Shakespeare, Sonnet.

El'THER. † pron. [etþer, Saxon; authey, Scottish; aithau, Goth. aita, Icel. irepos, Greek.]

1. Which soever of the two; whether one or the other.

Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

So like in arms these champions were,
As they had been a very pair;
So that a man would almost swear,
That either had been either. Drayton, Nymph.

Goring made a fast friendship with Digby, either of them believing he could deceive the other. Clarendon.

I do not ask whether bodies do so exist, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

2. Each; both. [Either is often used improperly instead of each; as, "Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either (each) of them his censet." Each signifies both of them, taken distinctly or separately; either properly signifies only the one, or the other, of them, taken disjunctively. For which reason the like expression in the following passages seems also improper: "They crucified two other with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst." St. John, xix. 18. "On either side of the river was there the tree of life." Rev. xxii. 2. •Lowth's Grammar.]

In the process of natural beings, there seem some to be creatures placed, as it were, in the confines of several provinces, and participating something of either. Hale.

Sev'n times the sun has either tropick view'd,
The winter banished, and the spring renew'd. Dryden, Virg.

3. It is used sometimes of more than two; any one of a certain number.

4. Any of an indeterminate number, as in the following passage:

Henry VIII. Francis I. and Charles V. were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either of the three, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

El'THER. † adv. [from the noun.] A distributive adverb, answered by or; either the one or. So far Dr. Johnson. But this is not always the case. It sometimes stands by itself, in the sense of or. Of this construction the translators of the New Testament have given several instances, which may be seen in the present Version. In the first and second instances which follow, Wicliffe's word is or; in the last, either. "Either what woman having ten pieces of silver." St. Luke, xv. 8. "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect." Philippi. iii. 12. "Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries; either a vine, figs?" James, iii. 12.

We never heard of any ship that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies. Bacon, New Atlantis.

What perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assigned? Daniel.
Either your brethren have miserably deceived us, or power confers virtue. Swift to Pope.

EJULATION. n. s. [ejulatio, Latin.] Outcry; lamentation; moan; wailing.

Instead of hymns and praises, he breaks out into ejulations and effeminate wailings. Government of the Tongue.

With dismal groans
And ejulation, in the pangs of death,
Some call for aid. Philips.

To EKE. † v. a. [eacan, Saxon; aukan, Goth. auka; Icel. to encrease. Spenser usually writes the word ek. See To EEK.]

1. To increase.
The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.
— And mine to eke out her's. Shakespeare, As you like it.

2. To supply; to fill up deficiencies.
Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind. Shakespeare.
Your ornaments hung all,
On some patch'd doghole ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.

3. To protract; to lengthen.
I speak too long; but 'tis to piece the time,
To eke it, and to draw it out in length,
To stay you from election. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

4. To spin out by useless additions. [In this sense it seems borrowed from the use of our old poets, who put eke into their lines, when they wanted a syllable.]

EKE. † conjunction. [Sax. eac; Goth. auk; Icel. och; from their respective verbs. See To EKE.] Also; likewise; beside; moreover.

If any strength we have, it is to ill:
But all the good is God's, both power and eke will. Spenser, F. Q.

Now if 'tis chiefly in the heart
That courage does itself exert,
'Twill be prodigious hard to prove,
That this is eke the throne of love. Prior.

EKE.* n. s. [from the verb.] An addition, or augmentation.

Either the words in Italicks are virtually implied in the Hebrew, or they are not. In the former case, they are a real part of the text, and should be printed in the same character: in the latter, they are generally ill assorted and clumsy ekes, that may well be spared; and which often disfigure the narration under pretence of correcting it.

Geddes, Prosp. of a New Tr. of the Holy Bible, p. 95.

E'KING.* n. s. Encrease. See E'KING.

E-L.A.* n. s. The highest note in the scale of musick.

Why this is above E-la! Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.
To ELA'BORATE. † v. a. [old Fr. elaborer; Lat. laboro.]

1. To produce with labour; "to do a thing with great pains." Cockeram. Thus the plays of Ben Jonson are styled, by a contemporary applauder, "art-contrived, elaborated plays." Verses pref. to Jonson's Works.

They in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

2. To heighten and improve by successive endeavours or operations.

The sap is diversified, and still more elaborated and exalted, as it circulates through the vessels of the plant. Arbuthnot.

ELA'BORATE. adj. [elaboratus, Lat.] Finished with great diligence; performed with great labour.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than when politicians most agitate desperate designs. King Charles.

At least, on her bestow'd
 Too much of ornament, of outward shew Elaborate; of inward, less exact. Milton, P. L.

Man is thy theme, his virtue or his rage Drawn to the life in each elab'rate page. Waller.

Consider the difference between elaborate discourses upon important occasions, delivered to parliaments, and a plain sermon intended for the common people. Swift.

ELA'BORATELY. adv. [from elaborate.] Laboriously; diligently; with great study or labour.

Politick conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet prove abortive. South.
 Some coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground. Newton, Opticks.

I will venture once to incur the censure of some persons, for being elaborately trifling. Bentley.

It is there elaborately shewn, that patents are good. Swift.

ELA'BORATENESS. * n. s. [from elaborate.] Completion by successive endeavours.

It [the Old Bachelor] is apparently composed with great elaborateness of dialogue, and incessant ambition of wit. Johnson, Life of Congreve.

ELABORATION. † n. s. [Fr. elaboration.] Improvement by successive operations.

To what purpose is there such an apparatus of vessels for the elaboration of the sperm and eggs; such a tedious process of generation and nutrition? Ray.

ELA'BORATORY. * n. s. [Fr. elaboratoire, Cotgrave.] A chymist's work-room. See LABORATORY.

He [Mr. Schae] built his elaboratory in an old hall or refectory. — In the year following he was called away to London, and became operator to the Royal Society; and, continuing there till 1670, he returned to Oxon, and had several classes successively. — The chymical club concluded; and A. W. paid Mr. Schae 30 shillings having, in the beginning of the class, given 30 shillings beforehand. Life of A. Wood, sub. ann. 1663.

ELA'MPING. * adj. [Ital. lampant.] Spenser uses lamping. The present word has been converted by the modern editor of Giles Fletcher's fine poem into light spreading wide.] Shining; giving light. Not now in use.

As when the cheerful sun, clamping wide,
 Glads all the world. G. Fletcher, Christ's Victory, C. 1.

To ELA'NCE. † v. a. [elancer, French.] To throw out; to dart; to cast as a dart. See LANCE.

While thy unerring hand elanc'd
 Another, and another dart, the people
 Jovially repeated to! Prior.

Harsh words, that, once elanc'd, must ever fly Irrevocable. Prior.

Elance thy thought, and think of more than a an. Young, Night Th. 9.

To ELA'PSE. v. n. [clapsus, Lat.] To pass away; to glide away; to run out without notice.

There is a docible season, a learning time in youth, which, suffered to elapse, and no foundation laid, seldom returns.

Richardson, Clarissa.

ELA'STICAL. } adj. [from ἐλαστός.] Having the ELA'STICK. } power of returning to the form from which it is distorted or withheld; springy;
 having the power of a spring.

By what elastick engines did she rear
 The starry roof, and roll the orbs in air. Blackmore.

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pression, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastick, returning to its figure with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts. Newton, Opticks.

The most common diversities of human constitutions arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tension, in some being too lax and weak, in others too elastick and strong. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A fermentation must be excited in some assignable place, which may expand itself by its elastical power, and break through where it meets with the weakest resistance. Bentley.

ELASTICITY. † n. s. [Fr. élasticité.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any external force. Quincy.

A lute-string will bear a hundred weight without rupture; but, at the same time, cannot exert its elasticity: take away first, and it immediately raiseth the weight. Arbuthnot.

Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,
 And were my elasticity and fire. Pope.

ELA'TE. † adj. [elatus, Lat.] This is one of our oldest words: though Dr. Johnson has found no earlier usage of it than that by Pope. It is also in our old lexicography for "lifted up, advanced, proud, lofty." Bullokar, ed. 1656.] Flushed with success; elevated with prosperity; lofty; haughty.

This king of kings proud was and elate.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale.

Oh, thoughtless mortals, ever blind to fate!
 Too soon dejected, and too soon elate. Pope.

I of mind elate, and scornful fear,
 Thus with new taunts insult the monster's ear. Pope, Odyssey.

To ELA'TE. † v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To elevate with success; to puff up with prosperity; "to make proud." Cockeram.

Though elated by his victory, he still maintained the appearance of moderation. Hume, Hist.

2. To exalt; to heighten. An unusual sense.

Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson.

ELA'TEDLY. * adv. [from elated.] In a conceited manner, arising from success.

Nero, we find, defiled most in the foulest mires of luxury; and where do we find any so elatedly proud, or so unjustly rapacious as he? Feltham, Duc. on St. Luke, xiv. 20.

ELATERIUM. n. s. [Latin.] An inspissated juice, light, of a friable texture and an acrid and pungent taste. It is procured from the fruit of the wild cucumber. It is a very violent and rough purge. Hill.

ELA'TION. † n. s. [old Fr. elation, pride.]

1. Haughtiness proceeding from success; pride of prosperity. Bullokar.

God began to punish this vain elation of mind, by withdrawing his favours. Atterbury.

2. A carrying forth, from the elatio of the Romans; the conveyance of the dead to the grave. This meaning, which is of modern usage, is not likely to be adopted.

ELBOW. n. s. [elboza, Saxon.]

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.

E L D

In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,
You dream of triumphs in the rural shade.

Pope.

2. Any flexure, or angle.

Fruit trees, or vines, set upon a wall between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Baron.

3. To be at the ELBOW. To be near; to be at hand.

Straight will he come;

Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home:

Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow.

Shakespeare, Othello.

To ELBOW. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with the elbow.

One elbows him, one jostles in the shoal. Dryden, Juv.

2. To push; to drive to distance; to encroach upon.

Kent. The poor distress'd Lear — by no means

Will yield to see his daughter.

Gent. Why, good sir?

Kent. A sovereign shame so elbows him. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

It thrusts and stretches out,

And elbows all the kingdoms round about. Dryden.

If fortune takes not off this boy betimes,

He'll make mad work and elbow out his neighbours. Dryden.

To ELBOW. † v. n.

1. To jut out in angles.

Dict.

2. To clash; to jostle; to be quarrelsome.

He that grows hot and turbid, that elbows in all his philosophical disputes, must needs be very proud of his own sufficiencies, or very ignorant of the science he stickles for.

Mannyngham, Disc. (1681), p. 50.

Purse-proud, elbowing insolence. Grainger, Ode on Solitude.

ELBOWCHAIR. n. s. [elbow and chair.] A chair with arms to support the elbows.

Swans and elbowchairs, in the opera of Dioclesian, have danced upon the English stage with good success. Gay.

ELBOWROOM. n. s. [elbow and room.] Room to stretch out the elbows on each side; perfect freedom from confinement.

Now my soul hath elbowroom;

It would not out at windows nor at doors. Shakespeare.

The natives are not so many, but that there may be elbowroom enough for them, and for the adventives also. Bacon.

A politician must put himself into a state of liberty to provide elbowroom for conscience to have its full play in. South.

ELD. † n. s. [ealb, Sax. eld, Scottish, Dr. Johnson says. He might have added cild, as it is also sometimes found in our old writers. Mr. Horne Tooke derives this word from "the Sax. verb ylban or ilban, to remain, to stay, to continue, to last, to endure, to delay, to defer;" of which he says, it is the past participle. But may it not be the participle of the Sax. eghan, to ail, to trouble, to weary? Our ancient lexicography says, "Eld, eled or worne, vetustus, inveteratus, elde man or woman, senex." Prompt. Parv. Yet it must be confessed, that we had formerly the verb, to elb, Sax. ylban, senescere; which Chaucer employs both as an active and neuter verb.]

1. Old age; decrepitude.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wondrous comfort in her weaker eld.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thy blessed youth

Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms

Of palsied eld. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

He thought it touch'd his deity full near,

If likewise he some fair one wedded not,

Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot

Of long uncoupled bed and childless eld. Milton, Ode.

2. Old people; persons worn out with years.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld. Chapman.

ELDER. adj. The comparative of eld, now changed to old. [ealb, ealþop, Saxon.] Surpassing another in years; survivor; having the privileges of primogeniture: opposed to younger.

They bring the comparison of younger daughters conforming themselves in attire to their elder sisters. Hooker.

Let still the woman take

An elder than herself; so wears she to him,

So sways she level in her husband's heart. Shakespeare.

How I firmly am resolv'd, you know;

That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter,

Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakespeare.

Among the Lacedemonians, the chief magistrates, as they were, so they are called, elder men. Raleigh, Hist.

The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the same means the father did among them. Temple.

Fame's high temple stands;

Stupendous pile! not rear'd by mortal hands!

Whate'er proud Rome, or artful Greece beheld,

Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd. Pope.

ELDERS. n. s. plur. [from elder.]

1. Persons whose age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.

Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. 1 Tim. v. i.

Our elders say,

The barren, touched in this holy chase,

Shake off their steril curse. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

The blushing youth their virtuous awe disclose,

And from their seats the reverend elders rose. Sandys.

2. Ancestors.

Says the goose, If it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before you. L'Estrange.

I lose my patience, and I own it too,

Where works are censur'd, not as bad, but new;

While, if our elders break all reason's laws,

Those fools demand, not pardon, but applause. Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

Many nations are very superstitious and diligent observers of old customs, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles, in their songs, and by daily use and ensample of their elders.

Spenser on Ireland.

At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say Amen. Hooker.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.

5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiasticks.

6. [Among presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods, and assemblies.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd

Of clerks and elders una; like the rude

Chaos of presbytery, where laymen ride

With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleveland.

ELDER. n. s. [ellaja, Saxon; sambucus.] The name of a tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood; the flowers are monopetalous, divided into several segments, and expand in form of a rose: these are, for the most part, collected into an umbel, and are succeeded by soft succulent berries, having three seeds in each. It may be easily propagated from cuttings or seeds. Miller.

Look for thy reward

Amongst the nettles at the elder tree,

Which overshades the mouth of that same pit. Shakespeare.

ELDERLY. adj. [from elder.] No longer young; bordering upon old age.

I have a race of orderly elderly people of both sexes at command, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am giddy. Swift to Pope.

ELDERSHIP. n. s. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.

E L E

The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership. Raleigh.

That all should Alibech adore, 'tis true;
But some respect is to my birthright due:
My claim to her by eldership I prove. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Nor were the eldership
Of Artaxerxes worth our least of fears,
If Memnon's interest did not prop his cause. Rome.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session.

That controversy sprang up between Beza and Erastus, about the matter of excommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the laity. Hooker, Preface.

E'LDDEST. adj. The superlative of old, now changed to old. [elab, ealþop, ealdýrte, Saxon.]

1. The oldest; that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,
It seems, had brib'd him to prolong their space. Dryden.

2. The person that has lived most years.

Eldent parents signifies either the oldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.

E'LDING.* n. s. [Sax. æleb, fire; Icel. eldr, the same.] Wood and sticks for burning; fuel in general. North. Grose.

ELECAMP'NE. n. s. [helenium, Lat.] A plant, named also starwort. Botanists enumerate thirty species of this plant. Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying elecampne root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Hill, Materia Medica.

To ELE'CT.† v. a. [electus, Lat.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.

Henry his son is chosen king, though young;
And Lewis of France, elect first, beguil'd. Daniel.

Such as thou hast solemnly *elect*ed,
With gifts and graces eminently adorn'd,
To some great work. Milton, S. A.

This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, *elect*ed a hundred senators out of the commoners. Swift.

2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

Nor can they think, with the Sublapsarians, that reprobation is only God's passing by those whom he does not elect. Burnet on the Articles, Art. 17.

ELE'CT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Chosen; taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these referend fathers,
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembl'd
To plead your cause. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.

The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony; and then the dean of the arches reads and subscribes the sentences. Ayliffe, Parergon.

3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest: so is my will. Milton, P. L.

ELE'CTANT.* n. s. [from elect; formed like expectant from expect.] One who has the power of choosing. A word not likely to be used. The same writer has adopted, which is merely to be mentioned, electancy.

E L E

You cannot go on further to entitle him a free electant too.

Search on Freewill, Foreknowledge, &c. (1763), p. 55.

ELE'CTION. n. s. [electio, Lat.]

1. The act of choosing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you think that they would choose the meetest? Whitgift.

Him, not thy election,

But natural necessity, begot.

Milton, P. L.

As charity is, nothing can more increase the lustre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them. Sprut.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
Which hath a judging wit, and choosing will!
Now, if God's pow'r should her election bind,
Her motions then would cease, and stand all still. Davies.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the sinners to turn themselves and live; he tells us, that he has set before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will choose. Rogers.

4. Discefnment; distinction; discrimination.

The discovering of these colours cannot be done but out of a very universal knowledge of things; which so cleareth men's judgement and election, as it is the less apt to slide into error. Baron.

In favour, to use men with much difference and election is good: for it maketh those preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to eternal life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have been made remiss in the practice of virtue. Atterbury.

6. The ceremony of a publick choice.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places. King Charles.
Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election. Addison, Spect.

ELECTIONEE'RING.* n. s. [from election.] The practice of soliciting votes at the election of a member for parliament; any business connected with such election. A low word.

Farewell distress, and gloomy cares!

A merrier theme my muse prepares:

For lo! to save us, on a sudden,

In shape of porter, beef, and pudding,

Though late, electioneering comes!

Strike up, ye trumpets and ye drums!

At length we change our wonted note,

And fast all winter on a vote:

Sure canvassing was never hotter!

Warton, Newsman's Verses, 1768.

ELE'CTIVE.† adj. [Fr. electif.]

1. Regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will say positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be so free and absolute as an hereditary. Bacon.

The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem hitherto of less force, and unfitter for action abroad. Temple.

2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew, Cosm. Sacra.

ELE'CTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those muscles electively, I am not subtle enough to discern. Ray on the Creation.

They work not electively, or upon proposing to themselves an end of their operations. Grew.

E L E

ELE'CTOR. n. s. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold
Came, like a tempest, to confound the old;
Feeding with these the bribe'd electors' hopes,
Alone she gave us emperours and popes. Waller.

2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperor.

ELE'CTORAL. † adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

Such are the subdivisions in favour of the electoral and other princes in the empire. Burke, Speech on Econ. Reform.

ELECTORALITY.  n. s.* [from electoral.] The territory of an elector.

Not to trouble one another, or any thing to them belonging; as electoralities, principalities, subjects, towns, villages.

Treaty in Wotton's Rem. Dat. 1620, p. 533.

ELE'CTORATE. † n. s. [Fr. electorat.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire. Addison, Frecholder.

ELE'CTRESS.  } n. s.* [from elector.] The wife or ELE'CTRESS. } widow of an elector.

In the end of his [the elector of Brandenburg's] life, the electress had gained great credit. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, 1688.

The act of parliament settled the crown on the electress Sophia and her descendants, being protestants. Burke.

ELE'CTRE. n. s. [electrum, Lat.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity; and, to the bodies that so attract, the epithet electric.

2. A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon.

ELE'CTRICAL. } adj. [from electrum. See ELECTRICK. } TRE.

1. Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electric bodies also I conceive not such only as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jett and amber; but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable. Brown, Vulg. Err.

An electric body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtle, and yet so potent, as by its emission to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electric body, and to be expanded through a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold, at the distance of above a foot from the electric body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electric body.

If that attraction were not rather electrical than magnetical, it was wonderful what Helmont delivereth concerning a glass, wherein the magistrery of loadstone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Brown.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electric vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light. Newton, Opticks.

ELECTRICIAN.  n. s.* [from electrum. Fr. electricien.]

One who is skilled in the theory of electricity.

I cannot enter into this particular subject without first settling a dispute amongst electricians.

Wilson, Experiments Phil. Transact. (1759,) vol. li. p. 309.

ELECTRICITY. † n. s. [from electric. See ELECTRE.]

A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, first excited by the experiments of Mr. S. Grey, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere of glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

The mechanical theory of electricity invented by Dr. Franklin, is believed by some philosophers not so well to explain the various phenomena of electricity, as may be accomplished by an hypothesis of the existence of two electric fluids diffused together, and strongly attracting each other; one of them to be called vitreous, and the other resinous, electricity. The latter opinion I am inclined to espouse.

Darwin's Phytologia, p. 310.

The theory of two electric fluids has been forsaken by all the principal modern writers on electricity, as being incapable to explain a great number of phenomena; and the theory of a single electric fluid is universally adopted, as being both simple and sufficient to explain the phenomena.

Brit. Crit. 1801. July.

To ELECTRIFY.  v. a.* [from electrum and fic, Lat.]

To render electric; to communicate electricity.

The explosion of a cannon in St. James's park, is observed to electrify the glass of the windows of the treasury.

Dr. Steph. Hales on Earthquakes, (1750,) p. 22.

To ELECTRIFY.  v. a.* [from electrum.] To attract by a peculiar property.

He [Dr. Lister, in 1685] did not doubt that several things would electrify. Hist. of the Royal Soc. iv. 395.

ELECTRO-METER.  n. s.* [from ἤλεκτρον and μέτρον, Gr. Fr. electrometre.] An instrument contrived for measuring the quantity, and determining the quality, of electricity in any electrified body. Chambers.

ELECTUARY. † n. s. [electarium, Caelius Aurel. which is now written Electuary; Dr. Johnson says. Our word was, two centuries since, electuary. V. Hu- loet's Dict. Adopted from the old Fr. electuaire. Electary has been since offered in the Hist. of Medical Transactions, but has not been followed.] A form of medicine made of conserves and powders, in the consistence of honey. Electuaries made up with honey or syrup, when the consistence is too thin, ferment; and when too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired. Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient, except sugar, common to any two of them. Boyle.

ELEMO'SYNARY. † adj. [ἐλεημοσύνη, Gr. See ALMS.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not used. Dr. Johnson says, citing a solitary passage from Glanville, in which the word is no adjective but a substantive. Yet an elegant writer of modern times has not scrupled to employ the adjective in this sense.

In the accounts of Maxtoke priory near Coventry, in the year 1430, it appears, that the elemosynary boys, or choristers, of that monastery, acted a play.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 390.

2. Given in charity; "given in alms." Bullokar. This is also the present use.

All crown lands and elemosynary lands.

Stephens, Add. to Spelman's Hist. of Sacrilege, p. 173.

E L E

He had done several elemosynary cures amongst them, for they are generally very poor.

Relat. in Sprat's Hist. of the R. Soc. p. 209.

ELEEMO'SYNARY.* n. s. One who subsists upon alms or charity.

Living as an elemosynary upon a perpetual contribution from all and every part of the Creation. South, Sermon, iii. S. 1.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an elemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posterior to and dependent on itself. Glanville, Scopsus.

E'LEGANCE.† } n. s. [elegance, Fr. elegantia, Lat.]
E'LEGANCY. }

1. Beauty rather soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatness.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference. Raleigh, Hist.

These questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world. Burnet.

2. Any thing that pleases by its nicety. In this sense it has a plural.

The beauty, ornament, and elegancies of life.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 85.

My compositions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator.

E'LEGANT.† adj. [elegant, Fr. elegans, Lat.]

1. Nice; accurate in discerning. I place this sense first, of which Dr. Johnson has taken no notice whatever, because it applies to the mind; and because the examples under the two following definitions are only those modern ones, which Pope and his own London afforded Dr. Johnson. Yet I must observe, that our old lexicography considers the word as applicable only to personal ornaments or accomplishments; as neat, fresh, gorgeous, gay, pretty, fine, trim, &c. See the Dictionaries of Barret and Bullokar. Milton, however, has left these trappings, and thus described the power of distinguishing for which Adam compliments his spouse.

Eve, now I see thou art exact of taste,

And elegant, of sapience no small part;

Since to each meaning savour we apply,

And palate call judicious. Milton, P. L. ix. 1018.

2. Pleasing by minuter beauties.

Trifles themselves are elegant in him.

There mightst thou find some elegant retreat.

Pope. London.

3. Nice; not coarse; not gross.

Polite with candour elegant with ease.

Pope.

E'LEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In such a manner as to please.

Now read with them those organic arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton on Educ.

In a poem elegantly writ,

I will not quarrel with a slight mistake.

Roscommon.

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty; with pleasing propriety.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously. Bacon.

Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there must be proper distances and pauses. Pope, Odys. Notes.

E'LEGICAL.* adj. [Lat. elegiacus, Fr. elegiaque.]

Belonging to an elegy; lamenting; mournful.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

E'LEGICK.† adj. [elegiacus, Lat.]

1. Used in elegies.

E L E

Another thing yet more considerable is conduct, and design, in whatever kind of poetry, whether the epick, the dramatick, the lyrick, the elegiack. Phillips, Theat. Poetarum, Pref.

That Ovid among the Latin poets was Milton's favourite, appears not only from his elegiack but his hexametrick poetry.

Warton, Milton's Smaller Poems, Pref.

Why Hammond, or other writers, have thought the quatrains of ten syllables elegiack, it is difficult to tell.

Johnson, Life of Hammond.

2. Pertaining to elegies.

Elegy speaks here her own proper native language, the unaffected plaintive language of the tender passions: the true elegiack dignity and simplicity are preserved and united, the one without pride, the other without meanness.

Ld. Chesterfield, Pref. to Hammond's Elegies.

3. Mournful; sorrowful.

Bullokar.

Let elegiack lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes.

Gay, Trinia.

E'LEGI'ACK.* n. s. Elegiack versè.

His Latin elegiacks are pure. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry.

E'LEGI'AST.* } n. s. [from elegy. Our old word for E'LEGIST. } writers of this class was the more stately term of "elegiographer, one who writes mournful songs," Cockeram; which has now found a welcome in France; "élegiographie, auteur d' elegies," Morin, Fr. et Gr. Dict. Etym. 1809.] A writer of elegies.

The great fault of these elegiasts is, that they are in despair for griefs that give the sensible part of mankind very little pain.

Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield.

Our elegist, and the chroniclers, impute the crime of withholding so pious a legacy to the advice of the king of France.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 108.

E'LEGY.† n. s. [old Fr. elegie; Lat. elegus, elegia, and elegia, from the Gr. éλεγος, complaint, grief.

Plebilis indignos, Elegia, solve capillos;

Hec nimis ex vero nunc ubi nomen inest.

Ovid.]

1. A mournful song.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakespeare.

2. A funeral song.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,

The mournful swan sings her own elgy.

Dryden.

3. A short poem without points or affected elegancies.

A versification is desirable, which, by indulging a free and unconstrained expression, may admit of that simplicity, which elegy requires.

Shenstone, Pref. to his Elegies.

E'LEGIT.* n. s. [Latin.] In law, a writ, so called.

It is generally known, a judgement being obtained or acknowledged for any debt since the statute of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. I. c. 18. one half of the debtor's land is to be delivered unto the creditor until the obligation is satisfied, under a writ called Elegit, and this writ has been ever since the ordinary assurance of the land, and the great foundation of general credit in the nation.

Burke, Tracts on the Popery Laws.

E'LEMENT. n. s. [elementum, Lat.]

1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.

If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should lose the qualities which now they have.

Hooker.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles.

Boyle.

Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded.

Watts.

2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed. When it is used alone, element commonly means the air.

The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me.

Shakespeare.

My dearest sister, fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy spirits all of comfort.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The king
Contending with the fruitful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The heavens and the earth will pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat.

2 Peter, iii. 10.

Here be four of you were able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements.

Bacon.

He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element.

Waller.

3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing: as water of fish.

We are simple men; we do not know she works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as is beyond our element.

Shakespeare.

Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements.

Milton, P. L.

They shew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent.

Baker on Learning.

4. An ingredient; a constituent part.

Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
—One sure that promises no element
In such a business.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.

With religion it fareth as with other sciences; the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners.

Hooker.

Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters.

Spenser on Ireland.

We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world.

Gal. iv. 3.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master.

Dryden.

To ELEMEN-† v. a. [from the noun. Sir Kenelm Digby uses elementate for this verb, Supplem. to Cabala, p. 247. But he will hardly be followed.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemented bodies, I now question.

Boyle.

Fond creature, thou art elemented and organed for other apprehensions, for a lower commerce of perception; such immediate displays of divinity infinitely transcend the analogy of thy order, and the immoderate glory of such a revelation would but absorb thy soul.

Manningham, Diss. (1681,) p. 29.

2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.

Dull stationary lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit Absence, because it doth remove
Those things which element it.

Donne, Poems, p. 41.

His very soul was elemented of nothing but sadness.

Waller, Life of Donne.

ELEMENTAL-† adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.

The firmament, element of light, pure Transparent, elemental.

Milton, P. L.

If dusky spots are rays of his brow,
And streaks of such red, a elemental colour show.

VOL. II.

That sullen mixture shall at once declare

Winds, rain, and storms, and elemental war.

Dryden, Virg.

The heavens, and the simple or elemental bodies, as the earth, the water, and the air.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,

And sip, with nymphs, their elemental tea.

Pope.

2. Arising from first principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison not properly, that is, by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fasten upon the viens, and occasion an effusion of blood.

Brown.

3. Rude; elementary.

The druids are said to be very expert in astronomy, in geography, and in all parts of mathematical knowledge. And authors speak, in a very exaggerated strain, of their excellence in these, and in many other sciences. Some elemental knowledge, I suppose, they had; but I can scarcely be persuaded, that their learning was either deep or extensive.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. i. 2.

ELEMENTALITY-† n. s. [from elemental.] Composition; combination of ingredients.

By this I hope the elementality (that is, the universality) of detraction, or disparagement, (or what else you will call this mal dire,) is out of dispute.

Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 456.

ELEMENTARITY-† n. s. [from elementary.] The simplicity of nature; absence of composition; being uncompounded.

A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

ELEMENTARY-† adj. [Fr. elementaire.]

1. Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water.

Ray.

The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Initial; rude.

Your courtier elementary is one but newly entered, or as it were in the alphabet.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

It is probable, that before the time of Aristotle there were elementary treatises of geometry, which are now lost.

Roid's Inquiry.

3. Of or belonging to the elements.

Cockeram.

The harmony of heaven and the elements was put out of tune, in the elementary part of the world, by the sin of man.

Harnar, Tr. of Beza's Serms. (1587,) p. 257.

Some luminous and fiery impressions in the elementary region.

Spencer on Prod. p. 33.

ELEMI-† n. s.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Æthiopia in flattish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less greenish or yellowish tinge. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brazilians wound, and collect the resin.

Hill, Mat. Med.

ELENCH-† n. s. [elenche, old Fr. elenchus; Lat.]

An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole temptation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not meet present death.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Of these sophisms and elenchs of merchandise I skill not.

Milton, Areopagitica.

All your elenchs in logick come within the compass of juggling.

Selden, Table-Talk.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old popular, who puts the most abusive elenchs on us.

Deasy of Piety.

E L E

To ELE'NCHIZE.* v. n. [from elench; coined perhaps by Ben Jonson, in order to ridicule the pretended accomplishments of "Fly, professor in the Inn."] To dispute.

Tip. Hear him problematize.

Pro. Bless us, what's that?

Tip. Or syllogize, elenchize.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

ELE'NCHICAL.* adj. [Lat. elencticus.] Serving to confute.

Doctrinal application—is of two kinds; didactical, elenchical.—Elenchical, ἐλεγχτικόν, in some controverted point, which is usually called an use of confutation, for the refuting of such erroneous positions as do subvert the truth.

Wilkins, Ecclesiastes or Gift of Preaching, § 2.

ELE'OTS. n. s. Some name the apples in request in the cyder countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

E'LENGE.* See ELLINGE.

E'LEPHANT.† n. s. [elephas, Lat. The learned Hyde refers to the Arabick phil, a mountain, as the etymon.]

1. The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and it is said to be extremely long lived. He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory. Calmet.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes.
The elephant hath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure.

Shakespeare.

Shakespeare.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Caesar's Indian war behold.

Dryden, Virg.

ELEPHANTIASIS.† n. s. [elephantiasis, Lat.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

He differed in the temper of his body, being inclined to the leprosy called elephantiasis, noisome to the patient, but not infectious to the company. Fuller, Holy War, p. 94.

ELEPHANTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Lat.] Pertaining to the elephant.

To E'LEVATE.† v. a. [elevo, Lat.]

1. To raise up aloft.

O, the noble combat, that, 'twixt joy and sorrow, was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband; another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

This subterranean heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyss. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.

A gentleman of the popular faction had been long declaiming against any kind of honours, that tended to elevate a body of people into a distinct species from the rest of the nation. Shenstone.

3. To raise with great conceptions.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with, it stirs not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind.

Savage.

4. To elate with vicious pride.

To mischief swift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest.

Milton, P. L.

E L F

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgements of learned men are alledged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgements of others as learned? Hooker.

E'LEVATE.† part. adj. [from elevated.]

1. Exalted; raised aloft.

Of each side an imperial city stood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills.

Milton, P. R.

2. Raised with great conceptions.

Others apart sat on a hill retired,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate.

Milton, P. L.

ELEVATION. n. s. [elevatio, Lat.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of style.

His style was an elegant perspicuity, rich of phrase, but seldom any bold metaphors; and so far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Wotton.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker.

6. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ELEVATOR.† n. s. [from elevate; formerly our word was elevatory, Fr. elevatoire. Cotgrave.] A raiser or lifter up, applied to some chyrurgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

ELEVE.* n. s. [French.]

1. Literally, a scholar or disciple; one who has studied under a particular master.

He attached himself to Sir Robert Walpole, and was one of his ablest elèves. Ld. Chesterfield, Characters.

2. One brought up, or protected, by another; as the Italian allievo, "a foster child or servant of our bringing up." Florio's Ital. Dict. 1598.

ELEVEN.† adj. [ænbelen, Saxon; æn, one, and lyran, to leave: one left above ten. V. Skinner, Etym.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, and none less dear than Marcius, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakespeare.

ELEVENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh, Hist.

ELF.† n. s. plural elfs and elves. [elf, Welsh. Baxter's Gloss. This is all which Dr. Johnson offers respecting the etymology. We may trace the word to a different origin. Alp and alf, in the northern languages, signified both a mountain and a spirit or demon of the mountains. V. Keyserli Antiq. Septentr. p. 500. Goth. and Icel. alp, a good or evil genius; alp, Sax. munt-elphen, mountain elves; pubu-elphen, wood elves, ps-ælfen, sea elves. Thus

ELF

Shakspeare distinguishes them; "Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and groves, &c." Tempest. Fletcher, in the Faithful Shepherdess, distinguishes between the elf and the fairy, though he places both among "the powers that haunt the grove;" as, the "goblin, wood-god, fairy, elf, or fiend." The general opinion of elves was, that they were a kind of diminutive demons, called also dwergar or dwarfs. Shakspeare calls them demy-puppets. Hence the word has passed into our language for dwarfs in general, of which meaning Dr. Johnson has taken no notice. It is conjectured by some that these little people have been imported into Europe by the crusaders from the east. "What indeed are the genii of the Arabs, the peris of the Persians, but the elfs and fairies of England?" Hole on the Arabian Nights' Entert. p. 12.]

1. A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from brier.

Shakspeare.

Fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees.

Milton, P. L.

The king of elfs and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green.
If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;
Of airy elves by moon-light shadow seen,
The silver token, and the circled green.

Pope.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elves;
And are but satires to set up ourselves.
However it was civil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fill'd it so well of himself.

Dryden.

Swift.

3. A dwarf, or little person. Hidoet, and Barret.

Though now he crawl along the ground so low,
Nor weeting how the muse should soar on high,
Wisheth poor starr'ling elf, his paper-kite may fly.

Shenstone.

To ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf-hair.

Hammer.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots.

Shakspeare.

ELF-LOCK.† n. s. [elf and lock.] Hair twisted by elves; a common superstition, which seems to have had its rise from the horrid disease called the plica Polonica.

Warburton.

This is that very Mab,
That plots the mares of horses in the night;
And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which, once entangled, much misfortune bodes.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

ELFIN. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfish; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfin knight he bade him fly,
Where he slept soundly.

Spenser, F. Q.

ELFIN.* n. s. A child; an urchin. See the third sense of ELF.

ELI

She was just and friend to virtuous lore,
And pass'd much time in truly virtuous deed;
And in those elfin ears would oft deplete
The times when truth by popish rage did bleed.

Shenstone, Schoolmistress, st. 15.

ELFISH.* adj. [from elf.] Relating to elves or demons. See ELVISH.

In Chaucer's Tale of the Chanon Yeman, chymistry is termed an elfish art, that is, taught or conducted by spirits. This is an Arabian idea. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 169.

To ELICIT. v. a. [elicio, Lat.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

He elicits those acts out of the mere lapsed state of human nature.

Cheyne.

ELICIT. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekness: meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues.

Hammond.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will.

South.

To ELICITATE.* v. a. [Lat. elicio.] To elicit; to fetch out by labour or art.

Thus may a skilful man hid truth elicitate.

More, Song of the Soul, iii. ii. 41.

ELICITATION. n. s. [from elicio, Latin.]

That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object.

Bp. Bramhall.

To ELIDE.† v. a. [elido, Lat.]

1. To break in pieces; to crush.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided.

Hooker.

2. To cut off a syllable. See ELISION.

Mr. Wolf remarks the care with which the ancients, in apostrophized words, connected the consonant belonging to the elided syllable with that immediately following; whereas, among us, it is by well-informed readers often made to terminate the former syllable.

Brit. Crit. 1796, Sept.

ELIGIBILITY.† n. s. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

Sickness hath some degrees of eligibility, at least by an after-choice; because to all persons, which are within the possibilities and state of pardon, it becomes a great instrument of pardon for sin.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to choose them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness.

Fiddes, Serm.

ELIGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Lat.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme is wisest, they can persuade him that next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible.

Addison, Freeholder.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions?

Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in some or all of these qualities.

Swift.

Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense.

Richardson, Clarissa.

ELIGIBLENESS. n. s. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

To ELIMINATE.* v. a. [elimino, Lat.] To open; to release from confinement; to put out of doors.

Lock'd up, thou'rt hood all o'er,
And ne'er eliminat'st thy door.

Lovelace, Lucast. Posth. (of the Snail,) p. 16.

Loose me from earth's inclosure, from the sun's Contracted circle set my heart at large;
Eliminate my spirit, give it range
Through provinces of thought yet unexplor'd;
Teach me, by this stupendous scaffolding,
Creation's golden steps, to climb to Thee.

Young, Night Th. 9.

ELIMINATION.† n. s. [elimino, Lat.] The act of banishing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection.

He (St. Peter) writes this [his first epistle] to his countrymen, the Jews; amongst whom, notwithstanding their dispersion, there were doubtless many rich owners, as there are still in many parts of the world, after all their disgraceful eliminations.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 201.

ELIQUATION.* n. s. [Lat. eliquatus.] In metallurgy, a separation of the different parts of mixed bodies, by the different degrees of fire required to melt them.

Chambers.

ELISION. n. s. [elisis, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting off: as, can't th' attempt, there is an elision of a syllable.

You will observe the abbreviations and elisions, by which consonants of most obdurate sounds are joined together, without any softening vowel to intervene.

Swift.

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elision of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

ELITE.* n. s. [French. Prendre la fleur, l'élite d'une chose.] A word, of military adoption, not wanted in our language; for the flower of an army much better expresses, what elite pretends, the selection or chosen part of it; "the choice and flower of all the troops," as Denham writes. Yet elite is old, in the Scottish terms, for one elected to a bishoprick.

To ELIXATE.* v. a. [Latin, elixo.] To seeth or boil.

Cockeram.

ELIXATION.† n. s. [from elixate.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Elization is the seething of meat in the stomach, by the said natural heat, as meat is boiled in a pot: to which corruption, or putrefaction, is opposite.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 21.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilution of solid aliment, and its elization in the stomach.

Brown.

ELIXIR. n. s. [Arabick.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker consistence than a tincture.

Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he dropp'd the show'r,
Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r.

Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal.

Donne.

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing.

In the soul, when the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delight.

South.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating substance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here

Breathe forth elixir pure!

Milton, P. L.

ELK. n. s. [alc, Saxon.]

The elk is a large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in Winter is greyish, in Summer it is paler. The horns of the male elk are short and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges.

Hill.

And, scarce his head

Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk

Lies slumb'ring sullen in the white abyss.

Thomson.

ELKE.* n. s. [Welsh elarch; Cornish, elerch; a swan. Lat. olor.] A wild swan, sometimes also called hooper. It is of less size than the tame swan.

EL.† n. s. [eln, Saxon; alleina, Goth. ulna, Lat. Thus our own word was formerly written eln. "An ell or elne." Huloet. "It was xv elnes compass." Barret.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece.

Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;
Look not on pleasures as they come, but go:
Defer not the last virtue; life's poor span
Make not an ell by trifling in thy woe.

Herbert.

ELLINGE.* adj. [perhaps from the Sax. ælenge, long, not soon ceasing, tedious, troublesome. But Ray proposes the Fr. éloigner, Lat. elongatus, and the ancient Sax. ellenbe, far off, far from. He then mentions the usage of the word in Sussex, as Grose mentions the same in Kent, viz. solitary, lonely, melancholy, far from neighbours. Bullokar defines it strange. Others consider it merely in the sense of dull or melancholy.] Cheerless; sad.

Heavy-cher'd I yede, and elenge in herte.

Viz. of P. Ploughman, fol. 111. b.

ELLIPSIS. n. s. [ἑλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetoric, by which something is left out necessary to be supplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis, Rom. iv. 18.

Hammond.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced.

Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis parallel to the horizon.

Wilkins, Dædalus.

The planets could not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbs, or in ellipses very little eccentric.

Bentley.

ELLIPTICAL.† } adj. [from ellipsis.]
ELLIPTICK. }

1. Having the form of an ellipsis; oval.

Since the planets move in elliptical orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptick. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

2. Denoting the use of the rhetorical figure.* Dr. Johnson overpasses this meaning. See ELLIPSIS.

We may more rightly say, that is ipse is an elliptical expression instead of est ipse.

Killicobull, Annot. N. Test. (1693.) p. 174.

- ELLIPTICALLY. adv. [from elliptical.] According to the rhetorical figure.

"Looked upon as dull" [is] elliptically expressed to avoid the repetition of as. The sentence, if drawn out at length, would be, "looked upon as being as dull as."

Hurd on Addison, vi. 179.

ELM. n. s. [ulmus, Latin; elm, Saxon.]

1. The name of a tree. The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out; especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows upon the borders of fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they should not be planted too near fruit-trees; because the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nourishment. Miller.

The rural seat,
Whose lofty elms and venerable oaks,
Invite the rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds.

Thomson.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,
Whose weakness married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate. Shakspeare.

*ELMY. adj. [from elm.] Abounding with elm trees.

The simple spire, and elmy grange. T. Warton, Ode xi.

*ELOCUTION. n. s. [Lat. elocutus.]

1. A removal from the usual place of residence.

When the child either by general permission, or former elocation, shall be out of the parent's disposing.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

2. A departure from usual method; an ecstasy.

In all poetry (if it be good and worthy) there must be not only an incitation, and commotion, but also an elocation, and emotion of the mind. The poet must be extra se positus, et à mente alienatus. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 30.

ELOCUTION. n. s. [elocutio, Latin.]

1. The power of fluent speech.

A travelled doctor of physick, of bold, and of able elocation. Wotton.

2. Power of speaking; speech.

Whose taste, too long forbore, at first essay
Gave elocation to the mute, and taught
The tongue not made for speech to praise.

Milton, P. L.

3. The power of expression or diction; eloquence; beauty of words.

The third happiness of this poet's imagination is elocation, or the art of clothing or adorning that thought so found, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words. Dryden.

As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, so much more to express those thoughts with elocation. Dryden.

*ELOGE. n. s. [French.] A funeral oration; a panegyrick on the dead.

I return you, Sir, the two eloges, which I have perused with pleasure. I borrow that word from your language, because we have none in our own that exactly expresses it.

Atterbury to Mons. Thiriot, Ep. Corr. i. 179.

*ELOGIST. n. s. [old Fr. elogiste.] One who pronounces a panegyrick.

[One] made the funeral sermon, who had been one of her professed suitors; and so she did not want a passionate elogist, as well as an excellent preacher. Wotton, Rem. p. 366.

ELOGY. n. s. [eloge, Fr.] Praise; panegyrick.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and elogies. Wotton.

If I durst say all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation or elogy, have considered this subject. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

*TO ELO'GNATE. v. a. [Fr. eloigner, Lat. elongo.]

To remove.

Nor is some vulgar Greek so far adulterated, and eloignated from the true Greek, as Italian is from the Latin.

Howell, Instruct. For Trav. p. 149.

TO ELO'IGNE.† v. a. [eloigner, Fr.] To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Nor disused. Spenser's word is esloyne.

From worldly cares himself he did esloyne,

And greatly shunned manly exercise.

Spenser, F. Q.

I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou shalt do

To anger destiny, as she doth us;

How I shall stay though she eloigne me thus,

And how posterity shall know it too.

Donne.

*ELO'IGNMENT. n. s. [Fr. eloignement.] Remoteness; distance.

He discovers an eloignement from vulgar phrases much becoming a person of quality. Shenstone.

*TO ELO'NG. v. a. [old Fr. ehlonguer, to delay, to keep back; Lat. elongo.] Our expressive old word has been converted, in a modern edition of Giles Fletcher's poem, into keeping back. To put or set far off; to retard. Bullockar.

Upon the roof the bird of sorrow sat

Elonging joyful day with her sad note.

G. Fletcher, Christ's Vict. ii. 24.

TO ELO'NGATE.† v. a. [elongo, Latin.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to stretch.

2. To put further off.

The first star of Aries, in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection, which is now elongated and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

TO ELO'NGATE. v. n. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Brasilia, the south point of the compass varieth twelve degrees unto the west; but elongating from the coast of Brasilia, towards the shore of Africa, it varyeth eastward. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ELONGATION.† n. s. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The state of being stretched.

This whole universality of things, which we call the world, is indeed nothing else but a production, and elongation, and dilatation of the natural goodness of Almighty God.

Fotherby, Atheom. p. 297.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force. Wiseman, Surgery.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glanville, Scepis.

5. Departure; removal.

Our voluntary elongation of ourselves from God's presence, must needs be a fearful introduction to an everlasting distance from him. Sp. Hall, Rom. p. 89.

Nor shen had it been placed in a middle point, but that of despect, or elongation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To ELOPE.† v. a. [loopen, to run, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says. It is rather from the Sax. hleapan, which also means to run; whence our verb to leap, the old preterite of which is lopc. "He laughing lope to a tree." Speuser, Shep. Cal. March, ver. 81.] To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politic, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Addison, Freeholder.

What from the dame can Paris hope?

She may as well from him elope. Prior.

The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter, For matrimonial solace dies a martyr. Pope.

ELOPEMENT. n. s. [from elope.] Departure from just restraint; rejection of lawful power: commonly used of a wife.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom she lives in breach of the matrimonial vow. Ayliffe, Parergon.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of his principle was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Arbutnot.

E'LOPS.† n. s. [ἔλωψ.] A fish; reckoned however by Milton among the serpents, Dr. Johnson says; in which circumstance, it may be added, Milton is supported by the authority of Pliny and Nicander.

Scorpion and asp, and amphibena dire,
Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipsas. Milton, P. I.

E'LOQUENCE. n. s. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Athens or free Rome, where eloquence

Flourish'd, since ante.

Milton, P. L.

His infant softness pleads a milder doom,

And speaks with all the eloquence of tears. Heigh.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word;

Then I'll commend her volubility,

And say she uttereth piercing eloquence. Shakespeare.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense,

And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence. Pope, Odyssey.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator. Isaiah, iii. 3.

O death! all eloquent, you only prove

What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

E'LOQUENTLY.* adv. [from eloquent.] In elegant language, written or uttered with fluency.

An orator, by others' instruction perfectly furnished, may in every matter and learning, commend or dispraise or exhort or dissuade, accuse or defend eloquently, as occasion happeneth.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 41. b.

Remembering the wisdoms, advertisements, counsels, dissuasions from vice, and other profitable sentences, most eloquently and familiarly shewed in those comedies.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 43.

A thing written or spoken very eloquently. Barret's Alacrie.

For, as a great man justly and eloquently reasons, men are naturally more watchful in a matter so dear to them.

Blackwall, Sac. Class. ii. 316.

ELSE.† pronoun. [eller, Saxon; alia, Goth. alius, Lat. ἄλλος, Gr. another.] Other; one besides: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Should he or any else search, he will find evidence of the Divine Wisdom. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

He saw, 'twas then with him, as now with you;

He did it when he had nothing else to do. Denham.

ELSE.† conj. [eller, Sax. Germ. alles; Su. Goth. ēla, or; Lat. alias, Gr. ἄλλος, otherwise. Our word was formerly elles or alles; and Mr. Horne Tooke asserts that it is no other than alep or aly, the imperative of alepan or alypan, to dismiss.]

1. Otherwise.

1. Ser. They are ready to attend.

2. Ser. Sure some great person,
They would not make this hurry else.

Beaumont and Fl. Custom of the Country.

Dare not, on thy life,

Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due,

But stand aloof, and think profane to view:

This saulchion, else, not hitherto withstood,

These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood. Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we should be assured, but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause? Tillotson.

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found,

And all Elysium in a spot of ground. Dryden.

3. It has sometimes or before it superfluously.

Be more abstemious,

Or else, good night your vow. Shakespeare.

ELSEWHERE.† adv. [Sax. ellep-hwærp.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elsewhere. Abbot, Descript. of the World.

As he proved that Pison was not Ganges, or Gehon, Nilus; so where to find them elsewhere he knew not. Rawley, Hist.

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elsewhere,

Though our eyes open be, we cannot see. Davies.

Henceforth oracles are ceas'd,

And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice

Shalt be enquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere. Milton, P. R.

Although seasoned bodies may and do live near as long in London as elsewhere, yet new-comers and children do not.

Grant, Bills of Mortality.

2. In other places; in some other places.

They which elsewhere complain, that injury is offered to the meanest minister, when the magistrate appointeth him what to wear, think the gravest prelates no competent judges where it is fit for the minister to stand. Hooker.

Let us no more contend, nor blame

Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere. Milton, P. L.

Bestow, base man, thy idle threats elsewhere;

My mother's daughter knows not how to fear. Dryden.

If it contradict what he says elsewhere, it is no new or strange thing. Tillotson.

ELARN.* n. s. [Teut. aelsene. See AWL.] A shoe-maker's awl. Cumberland. Grose.

TO ELUCIDATE.† v. a. [elucido, Lat.] To explain; to clear; to make plain; "to make bright."

Bullockar.

To elucidate a little the matter, let us consider it. Boyle.

By this way we may not only divert ourselves, but elucidate our own thoughts. Goodman, Winter's Ev. Conf. P. i.

ELUCIDATION.† n. s. [old Fr. elucidation.] Explanation; exposition.

We shall, in order to the elucidation of this matter, subjoin the following experiment. Boyle.

I know not any that has received so little elucidation.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, Pref.

ELUCIDATIVE.* adj. [from elucidate.] Throwing light; explanatory.

ELUCIDATOR. n. s. [from elucidate.] Explainer; expositor; commentator.
